

3 1761 11650572 8

CA1 VC 2

-69 P58

Canada. Parliament. Senate.
Special Committee on Poverty.
Proceedings, 1969/70 no. 1-20

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2023 with funding from University of Toronto

5910

Second Session—Twenty-eighth Parliament

1969-70

THE SENATE OF CANADA

SPECIAL COMMITTEE

ON

POVERTY

The Honourable DAVID A. CROLL, Chairman

INDEX

OF PROCEEDINGS

(Issues Nos. 1 to 70 inclusive) - 20

Second Session—Twenty-ninth Parliament
1955-56

THE SENATE OF CANADA

Prepared by the

Reference Branch,

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT.

The Honourable DAVID A. CROLL, Chairman

INDEX

OF PROCEEDINGS

(From Vol. 1 to (p. inclusive) 2)

INDEX

- ADA
See
 Area Development Agency
- ADB
See
 Atlantic Development Board
- ARDA
See
 Agricultural and Rural Development Act
- A.T.T.A.C.
See
 Association to Tackle Adverse Conditions, Vancouver
- Abols, Gesta, President, Students' Administrative Council, University of Toronto
 Statement 27:85-86
- Abramson, Mrs. Jane, Member, Canadian Council on Rural Development
 Curriculum vitae 18:6
- Action '70, Ottawa
 Conference, effect 15:28-29, 15:31-32, 15:57, 16:25, 17:17
- Adult Occupational Training Act, 1967
 Operation 13:11, 13:31
- After Four Project, Ottawa
 Activities 16:8-9, 16:12-14, 16:31
- Agricultural and Rural Development Act
 Operation 3:18, 11:8-9, 13:27, 18:9, 18:12, 18:55-56, 21:14-15, 21:18, 42:70-72, 42:78, 42:80-81, 50:30
- Alberta
 Alberta Service Corps 57:72
 Bonnyville Region, economic growth factors 55:127-128
 Budget standards, monthly, basic necessities (table) 23:180
 Calgary
 Bowness-Montgomery Area 56:143-152
 Canadian Coalition for Development 56:52-53
 Community Services Policy Committee
 Brief 56:84-123
 Discussion 56:9-26
 Recommendations 56:90-93
 Poverty situation 56:9-205
 Public School Board
 Activities 56:100-101, 56:139-149
 Brief 56:124-157
 Discussion 56:26-36
 Recommendations 56:130, 56:135-137
 Co-operatives 20:18-19
 Dental services 23:198-199
 Edmonton
 Human resource development planning 55:95
 Indian, Métis migration problems 55:9, 55:11, 55:12-13, 55:14-15
 Marian Centre 57:20, 57:23
 Poverty situation 55:7-149, 57:7-83
 Social Planning Council
 Brief 55:104-111
 Discussion 55:36-49
 Role 55:104-105
 Social Service Department
 Brief 55:94-99
 Discussion 55:8-20
 Recommendations 55:94
 Urban centre 55:36-37
 Farm families 55:50
 Government, discussion 57:36-52
 "Growing up Together" program 55:109-110
 Housing for the aged 47:9-10
 Human Resources Development Authority
 56:175-176, 57:71-77
 Human Resources Research Council 57:37, 57:45, 57:72
 Income ceilings and exemptions 23:243-244, 55:113
 Legal aid 32:25, 56:81-82, 57:55-56, 57:69-70, 57:80-81
 Medical care 23:189
 Eligibility 57:30-31
 Poverty, situation 55:7-149, 56:9-205, 57:7-83
 Red Deer 55:127-128
 Rural areas 55:112-132
 Social development
 Assistance 56:130
 Department 57:36-52
 Sturgeon Valley Housing Co-Operative 55:109-110
 Welfare, assistance scales 16:16, 16:27
- Alcoholism
 Alcoholics Anonymous
 Program, activities 41:13-14, 41:16-17, 41:19, 57:34
 Role 6:21
 Factor in poverty 6:79, 6:81, 7:14, 16:38, 27:117, 40:8, 41:13, 45:47-57, 48:9, 48:33, 48:36, 58:47, 61:54-55

- Research 27:65
- Situation, case histories 41:9, 41:11, 41:17-31, 41:36, 57:25-29, 58:29
- Treatment facilities, program 4:17, 41:10, 41:14, 41:15-16, 41:24, 41:30, 41:33-34, 41:35, 57:25, 57:33, 57:34, 61:55, 63:45-46
- Allen, E.C., Research Economist, UNIFARM (Alta.)
Economic growth factors, Bonnyville region (Alta.) 55:127-128
- Anderson, J.G., Welfare Commissioner, Welfare and Housing Committee, Metropolitan Toronto
Statement 26:9-11
- Anthony, B.D., Director, Labour-Management Bureau, Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University, Halifax
Curriculum vitae 1:7
- Anti-Poverty Measures
Church, role 6:82, 31:59-61, 33:17, 33:33, 34:8, 49:39, 62:12
Government role
Federal 15:42, 19:25, 19:26, 19:29-30, 19:42, 20:10, 20:17, 20:27, 20:31, 20:42-43, 20:47, 21:40, 21:52, 21:63-64, 22:11, 22:25, 23:49-50, 23:66-70, 23:116-120, 25:23, 26:137, 26:165, 27:70, 27:96-97, 27:143, 28:20, 28:25, 29:25, 31:49-50, 31:52-53, 32:33-34, 34:8, 36:7, 37:7-8, 40:35, 43:11, 44:34-35, 45:52-53, 47:41, 49:41-42, 50:11, 52:44, 56:9, 56:29, 56:59, 56:136-137, 56:178, 58:49, 60:100, 60:120, 63:24, 66:58, 68:42, 70:21
Municipal 19:26, 20:43, 21:35, 21:51-52, 21:64, 27:125-126, 43:120-121, 60:120, 70:15
Provincial 11:14, 11:21, 11:34, 19:26, 19:42, 20:16-17, 20:27, 20:43, 20:46, 21:35, 21:40, 21:52, 22:11, 22:25, 23:116-120, 31:48-49, 60:120, 70:21
Housing improvement 2:34, 2:38
Participation of the poor
Community development 6:81, 8:10-11, 8:16, 8:65, 8:76, 8:78-79, 8:81, 11:27, 11:28-29, 15:20-21, 16:7, 16:18, 16:21-23, 18:8-9, 18:65, 18:68, 20:45, 21:9, 23:74-75, 25:26, 26:30, 26:61, 26:62, 26:144, 26:149, 26:167, 27:121, 31:11, 55:10, 63:79-82, 64:12, 70:21, 70:49-50
Legal aspects 32:35
Means provision 2:22-23, 2:26-27
Programs 56:29, 56:135-137, 70:14
Research 2:20, 21:24, 56:135
Role 1:47, 2:30, 2:44, 6:7, 8:7, 15:58, 19:25, 21:38, 27:79, 29:22, 42:56, 49:18, 49:39-41, 70:50-51
Rural Development Council 54:18
Welfare recipients 15:32, 19:28, 20:32, 23:27, 26:16, 30:38-39, 37:47, 42:27-28, 70:13
- Policy co-ordination through central agency 21:24
Prevention of poverty 6:34, 6:36, 6:66
Semi-public agencies, role 43:121
Social therapy programs 2:33
Stimulation of the poor 8:55, 8:71, 8:84
Union activities 60:103-104
See also
Individual groups, names
Recommendations
Individual provinces
Poverty
- Antoft, Kell, Special Projects Associate, Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University, Halifax
Curriculum vitae 1:5
- Area Development Agency
Program 11:8
- Armstrong, Mrs. G.B., President, Provincial Council of Women of Ontario
Statement 50:22-25
- Association of Professional Engineers of the Province of New Brunswick
Activities 61:9, 61:65
Brief 61:65-67
Discussion 61:9-17
Recommendations 61:65
- Association of Women Electors of Metropolitan Toronto
Activities 26:39, 26:139
Brief 26:139-147
Discussion 26:27-40
- Association to Tackle Adverse Conditions, Vancouver
Activities 8:54, 8:84
Brief 8:83-84
Discussion 8:53-63
Recommendations 8:55, 8:84
- Atlantic Development Board
Activities 11:21, 11:32
Role 11:8-9
- Atlantic Provinces
Co-operatives 20:19
Federal assistance 37:43
Per capita income 1:61, 2:41
Public housing 2:45, 10:13, 10:22-23
Taxation 38:15
Unemployment 18:10
See also
Individual Atlantic Provinces
Maritimes

- Australia
 Housing
 Home owner situation 18:24
 Population ratio to 18:25
 Land value taxation 18:24, 18:26, 18:27
- BAEQ
See
 Eastern Quebec Development Bureau
- BTSD
See
 Basic Training for Skills Development
- Babey, Paul, President, UNIFARM (Alta.)
 Alberta farmers, statement 55:49-52
- Baby Bonus
See
 Family Allowance
- Back, Jean, Geriatric Group, Family Service Association, Montreal
 Statement 36:9-10
- Baker, Rev. W.J., Inter-Faith Social Action Committee (Nfld.)
 Brief, statement summary 54:9
- Bankruptcy
 Personal 27:22, 27:129, 50:24
- Bar Association of the Province of Quebec
 Brief 39:32-37
 Discussion 39:7-31
- Barbolet, Herb, Neighbourhood Services Association, Vancouver
 Statement 8:13-14
- Barrier, Rev. Marc, O.M.I., Member, Social Planning Council, Edmonton
 Curriculum vitae 55:111
 Edmonton urban centre, statement 55:36-37
- Bartels, Dennis, Member, Social Planning Council, Edmonton
 Curriculum vitae 55:111
 Housing co-operatives, statement 55:39
- Basic Training for Skills Development
 Operation 13:31
- Basque, Mrs. Alfred, Tracadie (N.B.)
 Statement 68:35-36
- Baxter, Mrs. Sheila, Member, "Up to the Neck" Newspaper, Montreal
 Curriculum vitae 12:6
- Beck, Max, Director, Vancouver Inner-City Service Project, Vancouver
 Statement 8:32-34
- Bédard, Mrs. Edna, Dalhousie area resident, Ottawa
 Curriculum vitae 17:6
- Bennett, Dr. J.S., Secretary, Council on Provision of Health Services, Canadian Medical Association
 Health services, statement 45:21-25
- Bergevin, J.B., Assistant Deputy Minister, Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development
 Curriculum vitae 14:6
- Big Brothers
 Movement, support 24:27
 Toronto
 Activities, background 26:54-61
 Brief 26:155-161
 Discussion 26:51-61
- Black United Front
 Activities 1:137-138, 3:18
 N.S. blacks, statement 1:27-33
See also
 Nova Scotia
 Blacks
- Blackhead Road Householders' Union, St. John's (Nfld.)
 Home owners' situation, discussion 52:52-62
- Blacks
See
 Black United Front
 New Brunswick
 New Brunswick Association for the Advancement of Coloured People
 Nova Scotia
 Nova Scotia Association for Advancement of Coloured People
- Blakely, S.E., Superintendent, Social Service Department, Community Services Policy Committee, Calgary
 Statement 56:17-18
- Blind
 Blindness Allowance Act, operation 23:25, 23:103, 67:8, 67:10
 Canada Assistance Plan, effect 67:10-11, 67:12-13
 Causes of blindness 67:13
 Education 67:11-12, 67:13
 Employment 67:11
 Expenses 67:8, 67:9, 67:11
 Handicap allowance 67:8-11
 Taxation 67:8
See also
 Canadian National Institute for the Blind
 Handicapped

Board of Trade, Saint John (N.B.)

Brief 60:100-101

Discussion 60:30-37

Bobb, Ray, Member, Unemployed Citizen's Welfare Improvement Council, Vancouver

Welfare case histories, statement 9:16-17

Bondy, Alex, Member, Unemployed Citizen's Welfare Improvement Council, Vancouver

Statement 9:14-16

Borcak, M., Deputy Minister, Ontario Department of Social and Family Services

Curriculum vitae 43:7

Bovoroy, A.A., General Counsel, Canadian Civil Liberties Association

Legal aid, poverty, statement 32:7-13

Bowman, A.L., Executive Director, Prince Edward Island Newstart Incorporated

Curriculum vitae 4:64

Bowness-Montgomery Day Care Association, Calgary

Day care facilities, brief 56:178-179

Recommendations 56:179

Boyd, Mrs. Gladys, Citizens Group, Little Burgundy; Family Service Association, Montreal

Statement 36:11-12

Boys' Clubs of Canada

Brief 62:29-32

See also

Moncton and East End Boys' Club, Moncton (N.B.)

Breen, Augustus, Acting President, Blackhead Road Householders' Union, St. John's (Nfld.)

Home owners' situation, statement 52:52-53

Brennan, Brother A.F., President, Canadian Teachers' Federation

Curriculum vitae 46:6

British ColumbiaBudget standards, monthly, basic necessities (table)
23:181

Dental services 23:199

Housing Commission regulations 8:73

Income ceilings and exemptions 23:245-247

Legal aid

Law students 8:41-42

System, operation 8:34-38, 8:40

Medical care 23:189-190

Poverty, effect of monopolies 9:7-13

Social Welfare Department, upgrading training 8:27

Vancouver

Adult education 8:62

Area development project 8:29

Citizens' groups development 8:13

Day-care centres 8:21

Housing 9:22, 9:38, 10:14, 10:15

Low rental projects 8:55, 8:83

Library facilities 8:60, 8:83

Poverty

Situation 8:7-86, 9:32

Statistics 9:12

Re-training courses 9:20-27

"Skid Row" area 8:46-48

Social problems 8:18

Social workers 8:55

"Store fronts" 8:28

Strathcona, Woodland, Grandview, area problems
8:54-63, 8:66, 8:80-81, 8:83

Welfare

Co-ordination of services 8:13

Decentralization of system 8:30

Welfare

Aid program 8:27

Appeal boards 12:22

Payments 8:55, 8:64, 8:83

Work incentives allowance 9:23-24, 9:25

Brown, Geoffrey, Executive Director, Big Brothers, Metropolitan Toronto

Statement 26:51-53

Brown, Horace, Alderman, Special Committee, City of Toronto

Statement 27:9-10

Submission 27:115-118

Budgets*See*

Families

Burden, G.M., Chairman, Public School Board, Calgary

Statement 56:27-30

Burgess, R., Bowness-Montgomery Day Care Association, Calgary

Day care, statement 56:58-59

Burns, Mrs. Susan, Member, Consumer's Association, Yukon

Yukon consumers, statement 59:26-28

Byars, Jim, Chairman, Training Program, Prince Albert Work Training Program, Prince Albert (Sask.)

Program role, statement 65:28-29

CAAE*See*

Canadian Association for Adult Education

- C.A.S.W.
See
 Canadian Association of Social Workers
- CCRD
See
 Canadian Council on Rural Development
- CCRE
See
 Canadian Council for Research in Education
- CMA
See
 Canadian Medical Association
- CMHC
See
 Housing
 Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation
- CNA
See
 Canadian Nurses' Association
- CNIB
See
 Canadian National Institute for the Blind
- COBEQ
See
 Welfare Council, Quebec
- CORS
See
 Canadian Operational Research Society
- CRAN
See
 Conseil Régional d'Aménagement du Nord-Est (N.B.)
- CRANO
See
 Conseil Régional d'Aménagement du Nord-Ouest (N.B.)
- CTF
See
 Canadian Teachers' Federation
- CUC
See
 Co-Operative Union of Canada
- CYC
See
 Company of Young Canadians
- Cadbury, George, Treasurer, Family Planning Federation of Canada
 Curriculum vitae 19:7
 Statement 19:23-27
- Cain, James, Counsellor, Prince Edward Island New-start Incorporated
 Curriculum vitae 4:65
- Calgary Inter-Faith Community Action Committee
 Activities 56:175
 Brief 56:175-177
 Discussion 56:52-58
 Recommendations 56:175-177
- Calgary Labour Council
 Brief 56:198-202
 Role 56:198
- Calgary Welfare Rights Group
 Presentation 56:164-170
- Calmain, K.E., Staff Secretary, Committee on Poverty, Canadian Association of Social Workers
 Curriculum vitae 30:6
- Campbell, Jim, Port au Port Economic Development Association, Port au Port (Nfld.)
 Brief, statement summary 54:9
- Canada Assistance Act
See
 Canada Assistance Plan
- Canada Assistance Plan
 Modifications recommended 37:7-8, 37:48, 40:33
 Operation 4:18, 4:38, 8:23, 12:10-11, 15:11-12, 15:18, 15:22, 15:30-31, 15:41, 16:25, 23:8-9, 23:12, 23:14-16, 23:21-23, 23:24, 23:31, 23:35-36, 23:40-41, 23:44-46, 23:64, 23:68-69, 23:73-74, 23:84, 23:87, 23:101-110, 25:10-11, 25:13, 25:21-24, 25:26, 26:23-24, 26:46, 26:52, 26:59-60, 32:12, 32:33, 37:9, 37:12, 37:14, 37:27-30, 38:8, 38:11, 38:12, 43:18, 43:22-23, 44:7, 44:36, 45:43, 53:11, 53:13, 55:16, 56:56, 57:52-53, 64:23
See also
 National Health and Welfare Department
- Canada (Government)
 Anti-poverty measures
 Inadequacy 4:22-23, 16:41, 57:75-76
 Role 15:42, 19:25, 19:26, 19:29-30, 19:42, 20:10, 20:17, 20:27, 20:31, 20:42-43, 20:47, 21:40, 21:52, 21:63-64, 22:11, 22:25, 23:49-50, 23:66-70, 23:116-120, 25:23, 26:137, 26:163, 27:70, 27:96-97, 27:143, 28:20, 28:25, 29:25, 31:49-50, 31:52-53,

- 32:33-34, 34:8, 36:7, 37:7-8, 40:35, 43:11,
44:34-35, 45:52-53, 47:41, 49:41-42, 50:11,
52:44, 56:9, 56:29, 56:59, 56:136-137, 56:178,
58:49, 60:100, 60:120, 63:24, 66:58, 68:42,
70:21
Departmental decentralization 8:10, 8:11, 8:26,
8:76, 8:77
Economic policies, repercussion 51:48
Federal Medical Care Act (1966) 23:187
Health and Welfare outlays 51:47
Human relations pilot project recommended
2:20-21, 2:27, 2:53-54
Paternalism 18:10
Senate achievements 2:16, 6:63
Social measures 1:24
Training programs, settlement allowances 26:13
Waste 45:53
Welfare monies, inconsistent use 7:20
See also
Individual departments
- Canada Manpower Centre
Curriculum 63:16
Discrimination 6:51, 6:57
Employment counselling 7:7, 9:10-11
Facilities, expansion 63:16
Immigrant courses 36:36
Information services 7:11, 24:18-19
Medical examinations 26:142-143
Mobile clinics 42:79
Programs 11:36
Reorganization, re-orientation 8:10, 8:11, 8:74-75,
8:77, 11:35, 13:31-32, 33:66-68, 43:121-122
Rural areas, services for farmers 42:79
Training courses
Academic prerequisites 6:52, 6:53-54, 13:32,
24:15-16, 24:33-34, 65:22-23, 65:30
Apprenticeship elimination 6:52, 6:54
Co-ordination with other services 21:30
Counselling 6:28-29, 7:11, 21:46, 26:142-143
Employment, placement 6:51, 6:52, 6:54,
6:58-59, 65:33
Expansion 20:46, 26:141
Policies 7:7-8, 8:27, 24:53-56, 38:15-16
Success 27:126
Teachers 24:55
Workmen's Compensation, collaboration 28:14-15
Upgrading courses
Academic prerequisites 6:57-58
Counselling 7:11
Expansion 26:140
Leadership training 63:12, 63:16, 63:20-21
See also
Education
Adult
- Canada Pension Plan
Operation 23:84, 23:95-100
- Canadian Association for Adult Education
Brief 24:40-64
Committee on basic education and poverty, role 24:10
Discussion 24:7-22
Role 24:44
- Canadian Association of Social Workers
Brief 30:29-45
Discussion 30:7-28
Role 30:31
- Canadian Bill of Human Rights
Citation 7:22
- Canadian Catholic Conference
Brief 49:36-43
Discussion 49:7-23
- Canadian Chamber of Commerce
Brief 51:35-51
Discussion 51:13-34
Role 51:14, 51:35
- Canadian Civil Liberties Association
Activities, role 32:7
Brief 32:28-37
Discussion 32:7-27
Fredericton, New Brunswick Chapter
Brief 63:24-25, 63:70-71
Recommendations 63:24-25, 63:70
Recommendations 32:36-37
- Canadian Co-op Fertilizers
Activities 20:15
See also
Co-Operative Union of Canada
- Canadian Council for Research in Education
Brief 46:57-64
Discussion 46:29-38
Operation, organization 46:31, 46:35
Recommendations 46:57-58
- Canadian Council of Churches
Brief 49:36-43
Discussion 49:7-35
- Canadian Council on Rural Development
Activities, role 18:7-9, 18:11-12, 18:37
Brief 18:36-70
Discussion 18:7-23
- Canadian Federation of Agriculture
Brief 21:38-42
Discussion 21:9-21
Organization 21:12-13

Canadian Federation of University Women, St. John's Club (Nfld.)

Brief 52:67-68

Newfoundland situation, discussion 52:30-36

Recommendations 52:67

Canadian Home and School and Parent-Teacher Federation

Brief 22:23-26

Discussion 22:9-22

Role 22:23

Canadian Medical Association

Activities, background 45:21-23, 45:41, 45:45-46

Brief 45:41-46

Discussion 45:21-38

Role 45:45

Canadian National Institute for the Blind

Brief 67:20-21

Discussion 67:8-14

See also

Blind

Canadian Nurses' Association

Activities, background 47:38-40

Brief 47:38-43

Discussion 47:7-24

Recommendations 47:43

See also

Nurses and Nursing

Canadian Operational Research Society

Activities, role 50:43-45

Brief 50:41-70

Operational research applied to poverty, discussion 50:7-22

Recommendations 50:59-60

Canadian Teachers' Federation

Discussion 46:9-29

Public education, brief 46:39-57

Recommendations 46:56-57

Role 46:9

Canadian Woman's Christian Temperance Union

Brief 45:47-57

Canadiana, School*See*

School Canadiana, Vancouver

Cantin, Léon, Director General, Welfare Council, Quebec (COBEQ)

Statement 66:11-12

Cape Breton*See*

Nova Scotia

Cape Breton Development Corporation

Retirement plan 11:26

Cappon, Dr. D., Professor, Urban and Environmental Studies, York University, Toronto

Statement 45:24-25

Carswell, Alfred, Toronto

Statement, poverty 26:71-72

Carter Commission*See*

Royal Commission on Taxation

Cartwright (Labrador) Citizen's Group

Labrador living conditions, brief 54:36-40

Carty, R.K., Vice-Chairman, Executive Council, Canadian Chamber of Commerce

Curriculum vitae 51:6

Castell, Mrs. Lorna, Member, Pointe St. Charles Community Clinic, Montreal

Curriculum vitae 45:7

Catholic Children's Aid Society, Toronto

Operation 20:23, 20:26-27

Catholic Family Services, Toronto

Operation 20:23

Catholic Social Welfare Bureau (P.E.I.)

History, role 4:61

Catholic Women's League of Canada

Brief 24:65-90

Discussion 24:23-39

Membership 24:38

Role 24:23, 24:35-36, 24:38, 24:65

Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation*See*

Housing

Chamber of Commerce, Campbellton (N.B.)

Discussion 68:24-26

Chamber of Commerce, Edmundston (N.B.)

Discussion 67:14

Chamberlist, N.S., Member, Yukon Territorial Council Committee's Yukon visit, statement 59:36Champlain, Viateur de, Director, Industrial Development Bank, Regional Chamber of Commerce, Lower St. Lawrence Region (Que.)

Statement 69:17-18

- Channon, Miss Geraldine, Executive Assistant, Canadian Teachers' Federation
Curriculum vitae 46:6
- Chaput, H.P., Director, Social Planning, Welfare Council, Quebec (COBEQ)
Statement 66:12-14
- Checkland, Rev. E.M., Chairman, Social Action, Edmonton and District Council of Churches
Statement 55:85-88
- Chénard, Miss Imelda, Assistant Director, Social Planning Council, Ottawa and District
Curriculum vitae 15:6
- Child Care Centre Society, Whitehorse (Yukon)
Aims 58:51
Day care centre, brief 58:51-52
Discussion 58:21-27
Recommendations 58:52
- Chisholm, Mrs. Ann, Universal Axle, Saint John (N.B.)
Statement 60:63
- Chisholm, Mrs. Barbara, Executive Director, Victoria Day Care Services, Toronto
Day care, statement 26:41-42
- Chrétien, Hon. Jean, Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development
Indian rights, statement 14:188-191
- Christie, Miss Florence, Executive Director, Family Services, Saint John Inc. (N.B.)
Statement 61:45-48
- Churches
Anti-poverty role 31:59-61, 33:17, 33:33, 34:8, 62:12
See also
Individual denominations
- Citizens' Advice Bureau (Great Britain)
Role 8:38, 57:8
- Citizens' Committee of Area No. 10, St.-Roch de Quebec
Discussion 66:41-42
- Citizens' Forum
Educational value 24:10-12
- City Centre Co-Operative Club, Edmonton
Co-operative aid for vagrants, discussion 57:16-24
- Clairmont, Dr. D.H., Director, Africville Relocation Study, Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University, Halifax
Curriculum vitae 1:5-6
- Clark, Allan, Executive Director, Indian-Eskimo Association of Canada
Curriculum vitae 19:7
- Clarke, E.J., Secretary-Treasurer, Toronto Negro Veterans' Association
Statement 27:57-59
- Clarke, Dr. J.G., Member, Yukon Social Service Society (Mayo Branch)
Mayo situation, statement 58:27-30
- Clayson, Gordon, Old Brewery Mission, Inc., Montreal
Curriculum vitae 41:6
- Clermont, Mrs. Ida, Resident, Île de Hull (Que.)
Curriculum vitae 16:6
- Clothing
Services 12:22, 57:66
Situation 6:78, 12:26-27
- Coffin, Joseph, Community Development Worker, Prince Edward Island Newstart Incorporated
Curriculum vitae 4:65
- Comeau, Laurent, Director, Conseil Régional d'Aménagement du Nord-Ouest (N.B.)
Statement 67:15-16
- Comités des Citoyens de l'Aire 10
See
Citizens' Committee of Area No. 10, St. Roch de Quebec
- Community Development
Economic participation 8:10, 8:74, 11:27, 11:28-29, 70:21, 70:49-50
Financing 8:11, 8:76
Housing 23:67, 60:10
Legislation 17:23
Participation of the poor 6:81, 8:10-11, 8:16, 8:65, 8:76, 8:78-79, 8:81, 11:27, 11:28-29, 15:20-21, 16:7, 16:18, 16:21-23, 18:8-9, 18:65, 18:68, 20:45, 21:9, 23:74-75, 25:26, 26:30 26:61, 26:62, 26:144, 26:149, 26:167, 27:121, 31:11, 55:10, 59:10, 63:79-82, 64:12, 70:21, 70:49-50
Pilot projects 26:175
Projects, need 23:18
Public attitude 20:30, 42:50-51
"Supportive" services 40:38-39
- Community Groups
Development 8:33, 8:76, 20:31, 27:163-164
Direct funding 2:49
Drop-in centres 8:76, 60:52-63, 60:113-116
Role, nature 8:33, 27:161-163
- Community Health Worker Training Program
Operation 23:114

Community Legal Aid and Services Program, Toronto
 Brief 27:132-140
 Discussion 27:27-39
 Errata, submission by Ian McDougall 52:8-9
 Role 27:28

Company of Young Canadians
 Activities 6:31-32, 15:36-37

Conger, D.S., Executive Director, Saskatchewan NewStart Inc.
 Statement 65:9-10

Connolly, Sen. Harold, Member, Special Senate Committee on Poverty
 Report, visit to Stony Mountain Native Brotherhood, Manitoba Penitentiary 6:47-49

Connor, T.R., Director of Research, Prince Edward Island Newstart Incorporated
 Curriculum vitae 4:64

Conseil des Oeuvres et du Bien-être du Québec
See
 Welfare Council, Quebec

Conseil Régional d'Aménagement du Nord-Est (N.B.)
 Activities, role 63:79-80
 Brief 63:79-82
 Discussion 63:30-38

Conseil Régional d'Aménagement du Nord-Ouest (N.B.)
 Activities, role 67:15, 67:18
 Brief 67:22-23
 Discussion 67:14-19

Consumer
 Buying clubs 20:21, 59:32-33
 Co-operatives 8:26, 8:77, 20:10, 20:15, 52:18, 59:31, 59:46
 Education 1:49, 6:82, 20:25, 20:26, 20:41, 20:47, 21:22-23, 24:56, 24:81, 26:31-32, 35:7, 35:8-9, 35:11, 35:26, 35:28-29, 36:40-42, 38:28, 59:10, 59:27, 59:32, 59:47, 60:20, 60:29-30, 60:97, 60:107-108
 Facilities, buying
 Credit union for low income people 64:23
 Investigation, finance and loan companies 1:34
 Situation 5:27, 12:30, 21:22-23, 21:46-47, 26:134, 26:164, 27:21, 27:22, 35:7-29, 42:49, 47:33, 48:8, 48:33, 50:131, 56:79, 56:195, 70:9
 Influence, development 8:33
 Information provision
 Government campaigns 26:13
 Neighbourhood centres 59:27-28, 59:47
 Price index 5:27
 Protection 35:7, 35:11, 35:26, 36:28, 36:35, 64:67

Consumers' Association of Canada
 Brief 35:26-29
 Discussion 35:7-25
 Role 35:14, 35:26-29
 Whitehorse branch (Yukon)
 Brief 59:46-47
 Recommendations 59:27, 59:46-47
 Yukon consumer, discussion 59:26-36

Coolaid, Vancouver
 Role, operation 8:30, 8:48-49

Co-Operative Union of Canada
 Brief 20:37-43
 Co-operative anti-poverty measures, discussion 20:9-23
 Organization, activities 20:11, 20:13-14, 20:17, 20:37
 Recommendations 20:42-43

Co-operatives
 Consumer 8:26, 8:77, 20:10, 20:15, 52:18, 59:31, 59:46
 Development 1:43, 8:28-29, 8:77, 9:12, 20:39, 24:18, 24:60-61, 52:18, 60:107-108, 60:111
 Eskimos 20:12-13, 20:19, 20:39-40, 63:12-13, 63:21
 Government support 20:9, 20:10, 20:16-17, 64:22
 Greenland 20:16
 Housing 2:31, 2:45-46, 3:20, 3:21, 12:33, 20:10, 20:11, 20:21, 20:41, 26:171-173, 52:18, 55:39-43, 57:81, 63:21-22, 64:67
 Indians 20:11-12, 20:15-16, 20:19, 20:39
 Métis 20:40
 Organization, role 20:9-10, 20:38-39, 60:65-67, 60:69-71

Cotton, E.A., Atlantic Regional Director, Boys' Clubs of Canada
 Youth problems, statement 62:8-9

Council of Catholic Charities
 Brief 20:44-47
 Discussion 20:22-36
 Recommendations 20:23-28
 Role 20:23-27, 20:44

Courchene, Dave, President, Manitoba Indian Brotherhood
 Statement 19:11-12

Craig, Dr. J.D., Director, Health Clinic for Transients, Gardenside Development Society, Edmonton
 Alcoholism, situation, statement 57:24-29

Craigs, J.H., Executive Member, Ontario Welfare Council
 Curriculum vitae 25:6
 Statement 25:9-10

Craven, Mrs. Charmian, Vice-President, Family Service Centre, Ottawa
Curriculum vitae 16:6

Crescent Valley Tenants' Association, Saint John (N.B.)
Brief 60:122-123
Discussion 60:74-79
Recommendations 60:74, 60:123

Critchley, David, Professor, Maritime School of Social Work, Dalhousie University, Halifax
Brief 2:50-55
Curriculum vitae 2:55
Statement 2:17-21

Crittenden, Miss D., Assistant Deputy Minister, Ontario Department of Social and Family Services
Curriculum vitae 43:7

Croll, Sen. D.A., Chairman, Special Senate Committee on Poverty
Statements 8:7-9, 27:49-50, 52:60-61, 53:7-17, 55:7-8, 60:7-8, 62:7-8, 64:7-9, 68:7-8

Crolly, Col. Mabel, Chief, Social Service Work, Salvation Army
Curriculum vitae 48:6

Cumming, R.C., Executive Director, Edmonton Day Centre
Statement 57:7-8

Cunning, Leslie, Executive Director, Halifax Neighbourhood Centre
Statement 2:10

Curran, Gary, Program Manager, Universal Axle, Saint John
Drop-in centres, statement 60:53

Currie, Walter, President, Indian-Eskimo Association of Canada
Curriculum vitae 19:7
Indian-Eskimo situation, statement 19:9-10

Cuthand, Rev. Adam, President, Canadian Métis Society
Curriculum vitae 19:7

DEVCO

See

Cape Breton Development Corporation

Dalhousie University, Institute of Public Affairs, Halifax
Findings, recommendations 1:147-169

N.S. situation
Brief 1:52-191
Discussion 1:12-27
Operation 63:19

Davidson, Miss True, Mayor, East York; Welfare and Housing Committee, Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto
Brief 26:136-138

Davis, Don, Executive Director, Ontario Federation of Citizens' Associations
Statement 26:61-62

Davis, R.A., Supervisor, Little Burgundy, Family Service Association, Montreal
Statement 36:8-9

Day Care Centres

Act, Ontario, operation 27:40
Construction standards 56:61-62
Federal support 6:14, 27:39, 56:61, 56:64
Fees 5:16, 9:9, 25:25, 56:64, 56:65
Group presentation, discussion 56:59-70
Industrial 24:25, 24:32
Legislation 4:56
Location 24:31-32, 24:38
Municipal 24:25
Need 6:14, 6:33-34, 6:70, 7:7, 7:14, 8:75, 12:18, 12:34-35, 15:20, 15:48, 20:26, 20:45, 23:18, 24:25, 24:78-79, 25:25, 26:39-49, 27:39-40, 27:51, 27:148, 31:58, 34:36, 47:34, 50:33, 56:59, 56:60-67, 56:178-179, 56:204, 59:27, 59:47
Operation 8:43, 15:58, 27:63, 27:142-143, 52:35, 56:65, 56:183-184, 58:21-27
Staff, training 24:25, 24:32, 24:38, 27:63, 56:62

Deiter, Walter, Chief, National Indian Brotherhood
Curriculum vitae 19:7

Delinquency

Causes 6:14, 6:79, 24:34, 26:99, 27:148, 31:20, 60:120, 64:36
Legal facilities, juvenile courts 8:35, 60:120
Police attitude 22:18
Prevention 6:14, 9:13, 60:120
Probation supervision, "halfway houses" 48:34, 60:120
Psychological disturbances 21:31
Vandalism 6:42

Demogrants

Operation 15:49
See also
Individual demogrants

- Dent, Dr. Ivor, Mayor; Social Service Department, Edmonton
Statement 55:8-9
- Dental care
Benefit plans 8:75, 15:42, 23:8, 23:22, 23:185, 26:140, 26:141, 64:38
Clinics 6:67, 12:34
Fluoridation 23:196, 47:41
Indians 23:199
Programs
 Extension of services 6:83
 National Health and Welfare Department 23:125-126, 23:199
 Philosophy 23:196
 Provincial 23:198-199
Situation 6:79, 15:48, 18:49-50, 23:125-126, 23:195-196, 45:42
Studies, United States 23:197-198
Welfare services 6:69
- Denyer, Mrs. S.C., Community Development Consultant, Family Service Centre, Ottawa
Curriculum vitae 16:6
- Dinsdale, Hon. Walter, M.P., (Brandon-Souris)
Statement 48:25-26
- Disabled persons
See
 Handicapped
- Disabled Persons Allowance
Operation 15:33, 23:102-103
- Divorce
Financial assistance 8:17, 8:18, 21:49, 27:35, 64:38
Legal aid 6:15-16, 6:52, 8:37, 8:75, 27:30, 27:35, 45:25, 64:43, 64:79
- Donahue, J.H., President, Social Planning Council, Edmonton
Curriculum vitae 55:111
Edmonton situation, statement 55:36
- Dorrien, James, Old Brewery Mission, Inc., Montreal
Curriculum vitae 41:7
- Dowhaniuk, Mrs. Mary, Member, Vancouver Opportunities Committee
Statement 9:21-23
- Drolet, Laurent, Member, Citizens' Committee of Area No. 10, St. Roch de Quebec
Statement 66:41-42
- Drop-in Centres
See
 Community Groups
- Drugs (Medical)
See
 Medical care
- Drugs (non-medical)
Addiction situation 17:15, 18:14, 24:27, 24:34, 41:10, 45:50, 48:33, 48:36, 65:42
Federal programs 23:121
Treatment facilities 57:26, 57:33, 57:67
- Drummond, J.S., Executive Adviser, Past President, New Brunswick Association for the Advancement of Coloured People
N.B. black poverty, statement 61:36-38
- Duggan, Mrs. Barbara, Indian and Métis Friendship Centre, Winnipeg
Statement 7:7-8
- Dugout, Vancouver
Role 8:82
- Duke of York Public School Staff, Toronto
Brief 26:174-189
Discussion 26:80-95
Operation 26:175, 26:176-185
- Duncan, Mrs. A.D., Economic Research Assistant, Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University, Halifax
Curriculum vitae 1:9
- Dussiaum, Mrs. Rosa, Dalhousie area resident, Ottawa
Curriculum vitae 17:6
- Eastern Quebec Development Bureau
Role 70:41-43
- Eastern Quebec Regional Development Council
Brief 70:38-51
Discussion 70:19-25
Recommendations 70:21-22, 70:51
Role 70:23, 70:39-40
- Economic Council Act
Role 5:23
- Economic Council of Canada
Fifth Annual Review 5:9, 5:23, 63:64
Sixth Annual Review 5:9-10, 5:12, 5:15, 5:29, 20:9, 20:37-38, 63:64
- Economic Development
Communities 8:74
 Participation 8:10, 11:27, 11:28-29, 70:21, 70:49-50
Forecast for 1975 51:45
Government involvement, recommendations 11:11, 70:21-22, 70:23-24, 70:51

- Growth centres 11:8-9, 11:10-11, 11:29-30, 18:12
 Increased productivity 18:28, 18:63
 Maritimes 11:22-23
 Natural resources 2:37, 11:11-12, 11:19, 11:20-21, 11:22, 11:35
 Northern Canada 8:13-14
 Programs
 Cost 18:67-68
 Need 18:63, 21:39
 Operating conditions 11:27-28
 Rate 18:28
 Regional disparity
 Amelioration, recommendations 11:8, 11:12, 11:16, 11:34-35, 70:27, 70:33
 Situation, rural areas 1:24, 11:17, 11:35, 15:19, 18:7-23, 18:36-71, 50:89-92, 70:15, 70:20, 70:27
 Stabilization policies, effects 12:36
 Tourism 11:35, 70:22-23
 Transportation factor 11:13
 Urbanization 2:31, 2:42
See also Farming
 Individual Provinces
 Regional Economic Expansion Department
- Edmonton and District Council of Churches
 Brief 55:146-149
 Discussion 55:85-93
- Edmonton Day Centre
 Brief 57:64-65
 Discussion 57:7-16
- Education
 Adult 1:35, 2:32, 2:38, 2:40, 2:58, 5:13, 8:74-76, 9:9, 16:19-20, 17:17, 24:52-53, 24:64, 25:25, 27:117, 31:67-68, 40:35-36, 42:15-16, 63:12, 63:16, 64:79
 Counselling 18:22, 25:25, 27:63-64
 Financial problems 6:51
 India 24:20-21
 Life skills training 65:10-13
 Retraining courses
 Attitude, program, implementation 6:25, 21:40
 Business support 8:10, 8:19, 8:75-76, 27:54, 27:70-71
 Eligibility 27:61-62
 Income replacement 22:13, 22:26
 Operation 9:18, 13:30-31, 24:21-22, 31:53-54, 33:63-66, 65:30-39, 70:34
 Study leave 24:64
 Success 43:22
 Work context 31:54-55
 Scandinavian countries 24:18, 24:19
 Television, use 31:62-66
 Upgrading courses
 Financial assistance 8:27, 8:76
 Programs 2:33, 6:82, 13:14-15, 13:23-25, 24:13, 31:53-54, 40:36, 65:13-29
 Allowances, loans 1:15, 1:21-22, 1:29, 1:36-37, 1:40, 1:195, 5:17, 5:18, 11:24, 12:32, 12:34, 22:10-12, 22:15-17, 22:25, 23:39-40, 26:153-154, 27:61, 27:149, 31:69
 Attendance, 14-17 year olds 5:14
 Child Development Centre 21:64, 56:59, 56:204
 Children
 Research 21:59-63
 School performance, environment 6:78, 12:32, 21:25-26, 21:29-30, 21:34, 21:47, 21:53-59, 22:9-10, 22:13-21, 22:23-25, 27:148, 46:59-60
 Class-room crowding 2:21
 Community colleges 24:14
 Concept 8:10, 8:77, 16:29, 22:25, 24:45-47, 31:58-59
 Continuous learning 24:7, 24:20, 63:19-21, 63:68
 Correspondence courses 13:22-23
 Counselling 1:39, 1:41, 1:194, 1:198, 2:31, 2:39, 2:58, 5:15, 6:81-82, 27:148
 Discrimination, children of welfare recipients 1:24, 12:32, 21:23, 21:47-48, 24:31, 46:15, 46:19, 46:27, 55:26-27, 64:39
 Dropouts 1:37, 2:34, 2:57, 5:12-14, 5:21, 6:78, 7:24-25, 11:24, 17:17, 20:35, 21:33, 22:16, 22:24, 23:39-40, 23:46, 24:14-15, 24:17, 24:50-51, 45:12, 46:28, 46:59, 56:204, 60:20, 60:21, 60:27, 60:97
 Employment, requirements 5:15-16, 24:15-16, 24:33-34, 60:21-22, 60:24-27, 60:28, 60:98-99
 Equal opportunity 1:35, 22:10, 22:12-13, 22:15, 22:25, 23:85, 46:15-16, 46:18-19, 46:45, 46:51-52
 Eskimos 14:34, 14:115-118, 14:136
 Extra-curricular activities, provision for 16:8-9, 46:11-12, 56:197, 64:35
 Ex-wards, Children's Aid Society 20:26
 Federal government, role 1:195, 2:57, 6:14, 12:8, 21:63-65, 22:25, 46:26, 56:197
 Federal-provincial agreements 22:11, 22:25, 27:148
 Handicapped 67:16
 Housing, effect on 1:24, 2:34, 15:46, 24:56-58
 Indians 7:11-13, 7:16, 14:31-36, 14:57, 14:59-68, 14:115-118, 14:136, 19:10-11, 19:14, 19:17, 19:36-39, 42:14-15, 42:53-55, 59:40
 Language development
 Immigrants 8:45-46, 36:36
 Remedial programs 46:60-61
 Library facilities 8:55, 8:62, 8:84
 Media, use 24:10-13, 24:20, 24:51-52, 24:59, 31:62-66
 Métis 14:115-118, 42:53-55
 Municipal government, role 21:64-65
 Parental involvement 22:14-15, 26:182, 27:144, 46:27-28, 46:49-50, 46:56, 64:39
 Poverty factor 1:21, 1:36, 3:20-21, 5:10, 5:12-13, 6:80, 15:13, 16:19, 21:23, 22:24-25, 24:39-40,

27:14, 27:117, 31:69-71, 33:8, 42:8, 45:25,
46:43-45, 48:8, 48:32, 56:195, 56:196-197,
58:47, 60:19, 60:64, 60:96-98, 60:118, 62:10,
67:15, 67:23, 70:7, 70:32

Pre-school

Programs 2:34-35, 4:12-13, 6:14, 6:33-34,
21:34-35, 21:63-65, 22:16, 26:39-49, 27:39,
27:144, 27:148, 31:69-71, 45:11-12, 46:16,
46:21, 46:48-49, 46:56, 46:61-62, 56:58-60,
56:63, 56:66, 56:204, 60:97

Research 21:59-63

Provincial government, role 21:64-65

Psychological, psychiatric services 12:32

Regional financial inequalities 12:32, 46:10,
46:13-14, 46:46, 46:56

Research

Assistance 46:57-58

Dis-advantaged children 21:63, 46:31-32

Function 46:36

Programs, priorities 46:32-34

Rural areas

Low attainment 18:10-11, 18:50-52

Nursery project 21:35, 21:64-65

Problems 24:16-17

School

Community involvement 6:81, 27:145, 46:10-13,
46:17, 46:19, 46:46-48, 46:56

Co-ordination with social agencies 8:77, 27:145

Role 46:61-62

Self-help courses 1:49, 6:82, 7:7, 8:24, 8:64-65,
9:19, 9:37, 17:23-24, 20:25, 20:45-46, 24:80-82,
26:153, 38:28, 60:20, 60:29-30, 60:97, 64:13-14

Streaming 5:21-22, 31:59

System 1:32, 1:35-36, 1:40, 2:20-21, 12:8, 16:7, 18:22, 21:33, 24:60, 46:25, 46:48-53, 60:19-24,
60:27-29, 60:96-97

Teachers 1:193-194, 2:20, 2:22, 2:34, 2:39,
2:52-53, 6:81, 18:51-52, 31:71, 46:12, 46:16-17,
46:18, 46:21-23, 46:24-25, 46:26, 46:53-56,
46:61

Teaching equality, improvement 2:22, 46:32

Textbooks, curriculum 46:50-51, 46:57

Union attitudes 24:14

University level 5:13, 6:82-83, 26:175

Value, anti-poverty measure 46:42-43

Vocational, technical schools (non-adult) 5:12,
11:24, 24:13, 27:148, 31:70, 46:62-63, 60:20-21,
60:23-24, 60:27, 60:97-98, 63:16

See also

Canada Manpower Centre

Consumer

Individual provinces

Welfare

Ellwood, Lt. Col. Tom, Administrator, Family Welfare
Program (Metro-Toronto), Salvation Army
Curriculum vitae 48:6

Employment

See

Individual provinces

Labour

Eskimos

Assimilation 14:134-136

Co-operatives 20:12-13, 20:19, 20:39-40, 63:12-13,
63:21

Culture 14:44-45, 24:88-89

Economic development 14:121-123

Education 14:34, 14:115-118, 14:136, 24:89

Employment 14:124-125, 14:137

Fishing programs 14:137

Government policy 14:42, 14:47-50

Health programmes 23:111-114, 45:44

Housing, programmes 14:118-121, 14:136, 18:53

Income, annual 14:43, 14:108

Industrial development 14:38

Infant mortality 45:22, 45:42

Life expectancy 19:36

Northern Territories 14:105-128

Population statistics 14:42, 14:107, 19:36

Poverty, causes 14:108

Quebec, Arctic 14:105-128

Women, situation 24:24-25, 24:74-76

Espie, Dr. Thomas, Executive Director, Canadian Council on Rural Development

CCRD activities, role, statement 18:7-9

Curriculum vitae 18:6

FPFC

See

Family Planning Federation of Canada

FRED

See

Fund for Rural Economic Development

Fabris, Mrs. Valentine, National President, Catholic
Women's League of Canada

Curriculum vitae 24:6

Statement 24:23

Fagan, Miss Veronica, Member, Brief Committee,
Catholic Women's League of Canada

Curriculum vitae 24:6

Ellery, Major, Administrator, London Children's Village, Salvation Army
Curriculum vitae 48:6

Fairholm, C.I., Senior Policy Adviser, Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development
Curriculum vitae 14:7

FamiliesBudgets

Guides, comparison 23:150-159

Instruction 6:82, 7:7, 50:30

Montreal 23:153-156

Municipal assistance programs 15:45

Pre-added 15:45

Problems 6:78

Provincial assistance programs 23:165-181

Toronto 23:150-153, 23:155-156

Common-law marriages 8:18, 45:25

Counselling 68:42

Decline in number of poor families 5:25

Desertion

Legal procedure 15:48, 24:25, 64:41

Maintenance payments, enforcement 15:48,
23:87, 24:25, 24:28-30, 24:34-35, 24:77-78,
57:81-82, 64:35, 64:79

Occurance 15:47-48, 26:140, 64:40

Problem 5:28, 15:47-48

Disintegration factors 20:26-27

Housing 21:23, 21:48, 27:148

Study 24:60

Family planning 6:70, 6:86, 8:75, 19:24-33,
19:40-42, 26:10, 34:36, 40:38, 47:41, 50:25,
70:34

Birth control 6:68-69, 8:75, 18:22, 19:30

Clinics 27:129, 45:11, 45:20

Information, counselling services 19:24, 19:25-27,
19:29, 31:57

Financial assistance

Emergency 6:70

Rates 15:25, 23:168-169

Scope, determination 15:40, 15:45, 23:165-167

Home management

Education 24:26, 24:80-81

Mismanagement, factors 1:203-204, 20:26-27

Household supplies 15:45

Income estimates 28:130-136

Infant mortality rates 18:47-48, 19:27, 45:22,
45:42

Life education 1:50, 20:26, 20:27, 20:46, 20:47

Poverty, effects 6:86, 12:37-38

Security right 8:10

Shared accommodation 10:26

Single parent

AssistanceIncome support, allowances 1:36, 1:43, 20:27,
20:47, 23:46, 23:86-87, 24:25-26, 24:29,
24:79-80, 24:82, 24:86, 50:102, 64:78

Municipal 15:47

Characteristics 50:97

Effects on children 24:24, 24:70-74, 55:20-21,
55:27-28, 55:29, 55:100-102, 64:39Employment 1:18, 24:24-25, 47:34, 64:35,
64:38-39, 64:43, 64:78

Housekeeper tax deduction 2:13, 24:36, 24:80

Research, studies 24:23-24, 24:37, 24:68-69,
24:70Retraining, rehabilitation courses 24:24, 24:26,
24:76, 24:80, 64:79Situation 1:17-18, 5:28, 23:46, 23:86, 24:68-70,
50:98-101, 64:78-79, 64:40-41Statistics 10:15, 20:34-35, 20:47, 23:46, 24:35,
24:37, 24:68, 50:97, 64:43

Study 24:60

Unmarried mothers, benefits 20:47, 24:25, 24:32,
24:77, 42:33, 42:52, 48:35

Work incentives 24:32-33, 24:36-37, 42:33

Statistics 6:7, 70:32

Structure, changed 16:17

See also

Day Care Centres

Divorce

Legal Aid

Mothers Allowance

Youth

Youth Allowance

Family Allowance

Discontinuation, recommendation 1:50, 26:74

Education, truancy deterrent 24:20, 60:25-26, 60:98

Effect 2:41, 19:27

Increase, recommendation 8:21-22, 8:75, 12:34,
25:23, 25:25, 26:13, 27:128, 29:13, 44:35-36,
68:42Operation, objectives, rates 23:18-19, 23:34,
23:37-39, 23:42, 23:85, 23:92-93, 23:168,
25:18-19, 25:21, 26:20-21, 26:28-29,
27:105-106, 33:48-49, 40:14, 43:30, 43:33-35,
43:38-39, 44:8-9, 64:18-19

Redistribution methods 33:78-82

Taxation 12:34

Testing, eligibility concept 8:22, 23:18, 23:42,
26:119, 27:23, 44:9*See also*

Youth

Youth Allowance

Family Benefits Act*See*

Ontario

Family Planning Federation of Canada

Brief 19:40-42

Discussion 19:23-33

Family Service Association, Metropolitan Toronto

Brief 27:123-131

Discussion 27:19-27

Operation, activities 27:123-124

Family Service Association, Montreal

Brief 36:34-44

Discussion 36:7-33

- Family Service Centre, Ottawa
 Brief 16:29-31
 Discussion 16:7-17
 Operation, activities 16:7, 16:29-30
- Family Services, Saint John Inc. (N.B.)
 Brief 61:76-80
 Discussion 61:45-55
 Operation, activities 61:76-79
 Recommendations 61:76
- Farm Credit Corporation
 Role 21:13
- Farmers
 Community approaches 42:78, 42:80-81
 Income disparity 18:42-45, 20:9, 42:73-76
 Manpower services 42:79
 Retirement plan 11:25-26, 21:16, 21:41
 Retraining 21:40, 50:29-30
 Situation 21:9-21, 21:38-42, 42:67-81, 50:89-92,
 55:49-60, 55:112-132, 64:24-30
- Farming
 Development, encouragement policies 11:17-20,
 11:35, 42:76-77, 42:79-80, 55:123, 55:124
 Mechanization 2:44, 21:16, 70:28-29
 Subsidization 21:41, 55:123
- Farrera, Joe, Association to Tackle Adverse Conditions, Vancouver
 A.T.T.A.C. development, statement 8:54
- Federal Task Force on Agriculture
 Report, "Canadian Agriculture in the Seventies", low-income sector 42:67-81
- Fédération des Caisses Populaires Desjardins, Lévis (Que.)
 Co-operative activities 20:13, 20:15
- Federation of Saskatchewan Indians
 Indian situation, discussion 65:47-50
- Fletcher, Dan, Toronto
 Statement 26:72-74
- Flcury, Lt. Gen. F.J., Chairman, Health and Welfare Committee, Canadian Chamber of Commerce
 Curriculum vitae 51:7-11
 Statement 51:14-15
- Food
 Prices 9:12
See also
 Nutrition
- Ford, George, Member, SOS-Volunteer Action for Social Change, Toronto
 Statement 27:78-79
- Forsyth, Rev. Dr. C.H., Secretary, Board of Evangelism and Social Service, United Church of Canada
 Curriculum vitae 31:6-7
 Statement 31:9-11
- Fraternity of Grey Knights (P.E.I.)
 Discussion 4:25-36
 Function 4:25-26
- French, Canon F.M., Co-Chairman, Halifax Tenants' Protective Association
 Statement 2:9-10
- Frontier College
 Adult education, brief 13:30-33
 Background, organization 13:32-33
 Field workers, Hawkes Bay, Porte-aux-Choix
 (Nfld.)
 Hawkes Bay, Cox's Cove, situation, brief
 54:19-24
 Operation, activities 13:9-29
- Fund for Rural Economic Development
 Operation 10:28, 11:9, 18:56, 42:72-73, 42:78-79,
 42:80-81, 44:16-17
- F.U.T.U.R.E. Society, Edmonton
 Operation 55:105-108
- Gagnon, Claude, Q.C., President, Bar Association, Province of Quebec
 Legal services, statement 39:7-8
- Gallagher, Mrs. Ed, Member, Brief Committee,
 Catholic Women's League of Canada
 Curriculum vitae 24:6
- Gardenside Development Society, Edmonton
 Brief 57:66-70
 Health Clinic for Transients: Alcoholism, discussion
 57:24-35
- Gardner, Miss Sheila, Spokesman, Public Housing Tenants, New Waterford, Glace Bay, Sydney (N.S.)
 Statement 2:10-12
- Gaul, Robert, Member, "Up to the Neck" Newspaper,
 Montreal
 Curriculum vitae 12:6
- Gayne, John, President, New Brunswick Senior Citizens' Foundation; Director, Moncton Lions Club Federation
 Statement 62:20-21

- Geekie, D.A., Secretary, Council on Community Health Care, Canadian Medical Association
Health services, statement 45:23-24
- Gélinas, Paul, Past President, Regional Chamber of Commerce, Lower St. Lawrence Region (Que.)
Statement 69:8-9
- Gemmell, Miss Lyn, School of Architecture, University of Manitoba, Winnipeg
Recreation project, statement 6:39-40
- Gendron, Mrs. Lea, Dalhousie area resident, Ottawa
Curriculum vitae 17:6
- Giasson, Gilles, Director, Professional Services, Social Service of the Diocese of Rimouski (Que.)
Statement 70:7-8
- Goble, N.M., Secretary General, Canadian Teachers' Federation
Curriculum vitae 46:6
- Godfrey, S.R., Commissioner, Social Welfare Department, Regional Municipality of Ottawa-Carleton
Curriculum vitae 15:6
Statement 15:7-11
- Golden, Miss Jean, Member, Students' Administrative Council; Director, Varsity Downtown Education Project, University of Toronto
Statement 27:86-88
- Gowland, Rev. A.J., Secretary, Board of Evangelism and Social Action, Presbyterian Church in Canada
Statement 33:7-9
- Grant, Miss Jean, Social Welfare Department, Regional Municipality of Ottawa-Carleton
Curriculum vitae 15:6
- Great Britain
Citizens' Advice Bureau 8:38, 57:8
Health services 23:33
Home ownership subsidization 10:23
Housing allowance 10:23
Meals on wheels 47:10
- Greater Moncton Community Chest Inc., Moncton
Brief 63:77-78
Discussion 63:38-48
- Green, P., President, Metro Federation of Citizens' Associations, Toronto
Statement 26:62-63
- Green, Dr. R.G., General Practitioner, Prince Albert Community Clinic, Prince Albert (Sask.)
Nutritional poverty, statement 65:40-42
- Greene, Rev. R.S.H., Alderman, Community Services Policy Committee, Calgary
Statement 59:9-11
Submission, housing 56:118-123
- Greenland
Co-operatives, native people 20:16
Eskimo education 19:21
- Grégoire, Mme Fleurette, Dalhousie area resident, Ottawa
Curriculum vitae 17:6
- Grégoire, Roland, Dalhousie area resident, Ottawa
Curriculum vitae 17:6
- Group of Community Workers, Vancouver
Brief 8:74-77
Discussion 8:9-32
Recommendations 8:11-12, 8:74-77
- Guaranteed Annual Income
See
Income
- Guaranteed Income Supplement
See
Income
Old Age
- Guiboche, Celestin, President, Winnipeg Tenants Association, Winnipeg
Statement 6:49-53
- Guilbeault, Jean, Governor, Board of Governors, Frontier College
Curriculum vitae 13:7
Instructor selection, statement 13:10
- Guinan, James, Member, City Centre Co-operative Club, Edmonton
Co-operative groups, statement 57:16-18
- Guindon, Yvon, Dalhousie area resident, Ottawa
Curriculum vitae 17:6
- Hagan, A.T., Calgary
Day care services, brief 56:182-186
Recommendations 56:184
- Halifax Tenants' Protective Association, Halifax
Brief 2:48-49
Discussion 2:9-17
- Handicapped
Allowances 23:24, 50:114-116, 50:119-120
Children, tax exemption 29:25
Education 37:17

- Eligibility tests 23:24-25
- Employment situation 28:28, 45:24, 50:116, 50:118-119, 50:120, 57:67
- Guaranteed income 15:19
- Mentally retarded 50:117-119
- Minimum wage 50:116-117, 50:120
- Protected workshops, establishment 29:25, 50:119
- Research 50:118, 50:120
- See also*
- Blind
- Disabled Persons Allowance
- Hanrahan, P.A., Student, Social Service Course, Ryerson Polytechnical Institute, Toronto
Statement 27:69-71
- Hansen, T.J., Member, Social Planning Council, Edmonton
Curriculum vitae 55:111
Ex-convicts situation, statement 55:37-38
- Harcourt, Michael, Vancouver Inner-City Service Project, Vancouver
Statement 8:34-35
- Harvey, André, M.N.A., Chauveau (Que.)
Statement 66:7-8
- Harvey, Andrew, Economic Research Associate, Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University, Halifax
Curriculum vitae 1:8
- Hawthorne Report
See
Survey of the Contemporary Indians of Canada
- Health
See
Alcoholism
Dental care
Drugs (non-medical)
Hospitals
Individual provinces
Medical care
National Health and Welfare Department
Nurses and nursing
Nutrition
- Health Clinic for Transients
See
Gardenside Development Society, Edmonton
- Health Resources Fund Act
Role 23:115, 23:130-131
- Heath, Mrs. Margery, President, Seekers of Security Welfare Rights Group, Regina
Statement 64:34-35
- Hellyer Task Force
See
Task Force on Housing and Urban Development (1969)
- Henson, Guy, Director, Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University, Halifax
Curriculum vitae 1:8-9
Statement 1:13-14
- Higgins, Gilbert, Inter-Faith Social Action Committee (Nfld.)
Pre-school education, discussion summary 54:9
- Hignett, H.W., President, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation
Brief, statement 10:7-9
Curriculum vitae 10:6
- Hill, Prof. H.W., Chairman, Department of Religion, Kingsway College; Member, Seventh-Day Adventist Church in Canada
Curriculum vitae 34:6
Statement 34:7-8
- Hinsl, Ralph, Manager, Life Skills Division, Saskatchewan NewStart Inc.
Life skills program, statement 65:10-13
- Hiscock, Grant, Deer Lake and Environs Association (Nfld.)
Statement summary 54:8-9
- Hjertaas, Dr. O.K., Medical Director, Prince Albert Community Clinic, Prince Albert (Sask.)
Health care for the poor, statement 65:44-45
- Hodges, F.D., Vice-President, New Brunswick Federation of Labour (C.L.C.)
Statements 60:37-38, 63:11-13
- Hodgins, Miss Nora, Secretary-Treasurer, Ontario Teachers' Federation
Curriculum vitae 46:6
- Holman, Dr. G.H., Professor and Head, Division of Paediatrics, University of Calgary
Child development and health, statement 56:203-205
- Home and School Association of Alberta, Calgary Area Council
Activities, role 56:160-161
Brief (bibliography) 56:158-163
Discussion 56:36-44
- Honey, Dr. Floyd, General Secretary, Canadian Council of Churches
Statement 49:7-8

Hospitals

- Bed capacity ratio 18:49
- Cientele 45:30-32
- Coverage 23:184, 34:35
- Insurance 23:8, 23:12, 23:47, 23:71
- Out-patient facilities, problems 45:28, 45:30, 45:36-37
- Services 6:67-69, 23:12
- Inadequate 16:40
- Investigation 57:68-69

See also

- Medical care
- Nurses and nursing

Householders' Association of Mundy Pond, St. John's (Nfld.)

- Discussion 52:27-30

Housing

- Allowances
 - Great Britain 10:23
 - Sweden 10:23
- Anti-poverty factor 2:34, 2:38
- Assessment vs land value taxation 18:24-35, 31:56
- Blacks 24:57
- Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation
 - Brief 10:26-36
 - Budget 10:15
 - Decentralization 8:11
 - Discussion 10:7-25
 - Loans to public housing agencies 10:8
 - Research
 - Recommended areas 24:57-58
 - Social aspects 10:9-10
 - Responsibility 8:11, 23:67
- Community development 23:67, 60:10
- Community services complex 8:55, 8:77, 8:84
- Construction programs 6:14, 6:82, 7:8, 7:33
- Co-operatives 2:31, 2:45-46, 3:20, 3:21, 12:33, 20:10, 20:11, 20:21, 20:41, 26:171-173, 52:18, 55:39-43, 57:81, 63:21-22, 64:67
- Cost problems 45:53, 50:95-96, 63:22
- Discrimination 6:50, 6:53, 6:54, 6:55, 8:34-35, 17:18, 21:23, 21:48, 21:49
- Education, factor 1:24, 2:34, 15:46, 24:56-58
- Emergency provision 6:49
- Eskimos 14:118-121, 14:136, 18:53
- Families, factor of disruption in 21:23, 21:48, 27:148
- Federal Government
 - Areas of responsibility 1:48, 3:20, 6:14, 10:14, 28:20, 28:57, 37:44
 - Participation in public housing 2:13-14, 2:16, 2:29, 6:14, 44:35, 61:21
 - Programs 10:7
 - Projects 10:13
- Ghetto creation 10:15, 10:19, 27:158
- Ground pollution 10:12-13, 10:20

Home finding registry, assistance 6:70

Home ownership 9:23, 9:38, 10:9, 10:10, 10:11, 31:56

Great Britain 10:23

Indians 1:47-48, 10:24-25, 10:28, 14:10, 14:37, 14:68-81, 14:118-121, 14:136, 18:53, 19:35, 19:38, 19:39, 24:58, 42:53, 58:55-56, 59:39-40, 65:47-50

Land Banks 10:23-24, 31:56

Landlord and Tenants Act 6:61

Landlords' abuse 6:14, 9:13, 15:20

Legal aid 6:52, 6:53, 8:34-35, 21:49

Loans

Insured 10:13, 10:27

Low-interest 6:82

Maintenance 6:56, 10:10, 10:26-27, 12:13, 15:20, 17:15, 17:16, 17:17-18, 50:95

Métis 10:25, 10:28

Mortgages

Availability of funds 1:35

Tax exemption on interest payment 1:35, 24:27, 24:83, 24:87

Multi-service program 37:44

Municipal government

Participation 2:29

Responsibility 27:121, 28:20

National Housing Act

Amendment, 1964 10:22

Assistance

Programs 10:7-8, 10:27-28

Tables 10:32-36

Governmental participation 2:29

Loans approved, number, 1946-1968 10:28

Objective, operation 10:31, 26:12

Non-profit corporations 12:33

Old age, situation 10:17-18, 47:9-10, 50:23, 50:83, 50:94, 57:82-83, 63:12

Ontario Housing Corporation 10:22

Overcrowding 1:24, 6:78, 10:27, 10:29, 16:19, 16:37, 18:53, 21:23, 21:48, 50:94

Patterson Report (Metro-Toronto) 27:120

Poverty, relationship 1:24, 1:46-47, 3:20, 3:21, 10:26, 21:23, 21:48, 31:55-57, 34:35, 37:44, 42:8, 50:93-94, 61:17-19

Prices control board 1:48

Private

Government financial support 10:15-16, 10:18

Rent

Lease, maintenance problems 6:50, 12:13-14, 15:46, 50:93-94

Supplements 24:26, 24:83

Situation, living conditions 3:21, 6:49-50, 6:78, 9:38, 16:36, 17:11-12, 27:147, 61:17-19

Provinces

Areas of responsibility 23:67, 60:65

Interest in public housing 10:8

Participation 2:29, 10:13, 44:35

Standards 3:20

Public

- Administration by single government body 6:52
- Admission procedures 6:56
- Agencies, purchase of existing housing 10:15
- Community self-development 23:67, 27:121, 31:56
- Construction 2:10-11, 10:11-12, 10:14, 10:16-17, 12:12, 27:120, 27:121, 63:22-23
- Federal participation 2:13-14, 2:16, 2:29, 61:21
- Financing methods 10:13
- Highrise form 8:58, 10:8, 10:14
- Integrated communities 6:52, 6:60, 8:55, 9:22, 10:15, 31:56
- Lease abuse 9:13
- Location 10:18-19
- Management 10:8, 10:17, 10:19-20
- Problems 27:121
- Production 10:9
- Provincial interest 10:8, 10:13
- Rent 2:11-12, 2:29, 6:50, 6:56, 8:57, 8:68, 8:69, 8:72-73, 10:8, 10:11, 10:20-22, 12:12-13, 12:18, 15:46-47, 17:15, 26:171-173, 27:121, 64:37
- Situation 2:17, 10:22-23, 17:15, 17:20, 27:147-148, 64:37
- Social aspects 10:9, 10:10
- Stigma 45:25, 61:21-22, 63:23, 64:37
- Tenant
 - Associations 12:12
 - Occupant categories 10:15
 - Participation in management 10:8, 10:11, 10:16-17, 10:20, 12:12, 12:33
- Quality amelioration standards 28:20, 28:57
- Rent
 - Areas 15:47, 17:17
 - Budgeting within Welfare Allowances 12:14
 - Carver-Hopwood scale 2:29, 10:21
 - Ceilings 3:20, 27:171, 60:65
 - Control 7:8, 7:33, 50:85, 56:72
 - Government imposed 10:16, 27:70, 27:72, 27:158
 - High rates 10:16, 50:85, 56:72
 - Private housing 6:50, 9:38, 12:13-14, 15:46, 17:11-12, 24:26, 24:83
 - Public housing 2:11-12, 6:50, 6:56, 8:57, 8:68, 8:69, 8:72-73, 10:11, 10:20-22, 12:12-13, 15:46-47, 17:15, 26:171-173, 27:121, 64:37
 - Strikes 2:17
 - Supplements 9:22, 10:30-31, 24:26, 24:83, 31:56
 - United States 10:23
 - Welfare agency subsidization 6:49, 12:18, 15:46-47
- Rural areas 6:78, 10:24, 18:52-54
- Shared accommodation 10:7, 10:26
- Shortage 6:59, 9:22, 9:38, 10:16, 10:24, 10:26, 10:29, 10:31, 28:21
- Standards, enforcement 6:14, 6:52, 23:67
- Stephenson report (Halifax) 1:26, 1:86-87

Stock 1:35, 2:45, 10:7, 10:29, 12:8

Low cost 6:49, 9:22-23, 10:8, 10:14, 21:23, 21:48, 24:26, 24:82-83, 26:13, 27:120, 27:158, 28:20, 28:57, 31:55, 34:35, 50:85, 60:65, 63:12

Task Force on Housing and Urban Development (1969) 2:49, 10:8, 10:24, 10:25, 17:16, 17:18, 18:52-53, 44:35, 63:12

Taxation 1:48

Urban areas 18:53, 18:54

Renewal 1:26, 6:39, 6:59-60, 8:58-59, 10:13-14, 10:28, 16:19-20, 16:26, 16:37, 26:143-145, 36:29-30, 40:37, 60:65, 60:100

See also

Individual provinces

Recreation

Task Force on Housing and Urban Development (1969)

Hubert, Achille, Social Animator, Neighbourhood Improvement Committee, Ottawa
Curriculum vitae 17:6

Hull, Île de (Que.)

Alcoholism 16:38

Citizen participation, inquiry 16:34-35

General Assembly

Brief 16:32-42

Discussion 16:18-28

Health, situation, statistics 16:35-42

Housing

Municipal office 16:22-23

Situation, overcrowding 16:19, 16:32, 16:36, 16:37

Income level 16:19, 16:38

Leisure facilities 16:38-39

Medical care, accessibility 16:39-41

Pollution

Air 16:36

Water 16:35-36

Population 16:21, 16:32

Poverty

Effects 16:32-33, 16:34

Situation 16:32, 16:37

Study 16:18-28, 16:32-42

Power structure 16:33

Sacred Heart Hospital 16:26-27, 16:40-41

Schools 16:19-20

Tobacco 16:38

Urban renewal 16:19-20, 16:26, 16:37

Welfare 16:39

See also

Quebec

Human Relations

Research, Training 2:20-21, 2:53-54

Human Resources

- Natural resources, adaption 2:37, 11:35
- Recognition 12:7, 16:34
- Rehabilitation 16:7, 16:29, 17:22-23, 51:37, 52:35

Human Resources Corporation

- Organization, purpose 63:38-39, 63:77-78

Humans on Welfare Society, Edmonton

- Brief 57:78-83
- Discussion 57:52-63
- Recommendations 57:83
- Role 52:52, 52:78

Hunt, P.T., Chairman, Committee on Poverty, Social Planning and Research Council, Hamilton and District

- Statement 28:18-22

Hunt, R.A., Editor, "The Mysterious East", Fredericton

- Statement 63:25-30

Hunter, Miss Trenna, Past President, Canadian Nurses' Association

- Statement 47:7-9

I.E.A.

- See*
- Indian-Eskimo Association of Canada

I.G.A.

- See*
- International Grenfell Association

Immigrants

- Canada Manpower Centre, Courses 36:36
- Case histories 27:150-151
- Education
 - Language 8:45-46, 36:36
 - Requirements 27:115
- Employment 6:52, 6:53, 29:20
- Federal programs: training, settlement allowances 26:13
- Information services, reception centres 8:54, 26:133, 26:153, 27:67-68, 27:146-147
- Italian Immigrant Aid Society 27:152-155
- Manitoba, problem 6:51, 6:52
- Poverty estimation, comparison 8:54, 20:24-25
- Toronto
 - Problems 26:18-20, 27:50-51
 - Relief statistics 29:11
- See also*
- Migrants

Income

- Disparity
 - Farmers 18:42-45, 20:9, 42:73-76
 - Poverty factor 3:20, 6:80, 9:10, 18:8, 20:9, 27:126, 33:8, 42:47-48, 62:10, 70:45

Eskimos 14:43, 14:108

Family estimates 28:130-136

Guaranteed annual

Indians 14:167-168

Recommendations 1:14, 1:20-21, 1:31, 1:35, 1:42, 2:19-20, 2:22-23, 2:25-27, 2:34, 2:38, 2:45, 2:49, 2:52, 5:26, 6:14, 6:35, 6:37, 6:38, 6:48, 6:81, 8:10, 8:63, 8:67, 8:70-71, 8:74, 8:76, 9:11-12, 9:34, 10:30, 11:25, 12:8-9, 12:24, 12:33, 13:21, 14:167-168, 15:16, 15:19, 15:49, 16:7, 16:9, 16:11, 16:12, 16:17, 16:19-20, 16:29, 17:9, 20:24, 20:44, 21:20, 21:42, 23:14, 23:16, 23:28-30, 24:58, 25:14, 25:17, 25:20-21, 25:23-25, 26:22, 26:27, 26:69-70, 27:23, 27:79, 27:84-85, 27:116, 27:120, 27:128, 28:27, 29:14, 29:22, 29:25, 31:28, 33:9, 33:38, 33:42-47, 33:74-75, 34:33, 36:8, 36:35, 36:44, 37:7, 37:9-11, 37:14, 37:20, 37:41-42, 38:11, 40:35, 42:77, 42:80, 43:10, 47:17, 47:28, 49:19, 51:43-45, 53:12-14, 55:46-47, 55:50, 55:59-60, 55:123, 56:20, 56:108, 56:199-202, 57:38, 57:45, 57:55, 57:73, 57:79-80, 58:9, 58:55, 61:53, 63:56-58, 63:65, 64:19-20, 66:26-27, 66:48, 67:9

United States 11:25, 31:28, 33:74-75, 37:10, 37:42

Universal basis 2:44

Guaranteed Income Supplement, operation 23:29-30, 23:35, 23:89-90, 23:219-226, 31:9

Inadequacy, factors 43:49-51

Indians 7:13, 14:13, 14:72-73, 14:108, 14:110, 14:167-168, 19:34-35

Level, statistics 20:31-32, 56:198

Maintenance 5:22, 49:41

Minimum living standard, development 23:148

Replacement programs 22:10-11, 22:25-26

Rural vs. urban 18:54

Situation

Atlantic Provinces 1:61

Eskimos 14:43, 14:108

Indians 14:43, 14:72-73, 14:108, 14:110, 19:34-35

Tested Allowances, technique 23:69

Urban vs. rural 18:54

Welfare

Qualification tests 23:18, 23:35, 23:42

Support 5:22, 23:16-18, 23:24, 23:27, 23:69-70, 26:140-141, 30:38, 51:26, 51:171, 64:8, 64:35

See also

Individual provinces

Salaries

India

Adult education program 24:20-21

Indian Affairs and Northern Development, Department

Brief (table of contents) 14:40-191

- Budget 14:34-35
- Discussion 14:9-39
- History 14:47-49
- Indian-Eskimo involvement 14:42, 14:47-50
- Integration policy 19:9-10
- Objective 14:84
- Indian and Métis Friendship Centre, Winnipeg
 - Discussion 7:7-19
 - Recommendations 7:7-8
- Indian and Northern Health Services
 - Operation 23:111-114
- Indian-Eskimo Association of Canada
 - Brief 19:34-39
 - Discussion 19:9-23
 - Organization 19:34
- Indians
 - Abenaki (Pierreville, Que.) 14:20
 - Activities 14:43-44
 - Aged, care for 14:26
 - Agriculture 19:37
 - Alaska, aboriginal rights 19:13
 - Alberta, problem 55:9, 55:11, 55:12-13
 - Allowances, welfare payments 14:27-28
 - Arts and Crafts Development and Marketing Program 14:137
 - Assimilation 14:16-17, 14:50, 14:134-136, 19:17, 19:19, 19:37
 - Band
 - Councils 14:56
 - Revenue management, self administration 14:16, 14:18, 14:56, 14:133
 - Blood Indians (Alta.), development project 14:15
 - British settlement 14:47
 - Caughnawaga reserve (Que.) 14:20, 14:24, 14:26
 - Child welfare, adoption 14:25-26
 - Civil authority 14:48
 - Community development, programs 14:11, 14:85-90, 19:12
 - Confederation, effect 14:49
 - Constitutional position 14:51, 14:113
 - Consultation, communication 14:100-103, 14:133, 24:60, 59:44-45
 - Consumer aspect 59:43-44
 - Co-operatives 20:11-12, 20:15-16, 20:19, 20:39
 - Credit facilities 14:82-84, 19:35, 19:37
 - Culture 14:44-45, 14:99-100, 14:181-182
 - Definition, scope 14:51, 58:56
 - Dental services 23:199
 - Dependency load (table) 14:165
 - Discrimination 1:47, 7:7, 7:9, 14:10, 19:15, 58:56
 - Economic development 11:11-12, 14:82-84, 14:111-112, 14:121-123, 19:37
 - Education
 - Adult 42:53-55
 - Curriculum 7:16, 14:32, 19:14, 19:17
 - Drop-outs 14:35
 - Freedom of choice 19:16
 - Indian studies 14:34
 - Legal aspects, responsibility 14:57
 - School enrolments (tables) 14:63, 14:65-67
 - Student performance (table) 14:65
 - System, situation 7:11-13, 14:31-36, 14:59-68, 14:115-118, 14:136, 19:10-11, 19:14, 19:17, 19:36-39, 59:40
 - Text books 24:88, 42:14-15, 59:40
 - Training programs 14:65-67, 19:37
 - Employment 7:11, 14:124-125, 14:137, 14:170-176, 19:20, 19:38, 59:40-42
 - Enfranchisement 14:55, 19:15
 - Estates 14:57
 - Family planning 19:27
 - Fishing programs 14:137
 - Government
 - Attitude, history 14:9-10, 14:12, 14:22, 14:47-50, 14:130-132, 14:134
 - Credibility gap 14:13
 - Involvement 14:42, 14:47-50, 14:108-110, 19:36
 - Policy, statement 14:177-188
 - Programs, current 14:59-105
 - Responsibility 14:18-19, 14:21, 19:39
 - Housing 1:47-48, 10:24-25, 14:10, 14:37, 14:68-81, 14:118-121, 14:136, 18:53, 19:35, 19:38, 19:39, 24:89, 42:53, 58:55-56, 59:39-40, 65:47-50
 - Assistance (table) 10:28, 14:78
 - Hurons (Loretteville, Que.) 14:21
 - Income
 - Annual 14:43, 14:72-73, 14:108, 14:110, 19:34-35
 - Guaranteed annual 14:167-168
 - Supplement, dependent basis 7:13
 - Indian Act, operation, background 14:28, 14:45, 14:52, 14:55, 14:57, 14:134, 14:179
 - Indian Health Committee 23:11, 23:75
 - Industrial development 19:20, 19:38
 - Infant mortality 19:27, 19:36, 23:111, 45:22, 45:42
 - Inferiority complex 7:15, 19:14, 58:56
 - Information, service centres 7:13-14
 - Isolation 19:11-12
 - Lands, management 14:183-185
 - Language 14:29, 14:99-100, 19:16
 - Legal problems, conflict 14:51-59, 14:92-99
 - Life expectancy (tables) 14:163-164, 19:36
 - Liquor 14:56-57
 - Long-house policy 14:17
 - Manitoba reserves 19:20
 - Medical care 19:38, 19:39, 23:48-58, 23:111-114, 24:89-90, 45:44
 - Mobility, lack 14:25
 - New Brunswick 14:15, 14:24
 - Northern Territories
 - Economic development 14:106-107, 14:121-123

- Education 14:115-118
 - Employment 14:124-125
 - Housing 14:118-121
 - Poverty 14:107-109
 - Situation 14:106-128
 - Social services 14:123-124
 - Participation in decision making 14:11, 14:26, 14:28, 19:12, 19:38, 24:25, 24:86
 - Population, situation 14:17, 14:28-31, 14:42, 14:54, 14:107, 14:133, 19:36
 - Potlatch custom 19:9, 19:11
 - Poverty, causes 14:108, 19:9-10, 19:35, 19:37-38
 - Programs 14:12, 14:14, 14:71, 14:74-77, 14:79, 14:118-121, 14:182-183
 - Public assistance (tables) 14:143-148, 14:153, 14:157-162
 - Quebec (Arctic)
 - Education 14:45-118
 - Situation, background 14:106-128
 - Social services 14:123
 - Real estate development 14:15
 - Reserves, resources 14:21, 14:55-56, 19:20-21
 - Restigouche reserve 14:15
 - Saskatchewan 19:22, 42:8-9, 42:14-15, 42:19-22, 42:53-55, 65:47-50
 - Social services, assistance, tables 14:84-85, 14:123, 14:140-162, 19:38
 - Squamish (Vancouver) 14:19-20
 - Status, rights 14:53, 14:55, 14:58, 14:179-181, 14:183-184
 - Tourist industry 14:15, 14:20, 19:37
 - Trailer industry 14:15
 - Treaties 14:58, 14:114
 - Tribes 14:133
 - Universities, provision for health services 23:113-114
 - Winnipeg, situation 7:7-9
 - Women, situation 24:24-25, 24:74-76
 - Yukon 14:106-128, 58:12-16, 58:28-29, 58:45-50, 58:54-56, 59:7-26, 59:38-45
 - See also*
 - Individual associations
 - Survey of the Contemporary Indians of Canada
- Industries
- Expansion 60:106-107
 - Incentives 11:11, 11:14, 11:16, 37:8, 37:45
 - Land cost assistance 11:21
 - New 11:15-16, 11:23
 - Relocation, rural areas 11:11, 11:15, 11:16, 11:35, 55:124-125
 - Taxation 9:11
- Inflation Combat Programs
- Situation 40:32-33, 51:39-40
- Inglewood-Ramsay Redevelopment Committee, Calgary
 - Brief 56:193-197
 - Discussion 56:75-81
 - Objectives 56:76, 56:194-196
 - Inman, Senator Elsie, Member, Special Senate Committee on Poverty
 - Report on subcommittee meetings 7:33
 - Inner-City School Programme, Toronto
 - Background 26:176
 - Inter-Faith Social Action Committee (Nfld.)
 - Brief 54:15-17
 - Discussion résumé 54:9
 - Organization, activities 54:15
 - International Grenfell Association
 - Brief 54:27-33
 - History, activities 54:27-28
 - Recommendations 54:32-33
 - Italian Immigrant Aid Society, Toronto
 - Background, operation 27:153-155
 - Brief 27:152-155
 - Jackson, Miss Eileen, Executive Member, Board of Evangelism and Social Service, United Church of Canada
 - Curriculum vitae 31:7
 - Jacobson, Pastor J.R., President, Calgary Inter-Faith Community Action Committee
 - Statement 56:52-54
 - Jaffary, Karl, Alderman, Toronto
 - Statement 27:10-11
 - Submission 27:118-120
 - Japan
 - Work situation 51:30-32
 - Jobin, Pierre, Director, Joint Urban and Industrial Zoning Commission, Rimouski-Mont-Joli (Que.)
 - Statement 70:15-16
 - John Howard Society
 - Role 4:35
 - Johnson, Jack, Former President, Company of Young Canadians; Lawyer, Calgary
 - CYC activities, statement 56:81-83
 - Johnson, Rev. R.W., Executive Director, Tyndale House, Family Service Association, Montreal
 - Statement 36:7-8

- Johnston, William, Chairman, Brief Committee, Vancouver Housing Inter-Project Council, Vancouver
Statement 8:63-64
- Joint Urban and Industrial Zoning Commission, Rimouski-Mont-Joli (Que.)
Discussion 70:13-19
- Jones, Mrs. F.E., Vice-President, Consumers' Association of Canada
Statement 35:7-9
- Jones, R.B., Chairman, Special Project Client Committee, Resource Mobilization for Employment Demonstration Project, Edmonton
Special Project Committee, statement 55:74-76
- Just Society, Toronto
Discussion 28:17-18
Victims of Compensation and Welfare Committee
Brief 28:31-51
Discussion 28:7-17
See also
Workmen's Compensation
- Keatly, Mrs. Ruth, Member, "Up to the Neck" Newspaper, Montreal
Curriculum vitae 12:6
Statement 12:7-8
- Keeping, Mrs. Dorothy, Secretary, Family Planning Federation of Canada
Curriculum vitae 19:7
Family planning information service, statement 19:30
- Kehoe, P.M., Adviser, Child Care Centre Society, Yukon
Yukon day care centres, statement 58:21-22
- Kelly, J.B., Member, New Brunswick Forest Extension Service; Faculty of Forestry, University of New Brunswick, Fredericton
Woodlot owners (N.B.), Statement 61:55-58
- Kensington Area Residents' Association, Toronto
Brief 27:146-151
Discussion 27:54-56
- Kent, Tom, Deputy Minister, Department of Regional Economic Expansion
Brief 11:32-36
Statement 11:7-8
- Kirk, D.L., Executive Secretary, Canadian Federation of Agriculture
Curriculum vitae 21:6
Statement 21:9-10
- Labour
Automation and unemployment 6:78, 27:54, 63:13-14, 63:28
Employers' qualification requirements 60:98-99
Employment
Academic prerequisites 5:15-16, 24:15-16, 24:33-34, 60:21-22, 60:24-27, 60:28, 60:98-99
Casual labour offices' abuse 6:56-57
Counselling 7:7, 9:18, 9:24, 9:27-28
Creation 6:52, 8:10, 8:14, 8:74-75, 11:8, 11:16, 11:20, 11:22, 11:26, 11:33-36, 15:19, 15:42, 18:28, 19:38, 21:24-25, 21:28, 21:40, 23:25, 26:74-75, 33:63-66, 34:34, 42:76, 42:79, 57:80, 60:31, 66:31-32, 70:33-34
Decline 11:10
Discrimination 6:53
Eskimos 14:124-125, 14:137
Financial assistance 7:7
Guaranteed 8:10, 57:80
Handicapped 28:28, 45:24, 50:116, 50:118-119, 57:67
Immigrants 6:52, 6:53, 29:20
Incentive allowance 9:20
Indians 7:11, 14:124-125, 14:137, 14:170-176, 19:20, 19:38, 59:40-42
Market 21:45-46
Métis 14:124-125
Opportunities, promotion 8:10, 8:11, 8:74-75, 8:77, 11:35, 51:41
Primary industries, decline 5:21, 11:10
Service industries, increase 5:21, 11:10
Single parent 1:18, 24:24-25, 47:34, 64:35, 64:38-39, 64:43, 64:78
Students 57:67
Transportation factor 11:13
Union membership 8:19, 63:14-15, 63:18
Welfare benefits v.s. 17:8-9, 18:19, 48:9, 64:73
Youth 62:25-26
Income supplements 8:75, 15:42
Protected workshops 29:25, 50:119
Relocation, allowances 11:15, 34:35
Right to work 21:24, 21:52
Rural Migration to the cities 2:31, 11:9, 11:30, 18:13-14, 18:18-19, 23:25, 70:29-30
Unemployment
Assistance categories 23:47-48, 42:23-26
Automation 63:13-14
Factors 43:49-50
Government intervention 23:26
Identification of "unemployables" 27:116
Indicators 70:28
Inflationary pressures, effects 12:36
Medical care services 33:53
Poverty situation 6:49, 9:7, 15:13, 42:8, 45:42, 54:34, 58:47, 60:19, 60:96, 60:98-99, 62:10, 63:26, 70:7, 70:28
Rates 25:23, 37:50-51, 70:28
Rural areas 18:10, 18:14, 18:45-47

- Situation 9:7, 9:15, 11:8, 51:37-38
- Welfare inadequacy 23:23-24
- University interest 63:19
- Work ethic 24:48-49
- Work Incentives
 - Calculation 28:24-25
 - Experimentation, studies 23:23
 - Single parents 24:32-33, 24:36-37, 42:33
 - Welfare allowance, supplement 6:51, 6:52, 20:27, 20:30-31, 20:47, 27:158, 61:78
- Workers
 - Conditions, taxation 21:45, 50:121-135
 - Management participation 63:17
 - Motivation 29:12
 - Non-union, situation 21:45
 - Problems 25:9-10
 - Retraining courses (Manpower) 6:28, 21:46
- See also*
 - Canada Manpower Centre
 - Education
 - Adult
 - Salaries
 - Unemployment Assistance Act (1956)
 - Unions
 - Workmen's Compensation

Labrador

See

Newfoundland

Lacombe, J.B., Staff Member, Economic Council of Canada

Curriculum vitae 5:8

Laird, Elmer, Davidson (Sask.)

Brief 64:72-74

Recommendations 64:74

Statement, discussion 64:24-30

Lamble, G.W., UNIFARM (Alta.)

Off-farm migrants (Alta.), study 55:128-132

Land value taxation

Building assessment v.s. 18:24-35, 31:56

Lane, Paul, President, Alexandra Park Residents' Association, Toronto

Statement 27:54

Lapointe, Dr. Pierre, Governor, Frontier College

Curriculum vitae 13:7

Statement 13:12-13

Larocque, Lionel, Dalhousie area resident, Ottawa

Curriculum vitae 17:6

LaSalle, Dr. G., Vice President, Health Services, University of Sherbrooke (Que.); Chairman on Medically disadvantaged-Urban, Canadian Medical Association

Statement 45:24

Laughlin, J.E., Inspector of Schools, District #8, Toronto

Statement 26:83

Lavoie, Mgr. Raymond, Director, Secrétariat Social de St. Roch (Que.)

Statement 66:42-44

Le Caine, Mrs. Hugh, Chairman, Public Issues Committee, Family Service Centre, Ottawa

Curriculum vitae 16:6

Statement 16:7-8

Leclair, E.C., Social Development Specialist, Prince Edward Island Newstart Incorporated

Curriculum vitae 4:64

Legal aid

Act, operation (Ont.) 27:29-30

Centres 39:36

Community and Legal Aid Services Program, Toronto 27:31-32

Community Legal Services Incorporated (Que.) 39:13-14

Cost 39:14-17

Criminal law 27:134-135

Divorce 6:15-16, 6:52, 8:37, 8:75, 27:30, 27:35, 45:25, 64:38, 64:43, 64:79

Education 6:52, 32:10, 32:30, 32:34, 39:28, 40:38, 56:81-83

Factors impeding 27:27-28, 27:133-134

Housing 6:52, 6:53, 8:34-35, 21:49

Matrimonial problems 8:35

Need, situation 6:51, 8:33, 32:7-36, 39:7-13, 39:15, 40:38, 52:8, 56:69-70, 63:25

Neighbourhood Legal Aid Offices (U.S.), operation 8:35

Officer, role 27:38

Osgoode Hall program (Toronto) 27:28-29

Recommendations for 6:14, 16:70, 8:33, 8:40, 27:28, 27:136-140, 32:36-37, 39:34-37, 52:9, 57:80-81, 60:65-66, 61:77, 63:71

"Social law" specialization 32:30, 39:36

Student organizations 27:35-36, 39:13-14

System, operation 6:54-55, 27:34, 39:21-28, 39:33-34

See also

Individual Provinces

- Lemay, Hon. Judge Gérard, President, St. Vincent de Paul Society of Canada
 St. Vincent de Paul Society role, statement 66:8, 66:9
- Lemesurier, Mrs. Lynn, Member, O'Connor Drive Development Community Association, Toronto
 Statement 27:96
- Levine, L.E., Board Member, Canadian Association of Social Workers
 Curriculum vitae 30:6
 Statement 30:10-11
- Libraries
 Development for community education 8:55, 8:62, 8:84
- Linkletter, Mrs. A., Public Issues Committee, Family Service Association, Montreal
 Statement 36:18-19
- Low, W.J., Social Worker, Seventh-Day Adventist Church in Canada
 Curriculum vitae 34:6
 Statement 34:8-9
- Low Income Working Committee, Calgary
 Brief 56:187-192
 Discussion 56:71-75
- Loyer, Eugène, President, Health Committee, General Assembly, Île de Hull (Que.)
 Curriculum vitae 16:6
- Lyon, Israel, School of Architecture, University of Manitoba, Winnipeg
 Recreation project, statement 6:40
- MOM's
See
 More Opportunities for Mothers, Vancouver
- Maben, David, Executive Director, St. Christopher House, Toronto
 Statement 27:50-54
- McCallum, A.C., Member, Committee on Poverty, Canadian Association of Social Workers
 Curriculum vitae 30:6
- McCarthy, Rev. J.W., Executive Secretary, Old Brewery Mission, Inc., Montreal
 Curriculum vitae 41:6
 Statement 41:9-11
- McCarthy, M.G., Director, School of Economic Science, Toronto
 Curriculum vitae 18:6
 School of Economic Science, submission 18:23-29
- McDaniel, R.B., Canadian Civil Liberties Association, Fredericton, New Brunswick Chapter
 Statement 63:24-25
- MacDonald, Hon. C.P., Minister of Welfare, Saskatchewan
 Curriculum vitae 42:6
 Saskatchewan situation, statement 42:7-10
- MacDonald, J.A., Deputy Minister, Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development
 Curriculum vitae 14:6
 Departmental policy, statement 14:9-12
- MacDonald, Mrs. Marie, President, Monica Society, Edmonton
 Statement 55:20-22
- MacDonald, Theresa, Counsellor, Prince Edward Island Newstart Incorporated
 Curriculum vitae 4:65
- MacDonald, Rev. Dr. W.C., Chairman, Board of Evangelism and Social Service, United Church of Canada
 Curriculum vitae 31:6
- McDougall, Ian, Director, Community Legal Aid and Services Program, Toronto
 Errata submission 52:8-9
 Statement 27:27-28
- MacEachern, Dr. G.A., President, Agricultural Economics Research Council of Canada, Canadian Council on Rural Development
 Curriculum vitae 18:6
- McGonnell, P.C., Assistant Director of Research (Measurement and Evaluation), Prince Edward Island Newstart Incorporated
 Curriculum vitae 4:64
- McGowan, Neil, Old Brewery Mission, Inc., Montreal
 Curriculum vitae 41:6
- McKay, Miss Leola, President, Senior Citizens' Centre; Moncton Lions Club (Senior Citizens' Association)
 Moncton Senior Citizens' situation, statement 62:18-20
- MacKee, Mrs. M.H., Executive Director, Greater Moncton Community Chest Inc.
 Statement 63:38-39

- Mackenzie, Christelle, Community Development Worker, Prince Edward Island NewStart Incorporated
Curriculum vitae 4:65
- McKeown, W.J., Chairman, Regina Renters Council, Regina
Statement 64:31-32
- MacLean, D.F., Head, Conference and Course Section, Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University, Halifax
Curriculum vitae 1:9
- McLoughlin, Mrs. C.A., Editor, "Up to the Neck" Newspaper, Montreal
Curriculum vitae 12:6
- McNally, W.J., Manager, Policy Department, Canadian Chamber of Commerce
Curriculum vitae 51:7
- McNamara, John, Vice-President, Humans on Welfare Society, Edmonton
Statement 57:52-53
- McNamara, W.L., Chairman, Briefs Committee, Association of Professional Engineers of the Province of New Brunswick
Statement 61:9-11
- MacNeill, D.R., Secretary, Committee on Adult Basic Education and Poverty, Canadian Association for Adult Education
Curriculum vitae 24:6
- MacPherson, Lawrence, Social Welfare Administrator, Catholic Social Welfare Bureau (P.E.I.)
Curriculum vitae 4:7
Statement 4:37-38
- MacPherson, R.B., Member, Health and Welfare Committee, Canadian Chamber of Commerce
Curriculum vitae 51:11
- McRae, W.T., Mayor, Campbellton (N.B.)
Statement 68:8-11
- Magill, D.W., Co-Director, Africville Relocation Study, Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University, Halifax
Curriculum vitae 1:9-10
- Magneson, Harland, Director, Resource Mobilization for Employment Demonstration Project (Professional Group), Edmonton
Social service, statement 55:61-63
- Mahoney, Rev. J.P., National Director, Catholic Women's League of Canada
Curriculum vitae 24:6
- Mair, Charles, Counsellor, Prince Edward Island Newstart Incorporated
Curriculum vitae 4:65
- Maitland, Mrs. Alice, President, Neighbourhood Improvement Committee, Ottawa
Curriculum vitae 17:6
- Maley, Jack, Member, Unemployed Citizen's Welfare Improvement Council, Vancouver
Statement 9:7-13
- Mallette, Karl, Chairman, Welfare and Housing Committee, Metropolitan Toronto
Statement 26:11-13
- Manitoba
Alcoholism 6:21, 6:50
Anti-poverty recommendations 7:22-24
Budget standards, monthly basic necessities (table) 23:178
Credit facilities 7:30
Delinquency 6:50
Dental services 23:199
Discrimination 7:9, 7:21-22
Divorce, procedures 7:27-28
Education
Loans, burseries 6:51
Recommendations 6:52-54, 7:24
Specialization, lack 6:51
Up-grading, training 6:51, 6:52, 6:54
Employment 6:52-53
Family allowances 7:33
Housing 6:9-10, 6:49, 6:50, 6:52, 6:53, 6:56, 6:59, 6:65, 6:82
Human Rights Legislation 7:18
Immigrant problem 6:51, 6:52
Income
Ceilings and exemptions 23:239-240
Guaranteed 7:23, 7:25, 7:32
Landlord and Tenants Act 6:61
Legal aid 6:11, 6:15-16, 6:51, 6:54-55, 7:17, 7:20-21, 7:27, 32:8, 32:25
Manpower, training programs 6:51, 6:53, 6:57-58
Medical care 23:190
Police, function 6:11, 6:14
Psychiatric services 6:11
Recreation facilities 6:38-47, 6:50, 6:79, 6:84-94
Rents 6:49, 6:56
Salaries
Marginal 6:49-50
Minimum, increase 6:52, 6:55
Negotiation rights 7:22

Social workers, inefficiency 7:21, 7:26
 Unemployment insurance, waiting period 6:51, 6:52
 Welfare
 Appeal procedure 7:25-26, 12:22
 Government policy 7:20-21
 Information services 6:51-52, 7:20, 7:22, 7:26
 Payments 6:13, 7:20
 Social effects 6:13-14, 7:22
 System 6:21
 Work incentives, welfare recipients 6:52

Manitoba Indian Brotherhood

Brief 19:11-12
 Discussion 19:13-23

Manpower

See
 Canada Manpower Centre

Maritimes

Economic development 11:22-23
 Situation 63:26-27
See also
 Atlantic Provinces
 Individual Maritime Provinces

Markle, Gower, Chairman, Committee on Adult Basic Education and Poverty, Canadian Association for Adult Education
 Curriculum vitae 24:6
 Statement 24:7-8

Martin, Alan, President, Student's Representative Council, University of New Brunswick, Fredericton
 Brief 60:109-112
 Statement 60:45-47

Martynuik, Dan, President, Kensington Area Residents' Association, Toronto
 Statement 27:54-56

Marzari, Mrs. Darlene, Social Planning Department, Vancouver
 Statement 8:12-13

Matthews, Mrs. J.J., National Convener, Social Action; Chairman, Brief Committee, Catholic Women's League of Canada
 Curriculum vitae 24:6
 Statement 24:23-27

Maxwell, Miss A.C., Member, South End Improvement Association and South End Tenants' Association, Saint John
 Statement 60:63-66

Maxwell, Grant, Co-Director, Social Action Committee, Ottawa, Canadian Catholic Conference
 Statement 49:8-9

Meals On Wheels Program

Great Britain 47:10
 New Zealand 20:29
 Operation 20:29, 50:83, 50:85, 62:18, 62:21-22, 62:27, 62:35
 V.O.N. services 20:31, 47:10-11, 47:33, 47:36, 47:37

Media

Communications research 24:51-52, 24:59
 Education, use 6:83, 20:27, 20:47, 24:10-13, 24:20, 24:51-52, 24:59, 31:62-66
 Information dissemination 6:83, 18:65-67, 20:27, 20:47, 50:84-85
 Role 8:32, 16:8, 16:15-16, 16:29, 18:66, 20:27, 20:47

Medical care

Benefits 8:75, 15:42, 23:8, 23:13, 23:22, 23:47, 23:185, 64:38
 Cards 9:38
 Children
 Defective births 45:55
 Emotional deprivation 45:55
 Service standards 23:125
 Clinics 6:69, 6:70, 29:25, 45:39, 47:31, 65:40-47
 Doctor's services 45:10, 45:13, 45:14
 Eligibility 45:17
 Fees 45:11, 45:17
 Mental health 45:36
 Operation 45:9-10, 45:13, 45:15-16
 Provincial programs, effect 45:16-17
 Store Front 45:23, 45:32-33, 47:19-20, 56:204
 Communicable disease control 23:125
 Coverage 34:35, 45:22
 Doctors' services 6:67, 18:49, 23:184, 45:10, 45:13, 45:14, 45:36-37
 Drug (Medical) benefits 6:69 6:70, 8:75, 9:30-31, 15:42, 16:39, 16:41, 23:22, 23:184, 26:140, 26:141, 27:170, 47:12, 64:38
 Environmental health 6:14, 16:35-37, 23:122-123
 Sewage treatment legislation 10:12-13
 Eskimos 23:111-114, 45:44
 Federal Medical Care Act (1966) 23:187
 Government expenditure on health 23:36
 Health factor in poverty 6:79, 12:37, 16:38, 27:117-118, 42:47, 45:12, 45:18, 45:21-22, 45:25, 45:42-43, 47:8, 47:33, 47:41-43, 56:203-205, 60:102, 63:63, 70:32
 Immunization services 6:68, 45:19, 45:41
 Indian Health Committee 23:11, 23:75
 Indians 19:39, 23:48-58, 23:111-114, 45:44
 Insurance 12:8, 23:12, 45:37, 45:43
 Commission 23:188
 Maternity 6:68, 22:18-19, 23:125
 Mental health
 Clinics 45:36
 Group therapy programs 6:70

- Inventory 2:19, 2:21
- Situation 23:72, 23:120-121, 41:9-10, 41:32, 41:35-36, 45:54-55, 57:25, 57:66
- Old age situation 47:42, 50:23, 50:84
- Operation 16:39, 23:22, 23:26-27, 26:140, 33:53, 61:19, 61:21
- Optical care benefits 6:68, 6:69, 8:75, 23:13, 23:47, 23:185
- Physician-associates 45:23, 45:33
- Preventive 16:7, 16:29, 23:121-122, 45:23, 45:45, 47:8
- Programs
 - Provincial 15:43, 23:184-191, 45:43
 - Welfare health services 6:66-69, 9:22, 16:39, 23:8, 23:22, 23:26-27, 23:47, 23:71, 23:184-186, 26:140, 33:53, 61:17
- Rehabilitation services 23:72, 23:118-120, 45:34-35, 45:45
- Research v.s. patient care 45:29, 45:30, 45:34
- Role in Workmen's Compensation cases 28:10, 28:40
- Rural areas 45:22, 45:23, 45:43, 47:19-20
- Services
 - Adequacy 47:18-19
 - Advertisement 45:22, 45:26-27, 45:33, 45:42-43
 - Availability 23:47
 - Community 23:18, 45:10, 45:16, 45:34
 - Co-ordination 7:19-20, 15:43, 47:41
 - Cost factor 23:12, 23:71, 45:33-34, 47:8
 - Decentralization 45:29, 47:19
 - Delivery 45:28-29, 45:33
 - Great Britain 23:33
 - Implementation 6:83, 19:39, 23:8, 23:22
 - New Zealand 23:33
 - Unemployed 33:53
 - Urban areas 45:44-45
 - Welfare recipients 21:48, 45:25-26
- See also*
- Dental care
- Hospitals
- Individual provinces
- National Health and Welfare Department
- Nurses and nursing

Melita, Miss Linda, School Canadiana, Vancouver
Statement 8:42-44

Melvin, W.B., President, Co-Operative Union of Canada
Curriculum vitae 20:6
Statement 20:9-10

Memorial University of Newfoundland, Extension Service, St. John's
Brief 52:69-75
Discussion 52:38-52
Role 52:69-70

Memramcook Institute of Continuous Learning (N.B.)
Operation, financing 63:19-21, 63:68

Métis

- Alberta, problem 55:9, 55:12-13, 55:14-15
- Assimilation 14:29
- Co-operatives 20:40
- Economic development 11:11-12
- Education 14:115-118, 24:88, 42:53-55
- Employment 14:124-125
- Housing 10:25, 10:28, 24:89
- Language 7:17, 14:29
- Medical care 24:89-90
- Poverty, causes 14:108
- Problems, Northern Territories 14:107-109
- Saskatchewan 42:8-9, 42:14-15, 42:19-22, 42:53-55
- Statistics 14:107-108, 19:36
- See also*
- Indian and Métis Friendship Centre, Winnipeg (Man.)

Michael, D.L., General Counsel, Seventh-Day Adventist Church in Canada
Church role, statement 34:7
Curriculum vitae 34:6

Migrants

- Federal programs: training, settlement allowances 21:13
- Reception, information centres 26:133
- Rural, to urban centres 2:31, 11:9, 11:30, 18:13-14, 18:18-19, 23:25, 55:128-132, 70:29-30
- See also*
- Immigrants

Mira, Manuel, President, Portuguese Canadian Congress, Toronto
Statement 27:57

Mitchell, Grant, Executive Director, Saskatchewan Water Resources, Saskatchewan Co-operative Credit Society
Statement 64:9-12

Mitchell, Mrs. Margaret, Director, Group of Community Workers, Vancouver
Statement 8:9-12

Mitchell, Mrs. Margaret, Member, Unemployed Citizen's Welfare Improvement Council, Vancouver
Statement 9:13-14

Moffatt, Dr. H.P., Lecturer, Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University, Halifax
Curriculum vitae 1:10
Statement 1:24

- Moke, Mrs. Arlene, Volunteer worker, Neighbourhood Improvement Committee, Ottawa
Curriculum vitae 17:6
- Moncton and East End Boys' Club
Youth problems, programs, discussion 62:8-16
See also
Boys' Clubs of Canada
- Moncton Lions Club (Senior Citizens' Association)
Brief 62:33-35
Discussion 62:16-28
- Mondoux, Léon, Member, Health and Welfare Committee, Canadian Chamber of Commerce
Curriculum vitae 51:11
- Monica Society, Edmonton
Brief 55:100-103
Discussion 55:20-36
Organization 55:23, 55:100
- Monk, Brig. Joshua, Director, Drug and Alcoholism Service (Metro-Toronto), Salvation Army
Curriculum vitae 48:6
- Montreal Diet Dispensary, Montreal
Activities 12:15
- More Opportunities for Mothers, Vancouver
Operation 9:18-19
- Moreland, J.W., Member, Health and Welfare Committee, Canadian Chamber of Commerce
Curriculum vitae 51:11
- Morin, René, Mayor, Edmundston (N.B.)
Address 67:7
- Morrison, Ian, National Co-ordinator, Frontier College Adult Occupational Training Act, statement 13:11-12
Curriculum vitae 13:7
- Morrissey, N.K., Director, Program Development Division; Provincial Co-ordinator, Rehabilitation, Department of Welfare, Saskatchewan
Curriculum vitae 42:6
- Mother's Allowance Committee, Winnipeg
Brief summary, report 7:33
- Mother's Allowance
Operation 17:12, 23:46, 23:87, 24:32, 24:32, 24:37, 48:35
- Mount Carmel Clinic, Winnipeg
Activities 6:67-69
Brief 6:65-76
Budget 6:17
Discussion 6:8-23
Policy 6:65-67
Recommendations 6:14, 6:69-71
Statistical tables 6:72-76
- Mullen, Vern, Manager, Basic Education Division, Saskatchewan NewStart Inc., Prince Albert
Training program, statement 65:13-17
- Mulvihill, Rev. C.J., Director, Charities, Council of Catholic Charities
Curriculum vitae 20:7-8
Statement 20:23-28
- Munro, C.G., President, Canadian Federation of Agriculture
Curriculum vitae 21:6
- Murdoch, Ken, Executive Secretary, SOS-Volunteer Action for Social Change, Toronto
Statement 27:77-78
- Murphy, Dr. Noel, Mayor, Corner Brook (Nfld.)
Statement summary 54:9-10
- Musgreave, E., Alderman, Calgary
Calgary situation, submission 56:112-117
Statement 56:12-13
- "Mysterious (The) East" Fredericton
Brief 63:25-30, 63:72-76
Discussion 63:48-62
- NCS
See
Newfoundland Co-Operative Services
- NHA
See
Housing
National Housing Act
- N.I.C.
See
Neighbourhood Improvement Committee, Ottawa
- NRDC
See
Conseil Régional d'Aménagement du Nord-Est
- Nadeau, Alphonse, Moderator, General Assembly, Île de Hull (Que.)
Curriculum vitae 16:6
Health situation, statement 16:18-19

- National Council of Jewish Women of Canada, Toronto Section
 Activities, day care centres 27:39-40, 27:142-143
 Brief 27:141-143
 Discussion 27:39-45
- National Council of Welfare
 Activities 23:11, 23:37, 23:75, 23:128-129
- National Health and Welfare Department
 Brief (table of contents) 23:59-247
 Discussion 23:7-58
 Expenditures, tables 23:78-83
 Organization 23:76-77
 Research 23:127-128, 23:133-137
 Research and Statistics Directorate, role 23:133-137
 Role 23:75-76, 23:133
See also
 Dental care
 Individual allowances, programs
 Medical care
- National Health Grants
 Operation 23:129-131
- National Housing Act
See
 Housing
- National Indian Brotherhood of Canada
 Brief 19:34-39
 Discussion 19:9-23
 Organization 19:34
 Role, health measures 23:114
- National Welfare Grants Program
 Operation 23:11, 23:131-132
 Project assistance 23:160-164, 23:200-217
- Neary, Hon. S.A., Minister, Department of Social Services and Rehabilitation, Newfoundland
 Curriculum vitae 38:6
 Statement 38:7-8
- Negative Income Tax
See
 Taxation
- Neighbourhood Improvement Committee, Ottawa
 Brief 17:22-24
 Discussion 17:7-21
 Objectives 17:23
- Neighbourhood Service Centre of Greater Winnipeg
 Brief 6:23-24
 Discussion 6:24-38
- Neighbourhood Youth Corps, Toronto
 Brief 26:190-193
 Discussion 26:95-107
- Neveu, John, Victims of Compensation and Welfare Committee, Just Society, Toronto
 Statement 28:7-10
- Neville, F.J., Assistant Director, Community Affairs Branch, Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development
 Curriculum vitae 14:7
- New Brunswick
 Blacks 61:36-45, 61:74-75
 Blind 67:8-14
 Bloomfield Junction 61:7-8
 Buctouche 63:7-8
 Budget standards, monthly, basic necessities (table) 23:175
 Campbellton
 Brief 68:41-44
 Discussion 68:8-24
 Crescent Valley 60:80-95, 60:122-123
 Economic development 63:12
 Edmundston 67:7-23
 Education 63:12
 Deficiencies 60:19-30
 Retention rate 60:97
 Up-grading, training 44:9-10
 Family allowances 44:27-28
 Forests 61:7, 61:55-64, 61:81-93
 Health and Welfare Department
 Brief 44:33-38
 Discussion 44:7-32
 Housing 44:12, 60:13-14
 Income ceilings and exemptions 23:234
 Infant mortality (table) 44:37
 Legal aid 32:8, 32:24, 32:29, 61:77, 63:25
 Low income families (table) 44:38
 Medical care 44:22-25, 60:35
 Perinatal deaths (table) 44:37
 Potato industry 11:23
 Poverty, situation 44:7-38, 60:7-123, 61:9-93, 62:7-35, 63:11-82, 67:7-23, 68:7-47
 Saint John
 Poverty situation 60:7-123, 61:17-55, 61:68-80
 Social Services Council of Greater Saint John
 Brief 60:80-95
 Discussion 60:8-19
 Role 60:10
 Senior citizens 62:16-28, 62:33-35
 Tracadie 63:8-9
 Unions, number of members, organization 63:11, 63:23

Welfare

- Appeal boards 12:22
- Budget 44:19
- Programs 44:34-35
- Recipients, table 44:11, 44:18, 44:38, 68:16-17
- White Paper, Social Development, Social Welfare 44:7-8, 44:33-36, 63:65-66

New Brunswick Association for the Advancement of Coloured People

- Brief 61:74-75
- Discussion 61:36-45

New Brunswick Federation of Labour (C.L.C.)

- Background 60:102, 63:63
- Briefs 60:102-108, 63:63-69
- Discussions 60:37-44, 63:11-24
- Recommendations 60:106-108, 63:67-69

New Brunswick Federation of Woodlot Owners

- Rural situation, forest underdevelopment brief 61:85-93

New Brunswick Forest Extension Service, Fredericton

- Brief 61:81-84
- Discussion 61:55-64

Newfoundland

- Bonne Bay-Trout River region 54:25-26
- Budget standards, monthly, basic necessities (table) 23:172
- Cartwright (Labrador) 54:35-40
- Communication, problem 38:19, 54:32
- Consumer education 38:16, 38:20
- Co-operatives 52:17-23
- Corner Brook 54:9-10, 54:16
- Cox's Cove 54:7-8, 54:19-23
- Education 13:19, 54:16, 54:21, 54:28-30, 54:34, 54:38
- Employment situation, wages 13:19, 38:14-15, 38:24-25
- Farmers 53:22-23
- Fishing industry 38:18, 38:19-21, 52:23-27, 52:42-43
- Fogo Island 52:48-49, 52:74-75, 54:7
- Forestry development 38:18, 52:21
- Hawkes Bay 54:19-24, 54:27
- Income ceilings and exemptions 23:229-230, 38:13
- Industrial development, local 38:23-24
- Isolation factor 54:29
- Labrador Coast 52:43-46, 54:35-40
- Land reclamation program 38:17
- Mary's Harbour 54:12
- Medical care program 23:191
- Natural resources development 38:17-18
- Participation, program development 52:72-73
- Port au Port-Lourdes 54:8
- Port aux Choix 54:11, 54:20

- Poverty, situation 52:11-75, 54:7-40
- Provincial taxes 52:55
- Retraining programs 38:15-17, 54:20
- St. Anthony, brief 54:34
- St. Barbe Coast 52:30
- St. John's 52:30
- Blackhead Road situation 52:52-62
- Mundy Pond 52:27-30
- Public housing 10:9-10
- Social Services and Rehabilitation Dept. Brief 38:28-30
- Discussion 38:7-27

Welfare

- Allowance 52:36-38
- Appeal board 12:22, 38:28
- Budget problem 38:12
- Education for better living 54:31
- Eligibility, needs test 38:10-11
- Expenditure 38:8-9, 38:21-23
- Problems 54:30-31
- Rates 38:10, 38:25-26
- System, modifications 38:28
- Work activity concept 38:9, 38:11-14, 38:17, 38:18-19, 38:24, 54:31

Newfoundland and Labrador Rural Development Council

- Brief 54:18

Newfoundland Co-Operative Services

- Discussion 52:17-23
- Objectives 52:18

Newfoundland Federation of Fishermen

- Discussion 52:23-27

New Zealand

- Co-operatives, native people 20:16
- Health services 23:33
- Land value taxation 8:24
- Meals on Wheels 20:29, 47:10

North-East Regional Development Council (N.B.)See

- Conseil Régional d'Aménagement du Nord-Est (N.B.)

North-West Regional Development Council (N.B.)See

- Conseil Régional d'Aménagement du Nord-Ouest (N.B.)

North York, Community Association, Toronto

- Discussion 26:108-131

Northern Regional Development Committee, Bonne Bay-Trout River (Nfld.)

- Brief 54:25-26

Nova Scotia

Agency co-ordination 1:82-83

Agriculture 1:15-16, 1:42

Alcoholism, treatment 1:161-162, 1:208

Blacks

Anti-poverty strategies 1:132-136

Birth control 1:121

Collective organization 1:136

Discrimination 1:29, 1:32-33, 1:103-104, 1:106-108

Ecological distribution, census studies, tables 1:109-128

Economic development 1:28

Education, table 1:23-24, 1:30-31, 1:40, 1:106-109, 1:126-128, 3:18

Employment, table 1:124-126, 1:129-130, 1:133-135, 1:139-146, 3:18

Exploitation, prevention 1:132, 1:138-146

Guysborough 1:23-24, 1:32-33, 1:104, 1:129-131, 1:133, 1:134-135, 1:137

Halifax 1:13

Housing 1:135-136, 1:138

Income, table 1:122-124, 1:129

Migration 1:29, 1:116, 1:130, 1:136

Origins 1:102-105

Poverty, situation 1:29, 1:32-33, 1:131-132, 1:137, 3:18

Programs 1:28, 1:30

Rural, non-farm 1:128-136, 1:139-146

See also

Black United Front

Budget standards, monthly, basic necessities (table) 23:174

Cape Breton

Development 1:201, 1:204-205, 1:206

Education 1:35, 1:205

Indians 1:47-48

Unemployment 1:88, 1:196, 1:200

Co-operatives 1:60, 1:143, 1:162-163, 1:198, 8:15

Housing 1:153-154, 2:31, 2:58, 2:59-60, 3:21, 20:13

Credit unions, associations 1:60, 1:162-163

Dental services 23:198

Economic development 1:57, 1:79, 1:145, 1:147

Education

Adult, up-grading 1:59, 1:157-158, 1:195, 1:207, 1:208, 2:57-58, 3:20-21, 3:23-24

Attendance 1:150

Bursary, loan program 1:40, 1:195, 1:208, 3:10-11, 3:21, 3:24

Comprehensive school system 1:149

Drug problem 1:44-45

Guidance counselling 1:199, 1:207, 2:58, 3:12

Information centres 1:207

Level, comparison 2:43

Low income families 1:71, 3:9, 3:21, 3:23

Night classes 1:208

Nulife study 1:148-150

Point Edward area (Halifax) 1:199, 2:40, 3:23

Pre-school programs 1:150, 3:14-15

Programs 1:24, 1:193-196, 2:57-58, 2:59, 3:11-15

Recommendations 1:207, 2:57-58, 3:8

Social workers 1:207

Sydney school system 1:45, 1:198-199

Teachers 1:40-41, 3:12-13

Vocational schools, regional 1:149, 1:195, 3:20-21, 3:23

Welfare assistance for 1:201

Employment 1:88, 1:156, 1:196, 1:200

Ethnic groups

Blacks 1:100-146

Indians 1:96-99

Families 1:69-70

Family Allowances 1:197-198, 1:202

Finance, loan companies, study 1:204, 1:207

Forest industry 2:36

Halifax

Blacks 1:13

Fringerville 1:25, 1:89-95

Growth 1:147, 11:29

Housing 1:151, 2:29, 10:9, 10:10

Nulife study 1:85-86, 1:148-152

Stephenson Report 1:86-87

Urban poverty 1:58, 1:84-87

Housing

Blacks 1:135-136, 1:138

Co-operatives 1:153-154, 2:31, 2:58, 2:59-60, 3:21, 20:13

Nulife study 1:151-154

Recommendations 1:208, 3:8, 3:20

Situation 1:59, 1:71-72, 1:196-197, 3:20-21

Standards 3:20, 3:24

Stephenson Report 1:86-87

Income

Blacks, annual (table) 1:123

Ceilings and exemptions 23:232-233

Guaranteed annual 1:59, 1:159-162, 1:197-198, 1:206, 3:8, 3:10-11, 3:15, 3:20-22

Indians, annual (tables) 1:99

Low, families, tables 1:56, 1:64-69, 1:71-78, 1:82, 3:21

Maintenance 1:166

Indians

Cape Breton 1:47-48, 1:204-205

Income (tables) 1:99

MacDonald study 1:97-98

Recommendations 1:205, 1:207

Situation 1:58, 1:96-98, 1:205

Welfare assistance 2:46

Industries

Cutbacks 1:133, 1:139, 2:57

Pollution 1:208

Resources 2:33

Technological changes 1:87, 1:158-159, 2:57

Labour

Cape Breton 1:196, 1:200

Cutbacks 1:158-159
 Legislation, gaps 1:197
 Mobility 1:79
 Retraining, relocation 1:157-158
 Women 1:19
 Land ownership inventories, table, conclusions 1:80-83
 Legal aid 32:8, 32:12, 32:24, 32:29
 Legislation, reform 1:202
 Medical care
 Insurance 1:204, 1:207
 Program 1:168, 23:191
 Migration, regional disparity 2:31, 2:58-59
 Old age groups 2:59
 Poverty
 Amount 1:65-66
 Causes 1:147, 1:159, 2:57, 3:20
 Cultural 1:204-205, 2:33
 Evaluation, difficulties 1:64-66
 Rural 1:79-83, 2:61-62
 Situation 1:14, 1:64-76, 37:49-61
 Urban 1:84-95
 Victims 1:61-62
 Prices control board 1:197
 Public Welfare Department
 Allocations to widows 1:201
 Brief 37:38-61
 Discussion 37:7-37
 Recommendations 37:40-41
 Recreation facilities 1:150, 1:154, 1:204, 1:207
 Rents
 Distress for Rents Act, changes 37:14
 Scale 3:20, 3:24
 Resources
 Development 2:41-42, 2:61-62
 Erosion 1:87-88
 Salaries 1:19, 1:160, 1:209, 2:14-15
 Subsidies, "marginal" worker 1:134, 1:140, 1:146
 Sydney, steel workers 1:204-205
 Tourist industry 1:206
 Transportation, table 1:154-156
 Unemployment insurance 1:202, 1:205-206, 2:42
 Unions 1:142, 1:143, 1:162, 1:197
 Welfare
 Agents 1:202
 Appeal board 12:22
 Funds 1:202
 Government failure 1:197
 Recipients 1:208, 37:18-19
 System 3:8
 Widows, allowances 1:43, 1:201

Nurses and nursing

Community role 47:16
 Educational programming, grants 47:16
 Employment situation
 Rural areas 47:15
 Urban areas 47:14-15
 Home services 20:29, 23:22, 23:185, 47:17, 47:20, 47:25-26, 47:41, 65:41
 Male nurses 47:13-14
 Nurse's aids, role 47:17
 Over-supply, urban areas 47:14, 47:15
 Preventive health role 47:8
 Public health nurses 47:8, 47:16
 Role 47:8, 47:9, 47:24
 Salaries 47:15, 47:23
 Services
 Community 47:16
 Elderly persons 47:20, 47:25, 47:34
 Rural areas 47:20
 Shortage 47:21, 47:22
 Staff nurses, definition, role 47:14-15
 Standards 47:21-23
 Training 47:42-43
 Drop-outs 47:22
 Inducements 47:14
 University programs 47:21-23
See also
 Canadian Nurses' Association
 Victorian Order of Nurses for Canada

Nutrition

Children 22:24, 56:204
 Cost of living factor 6:78
 Dietician services 65:43
 Education 47:21
 Factor in poverty 6:78, 15:48, 21:48, 22:24, 23:123-124, 65:43
 Imbalance 6:78, 15:48, 57:28, 57:70, 65:40-42
 Meals on Wheels, operation 20:27, 20:31, 47:10-11, 47:33, 47:36, 47:37
 Perceptual problems, relation 65:41-43
 Survey 23:124, 23:192-194

O'Connor, Mrs. Bernie, Member, Vancouver Opportunities Committee
 Statement 9:19-21

O'Connor Drive Development Community Association, Toronto
 Discussion 27:96-114

O'Donohue, Anthony, Alderman, Toronto
 Statements 27:12-13, 27:115

O'Driscoll, W., President, Newfoundland Co-Operative Services, St. John's
 Statement 52:17-18

Nova Scotia Association for the Advancement of Coloured People
 Brief 3:18-19
 Statement 3:7

Office Overload

Operation 6:56-57

Old Age

Assistance areas 50:85-86, 61:77, 62:17-18
 Counselling service 47:48
 Economic vulnerability 31:49, 50:23, 50:81, 61:24,
 61:70, 62:20

Government assistance 62:16-17, 62:34, 63:35

Guaranteed Income Supplement 23:29-30, 23:35,
 23:89-90, 23:219-226, 31:9

Hobbies 62:22-23

Homemakers' services 20:29, 20:44-45

Housing situation 10:17-18, 47:9-10, 50:23, 50:83,
 50:94, 57:82-83, 62:19, 62:23-24, 63:12

Medical care 47:42, 50:23, 50:84

Number of pensioners 56:184

Participation needs 26:105, 50:23, 57:82, 62:16,
 62:17, 62:19, 62:33, 62:34

Poverty, situation 20:24, 20:44-45, 27:149-150,
 42:49, 48:8, 48:33, 50:81, 57:82-83, 61:24,
 61:70, 64:58, 64:72, 70:7

Services

Eligibility 20:24, 20:45

Information 50:23, 50:83-85, 62:24-25

Supportive, provision 20:29, 20:44

Skill use, experimental programs 2:31

Studies 62:16, 62:33

Taxation exemption 6:83, 9:34

Welfare 23:9-10, 23:15, 23:84-85, 58:59

Old Age Security

Benefit increase 25:18, 25:24-25, 31:47, 40:31, 50:81-82, 62:19

Means test 27:7-8

Operation 23:10, 23:21, 23:24, 23:28, 23:30,
 23:34, 23:80, 23:84-85, 23:88-89, 33:49-50,
 59:29

2 per cent increase ceiling 31:9

Old Brewery Mission, Inc., Montreal

Background, operation 41:35

Brief 41:35-41

Discussion 41:9-34

Ombudsman

Need 8:33

Ontario

Assistance rates, revision 15:42

Budget standards, monthly, basic necessities (tables)
 23:176-177

Children's Aid Societies

Expenditure (table) 43:108

Services, statistics 43:106-107, 43:109

Co-operatives 20:19, 20:39

Day care centres, services 15:48, 27:39-40,
 43:110-111

Dental services 15:47, 23:198, 43:47-48

Disability awards 25:20-21

Divorce, procedures 7:27, 21:26

Education

Financial assistance 13:28

Employment

Concept 15:39-40

Welfare benefits v.s. 15:15

Family and Youth Allowances program 43:69-75

Family Benefits Act 25:21, 25:25, 26:141, 27:100,
 43:58-65, 43:67-68, 43:90, 43:131-135

General Welfare Assistance, programs, tables 15:10,
 15:40, 15:44, 15:47, 26:15, 26:141, 43:55-57,
 43:65-68, 43:90, 43:127-130, 43:135

Guaranteed Income Supplement 43:75-76

Hamilton

Anti-poverty measures 28:84-121, 28:137-149

Family income estimates 28:130-136

Housing 28:20, 28:21, 28:24, 28:67-68,
 28:98-121

Poverty, situation 28:18-27, 28:69-83,
 28:137-149

Social Planning and Research Council of Hamilton and District

Brief 28:52-149

Discussion 28:19-27

Household supplies assistance 15:45-46

Housing 10:22, 15:46, 26:11-13, 28:20, 28:24,
 28:67-68, 28:98-121, 43:48

Income

Ceilings and exemptions 23:236-238

Distribution by families, unattached individuals
 (table) 43:126

Industrial location, non-urban centres 11:30

Kingston, housing 50:93-96

Land speculation control 18:25

Legal aid, system 7:27, 21:26-27, 27:27-39,
 27:132-140, 32:12, 32:24, 32:29-32, 43:116-117

Medical care 23:190-191

Nutrition 15:48

Old age

Programs 43:111-112

Security program 43:75-76

Ontario Housing Corporation 10:22

Ottawa

Action '70 conference 15:28-29, 15:31-32, 15:57, 16:25, 17:17

Dalhousie Ward

Adult education 17:17, 17:23-24

Discrimination 17:8

Drugs 17:15

Employment vs. welfare benefits 17:8

Housing, rents 17:7-8, 17:11-12, 17:14-16, 17:17-18

"Operation Comeback" 17:19

Problems 17:8

Financial contributions, Ottawa-Carleton Regional Municipality Programs 15:26

Retardates, workshop 15:36

Social Planning Council of Ottawa and District

Brief 15:57-59

Discussion 15:28-38

Role 15:57

Poverty

Areas 25:14

Government policies 43:48-49

Social and Family Services Department

Brief 43:40-136

Discussion 43:9-39

Organization, operation 43:51-52, 43:54

Sudbury, urban renewal 10:13-14

Toronto

Family budgets 23:150-153, 23:155-156

Housing 10:17, 26:143, 27:120-121, 27:147-148, 27:158

Immigrants

On relief 29:11

Problems 26:18-20, 27:50-51

Research 11:34

Situation 26:9-193, 27:9-168, 28:7-149

Special Committee of the City of Toronto

Discussion 27:9-19

Submissions 27:115-122

Urban growth, causes 11:30

Urban renewal 26:143-145

Welfare and Housing Committee

Brief 26:132-135

Discussion 26:9-25

Role 26:132

Unemployment Insurance Program 43:77-79, 43:86, 43:88

Utilities 15:45

Visiting Homemakers and Nurses Act, operation 15:43, 15:48-49, 26:57, 43:118

Vocational rehabilitation programs 43:112-113

Welfare

Allowance (tables) 28:20, 43:46-47, 43:81-84

Appeal 12:22, 15:22-23, 15:31, 16:25

Assistance 15:10, 15:17-18, 15:40

Benefits vs. employment 15:15

Child, tables 43:106-109

Demogrants 15:49

Desertions, separations 15:47-48

Municipal responsibilities 15:40, 15:45, 43:120-121

Pre-added budget 15:45

Social 28:20

Workmen's Compensation Board 28:7-17, 28:31-51

See also

Ottawa-Carleton, Regional Municipality

Ontario Welfare Council

Activities, operation 25:8-13

Brief 25:23-26

Discussion 25:7-22

Ostry, Dr. Sylvia, Director, Economic Council of Canada

Curriculum vitae 5:6-8

Ottawa-Carleton, Regional Municipality

Day care centres 15:48

Dental services 15:48

Food cost tables 15:52-54

Household supplies assistance 15:45-46

Housing, tables 15:46-47, 15:54-56

Poverty, situation 15:7-27, 15:43-44

Regional Advisory Board 15:32-33, 15:58-59

Social Welfare Department

Brief 15:39-56

Budget 15:12

Discussion 15:7-27

Field workers 15:17

Welfare services 15:43

See also

Ontario

Ouellet, Gary Quart

See

Quart-Ouellet, Gary, Lawyer, Quebec (Que.)

Paikowsky, Jason, Student, Universal Axle, Saint John

Drop-in centres, statement 60:52-53

Palmer, J.R., Economic Research Assistant, Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University, Halifax

Curriculum vitae 1:10

Palmer, John, Vancouver Inner-City Service Project

Dugout, statement 8:46-47

Parlee, Dr. H.B., Chairman of Submission, Department of General Practice, Saint John General Hospital

Statement 61:17-18

Pedlar, Ken, Member, Salvation Army

Curriculum vitae 48:6

Pelletier, Rev. G.L., Bishop, Trois-Rivières; Chairman, Social Action Committee, Canadian Catholic Conference

Statement 49:12

Phalen, J.T., General Secretary, Co-Operative Union of Canada

Curriculum vitae 20:6-7

ario Federation of Citizens' Associations

Brief 26:162-173

Discussion 26:61-80

Pierce, Trevor, Executive Director, Ontario Welfare Council

Curriculum vitae 25:6
Statement 25:7-9

Pilote, J.M., Old Brewery Mission, Inc., Montreal

Curriculum vitae 41:7

Pitman, Walter, former M.P.P. (Ontario)

Brief 27:144-145
Discussion 27:46-49
Statement 27:45-46

Plumptre, Mrs. A.F.W., President, Vanier Institute of the Family

Curriculum vitae 21:7-8
Statement 21:21-25

Pointe St. Charles Community Clinic, Montreal

Activities 45:39-40
Brief 45:39-40
Discussion 45:9-21
See also
Medical care
Clinics

Poirier, Rev. Roger, Co-ordinator, General Assembly, Île de Hull (Que.)

Curriculum vitae 16:6
Statement 16:18

Police

Domestic situations, training 6:14-15, 6:70
Methods, investigation 57:68

Pollution

Ecological disturbance 45:51-52
Environmental health 6:14, 16:35-37, 23:122-123
Ground, septic tanks 10:12-13, 10:20
Social effects 23:67

Port au Port Economic Development Association (Nfld.)

Discussion résumé 54:9

Portuguese Canadian Congress, Toronto

Discussion 27:56-57

Poverty

Categories 8:7, 11:7, 11:18, 11:32-33, 15:7-8, 24:42, 26:24-25, 50:61-62, 56:22-23, 56:66, 64:12
Characteristics 8:74, 9:37-38, 21:50, 23:62-63, 24:49-50, 26:155-156, 27:125, 37:44, 42:44-47, 46:40-41, 56:195-196, 63:63, 64:58-59, 70:7-8, 70:31-32
Cultural 1:192, 2:33, 2:42, 15:39, 59:27, 59:46, 65:10-13, 70:21, 70:45-46

Definition 1:12, 1:61-63, 2:30, 2:56, 3:18, 3:22-23, 4:62, 5:28, 6:77, 6:86-87, 8:54, 8:63, 8:83, 10:26, 12:30, 14:43, 15:39, 19:24, 19:35, 19:40-41, 20:23, 20:44, 21:38, 21:44, 23:139-149, 24:23, 24:42, 24:65, 26:14, 26:132-133, 26:136, 26:155, 27:20, 27:77, 27:115, 27:124, 27:133, 27:161, 28:62-68, 29:22-23, 30:31-32, 31:45-46, 33:8, 40:30-31, 42:42-43, 43:42-46, 46:20, 46:42, 48:7-8, 48:32, 50:45-46, 50:73, 51:38, 52:57-58, 52:63, 53:9, 54:18, 54:28, 55:45, 55:112, 55:147-148, 56:27-28, 56:100, 56:131, 56:178, 56:194-195, 57:64, 57:72-73, 58:9, 58:27, 58:48-49, 58:51, 58:54, 61:9, 61:22-23, 61:65-66, 61:69, 64:11, 64:31-32, 64:52-56, 64:77, 70:9, 70:27-28, 70:44-47

Discrimination of the poor 1:29, 1:32-33, 5:15-16, 17:8, 21:22-23, 21:49, 61:37-38, 61:45

Effects 2:18, 2:19, 2:27, 2:52, 6:79, 12:37-38, 22:23-25, 27:88, 30:33, 56:37, 60:110, 60:117-118, 61:9, 61:46

Children

Education 21:25-26, 21:29-30, 21:34, 21:47, 21:52-65, 22:9-10, 22:13-21, 22:23-25, 23:85, 56:37

Health 56:203-205

Social aspects 62:8-16, 62:29-32

Discouragement 2:18, 8:74, 9:38, 12:37, 38:28-29, 55:134

Exploitation of poor 1:25, 1:27, 12:8, 17:11

Factors 1:147, 1:203-204, 6:34, 6:39, 7:31, 23:62-64, 27:55, 33:8, 40:30, 58:9-10

Alcoholism 6:79, 6:81, 27:117, 40:8, 41:13, 45:47-57, 48:9, 48:33, 48:36, 58:47, 61:54-55

Cost of living 9:33-34, 11:31, 48:8, 48:32-33, 60:35-36, 64:72

Economic 9:7-9, 27:125, 45:24-25, 52:70, 60:64, 61:37, 62:10, 64:56, 64:72, 70:47-49

Education 1:21, 1:36, 3:20-21, 5:10, 5:12-13, 6:80, 15:13, 16:19, 21:23, 22:24-25, 24:39-40, 27:14, 27:117, 31:69-71, 33:8, 42:8, 45:25, 46:43-45, 48:8, 48:32, 56:195, 56:196-197, 60:19, 60:64, 60:96-98, 60:118, 62:10, 67:15, 67:23, 70:7, 70:32

Environment 6:39-40, 6:80, 6:81, 6:86, 23:65, 42:8, 42:47, 45:25, 58:47, 60:45, 60:64, 60:102, 61:17-22, 62:10, 63:63, 64:72

Government policies 9:7-8, 9:33-34, 57:75-76

Health 6:79, 12:37, 16:38, 27:117-118, 42:47, 45:12, 45:18, 45:21-22, 45:25, 45:42-43, 47:33, 60:102, 63:63, 70:32

Housing 1:24, 1:46-47, 3:20, 3:21, 10:26, 21:23, 21:48, 31:55-57, 34:35, 37:44, 42:8, 50:93-94, 61:17-19

Income disparity 3:20, 6:80, 9:10, 18:8, 20:9, 27:126, 33:8, 42:47-48, 62:10, 70:45

Nutrition 15:48, 21:48, 22:24, 23:123-124, 65:4

Psychological 2:18, 2:50-52, 8:74, 9:34, 16:34, 22:10, 22:14, 42:25, 55:100

Regional disparity 5:20-21, 18:21, 42:49, 42:63-64, 70:47-49

Taxation 5:16, 6:8

Unemployment 6:49, 9:7, 15:13, 42:8, 45:42, 54:34, 58:47, 60:19, 60:96, 60:98-99, 62:10, 63:26, 70:7, 70:28

Workmen's Compensation 28:7-8, 28:10, 28:33

Hereditary 19:25, 19:40

Political: non-participation of poor in decision-making 2:49, 5:15, 6:36, 6:83, 8:75, 12:7, 12:8, 14:11, 16:32-35, 18:65-68, 19:26, 21:15-16, 21:22, 21:44, 21:51, 24:58, 27:10, 27:11, 27:120, 27:162-163, 45:25, 52:72-73, 64:56-57, 67:15, 67:23, 68:27, 70:7, 70:21, 70:30-31

Prevention 6:34, 6:36, 6:66

Research, government co-ordination of 5:29

Statistics 5:25, 23:19, 53:10

Studies, theories

Booth, Charles 23:140

Engel, Ernst 23:139-140

Fuchs, Victor R. 23:147

Orshansky, Mollie 23:146-147

Podoluk, Miss J.R. 23:148

Rowntree, B.S. 23:140-142

Townsend, Peter 23:143-146

Twining, Louise 23:139

See also

Anti-poverty measures

Individual headings

Individual provinces

Poverty, Special Senate Committee

Criticism 2:10, 2:16, 6:63, 26:110-111, 45:35-36, 63:29-30, 64:44-46

Minutes of Proceedings, "In Camera" meetings 22:5
Newfoundland, briefs received, list 54:6

Purpose 8:8

Terms of reference 1:3

Visits

Manitoba: Stony Mountain, Manitoba Penitentiary (17 Nov. 1969) 6:47-49

New Brunswick: East Coast (7 Aug. 1970) 63:7-9
Newfoundland

Corner Brook (8 July 1970) 54:8-10

Cox's Cove (8 July 1970) 54:7-8

Fogo Island (7 July 1970) 54:7

Northern, and Labrador (7-9 July 1970) 54:10-14

Port au Port, Lourdes (8 July 1970) 54:8

Saskatchewan: Prince Albert and vicinity (18-21 Aug. 1970) 65:6-8

Power, Mrs. Doris, Member, Just Society, Toronto

Statement 28:17-18

Pre-School Parent-Child Cooperative, Calgary

"Poverty and early childhood education", brief 56:180-181

Premier's Task Force on Extended Care and Alcoholic Treatment Facilities in Prince Edward Island

Brief 4:58-59

Discussion 4:9-25

See also

Alcoholism

Prince Edward Island

Presbyterian Church in Canada, Board of Evangelism and Social Action

Activities 33:30

Brief 33:30-34

Discussion 33:7-29

Recommendations 33:30-34

Priddle, Mrs. J.M., Vice-President (ex officio), Canadian Home and School and Parent-Teacher Federation

Curriculum vitae 22:7

Statement 22:9-11

Prince Albert Work Training Program, Prince Albert (Sask.)

Brief 65:71-74

Discussion 65:28-39

Prince Edward Island

Agriculture 11:17-20

Budget standards, monthly, basic necessities (table) 23:173

Canada Manpower Centre, program 4:33-34

Community centres 4:49

Day care centres 4:11, 4:51-53, 4:55-56, 4:63

Dental services 23:198

Economic development 4:60, 11:17-18

Education

Drop-outs 4:10-11, 4:62

Headstart programs 4:11, 4:13

Kindergartens 4:16

Provincial Vocational Institute 4:29

Role, change in concept 4:13-14

Student allowances 4:11-12

System, inadequacies 4:10-15, 4:62

Teacher training 4:13

Teaching methods, proposed 4:14-15

Television, effect 4:15

Up-grading, vocational 4:63

Ex-convicts 4:35

Family Allowances 4:38-39, 4:41

General Welfare Assistance Act 40:12

Housing 4:60, 40:15-17

Income

Ceilings and exemptions 23:231

Guaranteed Annual 4:20

Situation 4:18, 4:62

- Indians 40:16
 - Legal
 - Aid system 4:29, 32:25
 - Situation 4:26-36
 - Newstart program 21:15-16
 - Nursing services 40:18-19
 - Parole system 4:35
 - Poverty
 - Causes 4:20, 4:43, 4:60, 4:62, 40:8
 - Cultural 4:43
 - Factors 4:62
 - Situation 4:10, 4:37, 4:43
 - Recreation 4:24-25
 - Regional centres 4:23
 - Self-help courses 4:38, 4:39, 4:43, 4:63
 - Statutory age, juvenile 4:28
 - Unemployment 4:62
 - Welfare
 - Agencies 4:39, 4:45
 - Allowances 4:60
 - Assistance 4:18-19, 4:37-38
 - Effects 4:19
 - Finances 4:40
 - Inequality 4:18
 - Operation 4:40, 40:11
 - Policies 4:38
 - Programs 4:38, 4:40, 4:49, 4:51, 4:60-61, 4:63
 - Recipients 4:43, 4:61, 4:64
 - Services
 - Centralization 4:21
 - Decentralization 4:10, 4:24, 4:58-59
 - Establishment, regional 4:17-19, 4:64
 - Operation, personnel 4:18, 4:38, 4:42, 4:59-60
 - Social workers, qualification 4:22, 4:60
 - Welfare and Labour Department
 - Brief 40:30-32
 - Discussion 40:7-29
 - Recommendations 40:31-38, 40:41
 - Work training program 23:228
- Prince Edward Island Newstart Incorporated
- Brief 4:62-65
 - Discussion 4:48-57
- Provincial Council of Women of Ontario
- Brief 50:71-135
 - Discussion 50:22-40
 - Recommendations 50:75-80
 - Role 50:72
- Putman, Mrs. Yvonne, Secretary, Winnipeg Welfare Rights Movement, Winnipeg
- Statement 7:23-24
- Quart-Ouellet, Gary, Lawyer, Quebec (Que.)
- Brief 66:24-32
 - Discussion 66:33-40
 - Recommendations 66:32
- Quebec
- Agriculture 70:40-41
 - Co-operatives 20:39
 - Dental services 23:198
 - Eastern
 - Cultural poverty 70:44-49
 - Economic, social situation 70:40-41
 - Planned development 70:49-50
 - Fisheries 70:41
 - Forest industry 70:41
 - Income ceilings and exemptions 23:235
 - Legal aid, services 32:9-10, 32:12, 32:14-15, 32:25, 39:7-37
 - Lower St Lawrence, Quebec Province 69:8-20
 - Montreal
 - Family budgets 23:153-156
 - Housing 10:20
 - Legal aid system 32:25
 - Little Burgundy, situation 36:13-14, 36:36-42
 - Poverty, situation 12:7-38, 29:7-24
 - Welfare Social Services of the City of Montreal
 - Brief 29:22-26
 - Discussion 29:7-21
 - Operation 29:23-24
 - Poverty, situation 12:7-38, 29:7-26, 41:9-41, 66:11-58, 69:8-20, 70:7-51
 - Recreation and tourism 70:41
 - Rimouski
 - Social Service of the Diocese of Rimouski
 - Brief (bibliography) 70:27-37
 - Discussion 70:7-14
 - Organization, role 70:35-37
 - Recommendations 70:8, 70:27, 70:32-35
 - Urban population (table) 70:29
 - Welfare
 - Appeal legislation 12:22
 - Work activity projects 23:227
 - See also*
 - Hull, Île de, (Que.)
- Quigley, Miss A.M., Executive-Director, St. Elizabeth Visiting Nurses; Council of Catholic Charities
- Curriculum vitae 20:8
- Quinn, W.J., Inspector of Schools, District #7, Toronto
- Statement 26:82
- Reardon, Hugh, President, Lions Club (Senior Citizens' Association), Moncton
- Statement 62:16-18
- Recreation
- Encouragement, organization 6:83, 58:57
 - Equipment, financing research into 6:41
 - Facilities
 - Child participation in construction 6:41

- Design for playground 6:39-41, 6:43-44, 6:46, 6:87-88, 6:90-91
 Lack of 6:39-40, 6:50, 6:70, 6:88-90, 9:14, 9:23, 9:38, 15:46, 16:12-13, 16:38-39, 23:67, 26:102-103
 Low cost, construction, use 6:92-94
 Urban areas 6:88
 Financial problems 9:14, 12:27, 12:37
 Initiative, participatory 6:79
 Poverty characteristics, relationship 6:41
 Programs
 Co-ordination 2:53, 16:7, 16:29, 17:23
 Financing 6:42-43, 6:45, 6:83
 Inadequate 7:8
 Organization 6:89
See also
 University of Manitoba, Department of Environmental Studies, Faculty of Architecture, Winnipeg
- Reed, Rev. E.S., Bishop of Ottawa; Family Planning Federation of Canada
 Curriculum vitae 19:7
- Regina Renters Council, Regina
 Brief 64:75-77
 Discussion 64:31-34
- Regional Chamber of Commerce, Lower St. Lawrence Region (Que.)
 Brief 69:19-20
 Discussion 69:7-18
- Regional Development Associations
 Concept, operation 52:73
- Regional Economic Expansion Department
 Brief 11:32-36
 Departmental co-operation 11:13
 Discussion 11:7-31
 Objectives 11:12, 11:32-36, 18:57, 18:65
 Programs, assistance 11:27, 11:36
- Regional Municipality of Ottawa-Carleton
See
 Ottawa-Carleton, Regional Municipality
- Reid, G.A., Chairman, Poverty Sub-committee, Calgary Area Council, Home and School Association of Alberta
 Statement 56:36-37
- Reid, W.W., Deputy Minister, Department of Welfare and Labour; Coordinator, Rehabilitation, Prince Edward Island
 Curriculum vitae 40:6
 Statement 40:7-8
- Rendell, Mrs. D.H., St. John's Club, Canadian Federation of University Women, St. John's (Nfld.)
 Statement 52:30-31
- Resource Mobilization for Employment Demonstration Project, Edmonton
 Client Committee
 Brief 55:140-145
 Discussion 55:74-85
 Recommendations 55:143-145
 Professional Group
 Brief 55:133-139
 Discussion 55:61-74
 Recommendations 55:137-138
- Richard, Louis, Counsellor Supervisor, Prince Edward Island Newstart Incorporated
 Curriculum vitae 4:64
- Riché, Raymond, Vice-President, Newfoundland Federation of Fishermen
 Fishing situation, statement 52:23-24
- Roach, Rev. W.M., Assistant Director, Extension Department, St. Francis Xavier University, Antigonish (N.S.)
 Curriculum vitae 2:7
 Education, statement 2:31-33
- Robert, Michel, Member, Bar of Montreal, Bar Association of the Province of Quebec
 Statement 39:8-10
- Robinson, E.W., Principal, Frontier College
 Curriculum vitae 13:7
 Education, statement 13:10-11
- Robson, Charles, Old Brewery Mission, Inc., Montreal
 Curriculum vitae 41:6
- Roger, T.M., Assistant Director of Research, Prince Edward Island Newstart Incorporated
 Curriculum vitae 4:64
- Rosenfeld, Abe, Board of Directors, Pointe St. Charles Community Clinic, Montreal
 Curriculum vitae 45:7
 Education project, statement 45:11-13
- Ross, Col. William, Salvation Army Headquarters, Canada and Bermuda
 Curriculum vitae 48:6
 Statement 48:7-10
- Rowlands, Mrs. H.W., President, Association of Women Electors of Metropolitan Toronto
 Statement 26:27-30

Royal Commission on Taxation

Recommendations, implementation 2:49

See also

Taxation

Royal Commission on the Status of Women

"In Camera" meeting 22:5

See also

Women

Rural areas*See*

Individual subjects (e.g. Education, Labour, Farmers)

Ryall, Anthony, Thorburn Road, St. John's (Nfld.)

Statement 52:36-37

Ryan, T.J., Associate Professor, Carleton University, Ottawa; Vanier Institute of the Family

Curriculum vitae 21:8

Education, disadvantaged children, brief 21:52-65

Statement 21:25-26

Ryerson Polytechnical Institute, Social Services Course, Toronto

Discussion 27:69-77, 27:93-95

Welfare recipients, brief 27:156-160

S.O.S.See

Seekers of Security Welfare Rights Group, Regina

St. Aubin, Mrs. Claire, Board of Directors, Pointe St. Charles Community Clinic, Montreal

Curriculum vitae 45:7

Family planning, statement 45:11

St. Christopher House, Toronto

Brief 27:146-151

Discussion 27:50-54

Role 27:146

St. Elizabeth Visiting Nurses Association

Role 20:29

St. Francis Xavier University, Antigonish (N.S.)

Extension Department

Brief 2:56-62

Discussion 2:30-47

Social Deviance Class

Brief 3:20-28

Discussion 3:7-17

Saint John Community Workers Association

Brief 61:69-73

Discussion 61:22-36

Recommendations 61:25-26, 61:71-72

Role 61:22

Saint John District Home and School Association

Brief 60:96-99

Education, discussion 60:19-30

Saint John General Hospital, Department of General Practice

Brief 61:68

Discussion 61:17-22

St. Onge, Rev. C.E., Director, Social Action Committee, Canadian Catholic Conference

Statement 49:9-11

St. Pierre, Jacques, Chairman, Council, Eastern Quebec Regional Development

Statement 70:19-22

St. Vincent de Paul Society of Canada

Discussion 66:8-11

Role 66:8

Salaries

Equality, women 1:18, 5:25, 8:22, 8:75, 27:158

Factor in poverty 6:8, 27:115

Minimum wage

Dependent basis 7:13

Employment at, v.s. Welfare 6:81, 21:30-31, 23:42, 26:140, 43:81-84

Handicapped 50:116-117, 50:120

Increase to 7:8, 26:64, 26:74, 27:18, 27:70, 27:115, 27:128, 27:158

Legislation, rates 63:11-12

Levels 1:43

Poverty line 2:25, 19:12-13, 43:46-47

Situation 2:15-16, 5:24, 11:23, 26:64

Studies 5:24

Supplements to 7:8, 7:13, 26:24

Non-union workers 21:45

See also

Income

Individual provinces

Salvation Army

Brief 48:30-38

Discussion 48:7-29

Recommendations 48:33, 48:34-35, 48:36

Sanderson, Solomon, Member, Federation of Saskatchewan Indians

Indian situation, statement 65:47-48

Sandford, A.E., Social Development Program Designer, Prince Edward Island Newstart Incorporated

Curriculum vitae 4:64

Saskatchewan

Budget standards, monthly, basic necessities (table) 23:179

- Co-operatives 1:30, 8:29, 20:12, 20:19, 20:20
 Day care centres 42:52
 Dental services 23:199
 Economic development 42:58
 Education
 Adult 42:15-16, 42:53-55, 65:9-30, 65:51-70
 Vocational grade 11 program 42:11-12
 Farmers 42:10, 64:24-26
 Housing 42:52-53
 Income ceilings and exemptions 23:241-242
 Indians and Métis 42:8-9, 42:14-15, 42:19-22, 42:53-55, 65:47-50
 Legal aid 32:8-9, 32:25, 32:29, 64:79
 Medical care
 Insurance 23:117
 Prince Albert clinics 65:45-46
 Programs 23:188-189
 Poverty, situation 42:7-66, 64:7-79, 65:9-74
 Saskatchewan Assistance Plan 42:18, 42:22-28, 42:37-38, 42:51-52, 47:29
 Social service programs 42:55-56
 Unemployment rate 42:10
 Unwed mothers 42:33, 42:52
 Welfare Department
 Brief 42:39-66
 Discussion 42:7-38
 Recommendations 42:50-59, 42:64
 Work activity projects, centres 23:227-228, 42:52
- Saskatchewan Co-operative Credit Society Limited
 Brief 64:48-71
 Discussion 64:9-24
 Objectives 64:49, 64:51
 Recommendations 64:70-71
- Saskatchewan NewStart Inc.
 Brief 65:51-70
 Discussion 65:9-28
 Role, activities 65:53-54
- School Canadiana, Vancouver
 Activities, role 8:43-44, 8:82
- School of Economic Science, Toronto
 Discussion 18:23-35
 Submission 18:23-29
- Scofield, C.H., General Manager, Canadian Chamber of Commerce
 Curriculum vitae 51:6-7
- Second Employment Orientation for Women Class, Vancouver
 Brief 9:37-38
- Secord, Donald, Executive Member, Board of Evangelism and Social Service, United Church of Canada
 Curriculum vitae 31:7
- Secrétariat Social de St. Roch (Que.)
 Brief, summary 66:57-58
 Discussion 66:42-52
 Recommendations 66:44, 66:57-58
- Seekers of Security Welfare Rights Group, Regina
 Brief 64:78-79
 Discussion 64:34-47
 Programs 64:36, 64:37
 Role, organization 64:36, 64:40
- Séguin, Jean, Director, Welfare Social Services, Montreal
 Curriculum vitae 29:6
 Montreal situation, statement 29:7-8
- Senior Citizens of Winnipeg
 Brief summary, report 7:33
- Serre, Bertrand, Co-ordinator, Neighbourhood Improvement Committee, Ottawa
 Committee role, statement 17:7-8
 Curriculum vitae 17:6
- Seventh-Day Adventist Church in Canada
 Background, activities 34:7, 34:31-32
 Brief 34:30-37
 Discussion 34:7-29
 Recommendations 34:34-37
- Sewage
See
 Pollution
- Sewell, John, Alderman, Toronto
 Statement 27:11-12
 Submission 27:120-122
- Shimizu, Mrs. K., Social Worker, Ottawa-Carleton, Regional Municipality
 Curriculum vitae 15:6
- Shuttleworth, Dale, Social Service Consultant, Community on the Move, Lawrence Heights, Toronto
 Statement 26:108-109
- Sinclair, Walter, Principal, Duke of York Public School, Toronto
 Statement 26:81-82
- Skahan, Mrs. C.F.H., Member, "Up to the Neck" Newspaper, Montreal
 Curriculum vitae 12:6
- Smith, Dr. A.J.R., Chairman, Economic Council of Canada
 Curriculum vitae 5:6
 Statement 5:9-10

Smith, Archibald, Chairman of Submission, Saint John Community Workers Association
Statement 61:22-26

Smith, Chief Elijah, Yukon Native Brotherhood
Statement, Yukon Indian situation 59:7-11

Smith, Gary, Consultant, Family Planning Federation of Canada
Curriculum vitae 19:7

Smith, Col. John, Public Relations Officer (Ottawa area), Salvation Army
Curriculum vitae 48:6

Smith, Murray, Social Deviance Class, St. Francis Xavier University, Antigonish (N.S.)
Statement 3:7-8

Snowden, Prof. Donald, Director, Extension Service, Memorial University of Newfoundland, St. John's (Nfld.)
Newfoundland situation, statements 52:38-40, 52:43-49

Social Assistance Act
Application, Prince Edward Island 4:59

Social Planning Councils
See
Welfare

Social Science Council
Establishment recommended 37:8, 37:48

Social workers
Activator, role, responsibility 6:30
Attitude to welfare recipients 6:28, 9:30, 15:42, 20:27, 20:47, 22:26, 26:151, 56:51, 64:42
Discretionary powers 56:49-50
Failure 36:14-15
Family Counsellors 68:42
Home service corps 20:25, 20:46
Number 6:48, 6:81, 8:55, 64:37
Older persons vs. university graduates 56:22
Role 6:30, 26:111, 64:54, 64:63, 68:18
Situation 26:150-151
Social animators 70:12-13
Societal needs emphasis 8:76
Team approach 2:42-43
Training, qualifications 4:22, 6:48, 25:18, 26:151
University graduates vs. older persons 56:22
Volunteers 42:56-57
Welfare recipients attitude to 15:11, 56:50
Work loads 6:81, 9:28-29, 26:151

SOS-Volunteer Action for Social Change, Toronto
Background 27:165
Brief 27:161-165
Discussion 27:77-85
Role 27:77, 27:161

South End Improvement Association, Saint John (N.B.)
Brief 60:117-121
Discussion 60:63-74
Recommendations 60:64-66, 60:117-121

South End Tenants' Association, Saint John (N.B.)
Brief 60:117-121
Discussion 60:63-74
Recommendations 60:64-66, 60:117-121

Speaker, Hon. R.A., Minister, Department of Social Development, Alberta
Brief 57:71-77
Statement 57:36-40

Stacey, Mrs. G.E., Member, Social Planning Council, Edmonton
Curriculum vitae 55:111

Statistics Act
Role 23:133

Steele, James, Advisory Chairman, Neighbourhood Youth Corps, Toronto
"Convenient caring or truly caring", brief 26:190-193
Corps operation, programs, statement 26:95-97

Stegmayer, H.E., Executive Director, United Fund of Greater Saint John, Inc.
Saint John situation, statement 60:8-11

Stewart, Miss Barbara, Nurse, Pointe St. Charles Community Clinic, Montreal
Curriculum vitae 45:7
Public health training, statement 45:10

Stony Mountain Native Brotherhood, Manitoba Penitentiary
Brief 6:77-84
Recommendations 6:81-83
Senate sub-committee visit report 6:47-49

Strasbourg, Mrs. Laurette, Secretary, General Assembly, Île de Hull (Que.)
Curriculum vitae 16:6

Survey of the Contemporary Indians of Canada
Findings, recommendation 19:12-13, 19:35

- Sutton, Stuart, Secretary General, Vanier Institute of the Family
Curriculum vitae 21:7
- Sweden
Housing allowances 10:23
- Sydney Academy, Grade 11-A, Sydney (N.S.)
Briefs 1:192-209
Discussion 1:34-51
- Sykes, Rod, Mayor, Calgary
Statement 56:21-26
- Task Force on Housing and Urban Development (1969)
Recommendations, implementation 2:49
Role 17:16, 17:18
- Taxation
Benefits, use for welfare 9:11, 66:28-29
Effect, welfare recipient 31:51-52, 43:33
Exemptions 12:33-34
Baby-sitting 24:26
Handicapped children 29:25
Mortgage interest payments 1:35, 24:27, 24:83, 24:87
Old Age pensioners 6:83, 9:34
Welfare recipients 6:83, 26:40, 26:141
Family Allowance 12:34
Funded debt reduction 45:49-50
Government policies, effects 49:42
Housing 1:48
Incentives, subsidies 37:8, 37:45
Income Tax Act, structural modifications recommended 37:8, 37:44-45
Industries, companies 9:11
Negative income tax 1:31, 5:26, 6:14, 12:8-9, 12:33, 14:167, 15:49, 18:21, 21:18-19, 21:41-42, 26:22, 26:26, 26:38, 26:70, 27:116, 37:10-11, 37:42, 42:80, 48:24, 55:74, 56:190, 56:192, 58:9, 66:26
Policies 21:52
Progressive 66:28-29
Rebates 6:83
See also
Royal Commission on Taxation
- Teed, E.L., Chairman, Brief Committee, Saint John District Home and School Association
Education, statement 60:19-22
- Thériault, Rev. A.E., St. Jean Baptiste (N.B.)
Brief 68:45-47
Recommendations 68:27-29, 68:46-47
Statement 68:26-29
- Thériault, Bruno, Executive Director, Canadian National Institute for the Blind
Statement 67:8-9
- Thériault, Hon. L.N., Minister, Department of Health and Welfare, New Brunswick
Statement 44:7-8
- Thériault, Napoléon, Campbellton (N.B.)
Statement 68:33-34
- Thibault, Ernest, Campbellton (N.B.)
Housing, statement 68:39-40
- Thomas, Dr. A.M., Executive Director, Canadian Association for Adult Education
Curriculum vitae 24:6
- Thomas, Mrs. Dorothy, President, Vancouver Housing Inter-Project Council
Statement 8:64-65
- Thompson, Miss Nancy, School of Architecture, University of Manitoba, Winnipeg
Recreation project, statement 6:38-39, 6:40-41
- Tidman, Hon. G.A., Minister, Department of Public Welfare, Nova Scotia
Brief, statement 37:7-8
- Tomecko, Dr. J.W., Chairman, Board of Governors, Frontier College
College organization, statement 13:9-10
Curriculum vitae 13:7
- Topshee, Rev. G.E., Director, Extension Department, St. Francis Xavier University, Antigonish (N.S.)
Curriculum vitae 2:7
Statement 2:30-31
- Towers, Mrs. Hilda, Chairman, Winnipeg Welfare Rights Movement
Brief, statement 7:19-23
- Transportation
Factor in economic development 11:13
Problems 1:24, 1:154-156, 12:37
- Troop, F.M., Treasurer, Victorian Order of Nurses for Canada
Brief, statement 47:24
- Turgeon, Mrs. Monique, Executive Member, Neighbourhood Improvement Committee
Curriculum vitae 17:6
- Turner, Prof. Inter-Faith Social Action Committee (Nfld.)
Education system, statement summary 54:9

U.T.N.See

"Up to the Neck" Newspaper, Montreal

Unemployed Citizen's Welfare Improvement Council,
Vancouver

Recommendations 9:13-14

Statements 9:7-18

Unemployment*See*

Individual provinces

Labour

Unemployment Assistance Act (1956)

Coverage, benefit adequacy 31:47-48, 34:35

Operation 6:51, 6:52, 9:10, 23:9, 23:103, 23:114,
33:50-51UNIFARM (Alberta)

Brief 55:112-132

Farm situation, discussion 55:49-61

Unions

Anti-poverty activities 60:103-104

Attitude to Workmen's Compensation 28:9,
28:16-17, 28:38Canadian Labour Congress' concern for poverty
60:103-104

Closed shop problem 8:19, 63:14-15, 63:18

History 63:11

Job creation, retraining responsibility 8:10, 8:74

Organization 63:16-17

Part-time workers 1:43

See also

New Brunswick Federation of Labour (C.L.C.)

United Appeal

Activities 15:57-58

United Church of Canada, Board of Evangelism and Social Service

Brief 31:44-71

Discussion 31:9-43

United Community Services, Vancouver

Brief (table of contents) 33:35-87

Recommendations 33:39-40, 39:55-56

United Co-operatives of Ontario

Activities 20:20

See also

Co-Operative Union of Canada

United Fund of Greater Saint John, Inc.

Brief 60:80-95

Discussion 60:8-19

Role 60:9-10

United Kingdom*See*

Great Britain

United States

Alaska, recognition of Indian rights 19:13

Benefits, payments

Chart, monthly basis 1:203

Disability 1:201-202

Old age 1:202

Widows 1:201-202

Career development for poor 5:11

Dental health 23:197-198

Economic Opportunity Program 20:17

Guaranteed annual income, studies 11:25, 31:28,
33:74-75, 37:10, 37:42

Living standard, minimum, concept 23:146-147

Neighbourhood Legal Aid Offices, operation 8:35

Office of Economic Opportunity 5:26

Rent supplements 10:23

School attendance, 14-17 year old group 5:14

Unemployment 1:202

United Way (Man.)

Financial assistance 6:18

Universal Axle, Saint John (N.B.)

Brief 60:113-116

Discussion 60:52-63

Universal Demigrants

Definition, scope 23:70

Expenditure tables 23:80

System 51:41-42

See also

Individual demigrants by name

Universities

Attendance encouragement 5:13

Child Development Centre research 21:64

Labour studies 63:19

Role 6:82-83, 27:166-168

University of Manitoba, Department of Environmental Studies, Faculty of Architecture, Winnipeg

Brief 6:84-94

Discussion 6:38-47

See also

Recreation

University of Toronto

Students' Administrative Council

Activities, projects 27:168

Brief 27:166-168

Discussion 27:85-95

Varsity Downtown Education Project, activities
27:86-89

University of Wisconsin, Institute on Poverty, Madison (Wis.)

Research 5:25-26

"Up to the Neck" Newspaper, Montreal

Brief 12:29-38

Discussion 12:7-28

Recommendations 12:33-36

Role 12:7, 12:29-30

Urban renewal

See

Housing

Urban areas Renewal

VDEP

See

University of Toronto

Varsity Downtown Education Project

V.O.N.

See

Victorian Order of Nurses for Canada

Van der Leest, Canon, Member, Inglewood-Ramsay Redevelopment Committee, Calgary

Statement 56:76-77

Vancouver Housing Inter-Project Council

Brief 8:85-86

Discussion 8:63-73

Recommendations 8:63-64

Vancouver Inner-City Service Project

Brief 8:78-83

Discussion 8:32-53

Objectives, community role 8:80-83

Recommendations 8:32-34, 8:78-80

Vancouver Opportunities Committee

Background 9:18-19

Discussion 9:18-28

Vanier Institute of the Family

Brief 21:43-65

Discussion 21:21-37

Organization, background 21:43-44

Recommendations 21:24-25, 21:51-52

VanLammers, Miss Pauline, Canadian Association of Social Workers

Curriculum vitae 30:6

Veterans

Welfare 33:54

See also

War Veterans Allowance

Victoria Day Care Services, Toronto

Brief 26:148-154

Discussion 26:40-51

Operation 26:45-51, 26:148

Victorian Order of Nurses for Canada

Auxiliary services 47:35-36

Background 47:44-45

Brief 47:44-49

Discussion 47:24-37

Fee cost structure 47:29-30

Financing 47:27

Home services 47:25-26, 47:30-31, 47:35, 47:47

Nursing assistants 47:28-29

Role 20:29, 47:24

Services

Establishment 47:26-27, 47:37

Operation 47:31-32, 47:46-48

Publicity 47:26

Rural areas 47:29

Staff allocation 47:30

Volunteer services, meals on wheels programs 20:31, 47:32-33, 47:36

See also

Nurses and nursing

Vigoda, Mrs. Morris, President, National Council of Jewish Women of Canada, Toronto Section

Statement 27:39

Vineberg, Philip, Q.C., Vice-President, Bar Association, Province of Quebec

Statement 39:10-11

Voluntary Service Agencies

Recognition 20:26, 20:28, 20:46

WCB

See

Workmen's Compensation Board

Waldrom, Alan, Toronto

Statement 26:107-108

Walker, Ian, Calgary

Brief 56:171-174

Statement and comments 56:46-50

Walker, Miss Lorri, Chairman, Vancouver Opportunities Committee

Statement 9:18-19

Waller, L.G.P., Chief, Educational Development Division, Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development

Curriculum vitae 14:7

Walsh, Jim, Inter-Faith Social Action Committee (Nfld.)

Private brief, summary 54:10

Walsh, Leo, Counsellor, Prince Edward Island New-start Incorporated

Curriculum vitae 4:64

Walter, J.R., President, Canadian Operational Research Society

Operational research in poverty, statement 50:7-9, 50:10

War Veterans Allowance

Comparison with Workmen's Compensation 28:13

Operation 23:69, 33:52-53, 33:54

See also

Veterans

Wass, D.K., Superintendent, Social Service Department, Edmonton

Statement 55:9-10

Weih, Ron, Member, Students' Administrative Council; Varsity Downtown Education Project, University of Toronto

Statement 27:88-90

Welfare

Abuse, investigations 15:17, 22:12, 30:39, 49:19-20, 56:48-49, 56:173

Agencies

Administrative, financial, mismanagement 12:10, 12:25-26, 26:138, 60:31-32

Charities, private 6:25-26

Evaluation monitoring, review 8:79, 15:42

Resistant to change 8:39, 8:79

Services

Inadequacy 9:15

Lack of co-ordination 2:33, 5:18, 8:77, 20:31, 27:145, 56:47-48, 63:13

Voluntary 5:18-19, 20:26, 20:28-29, 20:46, 24:47-48, 42:56-57

Aid program and up-grading 8:27

Allowance

Adequacy 12:7, 12:11, 23:43-47, 26:162-163, 28:90-93

Availability 8:11

Children 23:85

Distribution 2:20

Employment v.s. 17:8-9, 18:19, 48:9, 64:73

Increase 8:64, 8:67-68, 9:14, 15:42, 24:74, 26:141, 26:142, 29:7, 61:78

Publication of rate scale 16:24-25

Work incentive supplements 6:51, 6:52, 20:27, 20:30-31, 20:47, 27:158, 61:78

Appeal, boards 12:22, 15:22-23, 15:31, 16:25, 23:30-31, 26:163, 30:9, 30:40-41, 32:31, 38:28, 42:24-27, 42:52

Applicant survey, table 56:109-110

Counselling 55:100-101, 64:37

Cycle, perpetuation 6:37-38, 64:39

Education, situation 3:20-21, 9:22, 16:12-13, 17:20-21, 23:39-40, 24:80, 26:140, 26:141, 28:20, 51:36, 55:26-27, 60:20-22

Effects 9:22-23, 15:17, 26:163-164, 27:69, 27:88-89

Children 6:37-38, 22:11, 55:26-29

Federal expenditure, tables 1:21, 5:20, 23:32-34, 23:35-36, 27:62, 37:53, 37:55, 40:39, 42:33, 51:26

Federal-provincial

Agreements 66:25

Assistance programs, list 33:76

Financing, government priority reassessment of 16:8, 16:29

Funds 5:20-21

Incentive allowances 9:20

Income

Qualification tests 23:18, 23:35, 23:42

Support 5:22, 23:16-18, 23:24, 23:27, 23:69-70, 26:140-141, 30:38, 51:26, 51:171, 64:8, 64:35

Indians 58:28-29, 65:47

Information services, sources 7:13-14, 8:33, 8:55, 9:37, 12:22, 16:25, 21:23-24, 21:50, 23:31, 26:141, 26:162, 27:72-73, 33:17, 50:132-133, 52:71-72, 66:13, 70:10

Minimum living standards, historical development (bibliography) 23:139-149

Municipal

Inadequate assistance 26:163

Pre-added budget 15:45

National Council of Welfare 23:37, 23:75, 23:128-129

Old age and situation 23:9-10, 23:15, 23:84-85

Planning 6:34, 6:36-37, 8:75, 8:79

Policies

Co-ordination by government 21:51-52, 44:34

Reform 8:10, 8:75

Programs 1:21, 1:26, 15:41-42, 16:12-13, 21:39, 43:10, 51:35, 56:174, 60:108, 65:47

Effects 6:28, 21:39, 64:8, 64:59-60, 70:7, 70:31

Federal 6:28, 23:84-110

Federal-provincial, co-ordination 51:36

Minimum needs basis 5:28

Minority groups 1:28

Provinces

Family budget assistance 23:165-181

Misuse, federal funds 60:35

Program inadequacies 17:19-20, 28:95-97

Responsibility 6:27, 23:36-37, 23:64-65

Recipients

Attitude to

By outside groups 6:23-25, 6:29, 6:34, 6:38, 6:86, 8:38, 15:57, 16:14, 21:22, 21:26, 21:52, 55:147-148, 57:74-75, 63:29, 64:36, 64:61

- By social workers 6:28, 9:30, 15:42, 20:27, 20:47, 22:26, 26:151, 56:51, 64:42
 Social workers 15:11, 56:50
 Discrimination 6:50, 6:81, 9:22, 9:37-38, 12:31, 17:8, 55:20-21, 55:26-29, 64:35
 Legal rights 20:28-29, 32:31-32
 Man in the house rule 32:23
 Medical care access 45:25-26
 Number, tables 37:52-54, 44:11, 51:26, 56:149-150
 Participation, involvement 15:32, 19:28, 20:32, 23:27, 26:16, 30:38-39, 37:47, 42:27-28, 70:13
 Salary income permissible 12:18-19
 Self-respect 2:24, 2:28-29, 7:25, 9:22, 16:24, 16:34, 27:89-90, 28:20
- Research projects
 National Welfare Grants Program 23:200-217
 Need 5:23
- Responsibility, areas of 15:40, 23:8-9
- Self-help programs, need 8:33, 8:76, 9:15
- Services 4:21, 27:125, 30:39-40
 Recommendations 15:42, 21:52, 24:80, 24:82, 26:140-142, 27:125, 28:20, 30:38-41, 55:94-95, 55:137-138
- Social adjustment classes 47:17
- Social planning councils 28:57-58, 28:122-128
- System
 Closed system, alternatives 55:105-111
 Computer application 56:48
 Effect 15:17
 Failure 4:19-22, 5:23, 6:24, 8:8, 9:9-10, 16:24, 17:19-20, 23:20-21, 23:23, 23:28, 33:54, 36:42-44, 42:48, 43:50, 52:71-72, 60:103, 64:8, 64:11, 66:25
 History, legislation 2:29, 4:41-42, 23:7-12, 23:70-75, 23:85, 64:8, 66:27-28
 Modifications, proposed 8:9, 8:20, 55:137-138, 56:171-174
 Problems 24:89, 64:8-9
- Taxation
 Benefit use 9:11, 66:28-29
 Effect 43:33
 Exemption 6:83, 26:140, 26:141
- Tests
 Means 4:41, 23:8, 23:24-25, 23:38, 33:54, 43:33, 60:35, 67:12-13
 Needs 23:8, 23:18, 23:22, 23:24, 27:148
- United States, employment incentives 23:23
- Veterans 33:54
- Voucher cards 9:22, 9:37, 55:27, 55:28, 57:79
See also
- Individual provinces
- Individual subjects
- Welfare Council, Quebec
 Brief 66:53-58
 Discussion 66:11-24
 Recommendations 66:56-57
 Role 66:11-12
- Wharf, Dr. Brian, Chairman, Canadian Association of Social Workers
 Curriculum vitae 30:6
 Statement 30:7-9
- Whipple, Mrs. M.J., Social Worker, Crescent Valley, Saint John, (N.B.)
 Statement 60:74-75
- White, W.J., Supervisor, East District Office, Family Service Association, Metropolitan Toronto
 Statement 27:19-21
- Whitford, J.R., Executive Director, Yukon Family Counselling Service
 Yukon situation, statement 58:7-10
- Whitworth, Dr. F.E., Director, Canadian Council for Research in Education
 Curriculum vitae 46:6-7
 Educational research, statement 46:29-30
- Wilkinson, Canon Maurice, Associate Secretary, Canadian Council of Churches
 Statement 49:11
- Willard, Dr. J.W., Deputy Minister, Department of National Health and Welfare
 Statement 23:7-13
- Williams, Mrs. Denise, Social Planning Council, Edmonton
 Curriculum vitae 55:111
 Growing Up Together, program, statement 55:38-39
- Wilson, Collis, Chairman, Board of Directors, Pointe St. Charles Community Clinic, Montreal
 Curriculum vitae 45:7
 Health care delivery, statement 45:9
- Winnipeg Tenants Association, Winnipeg
 Discussion 6:49-62
 Recommendations 6:52-53
- Winnipeg Welfare Rights Movement, Winnipeg
 Discussion 7:19-34
 Recommendations 7:22-24
- Women
 Eskimo 24:24-25, 24:74-76
 Indian 24:24-25, 24:74-76
 Protection 6:14-15
 Retraining, up-grading courses 9:20
 Salary equality 1:18, 5:24, 8:22, 8:75, 27:70, 27:158
See also
 Families
 Single parent situation
 Royal Commission on the Status of Women

Women's Voluntary Services

Role 12:22

Work incentives*See*

Individual provinces

Labour

Workmen's Compensation

Appeals process 28:8, 28:9, 28:11-12, 28:34-35, 28:37

Benefits

Amount, rates 27:119, 28:8, 28:13-14, 28:33, 40:32

Comparison with veteran's benefits 28:13

Delay in payment 28:8, 28:34

Review 31:48-49

Supplementary assistance from other agencies 28:12-13

Board

Attitude 27:119, 28:8-9, 28:35-37

Organization 28:10, 28:11, 28:41

Case histories 28:8, 28:11, 28:16, 28:33-34, 28:40, 28:42-51

Co-ordination with other agencies 28:11

Factor in poverty 28:7-8, 28:10, 28:33

Financing 28:13

History 28:13

Medical profession's role 28:10, 28:40

Operation 23:69, 33:51-52

Ontario 28:7-17, 28:31-51

Rehabilitation, retraining 28:9-10, 28:14-15, 28:38-39

Union attitude 28:9, 28:16-17, 28:38

See also

Just Society, Toronto

Victims of Compensation and Welfare Committee

Labour

Wyatt, Mrs. Dorothy, City Councillor, St. John's (Nfld.)

Brief 52:63-66

Statement 52:12-14

Y.M.C.A.See

Young Men's Christian Association in Canada

Yagi, Miss Kie, Secretary, Association to Tackle Adverse Conditions, Vancouver

Brief, statement 8:54-55

Yaremko, Hon. John, Minister, Ontario Department of Social and Family Services

Curriculum vitae 43:6-7

Statement 43:9-11

Young Men's Christian Association in Canada

Activities, drop-in facilities 60:53-54, 60:56

Role 60:54-55, 60:59-60

Youth

Employment 62:25-26

Generation gap 61:31-32

Involvement in community affairs 8:33, 8:79-80

Organizations gap for 11-15 year olds 26:101-102

Transients 48:37, 62:25

See also

Families

Family Allowance

Youth Allowance

Duration, recommendation 27:62

Eligibility 12:11

Increase, recommendation 27:129

Operation, effect 23:38-39, 23:93-95

See also

Families

Family Allowance

Yukon

Carcross 59:42

Carmacks 59:41

Dawson City 59:41

Haines Junction 59:42

Mayo 58:27-44, 58:53-59

Old Crow 59:41

Pelly Crossing 59:41

Population 14:108, 58:16

Poverty, situation 58:7-59

Welfare administration 58:28

Whitehorse 58:7-27, 58:47-50, 59:26-35

Housing 58:8-9, 58:47

Yukon Family Counselling Service

Brief 58:45-50

Discussion 58:7-21

Recommendations 58:49-50

Role 58:17-18

Survey questionnaire 58:8-11, 58:45-48

Yukon Native Brotherhood, Whitehorse (Yukon)

Brief 59:38-45

Discussion 59:7-26

Recommendations 59:9-11, 59:42-45

Role 59:7, 59:38

Yukon Social Service Society (Mayo Branch)

Brief 58:53-59

Discussion 58:27-44

Recommendations 58:56, 58:58-59

Role 58:27, 58:53

Zimmerman, W.M., Assistant Director, Social Planning Council, Ottawa and District

Curriculum vitae 15:6

Statement 15:28-30

Appendices

- A—(Issue 1) Dalhousie University, Institute of Public Affairs, Halifax, brief 1:52-191
- B—(Issue 1) Sydney Academy, Grade 11-A, Sydney (N.S.), brief 1:192-209
- A—(Issue 2) Halifax Neighbourhood Centre; Halifax Tenants' Protective Association, Statement, video tape presentation 2:48-49
- B—(Issue 2) Critchley, David, Professor, Maritime School of Social Work, Dalhousie University, Halifax, brief 2:50-55
- C—(Issue 2) St. Francis Xavier University, Extension Department, Antigonish (N.S.), brief 2:56-62
- A—(Issue 3) Nova Scotia Association for the Advancement of Coloured People, brief 3:18-19
- B—(Issue 3) St. Francis Xavier University, Social Deviance Class, Antigonish (N.S.), brief 3:20-28
- A—(Issue 4) Premier's Task Force on Extended Care and Alcoholism Treatment Facilities in Prince Edward Island, submission 4:58-59
- B—(Issue 4) Catholic Social Welfare Bureau (P.E.I.) 4:59-61
- C—(Issue 4) Prince Edward Island Newstart Incorporated, brief 4:62-65
- A—(Issue 6) Mount Carmel Clinic, Winnipeg, brief 6:65-76
- B—(Issue 6) Stony Mountain Native Brotherhood, Manitoba Penitentiary, Stony Mountain (Man.), brief 6:77-84
- C—(Issue 6) University of Manitoba, Department of Environmental Studies, Faculty of Architecture, Winnipeg, brief 6:84-94
- A—(Issue 8) Group of Community Workers, Vancouver, presentation 8:74-77
- B—(Issue 8) Vancouver Inner-City Service Project, brief 8:78-83
- C—(Issue 8) Association to Tackle Adverse Conditions (A.T.T.A.C.), Vancouver, brief 8:83-84
- D—(Issue 8) Vancouver Housing Inter-Project Council, supplementary information 8:85-86
- A—(Issue 9) Second Employment Orientation for Women Class, Vancouver, brief 9:37-38
- A—(Issue 10) Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, brief 10:26-36
- A—(Issue 11) Regional Economic Expansion Department, brief, presented by Tom Kent, Deputy Minister 11:32-36
- A—(Issue 12) "Up to the Neck" Newspaper, Montreal, brief 12:29-38
- A—(Issue 13) Frontier College, submission 13:30-33
- A—(Issue 14) Indian Affairs and Northern Development Department, brief 14:40-191
- A—(Issue 15) Ottawa-Carleton Regional Municipality, Social Welfare Department, brief 15:39-56
- B—(Issue 15) Ottawa and District, Social Planning Council, brief 15:57-59
- A—(Issue 16) Family Service Centre, Ottawa, brief 16:29-31
- B—(Issue 16) Île de Hull, General Assembly (Que.), "Hull Island and Poverty" 16:32-42
- A—(Issue 17) Neighbourhood Improvement Committee, Ottawa, submission 17:22-24
- A—(Issue 18) Canadian Council on Rural Development, brief 18:36-71
- A—(Issue 19) National Indian Brotherhood of Canada; Indian-Eskimo Association of Canada, brief 19:34-39
- B—(Issue 19) Family Planning Federation of Canada, brief 19:40-42
- A—(Issue 20) Co-Operative Union of Canada, brief 20:37-43
- B—(Issue 20) Council of Catholic Charities, brief, 20:44-47
- A—(Issue 21) Canadian Federation of Agriculture, submission 21:38-42
- B—(Issue 21) Vanier Institute of the Family, submission 21:43-65
- A—(Issue 22) Canadian Home and School and Parent-Teacher Federation, brief 22:23-26
- A—(Issue 23) National Health and Welfare Department, brief 23:59-247
- A—(Issue 24) Canadian Association for Adult Education, brief 24:40-64
- B—(Issue 24) Catholic Women's League of Canada, submission 24:65-90
- A—(Issue 25) Ontario Welfare Council, brief 25:23-26
- A—(Issue 26) Welfare and Housing Committee of the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto, submission 26:132-135
- B—(Issue 26) Davidson, Miss True, Mayor, East York, Toronto, submission 26:136-138
- C—(Issue 26) Association of Women Electors of Metropolitan Toronto, brief 26:139-147
- D—(Issue 26) Victoria Day Care Services, Toronto, brief 26:148-154
- E—(Issue 26) Big Brothers of Metropolitan Toronto, brief 26:155-161
- F—(Issue 26) Ontario Federation of Citizens' Associations, brief 26:162-173
- G—(Issue 26) Duke of York School, Toronto, brief 26:174-189
- H—(Issue 26) Neighbourhood Youth Corps, Toronto, brief 26:190-193
- A—(Issue 27) Special Committee of the City of Toronto, submissions from Anthony O'Donohue, Horace Brown, Karl Jaffary 27:115-122
- B—(Issue 27) Family Service Association of Metropolitan Toronto, brief 27:123-131
- C—(Issue 27) Community Legal Aid and Services Program, Toronto, brief 27:132-140
- D—(Issue 27) National Council of Jewish Women of Canada, Toronto Section, submission 27:141-143
- E—(Issue 27) Pitman, Walter, former M.P.P., (Ontario), brief 27:144-145

- F—(Issue 27) St. Christopher House, Toronto, brief 27:146-151
- G—(Issue 27) Italian Immigrant Aid Society, Toronto, brief 27:152-155
- H—(Issue 27) Ryerson Polytechnical Institute, Social Services Course, Toronto, brief 27:156-160
- I—(Issue 27) SOS-Volunteer Action for Social Change, Toronto, submission 27:161-165
- J—(Issue 27) University of Toronto, Students' Administrative Council, Toronto, brief 27:166-168
- A—(Issue 28) Just Society, Victims of Compensation and Welfare Committee, Toronto, brief 28:31-51
- B—(Issue 28) Social Planning and Research Council of Hamilton and District, brief 28:52-149
- A—(Issue 29) Welfare Social Services of the City of Montreal, brief 29:22-26
- A—(Issue 30) Canadian Association of Social Workers, brief 30:29-45
- A—(Issue 31) United Church of Canada, Board of Evangelism and Social Service, brief 31:44-71
- A—(Issue 32) Canadian Civil Liberties Association, submission 32:28-37
- A—(Issue 33) Presbyterian Church in Canada, Board of Evangelism and Social Action, brief 33:30-34
- B—(Issue 33) United Community Services of the Greater Vancouver Area, "Guaranteed Income or Guaranteed Employment?" 33:35-87
- A—(Issue 34) Seventh-Day Adventist Church in Canada, brief 34:30-37
- A—(Issue 35) Consumers' Association of Canada, brief 35:26-29
- A—(Issue 36) Family Service Association of Montreal, brief 36:34-44
- A—(Issue 37) Nova Scotia, Public Welfare Department, brief 37:38-61
- A—(Issue 38) Newfoundland, Social Services and Rehabilitation Department, brief 38:28-30
- A—(Issue 39) Bar Association of the Province of Quebec, report 39:32-37
- A—(Issue 40) Prince Edward Island, Welfare and Labour Department, brief 40:30-42
- A—(Issue 41) Old Brewery Mission, Inc., Montreal, brief 41:35-41
- A—(Issue 42) Saskatchewan, Welfare Department, brief 42:39-66
- B—(Issue 42) Federal Task Force on Agriculture, report "Canadian Agriculture in the Seventies" 42:67-81
- A—(Issue 43) Ontario Department of Social and Family Services, brief 43:40-136
- A—(Issue 44) New Brunswick, Health and Welfare Department, brief 44:33-38
- A—(Issue 45) Pointe St. Charles Community Clinic, Montreal, brief 45:39-40
- B—(Issue 45) Canadian Medical Association, brief 45:41-46
- C—(Issue 45) Canadian Woman's Christian Temperance Union, brief 45:47-57
- A—(Issue 46) Canadian Teachers' Federation, brief 46:39-57
- B—(Issue 46) Canadian Council for Research in Education, submission 46:57-64
- A—(Issue 47) Canadian Nurses' Association, submission 47:38-43
- B—(Issue 47) Victorian Order of Nurses for Canada, brief 47:44-49
- A—(Issue 48) Salvation Army, submission 48:30-38
- A—(Issue 49) Canadian Catholic Conference; Canadian Council of Churches, joint submission 49:36-43
- A—(Issue 50) Canadian Operational Research Society, brief 50:41-70
- B—(Issue 50) Provincial Council of Women of Ontario, brief 50:71-135
- A—(Issue 51) Canadian Chamber of Commerce, submission 51:35-51
- A—(Issue 52) Wyatt, Mrs. Dorothy, City Councillor, St. John's (Nfld.), brief 52:63-66
- B—(Issue 52) Canadian Federation of University Women, St. John's Club, (Nfld.), submission 52:67-68
- C—(Issue 52) Memorial University of Newfoundland, Extension Service, St. John's (Nfld.), brief 52:69-75
- A—(Issue 54) Inter-Faith Social Action Committee (Nfld.), brief 54:15-17
- B—(Issue 54) Newfoundland and Labrador Rural Development Council, report 54:18
- C—(Issue 54) Frontier College, Field Workers, Hawkes Bay, Port-au-Choix (Nfld.), submission 54:19-24
- D—(Issue 54) Northern Regional Development Association Committee, Zone No. 1, Bonne Bay-Trout River (Nfld.), brief 54:25-26
- E—(Issue 54) International Grenfell Association, submission 54:27-33
- F—(Issue 54) St. Anthony Town Council (Nfld.), submission 54:34
- G—(Issue 54) Cartwright (Labrador), brief 54:35-40
- A—(Issue 55) Edmonton, Social Service Department, brief 55:94-99
- B—(Issue 55) Monica Society, Edmonton (Alta.), submission 55:100-103
- C—(Issue 55) Edmonton Social Planning Council, brief 55:104-111
- D—(Issue 55) UNIFARM (Alta.), brief 55:112-132
- E—(Issue 55) Edmonton, Social Service Department, Special Project, Professional Group (Alta.), brief 55:133-139
- F—(Issue 55) Edmonton, Social Service Department, Special Project, Client Committee, brief 55:140-145
- G—(Issue 55) Edmonton and District Council of Churches, submission 55:146-149

- A—(Issue 56) Calgary, brief 56:84-123
 B—(Issue 56) Public School Board, Calgary, brief 56:124-157
 C—(Issue 56) Home and School Association of Alberta, Calgary, "Area Council", brief 56:158-163
 D—(Issue 56) Calgary Welfare Rights Group, statement 56:164-170
 E—(Issue 56) Walker, Ian, Calgary, brief 56:171-174
 F—(Issue 56) Calgary Inter-Faith Community Action Committee, brief 56:175-177
 G—(Issue 56) Bowness-Montgomery Day Care Association, Calgary, brief 56:178-179
 H—(Issue 56) Pre-School Parent-Child Cooperative, Calgary, statement 56:180-181
 I—(Issue 56) Hagan, A.T., Calgary, brief 56:182-186
 J—(Issue 56) Low Income Working Committee, Calgary, brief 56:187-192
 K—(Issue 56) Inglewood-Ramsay Redevelopment Committee, Calgary, brief 56:193-197
 L—(Issue 56) Calgary Labour Council, brief 56:198-202
 M—(Issue 56) Holman, Dr. G.H., Professor and Head, Division of Paediatrics, University of Calgary, brief 56:203-205
 A—(Issue 57) Edmonton Day Centre, brief 57:64-65
 B—(Issue 57) Gardenside Development Society, Edmonton, brief 57:66-70
 C—(Issue 57) Alberta, Human Resources Development Authority, brief 57:71-77
 D—(Issue 57) Humans on Welfare Society, Edmonton, submission 57:78-83
 A—(Issue 58) Yukon Family Counselling Service, brief 58:45-50
 B—(Issue 58) Child Care Centre Society, Whitehorse (Yukon), brief 58:51-52
 C—(Issue 58) Yukon Social Service Society (Mayo Branch), brief 58:53-59
 A—(Issue 59) Yukon Native Brotherhood, Whitehorse, brief 59:38-45
 B—(Issue 59) Consumers' Association of Canada, Whitehorse Branch (Yukon), brief 59:46-47
 A—(Issue 60) Social Services Council of Greater Saint John; United Fund of Greater Saint John, Inc., brief 60:80-95
 B—(Issue 60) Saint John District Home and School Association, Council, brief 60:96-99
 C—(Issue 60) Saint John Board of Trade, brief 60:100-101
 D—(Issue 60) New Brunswick Federation of Labour (C.L.C.), brief 60:102-108
 E—(Issue 60) Martin, Alan, President, Student's Representative Council, University of New Brunswick, Fredericton, brief 60:109-112
 F—(Issue 60) Universal Axle, Saint John (N.B.), submission 60:113-116
 G—(Issue 60) South End Improvement Association; South End Tenants' Association, Saint John (N.B.), brief 60:117-121
 H—(Issue 60) Crescent Valley Tenants' Association, Saint John (N.B.), brief 60:122-123
 A—(Issue 61) Association of Professional Engineers of the Province of New Brunswick, brief 61:65-67
 B—(Issue 61) Saint John General Hospital, Department of General Practice (N.B.), brief 61:68
 C—(Issue 61) Saint John Community Workers Association, (N.B.), brief 61:69-73
 D—(Issue 61) New Brunswick Association for the Advancement of Coloured People, brief 61:74-75
 E—(Issue 61) Family Services, Saint John, Inc., (N.B.), brief 61:76-80
 F—(Issue 61) New Brunswick Forest Extension Service, Fredericton, brief 61:81-84
 G—(Issue 61) New Brunswick Federation of Woodlot Owners, submission 61:85-93
 A—(Issue 62) Boys' Clubs of Canada, brief 62:29-32
 B—(Issue 62) Moncton Lions Club, submission 62:33-35
 A—(Issue 63) New Brunswick Federation of Labour (C.L.C.), brief 63:63-69
 B—(Issue 63) Canadian Civil Liberties Association, Fredericton, New Brunswick Chapter, submission 63:70-71
 C—(Issue 63) "Mysterious (The) East", Fredericton, brief 63:72-76
 D—(Issue 63) Greater Moncton Community Chest Inc., Moncton (N.B.), brief 63:77-78
 E—(Issue 63) Conseil Régional d'Aménagement du Nord-Est (N.B.), brief 63:79-82
 A—(Issue 64) Saskatchewan Co-Operative Credit Society Limited, brief 64:48-71
 B—(Issue 64) Laird, Elmer, Davidson (Sask.) brief 64:72-74
 C—(Issue 64) Regina Renters Council, brief 64:75-77
 D—(Issue 64) Seekers of Security Welfare Rights Group, Regina, brief 64:78-79
 A—(Issue 65) Saskatchewan NewStart Inc., submission 65:51-70
 B—(Issue 65) Prince Albert Work Training Program, brief 65:71-74
 A—(Issue 66) Welfare Council, Quebec (COBEQ), brief 66:53-57
 B—(Issue 66) Secrétariat Social de St. Roch, St. Roch (Que.), brief summary 66:57-58
 A—(Issue 67) Canadian National Institute for the Blind, brief 67:20-21
 B—(Issue 67) Conseil Régional d'Aménagement du Nord-Ouest (N.B.), memorandum 67:22-23
 A—(Issue 68) Campbellton, brief 68:41-44
 B—(Issue 68) Thériault, Rev. A.E., St. Jean Baptiste (N.B.), brief 68:45-47

- A—(Issue 69) Regional Chamber of Commerce of the Lower Saint Lawrence (Que.), memorandum 69:19-20
- A—(Issue 70) Social Service of the Diocese of Rimouski, (Que.), memorandum 70:27-37
- B—(Issue 70) Eastern Quebec Regional Development Council, brief 70:38-51

Witnesses

- Abols, Gesta, President, Students' Administrative Council, University of Toronto 27:85-86, 27:91-93
- Abramson, Mrs. Jane, Member, Canadian Council of Rural Development 18:9-14, 18:18-22
- Acton, Ken, Toronto 27:67
- Adams, Mrs. B., Toronto 27:61
- Adamson, R.T., Executive Director, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation 10:23
- Altemeyer, Mr., Winnipeg 7:30-31
- Altsmire, Miss Jean, Winnipeg 6:21-22
- Amdur, R.S., Planning Associate, Committee on Poverty, Social Planning and Research Council of Hamilton and District 28:22-26
- Anderson, Mrs. David, Publicity and Public Relations Chairman, Consumers' Association of Canada 35:21
- Anderson, Eldon, Secretary, Saskatchewan Co-Operative Credit Society 64:15-16, 64:20-23
- Anderson, J.G., Welfare Commissioner, Welfare and Housing Committee of the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto 26:9-11, 26:14-25
- Anthony, B.D., Director, Labour-Management Bureau, Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University, Halifax 1:18-19
- Aoki, Mrs. Barbara, North York Department of Parks and Recreation, Lawrence Heights Community Centre, Toronto 26:111-112, 26:127-128
- Ardelli, Stanley, Grade 11-A, Sydney Academy, Sydney, N.S. 1:39-40
- Armstrong, Mrs. G.B., President, Provincial Council of Women of Ontario 50:22-40
- Armstrong, Dr. R.A., Acting Director General, Health Insurance and Resources Branch, Department of National Health and Welfare 23:54-58
- Arsenault, Rev. Yvan, Boys' Clubs of Canada, Moncton 62:12
- Atkinson, Miss M.E., Chairman, Standing Committee on Laws, Provincial Council of Women of Ontario 50:33
- Atterbury, Mrs. Paulette, Secretary, Humans on Welfare Society, Edmonton 57:61
- Babey, Paul, President, UNIFARM (Alta.) 55:49-60
- Back, Jean, Geriatric Group, Family Service Association, Montreal 36:9-10
- Baker, D.R., Yukon Social Service Society (Mayo Branch) 58:31-43
- Baldwin, Mr., Vancouver 9:35
- Baldwin, Allen, Member, Victims of Compensation and Welfare Committee, Just Society, Toronto 28:11-15
- Balls, Mrs. B.D., Executive Secretary, Consumers' Association of Canada 35:11, 35:14-21
- Banks, C.K., Community Organization Worker, Family Service Association, Montreal 36:16-17, 36:21-23, 36:27-31
- Banks, Mrs. Patricia, Social Worker, Family Service Association, Montreal 36:22
- Barber, Mr., Vancouver 9:32
- Barbolet, Herb, Neighbourhood Services Association, Vancouver 8:13-15, 8:19-22, 8:28
- Barclay, Alf, Toronto 27:68
- Barfoot, Mrs. Caroline, St. John's (Nfld.) 52:27
- Barker, Mrs. Ivy, Garden Club, Toronto 26:122
- Barrier, Rev. Marc, O.M.I., Member, Social Planning Council, Edmonton 55:36-37, 55:43-46
- Barry, James, Member, Executive, Blackhead Road Householders' Union, St. John's (Nfld.) 52:53-54, 52:56, 52:62
- Bartel, Dennis, Member, Social Planning Council, Edmonton 55:39-43
- Basque, Mrs. Alfred, Tracadie (N.B.) 68:34-37
- Bastin, N.C., Independent Forestry Consultant, New Brunswick Forest Extension Service 61:58-63
- Batten, Miss Eleanor, Community Development Worker, Government of Newfoundland and Labrador 52:61
- Baxter, Mrs. Sheila, Member, "Up to the Neck" Newspaper, Montreal 12:9-28
- Beattie, Mrs., Halifax 2:12-13, 2:29
- Beaver, Joe, Manitoba Métis Reservation 6:63
- Beck, Dr. M.N., Director of Mental Health (P.E.I.) 4:9-25
- Beck, Max, Director, Vancouver Inner-City Service Project 8:32-34, 8:37-53
- Bédard, Mrs. Edna, Dalhousie area resident, Ottawa 17:8, 17:11-12, 17:15-17
- Bélanger, Miss Hélène, General Director, Welfare Agency of the Diocese of Rimouski (Que.) 70:14
- Belfontaine, Bill, Alderman, Ward 1, Scarborough (Ont.) 26:79-80
- Bellavance, André, Director, Regional Chamber of Commerce, Lower St. Lawrence (Que.) 69:10-12, 69:15, 69:17-18
- Benedict, W.E., Managing Director, Newfoundland Co-Operative Services, St. John's (Nfld.) 52:19-23
- Bennet, Dr. J.S., Secretary, Council on Provision of Health Services, Canadian Medical Association 45:21-23, 45:27, 45:30-38
- Benny, Karl, Director of Training and Personnel, Boys' Clubs of Canada 62:10, 62:12-15
- Berger, Mrs. Audrey, Executive Director, Association of Women Electors of Metropolitan Toronto 26:30-31, 26:33, 26:37, 26:39-40

- Bergevin, J.B., Assistant Deputy Minister, Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development 14:15-21, 14:24-33
- Bergstrom, L.H., Deputy Minister of Education, Saskatchewan 65:18-19
- Berner, Rev. Norman, Secretary, Lutheran Church in America, Canada Section 49:18-19, 49:29-30
- Berry, Miss Freda, Social Worker, Medical Clinic, Memorial University of Newfoundland, St. John's 52:55-56
- Best, Mrs. Carrie, Black United Front 1:32-33, 2:14
- Best, Harvey, Head, Film Unit, Extension Service, Memorial University of Newfoundland, St. John's 52:41-44
- Betz, Mrs. Dorothy, Advisory Counsellor, Court Worker, Indian and Métis Friendship Centre, Winnipeg 7:8-18
- Bhattacharya, Dr. Biswarup, President, Human Rights Association of Newfoundland and Labrador 52:54
- Bingeman, Miss Valerie, North Winnipeg Office, Manitoba Health and Social Service Department 6:62-63
- Black, Mrs. Patricia, Pre-School Parent-Child Co-operative, Calgary 56:59-70
- Blakely, R., Sociologist and Member, Economic Improvement Corporation, Department of Development (P.E.I.) 4:13, 4:17, 4:47
- Blakely, S.E., Superintendent, Social Service Department, Community Services Policy Committee, Calgary 56:17-21
- Bobb, Ray, Member, Unemployed Citizen's Welfare Improvement Council, Vancouver 9:16-17
- Bond, Supt. Charles, Metropolitan Toronto Police Force, Toronto 26:117
- Bondy, Alex, Member, Unemployed Citizen's Welfare Improvement Council, Vancouver 9:14-16, 9:29, 9:34-35
- Borczak, M., Deputy Minister, Ontario Department of Social and Family Services 43:12-23, 43:32, 43:38
- Borovoy, A.A., General Counsel, Canadian Civil Liberties Association 32:7-27
- Bouchard, Mrs. Agnes, Director, Humans on Welfare Society, Edmonton 57:57
- Bouchard, Mrs. Peggy, Low Income Working Committee, Calgary 56:71-73
- Boudreau, André, Conseil Régional d'Aménagement du Nord-Est (N.B.) 63:30-38
- Boulet, J.C., Chairman, Welfare Council, Quebec 66:12
- Boyd, Mrs. Gladys, Citizens Group, Little Burgundy; Family Service Association, Montreal 36:11-12, 36:20-21
- Brechin, Mrs. W.E., Chairman, National Studies Committee, Consumers' Association of Canada 35:10-17, 35:20-23
- Breen, Augustus, Acting President, Blackhead Road Householders' Union, St. John's (Nfld.) 52:52-53, 52:56-62
- Brennan, Brother A.F., President, Canadian Teachers' Federation 46:9-29
- Brockman, Mrs. Audrey, Monica Society, Edmonton 55:31-32
- Brodeur, Mrs. Joyce, Monica Society, Edmonton 55:24
- Brown, Geoffrey, Executive Director, Big Brothers, Metropolitan Toronto 26:51-61
- Brown, Horace, Alderman; Special Committee, City of Toronto 27:9-10, 27:13-14, 27:17-19
- Brown, Miss K., Toronto 27:65
- Bulman, Denis, Toronto 26:121
- Burden, G.M., Chairman, Public School Board, Calgary 56:26-36
- Burgess, R., Bowness-Montgomery Day Care Association, Calgary 56:58-59, 56:63-66
- Burke, Alexander, Charlottetown (P.E.I.) 4:44, 4:56-57
- Burke, John, Community Development Officer, Family Service, Toronto 27:106-107
- Burns, Mrs. Susan, Member, Consumers' Association of Canada (Whitehorse Branch), Yukon 58:11, 59:26-35
- Burr, Mrs. Phyllis, Resource Mobilization for Employment Demonstration Project (Client Committee), Edmonton 55:80-81, 55:85
- Burrows, David, Toronto 26:121
- Bury, Miss Stella, Social Worker, United Church of Canada, St. John's (Nfld.) 52:34
- Busby, Bill, Toronto 27:101-102, 27:111-113
- Byars, Jim, Chairman, Training Program, Prince Albert Work Training Program, Prince Albert 65:28-39
- Cadbury, George, Treasurer, Family Planning Federation of Canada 19:23-32
- Cadieux, John, Lawrence Heights, Toronto 26:121
- Cairnduff, Malcolm, Toronto 26:126-131
- Calmain, K.E., Staff Secretary, Committee on Poverty, Canadian Association of Social Workers 30:10, 30:14-17, 30:25-28
- Cameron, Donald, Editor, "The Mysterious East", Fredericton 63:53-54
- Campbell, Rev. A.K., Chairman, Board of Evangelism and Social Action, Presbyterian Church in Canada 33:10, 33:22, 33:29
- Campbell, George, Low Income Working Committee, Calgary 56:71-75
- Campbell, Mrs. Margaret, Former Controller, Toronto 28:27-29
- Campbell, Mrs. Shirley, Chairman, Publicity Committee, Seekers of Security Welfare Rights Group, Regina 64:37, 64:39-42
- Canning, Miss Judy, Grade 11-A, Sydney Academy, Sydney, N.S. 1:40-41, 1:45

- Cantin, Léon, Director General, Welfare Council, Quebec (COBEQ) 66:11-12, 66:16-17, 66:21-22
- Cappon, Dr. D., Professor, Urban and Environmental Studies, York University, Toronto 45:24-25, 45:27-38
- Caron, Roger, President, Chamber of Commerce, Campbellton 68:24-25
- Carson, Mrs. Betty, Member, Winnipeg Welfare Rights Movement 7:19, 7:24-34
- Carswell, Alfred, Toronto 26:63, 26:71-72, 26:79-80
- Carter, Walter, M.P. (St. John's West) 52:59-61
- Carty, R.K., Vice-Chairman, Executive Council, Canadian Chamber of Commerce 51:13-14, 51:18-25, 51:29, 51:33-34
- Castell, Mrs. Lorna, Member, Pointe St. Charles Community Clinic, Montreal 45:16
- Chamberlist, N.S., Member, Yukon Territorial Council 59:36-37
- Champlain, Viateur de, Director, Industrial Development Bank, Regional Chamber of Commerce, Lower St. Lawrence Region (Que.) 69:17-18
- Channon, Miss Geraldine, Executive Assistant, Canadian Teachers' Federation 46:11, 46:13-28
- Chaput, H.P., Director, Social Planning, Welfare Council, Quebec (COBEQ) 66:12-23
- Checkland, Rev. E.M., Chairman, Social Action, Edmonton and District Council of Churches, Edmonton 55:85-93
- Chénard, Miss Imelda, Assistant Director, Social Planning Council, Ottawa and District 15:34-35
- Chester, Len, Bathurst Heights Public Library, Toronto 26:112-113
- Chisholm, Mrs. Ann, Universal Axle, Saint John (N.B.) 60:63
- Chisholm, Mrs. Barbara, Executive Director, Victoria Day Care Services, Toronto 26:41-51
- Chmiel, Walter, Assistant Professor, Department of Social Work, Memorial University of Newfoundland, St. John's 52:51-52
- Chouminard, Mr., Coolaid, Vancouver 8:49-52
- Christie, Miss Florence, Executive Director, Family Services, Saint John, Inc., (N.B.) 61:45-55
- Clairmont, Dr. D.H., Director, Africville Relocation Study, Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University, Halifax 1:23-24, 1:27
- Clark, Allan, Executive Director, Indian-Eskimo Association of Canada 19:18, 19:23
- Clark, Mrs. Shirley, Toronto 26:124-125, 26:130
- Clarke, Rev. David, St. Philips Anglican Church, Toronto 26:115-116
- Clarke, E.J., Secretary-Treasurer, Toronto Negro Veterans' Association 27:57-59, 27:65-66
- Clarke, Dr. J.G., Member, Yukon Social Service Society (Mayo Branch) 58:27-44
- Clarke, William, Blackhead Road Householder's Union, St. John's (Nfld.) 52:54
- Clarkson, Dr. J.G., Deputy Minister, Department of Health and Welfare, Province of New Brunswick 44:15-16, 44:19, 44:21, 44:24-25, 44:28
- Clermont, Mrs. Ida, Resident, Île de Hull (Que.) 16:24
- Cobney, Roy, Vancouver Inner-City Service Project, Vancouver 8:47-48
- Colbey, Dennis, Toronto (Ont.) 26:57, 27:75-76
- Colby, Mrs. Pat, Toronto (Ont.) 26:74
- Collins, Tom, Sydney Academy 1:49-50
- Comeau, Laurent, Director, Conseil Régional d'Aménagement du Nord-Ouest (N.B.) 67:14-19
- Comfort, Eldon, Yorkdale Vocational School, Toronto 26:116
- Conger, D.S., Executive Director, Saskatchewan NewStart Inc. 65:9-10, 65:13, 65:18-27
- Conohue, Miss Bernadine, Supervisor, Child Welfare Section, Department of Health and Welfare, Saint John (N.B.) 61:30-31
- Cooper, Robert, Director, Community Legal Service, Pointe St. Charles (Que.); Canadian Civil Liberties Association 32:9-10, 32:14, 32:25
- Cotton, E.A., Atlantic Regional Director, Boys' Clubs of Canada 62:8-16, 63:41
- Couchène, Victor, Winnipeg Tenants Association 6:57-58
- Courchene, Dave, President, Manitoba Indian Brotherhood 19:11-14, 19:18-23
- Cowan, H.B., Research Director, International Research Committee on Real Estate Taxation 18:32
- Cowan, Saul, Trustee, North York Board of Education, Toronto 26:114-115, 26:129
- Cragg, N.F., Director, Canada Assistance Plan, Department of National Health and Welfare 23:37, 23:41-42, 23:47
- Craig, Bill, Labour Council of New Brunswick 60:44
- Craig, Dr. J.D., Director, Health Clinic for Transients, Gardenside Development Society Edmonton 57:24-35
- Craigs, J.H., Executive Member, Ontario Welfare Council 25:9-10, 25:14-22
- Craven, Mrs. Charmian, Vice-President, Family Service Centre, Ottawa 16:9-10, 16:14-17
- Cree, Mrs., Winnipeg 7:19
- Critchley, David, Professor, Maritime School of Social Work, Dalhousie University, Halifax 2:17-29
- Crittenden, Miss D., Assistant Deputy Minister, Ontario Department of Social and Family Services 43:19
- Crocker, Mrs. Helen, Moncton 62:14-15, 62:27
- Croll, Col. Mabel, Chief, Social Service Work, Salvation Army 48:11, 48:19-20, 48:22, 48:28-29
- Crooks, Richard, Grade 11-A, Sydney Academy (N.S.) 1:42, 1:48
- Croteau, Mrs., Île de Hull (Que.) 16:20

- Cudmore, Mrs. Evelyn, Community Worker; Member, Premier's Task Force on Extended Care and Alcoholic Treatment Facilities in Prince Edward Island 4:22-24
- Cumming, R.C., Executive Director, Edmonton Day Centre, Edmonton 57:7-16
- Cunning, Leslie, Executive Director, Halifax Neighbourhood Centre 2:10-17
- Curran, Gary, Program Manager, Universal Axle, Saint John (N.B.) 60:53-62
- Currie, Walter, President, Indian-Eskimo Association of Canada 19:9-11, 19:14-22
- Curtis, Mrs. Caroline, Member, Inglewood-Ramsay Redevelopment Committee, Calgary 56:77-79
- Cuthand, Rev. Adam, President, Canadian Métis Society 19:14-15, 19:19
- Dahlberg, Mrs. Pearl, Resource Mobilization for Employment Demonstration Project (Client Committee), Edmonton 55:84
- Dale, Miss Dorothy, Vice-President, Provincial Council of Women of Ontario 50:28, 50:31
- Dale, Mrs. Jean, TOPS Club, Toronto 26:122
- Daniels, Robert, Editor, "The Mysterious East", Frederickton 63:53
- Danyluk, John, Resource Mobilization for Employment Demonstration Project (Client Committee), Edmonton 55:81-84
- Davidson, Mrs. Craig, President, Victoria Day Care Services, Toronto 26:50-51
- Davidson, Mrs. Daphne, Chairman, Calgary Welfare Rights Organization, Calgary 56:45-46
- Davidson, Miss True, Mayor, East York; Welfare and Housing Committee, Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto 26:25-27
- Davis, Miss Beverly, Grade 11-A, Sydney Academy, Sydney, N.S. 1:38-41, 1:44-46
- Davis, Don, Executive Director, Ontario Federation of Citizens' Associations 26:61-62, 26:69
- Davis, R.A., Supervisor, Little Burgundy, Family Service Association, Montreal 36:8-9, 36:12-32
- Dawson, R.G., Councillor, Campbellton 68:14-19
- Deane, Jesse, Twelve Madison, Toronto 26:117
- Deiter, Walter, Chief, National Indian Brotherhood 19:9, 19:12-19, 19:22
- DeLong, George, Winnipeg 6:22
- Dent, Dr. Ivor, Mayor; Social Service Department, Edmonton 55:8-20
- Denyer, Mrs. S.C., Community Development Consultant, Family Service Centre, Ottawa 16:8-17
- DeSousa, Americo, Toronto 27:64
- Destounis, Mrs. Margaret, Montreal 12:24
- Diadis, George, Researcher, Resource Mobilization for Employment Demonstration Project (Professional Group), Edmonton 55:65-66
- Dickie, R.S., President, Greater Moncton Community Chest Inc., Moncton 63:40-44, 63:48
- Dillard, Jesse, Secretary-Treasurer, Black United Front 1:31-32
- Dinsdale, Hon. Walter, M.P. (Brandon-Souris) 48:25-27
- Dobson, Mrs. Joan, Toronto 27:101-103
- Dolson, Donald, Toronto 27:63-64
- Donahue, J.H., President, Social Planning Council, Edmonton 55:36-47
- Dorrien, James, Old Brewery Mission, Inc., Montreal 41:11-19, 41:26-28, 41:31, 41:34
- Dowhaniuk, Mrs. Mary, Vancouver Opportunities Committee 9:21-23
- Drache, Mrs. Victor, Senator, Simon Fraser University, Burnaby 8:24-25, 8:31, 9:29
- Draper, Miss Rosemary, Teacher, Duke of York Public School, Toronto 26:84, 26:91
- Drolet, Laurent, Member, Citizens' Committee of Area 10, St. Roch de Quebec 66:41-42
- Druken, William, Blackhead Road Householders' Union, St. John's (Nfld.) 52:61-62
- Drummond, J.S., Executive Adviser, Past President, New Brunswick Association for the Advancement of Coloured People 60:44, 61:36-45
- Duggan, Mrs. Barbara, Indian and Métis Friendship Centre, Winnipeg 7:7-8, 7:14-15
- Dumont, Mrs. Bernice, Monica Society, Edmonton 55:27-28
- Durstland, Hans, Moncton 62:25-27
- Earle, G.S., Spokesman, Nova Scotia Association for the Advancement of Coloured People 3:7
- Edison, E.A., Toronto 27:66-67
- Egan, Mrs. Rita, Chairman, National Advisory Nursing Committee, Victorian Order of Nurses for Canada 47:33, 47:35
- Egoroff, Mrs. June, Toronto 26:75-76
- Eisen, Mrs. W., Toronto 27:61-62
- Ellery, Major, Administrator, London Children's Village, Salvation Army 48:15, 48:17, 48:21-22, 48:28-29
- Ellwood, Lt. Col. Tom, Administrator, Family Welfare Program (Metro-Toronto), Salvation Army 48:10, 48:19-21
- Espie, Dr. Thomas, Executive Director, Canadian Council on Rural Development 18:7-16, 18:20-23
- Etchen, Mrs. E., Director, Planning and Research Branch, Ontario Department of Social and Family Services 43:20-21, 43:32-33, 43:39
- Fabers, Mrs. Valentine, National President, Catholic Women's League of Canada 24:23, 24:36
- Fagan, Miss Veronica, Member, Brief Committee, Catholic Women's League of Canada 24:28-37
- Fairholm, C.I., Senior Policy Advisor, Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development 14:25, 14:28, 14:30
- Farrera, Joe, Association to Tackle Adverse Conditions, Vancouver 8:54-63
- Faulkner, Miss Rosemary, Home Economist, Prince Edward Island Newstart Incorporated 4:55-57

- Feader, Stan, President, Inglewood-Ramsay Re-development Committee, Calgary 56:75-80
- Feldbrill, Mrs. Zelda, School Social Worker, Duke of York Public School, Toronto 26:83-89, 26:92-93
- Ferguson, Mrs. C.E., Past President, Calgary Area Council, Home and School Association of Alberta, Calgary 56:37, 56:40-44
- Ferrier, Mrs. Laura, Research Associate, Big Brothers of Metropolitan Toronto 26:53-60
- Finnigan, James, President, Saint John Community Workers Association, Saint John (N.B.) 60:12-17, 61:27-36
- Fitchett, Miss Sue, Social Service Course, Ryerson Polytechnical Institute, Toronto 27:72-76
- Fletcher, Dan, Toronto 26:72-74, 26:77
- Fleury, Lt. Gen. F.J., Chairman, Health and Welfare Committee, Canadian Chamber of Commerce 51:14-16, 51:19-22, 51:26, 51:29-32
- Ford, George, Member, SOS-Volunteer Action for Social Change, Toronto 27:78-85
- Forest, Mr., Winnipeg 6:47
- Forgie, Mrs. Virginia, Recording Secretary, Metro Federation of Citizens' Associations, Toronto 26:74, 26:77
- Forsyth, Rev. Dr. C.H., Secretary, Board of Evangelism and Social Service, United Church of Canada 31:9-42
- Forsyth, Mrs. W.R., Member, Board, Family Services, Saint John, Inc., Saint John (N.B.) 61:51-53
- Foster, Mrs. Jeannette, Low Income Working Committee, Calgary 56:71-73
- Fournier, Adolphe, Member, Parents' Auxiliary, Boys' Clubs of Canada, Moncton 62:13-14
- Fox, Marvin, Native Development Society, Cardston (Alta.) 56:55-56
- Fraser, Rev. Allison, Director, Emmanuel House Community Centre, St. John's (Nfld.) 52:37-38
- French, Canon F.M., Co-Chairman, Halifax Tenants' Protective Association, Halifax 2:9-10, 2:14-16
- Frerichs, Eilert, Member, Students' Administrative Council, University of Toronto 27:90-92
- Frotten, John, Toronto 26:120
- Fuller, Mrs. Dawson, Toronto 26:75
- Gagnon, Claude, Q.C., President, Bar Association, Province of Quebec 39:7-8, 39:11-30
- Gagnon, Mrs. Therese, Monica Society, Edmonton 55:34
- Gale, Miss Catherine, Executive Secretary, United Fund and Social Services of Greater Saint John (N.B.) 60:43-44, 61:36
- Galgay, Frank, Teacher, Holy Cross School, St. John's (Nfld.) 52:54-55
- Gallagher, Mrs. Ed., Member, Brief Committee, Catholic Women's League of Canada 24:33
- Gardner, Miss Anne, Grade 11-A, Sydney Academy, Sydney, N.S. 1:45
- Gardner, Miss Sheila, Spokesman, Public Housing Tenants, New Waterford, Glace Bay, Sydney (N.S.) 2:10-12
- Gass, Barry, Prefect Commander, Fraternity of Grey Knights (P.E.I.) 4:30-36
- Gaul, Robert, "Up to the Neck" Newspaper, Montreal 12:13-14
- Gaumont, Mrs. Germaine, Monica Society, Edmonton 55:25
- Gayne, John, President, New Brunswick Senior Citizens' Federation; Director, Moncton Lions Club 62:20-25
- Geekie, D.A., Secretary, Council on Community Health Care, Canadian Medical Association 45:21, 45:23-33, 45:37
- Geiger, O.S., Supervisor, Elementary Schools, Calgary 56:32
- Gélinas, Paul, Past President, Regional Chamber of Commerce, Lower St. Lawrence Region (Que.) 69:8-18
- Gemmell, Miss Lyn, School of Architecture, University of Manitoba, Winnipeg 6:39-41
- Gemmell, Rev. Thomas, Committee on Economic and Social Justice, Board of Evangelism and Social Action, Presbyterian Church in Canada 33:12-13, 33:16, 33:24
- Gendron, Mrs. Lea, Dalhousie area resident, Ottawa 17:12-16, 17:21
- Gertsman, Mrs. S.L., President, Ottawa Council of Women, Provincial Council of Women of Ontario 50:35
- Giasson, Gilles, Director, Professional Services, Social Service of the Diocese of Rimouski (Que.) 70:7-13
- Gilchrist, Rev. David, Member, Inglewood-Ramsay Redevelopment Committee, Calgary 56:77-78
- Gilmour, Mrs. Janet, Lawrence Heights Family and Child Service, Toronto 26:113-114
- Glassco, Mr., Social worker, Winnipeg 7:18, 7:26-27
- Goble, N.M., Secretary General, Canadian Teachers' Federation 46:10-26
- Godfrey, Paul, Alderman, Borough of North York, Toronto 26:118-119
- Godfrey, S.R., Commissioner, Social Welfare Department, Regional Municipality of Ottawa-Carleton 15:7-27
- Golden, Miss Jean, Member, Students' Administrative Council; Director, Varsity Downtown Education Project, University of Toronto 27:86-87, 27:90
- Golden, Miss Maudie, Social worker, Halifax 2:16
- Goodwin, Mrs. L., Calgary 56:50-52
- Gordon, Miss Christine, Homemaker, Family Service Association, Montreal 36:26-27

- Gordon, Mrs. Joan, Public Issues Committee, Family Service Association, Montreal 36:14-15
- Gowland, Rev. A.J., Secretary, Board of Evangelism and Social Action, Presbyterian Church in Canada 33:7-29
- Graham, Garth, Yukon Family Counselling Service 58:11-12
- Graham, Miss Patricia, Spokesman, Grade 11-A, Sydney Academy (N.S.) 1:34-38, 1:41
- Grant, Miss Jean, Social Welfare Department, Regional Municipality of Ottawa-Carleton 15:17, 15:21, 15:24
- Gratwick, John, Past-President, Canadian Operational Research Society 50:9-22
- Green, John, Co-ordinator, Human Resources Sector, Department of Development (P.E.I.) 4:12-16, 4:19-22, 4:24-25
- Green, Sister M., Welfare Department, Campbellton 68:21-22
- Green, P., President, Metro Federation of Citizens' Associations, Toronto 26:62-70, 26:80, 27:110, 27:113
- Green, Dr. R.G., General Practitioner, Prince Albert Community Clinic 65:40-43
- Greene, Rev. R.S.H., Alderman, Community Services Policy Committee, Calgary 56:9-21
- Greenlace, Mrs., Winnipeg 6:37-38, 7:32
- Grégoire, Mrs. Fleurette, Dalhousie area resident, Ottawa 17:18
- Grégoire, Roland, Dalhousie area resident, Ottawa 17:9, 17:20
- Groom, W.S., Executive Director, Social Development Services Branch, Ontario Department of Social and Family Services 43:12, 43:24-26, 43:31-32
- Gross, Mrs. Benjamin, Research Volunteer, Service Department, National Council of Jewish Women of Canada, Toronto Section 27:39-40, 27:44
- Gross, Mrs. Marilyn, National Council of Jewish Women, Toronto 26:112
- Guiboche, Célestin, President, Winnipeg Tenants Association, Winnipeg 6:49-61
- Guilbeault, Jean, Governor, Board of Governors, Frontier College 13:10, 13:15, 13:19
- Guimond, Roger, President, Chamber of Commerce, Edmundston 67:14
- Guinan, James, Member, City Centre Co-operative Club, Edmonton 57:16-24
- Guindon, Yvon, Dalhousie area resident, Ottawa 17:9-11, 17:19
- Haddow, Mrs. Lorna, Calgary 56:41
- Haley, Miss Dorothy, Social Deviance Class, St. Francis Xavier University, Antigonish (N.S.) 3:9-14
- Hall, Mrs. Nancy, Bowness-Montgomery Day Care Association, Calgary 56:61-68
- Hambling, Skip, Company of Young Canadians, Cape Breton (N.S.); Prince Edward Island Newstart Incorporated Consultant 4:52, 4:54, 4:57
- Hanrahan, P.A., Student, Social Service Course, Ryerson Polytechnical Institute, Toronto 27:69-75
- Hanson, T.J., Member, Social Planning Council, Edmonton 55:37-38
- Harcourt, Michael, Vancouver Inner-City Service Project, Vancouver 8:34-40, 8:52
- Harlick, Edward, Blackhead Road Householders' Union, St. John's (Nfld.) 52:54, 52:57-58
- Harquail, J.M., Councillor, Campbellton (N.B.) 68:11, 68:15-24
- Harris, Gerry, Sydney Academy 1:46-47
- Harrison, Mrs. Gillian, University Day Care Centre Committee, Calgary 56:60-61, 56:65-67
- Harvey, André, M.N.A., Chauveau (Que.) 66:7-8
- Harvey, Andrew, Economic Research Associate, Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University, Halifax 1:15-18, 1:24, 1:26
- Hayson, Richard, Grade 11-A, Sydney Academy (N.S.) 1:47
- Heagle, D.G., Projects Co-ordinator, Planning and Research Branch, Ontario Department of Social and Family Services 43:33, 43:37-38
- Heath, Mrs. Margery, President, Seekers of Security Welfare Rights Group, Regina 64:34-43
- Hegerat, Mrs. G.T., Monica Society, Edmonton 55:24, 55:29
- Helms, Elmer, Executive Director, Neighbourhood Services Association of Greater Vancouver 8:21-23
- Henson, Guy, Director, Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University, Halifax 1:13-27
- Herman, Mrs. Nina, Social worker, Toronto 28:29-30
- Hignett, H.W., President, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation 10:7-25
- Hill, Prof. H.W., Chairman, Department of Religion, Kingsway College; Member, Seventh-Day Adventist Church in Canada 34:7-10, 34:15, 34:17-19, 34:23-27
- Hinsl, Ralph, Manager, Life Skills Division, Saskatchewan NewStart Inc., Prince Albert 65:11-13, 65:17, 65:20, 65:25-26
- Hjertaas, Dr. O.K., Medical Director, Prince Albert Community Clinic 65:44-47
- Hodges, F.D., President, Saint John District Labour Council; Vice-President, New Brunswick Federation of Labour (C.L.C.) 60:37-44, 61:41, 61:43, 63:11-24
- Hodgins, Miss Nora, Secretary-Treasurer, Ontario Teachers' Federation 46:10-12, 46:18-27
- Hogan, Miss Zita, Social Deviance Class, St. Francis Xavier University, Antigonish (N.S.) 3:8
- Honey, Dr. Floyd, General Secretary, Canadian Council of Churches 49:7-8, 49:12-13, 49:15-16, 49:18, 49:24, 49:28, 49:31, 49:34-35

- Hoogewaniuk, A.C., Vice-Chairman, Resource Mobilization for Employment Demonstration Project (Client Committee), Edmonton 55:76, 55:78-80, 55:82, 55:84
- Hope, Mrs. Lou, Monica Society, Edmonton 55:25-26
- Hoyt, John, Director, Skookum Jim Memorial Hall; Yukon Native Brotherhood 59:16, 59:20-22
- Hrychorchuk, S., Vancouver 8:72
- Hubert, Rev. Achille, Social Animator, Neighbourhood Improvement Committee, Ottawa 17:8-10, 17:13, 17:16-19
- Huff, Mrs. Mildred, Calgary 56:41
- Hugh, E., School of Architecture, University of Manitoba, Winnipeg 6:46
- Hughes, Ralph, President, O'Connor Drive Development Community Association, Toronto 27:95, 27:114
- Hunt, P.T., Chairman, Committee on Poverty, Social Planning and Research Council, Hamilton and District 28:18-27
- Hunt, R.A., Editor "The Mysterious East", Fredericton 63:25-30, 63:48-61
- Hunter, Miss Trenna, Past President, Canadian Nurses' Association 47:7-21
- Hyslop, L.J., Federal Government Representative, Citizenship Branch, St. John's (Nfld.) 52:54
- Iverson, B.J., Director, Welfare Grants, Department of National Health and Welfare 23:39
- Jackson, Miss Eileen, Executive Member, Board of Evangelism and Social Service, United Church of Canada 31:13, 31:17, 31:28
- Jacobson, Pastor J.R., President, Calgary Inter-Faith Community Action Committee, Calgary 56:52-58
- Jaffary, Karl, Alderman, Special Committee of the City of Toronto 27:10-12, 27:16-17, 27:19
- Joan, Sister, Charlottetown (P.E.I.) 4:46
- Jobin, Pierre, Director, Joint Urban and Industrial Zoning Commission, Rimouski-Mont-Joli (Que.) 70:15-19
- Joe, David, Yukon Native Brotherhood 59:16, 59:20-25
- Johnson, Bill, Vancouver Opportunities Committee, Vancouver 9:27-28
- Johnson, Greg, Halifax 2:46
- Johnson, Jack, Former President, Company of Young Canadians; Lawyer, Calgary 56:81-83
- Johnson, Mrs. M.E., Vice-Chairman, Calgary Public School Board 56:35
- Johnson, Rev. R.W., Executive Director, Tyndale House, Family Service Association, Montreal 36:7-8, 36:13-14, 36:17-20, 36:24-25, 36:29-30
- Johnson, Ronald, Executive Director, East End Boys' Club, Moncton (N.B.) 62:13-14, 63:41, 63:48
- Johnson, Father Ted, Member, Calgary Inter-Faith Community Action Group 56:57
- Johnston, David, Grade 11-A, Sydney Academy, Sydney, N.S. 1:41-42
- Johnston, Ed., Director of Organization, Canadian Labour Congress 63:13-23
- Johnston, Mrs. M.C., Chairman, Public Issues Committee, Family Service Association, Montreal 36:7, 36:16, 36:23-24, 36:26, 36:31-32
- Johnston, William, Chairman, Brief Committee, Vancouver Housing Inter-Project Council 8:63-71
- Jones, Dr. F.E., Member, Board of Directors, Social Planning and Research Council, Hamilton and District 28:24-26
- Jones, Mrs. F.E., Vice-President, Consumers' Association of Canada 35:7-25
- Jones, I.A., Probation officer, Whitehorse (Yukon) 58:44
- Jones, R.B., Chairman, Special Project Client Committee, Resource Mobilization for Employment Demonstration Project, Edmonton 55:74-77, 55:82-85
- Jourdain, Mr., Welfare Agency of the Diocese of Rimouski (Que.) 70:9-10
- Junk, D.J., Director of Research and Planning, Department of Health and Welfare, Province of New Brunswick 44:13-15, 44:27-28
- Kaye, G.D., Senior Operational Research Scientist, Defence Research Analysis Establishment; Canadian Operational Research Society 50:11, 50:14-20
- Keatly, Mrs. Ruth, Member, "Up to the Neck" Newspaper, Montreal 12:7-27
- Keays, Effie, Vancouver 8:27
- Keeping, Mrs. Dorothy, Secretary, Family Planning Federation of Canada 19:30-32
- Kehoe, P.M., Adviser, Child Care Centre Society, Whitehorse (Yukon) 58:21-26
- Kehoe, Mrs. P.M., Child Care Centre Society, Whitehorse (Yukon) 58:22, 58:25
- Kelly, J.B., Member, New Brunswick Forest Extension Service; Faculty of Forestry, University of New Brunswick, Fredericton 61:55-58, 61:61-63
- Kelly, Mrs. Linda, Toronto 27:105
- Kent, Mrs. D.S., Toronto 26:59
- Kent, Tom, Deputy Minister, Department of Regional Economic Expansion 11:7-31
- King, David, Researcher, Edmonton and District Council of Churches, Edmonton 55:89-92
- Kirk, Mrs., Monica Society, Edmonton 55:32-35
- Kirk, D.L., Executive Secretary, Canadian Federation of Agriculture 21:9-21
- Kleiker, Miss Margo, Toronto 27:66
- Koteles, Julius, Board Member, Mount Carmel Clinic, Winnipeg 6:20-21
- Kupfer, Dr. George, Research Director, Resource Mobilization for Employment Demonstration Project (Professional Group), Edmonton 55:64-67, 55:71-73
- LaChapelle, Mrs. M., Toronto 27:62

- Lacombe, J.B., Staff Member, Economic Council of Canada 5:14
- Lacroix, Mrs. Audrey, Toronto 27:109
- Laird, Elmer, Davidson (Sask.) 64:24-30
- Land, Lloyd, Prince Albert Work Training Program, Prince Albert (Sask.) 65:32-34, 65:39
- Landry, Mr., Tracadie (N.B.) 68:37
- Landry, René, Assistant Director, Moncton Boys' Club 62:13-14
- Lane, Mrs. Leona, Consumers' Association of Canada (Whitehorse Branch), Yukon 59:31, 59:34-35
- Lane, Paul, President, Alexandra Park Residents' Association, Toronto 27:54
- Lapointe, Dr. Pierre, Governor, Board of Governors, Frontier College 13:12-13
- Larocque, Mrs. Cecile, Monica Society, Edmonton 55:31, 55:35
- Larocque, Lionel, Dalhousie area resident, Ottawa 17:14-15
- LaSalle, Dr. G., Vice-President, Health Services, University of Sherbrooke (Que.); Chairman, Committee on Medically disadvantaged - Urban, Canadian Medical Association 45:24-26, 45:30-34
- Laski, Mrs. Bernice, Teacher, Duke of York Public School, Toronto 26:84-86, 26:91-92
- Laughlin, J.E., Inspector of Schools, District 8, Toronto 26:83-85, 26:92
- Lavoie, Mgr. Raymond, Director, Secrétariat Social de St. Roch (Que.) 66:42-44, 66:48, 66:51
- Lawrence, D.H., Executive Director, Neighbourhood Service Centre of Greater Winnipeg 6:25-38
- Leask, Miss Jean, Director in Chief, Victorian Order of Nurses for Canada 47:25-37
- Le Caine, Mrs. Hugh, Chairman, Public Issues Committee, Family Service Centre, Ottawa 16:7-10, 16:14-18
- Lecours, Paul, St. Roch (Que.) 66:46, 66:50-51
- Légaré, M., Conseil du Travail du Québec 66:40
- Lemay, Hon. Judge Gérard, Président, St-Vincent de Paul Society of Canada 66:8-11
- Lemesurier, Mrs. Lynn, Member, O'Connor Drive Development Community Association, Toronto 27:96-99, 27:108
- Leveridge, Al, Manager, Technical Support Division, Saskatchewan NewStart Inc. 65:22, 65:37-38
- Levine, L.E., Board Member, Canadian Association of Social Workers 30:10-13, 30:21-28
- Linda, Perry, Vancouver Inner-City Service Project, Vancouver 8:40-42, 8:46, 8:53
- Linkletter, Mrs. A., Public Issues Committee, Family Service Association, Montreal 36:18-19, 36:32
- Lipman, Dr. Marvin, Member, Advisory Group, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation 10:10-11, 10:23
- Livingston, Alan, Chairman, Central Committee, SOS-Volunteer Action for Social Change, Toronto 27:79-80, 27:83
- Locklyn, John, St. John's (Nfld.) 52:29-30
- Long, Miss Mary, Social Service Course, Ryerson Polytechnical Institute, Toronto 27:76
- Low, W.J., Social Worker, Seventh-Day Adventist Church in Canada 34:8-10, 34:17-28
- Loyer, Eugène, President, Health Committee, General Assembly, Île de Hull (Que.) 16:23-25
- Lucey, Rev. Daniel, Balgonie (Sask.) 64:16-17, 64:19-21, 64:46
- Lucien, Mrs. Rose, Dalhousie area resident, Ottawa 17:11
- Lueck, A.R., Legal Adviser, Yukon Native Brotherhood 59:13-25
- Lundy, Mrs. G., Department of Welfare, Yukon 58:20
- Lyon, Israel, School of Architecture, University of Manitoba, Winnipeg 6:40-41, 6:44-46
- Lyons, J.G., Staff Worker, Neighbourhood Service Centre of Greater Winnipeg 6:25-27, 6:31-37
- Maben, David, Executive Director, St. Christopher House, Toronto 27:50-54, 27:68
- MacArthur, Miss M.C., Assistant Director in Chief, Victorian Order of Nurses for Canada 47:25-35
- McCallum, A.C., Member, Committee on Poverty, Canadian Association of Social Workers 30:18, 30:27
- McCarthy, Rev. J.W., Executive Secretary, Old Brewery Mission, Inc., Montreal 41:9-34
- McCarthy, John, St. John's (Nfld.) 52:35
- McCarthy, M.G., Director, School of Economic Science, Toronto 18:23-35
- McChesney, A., Legal Counselling Service, Toronto 26:117-118
- McClure, Dr. R.B., Moderator, United Church of Canada 49:14-20, 49:22, 49:28
- McDaniel, R.B., Canadian Civil Liberties Association, Fredericton, New Brunswick Chapter 63:24-25
- McDonald, Mrs., Vancouver 9:25-28
- McDonald, Mrs. A., Monica Society, Edmonton 55:26
- McDonald, Dr. Alex, Rural Sociology, Antigonish Office (N.S.) 2:33-37, 2:42-44
- McDonald, Hon. C.P., Minister of Welfare, Saskatchewan 42:7-38
- McDonald, E.C., Provincial Director of Child Welfare (P.E.I.) 4:22-23
- McDonald, J.A., Deputy Minister, Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development 14:9-38
- McDonald, Mrs. Marie, President, Monica Society, Edmonton 55:20-36
- McDonald, Miss Patsy, Grade 11-A, Sydney Academy, Sydney, N.S. 1:50
- McDonald, Rev. Dr. W.C., Chairman, Board of Evangelism and Social Service, United Church of Canada 31:9, 31:12-14, 31:17-29, 31:34-43
- MacDougall, Ian, Director, Community Legal Aid and Services Program, Toronto 27:27-28, 27:32-39

- MacEachern, Dr. G.A., President, Agricultural Economics Research Council of Canada, Canadian Council on Rural Development 18:9-22
- McGeoghan, William, Member, Victims of Compensation and Welfare Committee, Just Society, Toronto 28:11
- McGill, Mrs. R.A., Regina 64:43-44
- McGowan, Frank, Toronto 27:99-100, 27:102-104, 27:108-111
- McGowan, Neil, Old Brewery Mission Inc., Montreal 41:28
- McGrath, Miss A.M., Member, South End Improvement Association, Saint John (N.B.) 60:67-73
- McInnis, Mrs. Harvelyn, Winnipeg Tenants Association, Winnipeg 6:49, 6:54-62
- McIntyre, Mrs. Dorothy, Citizens' Group; Family Service Association, Montreal 36:10-11, 36:15-17, 36:20, 36:26, 36:31
- McIsaac, Dr. J.C., Minister of Education, Saskatchewan 65:18, 65:23, 65:26-27
- MacKay, Dennis, Charlottetown 4:54-55
- McKay, Miss Leola, President, Senior Citizens' Centre; Moncton Lions Club (Senior Citizens' Association), Moncton 62:18-20, 62:27
- MacKee, Mrs. M.H., Executive Director, Greater Moncton Community Chest Inc. 63:38-48
- MacKenzie, J.A., Director of the Social Research and Planning Division, Department of Public Welfare of the Province of Nova Scotia 37:10-12, 37:22-23, 37:25-31, 37:36
- MacKenzie, W.N., History Teacher, Grade 11-A, Sydney Academy, Sydney, N.S. 1:40-41, 1:46
- McKeown, W.J., Chairman, Regina Renters Council, Regina 64:31-34
- Mackie, David, Alderman, Halifax 2:16
- MacKinnon, Claude, Building Inspector, Association of Professional Engineers of New Brunswick 61:15-17
- MacKinnon, Dr. F.R., Deputy Minister, Department of Public Welfare of the Province of Nova Scotia 37:12-13, 37:16-36
- MacLean, D.F., Head, Conference and Course Section, Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University, Halifax 1:15-19
- MacLeod, Fred, Grade 11-A, Sydney Academy, Sydney, N.S. 1:42-43
- McLoughlin, Mrs. C.A., Editor, "Up to the Neck" Newspaper, Montreal 12:8-27
- McNally, W.J., Manager, Policy Department, Canadian Chamber of Commerce 51:17, 51:20, 51:24-28, 51:31-34
- McNamara, Mrs. Edna, Founding Member, Humans on Welfare Society, Edmonton 57:62
- McNamara, John, Vice-President, Humans on Welfare Society, Edmonton 57:52-62
- MacNamara, W.L., Chairman, Briefs Committee, Association of Professional Engineers of the Province of New Brunswick 61:9-17
- MacNeil, Kevin, Social Deviance Class, St. Francis Xavier University, Antigonish (N.S.) 3:10-12
- McNeillage, Mrs. Mary, Toronto 26:120
- MacNeill, D.R., Secretary, Committee on Adult Basic Education and Poverty, Canadian Association for Adult Education 24:8, 24:12, 24:15
- MacPherson, Lawrence, Social Welfare Administrator, Catholic Social Welfare Bureau (P.E.I.) 4:37-48
- MacPherson, R.B., Member, Health and Welfare Committee, Canadian Chamber of Commerce 51:15-18, 51:22-34
- McRae, W.T., Mayor, Campbellton (N.B.) 68:8-24
- MacVicar, Wayne, Grade 11-A, Sydney Academy, Sydney, (N.S.) 1:43
- Magneson, Harland, Director, Resource Mobilization for Employment Demonstration Project (Professional Group), Edmonton 55:61-74
- Mahoney, Rev. J.P., National Director, Catholic Women's League of Canada 24:27, 24:30-31, 24:33-38
- Maitland, Mrs. Alice, President, Neighbourhood Improvement Committee, Ottawa 17:7-9, 17:19
- Maley, Jack, Member, Unemployed Citizen's Welfare Improvement Council, Vancouver 9:7-13
- Malette, Karl, Chairman, Welfare and Housing Committee, Metropolitan Toronto 26:11-23
- Maloney, Dr. J.H., Member, Premier's Task Force on Extended Care and Alcoholic Treatment Facilities in Prince Edward Island 4:12-14, 4:17-20, 4:23
- Manners, Mrs. Doris, Treasurer, Humans on Welfare Society, Edmonton 57:56
- Manson, T., Sydney Academy, Sydney (N.S.) 1:44
- Marand, Mrs. Simone, Chairman, Group Therapy Clinic, Mount Carmel Clinic, Winnipeg 6:13-15, 6:22
- Markle, Gower, Chairman, Committee on Adult Basic Education and Poverty, Canadian Association for Adult Education 24:7-22
- Marshall, Mrs. W.M., Vice-President, Provincial Council of Women of Ontario 50:37
- Martin, Alan, President, Student's Representative Council, University of New Brunswick, Fredericton 60:45-52
- Martin, Mrs., J.M., Calgary 56:41, 56:43-44, 56:69
- Martin, Miss L.D., Vice-President, Provincial Council of Women of Ontario 50:36
- Martin, Miss Majorie, Woodland Family Worker, Vancouver 8:30-31
- Martynuik, Dan, President, Kensington Area Residents' Association, Toronto 27:54-56, 27:65
- Marzari, Mrs. Darlene, Social Planning Department, Vancouver 8:12-13, 8:27, 8:30
- Mathieson, Colin, Grade 11-A, Sydney Academy, Sydney, (N.S.) 1:36-38, 1:48
- Matthews, Mrs. J.J., National Convener, Social Action; Chairman, Brief Committee, Catholic Women's League of Canada 24:23-38

- Maxwell, Miss A.C., Member, South End Improvement Association and South End Tenants' Association, Saint John (N.B.) 60:63-67
- Maxwell, Grant, Co-director, Social Action Committee, Ottawa, Canadian Catholic Conference 49:7-9, 49:12-17, 49:20-35
- Melhuish, Joe, Calgary 56:77-80
- Melita, Miss Linda, School Canadiana, Vancouver 8:42-45
- Melnik, Mrs. Marlyne, Patient, Mount Carmel Clinic, Winnipeg 6:12-13, 6:16, 6:19-20
- Melvin, W.B., President, Co-Operative Union of Canada 20:9-18, 20:23
- Ménard, J.R., Director, Regional Chamber of Commerce, Lower St. Lawrence (Que.) 69:10-12
- Mercer, Mrs. Mary, Mundy Pond, St. John's (Nfld.) 52:23, 52:28-29
- Mhlanga, Sam, Staff, Family Service Association, Montreal 36:25-26
- Michael, D.L., General Counsel, Seventh-Day Adventist Church in Canada 34:7-17, 34:20-29
- Milne, Don, Planning Director, Social Service Department, Edmonton 55:18-20
- Minicaieloe, J., Chairman, Association to Tackle Adverse Conditions, Vancouver 8:55-63
- Mira, Manuel, President, Portuguese Canadian Congress, Toronto 27:57, 27:67-68
- Mitchell, Grant, Executive Director, Saskatchewan Water Resources, Saskatchewan Co-operative Credit Society 64:9-22
- Mitchell, Mrs. Margaret, Director, Group of Community Workers, Vancouver 8:9-30
- Mitchell, Mrs. Margaret, Member, Unemployed Citizen's Welfare Improvement Council, Vancouver 9:13-14, 9:30-31
- Moffatt, Dr. H.P., Lecturer, Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University, Halifax 1:24
- Moke, Mrs. Arlene, Volunteer Worker, Neighbourhood Improvement Committee, Ottawa 17:9, 17:13-18
- Mondoux, Léon, Member, Health and Welfare Committee, Canadian Chamber of Commerce 51:17-18, 51:20, 51:24, 51:32
- Monk, Brig. Joshua, Director, Drug and Alcoholism Service (Metro-Toronto), Salvation Army 48:11-13, 48:17-18, 48:22-25
- Monroe, Miss Nancy, Grade 11-A, Sydney Academy, Sydney (N.S.) 1:43, 1:48
- Montgomerie, Jim, Principal, Flemington Road Public School, Toronto 26:109, 26:125-131
- Moore, Ray, Regina 64:45-46
- Moran, Miss Reta, Provincial Council of Women, Regina 64:45
- Moreland, J.W., Member, Health and Welfare Committee, Canadian Chamber of Commerce 51:33
- Morin, René, Mayor, Edmundston (N.B.) 67:7
- Morley, Mrs. Leona, Lawrence Heights, Toronto 26:119-120
- Murray, Miss Darlene, Toronto 27:64-65
- Morrison, Ian, National Co-ordinator, Frontier College 13:11-28
- Morrissey, W.K., Director, Program Development Division; Provincial Co-ordinator, Rehabilitation, Department of Welfare, Saskatchewan 42:10-13, 42:16, 42:21, 42:23, 42:33
- Mountain, Wilfred, Toronto 26:76
- Mullen, Vern, Manager, Basic Education Division, Saskatchewan NewStart Inc. 65:13-20, 65:23-24
- Mulvihill, Rev. C.J., Director, Charities, Council of Catholic Charities 20:23-36
- Munro, C.G., President, Canadian Federation of Agriculture 21:11-21
- Munroe, George, Executive Director, Indian and Métis Friendship Centre, Winnipeg 7:7-19
- Murdoch, Ken, Executive Secretary, SOS-Volunteer Action for Social Change, Toronto 27:77-78, 27:82
- Murphy, Gregory, Secretary-Treasurer, New Brunswick Federation of Labour (C.L.C.) 63:17, 63:19-21
- Murrell, R.J., Principal, Warden Avenue Public School, Toronto 26:61
- Musgreave, E., Alderman, Calgary 56:9-17, 56:20-21
- Mussalem, Dr. H.K., Executive Director, Canadian Nurses' Association 47:8-16, 47:21-24, 47:27-28
- Nadeau, Alphonse, Moderator, General Assembly, Île de Hull (Que.) 16:18-27
- Nasimok, Brian, Toronto 27:66
- Neary, Hon. S.A., Minister, Department of Social Services and Rehabilitation, Newfoundland 38:7-27, 52:11, 52:37-38
- Neat, Miss Barbara, Toronto 27:63-64
- Neveu, John, Chairman, Victims of Compensation and Welfare Committee, Just Society, Toronto 28:7-17
- Neville, F.J., Assistant Director, Community Affairs Branch, Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development 14:22-28, 14:33
- Newell, George, Vice-President, Saint John District Labour Council, New Brunswick Federation of Labour (C.L.C.), Saint John (N.B.) 60:40-43
- O'Byrne, Father Pat, Director, Calgary Inter-Faith Community Action Group, Calgary 56:54-58
- O'Connor, Mrs. Bernie, Member, Vancouver Opportunities Committee 9:19-26
- O'Donnell, Mr., Vancouver 8:53
- O'Donohue, Anthony, Alderman, Toronto 27:12-13, 27:17-19
- O'Driscoll, W., President, Newfoundland Co-Operative Services, St. John's (Nfld.) 52:17-23
- Oliver, Dr. W.B., Regional Representative, Black United Front 1:29
- Olsson, Mrs. Stig, President, Council, Saint John Home and School Association, Saint John (N.B.) 60:23

- O'Neill, Greg, Student Chairman, Grade 11-A, Sydney Academy, Sydney, (N.S.) 1:43
- Osband, Mrs. Rosemary, Director, Humans on Welfare Society, Edmonton 57:61-62
- Ostry, Dr. Sylvia, Director, Economic Council of Canada 5:14-16, 5:20-27
- Owen, J.H., President, South End Tenants' Association, Saint John (N.B.) 60:68, 60:70, 60:73
- Owen, Michael, Winnipeg 6:20
- Paikowsky, Jason, Universal Axle, Saint John (N.B.) 60:52-63
- Palmer, Mrs. J.B., Co-chairman, Poverty Study Committee, Provincial Council of Women of Ontario 50:39
- Palmer, John, Vancouver Inner-City Service Project, Vancouver 8:46-47
- Paradis, Ghislain, Welfare Agency of the Diocese of Rimouski (Que.) 70:11-14
- Paré, Pierre, St. Roch (Que.) 66:49-50
- Parker, Miss Rae, Department of Welfare, Yukon 58:20, 58:34
- Parker, Mrs. Sylvia, Co-Op, Toronto 26:120-121, 26:128
- Parlee, Dr. H.B., Chairman of Submission, Department of General Practice, Saint John General Hospital (N.B.) 61:17-22
- Pauwels, Rev. Oscar, Yukon Family Counselling Service 58:12
- Payne, Mrs. Alice, Member, Calgary Welfare Rights Organization 56:44
- Pearl, Mrs. E., Chairman, Social Action Committee, Family Service Association of Metropolitan Toronto 27:22-23, 27:27
- Pedlar, Ken, Member, Salvation Army, 48:12-13, 48:17, 48:23-25, 48:28
- Pelletier, Rev. G.L., Bishop, Trois-Rivières; Chairman, Social Action Committee, Canadian Catholic Conference 49:12, 49:35
- Perkins, Mrs. M.J., Field Representative, Department of Health and Welfare, Saint John (N.B.) 61:55
- Peters, Miss Elizabeth, Social Service Course, Ryerson Polytechnical Institute, Toronto 27:71-76
- Pett, Dr. L.B., Deputy Director General, Health Services Branch, Department of National Health and Welfare 23:56-57
- Petterson, Robert, Halifax 2:15
- Phalen, J.T., General Secretary, Co-Operative Union of Canada 20:10-22
- Phillips, Mrs. Barbara, Consumers' Association of Canada (Whitehorse Branch), Yukon 59:30, 50:32, 59:34-35
- Phillips, Mrs. M.P., Yukon Family Counselling Service 58:11
- Philmore, Mr., Halifax 2:46-47
- Piché, Abbé, St. Roch (Que.) 66:45-50
- Pierce, Trevor, Executive Director, Ontario Welfare Council 25:7-22
- Pilote, Jean-Marie, Old Brewery Mission, Inc., Montreal 41:29-31
- Pitman, Walter, former M.P.P., (Ont.) 27:45-49
- Plumptre, Mrs. A.F.W., President, Vanier Institute of the Family 21:21-36
- Podoluk, Miss J.R., Statistician, Dominion Bureau of Statistics 5:25
- Poirier, Rev. Roger, Co-ordinator, General Assembly, Île de Hull (Que.) 16:18-28
- Porter, Mrs., Vancouver 9:31
- Posluns, Michael, Director, National Capital Area, Ottawa; Canadian Civil Liberties Association 32:20
- Power, Mrs. Doris, Member, Just Society, Toronto 28:17-18
- Prates, A.V.B., Secretary, Portuguese Canadian Congress, Toronto 27:57
- Pratt, Mr., Vancouver 9:32
- Prefontaine, Theodore, Executive Secretary, Conseil de la Coopération de Saskatchewan 64:23
- Price, Mrs. Betty, Toronto 27:105
- Priddle, Mrs. J.M., Vice-President (ex officio), Canadian Home and School and Parent-Teacher Federation 22:9-22
- Prince, Mrs. Ellen, Public Issues Committee, Family Service Association, Montreal 36:16, 36:20, 36:23, 36:25
- Pruss, Mrs. Ann, Monica Society, Edmonton 55:29-30
- Putman, Mrs. Yvonne, Secretary, Winnipeg Welfare Rights Movement 7:23-24, 7:27-29, 7:33
- Quart-Quellet, Gary, Lawyer, Quebec 66:24-40
- Quigley, Miss A.M., Executive-Director, St. Elizabeth Visiting Nurses; Council of Catholic Charities 20:28-30, 20:33
- Quinn, W.J., Inspector of Schools, District #7, Toronto 26:82-93
- Radford, Ken, Toronto 26:77
- Rea, Miss Ellen, Calgary 56:41-43, 56:67-68
- Reardon, Hugh, President, Lions Club (Senior Citizens' Association), Moncton 62:16-18, 62:20, 62:22-28
- Reed, Rev. E.S., Bishop of Ottawa, Family Planning Federation of Canada 19:26-31
- Reid, Miss Debby, Grade 11-A, Sydney Academy, Sydney (N.S.) 1:39, 1:47
- Reid, G.A., Chairman, Poverty Sub-committee, Calgary Area Council, Home and School Association of Alberta 56:36-43
- Reid, Miss Nancy, Social Worker, Saint John (N.B.) 60:14
- Reid, W.W., Deputy Minister, Department of Welfare and Labour; Co-ordinator, Rehabilitation, Prince Edward Island 40:7-29
- Reid, Mrs. Henio, Chairman, Standing Committee on Migration and Citizenship, Provincial Council of Women of Ontario 50:30, 50:39

- Rendell, Mrs. D.H., St. John's Club, Canadian Federation of University Women (Nfld.) 52:30-36
- Rice, Mrs. Pat, Chairman, Regional Welfare Committee, Association of Women Electors of Metropolitan Toronto 26:32-34, 26:38
- Richard, Louis, Counsellor Supervisor, Prince Edward Island Newstart Incorporated 4:48
- Riché, Raymond, Vice-President, Newfoundland Federation of Fisherman 52:23-27
- Roach, Rev. W.M., Associate Director, Extension Department, St. Francis Xavier University, Antigonish (N.S.) 2:31-35, 2:38-47
- Robb, E.K., Chairman, Budget and Admission Committee, Greater Moncton Community Chest Inc. 63:40, 63:42-48
- Robert, Michel, Member, Bar of Montreal, Bar Association of the Province of Quebec 39:8-25
- Robinson, F.W., Principal, Frontier College 13:10-29
- Robson, Charles, Old Brewery Mission, Inc., Montreal 41:11, 41:18-21, 41:26, 41:33
- Rochester, Mrs. M.G., St. John's Club, Canadian Federation of University Women (Nfld.) 52:31-34
- Roden, Mrs. Beatrice, Toronto 26:77-78
- Roessingh, Emil, Calgary 56:43
- Rosenfeld, Abe, Board of Directors, Pointe St. Charles Community Clinic, Montreal 45:11-14, 45:18-20
- Ross, Mrs. Anne G., Executive Director, Mount Carmel Clinic, Winnipeg 6:8-22
- Ross, Col. William, Salvation Army Headquarters, Canada and Bermuda 48:7-19, 48:22-29
- Rotenberg, Samuel, Toronto 26:98-106
- Rowlands, Mrs. H.W., President, Association of Women Electors of Metropolitan Toronto 26:27-40
- Ryall, Anthony, Thornburn Road, St. John's (Nfld.) 52:36-37
- Ryan, Alex, Vancouver 8:31-32
- Ryan, Ed, Toronto 26:125-126, 26:130
- Ryan, T.J., Associate Professor, Carleton University, Ottawa; Vanier Institute of the Family 21:25-26, 21:29-35
- Ryan, Tom, Metropolitan Area Board, St. John's (Nfld.) 52:56-59
- St. Aubin, Mrs. Claire, Board of Directors, Pointe St. Charles Community Clinic, Montreal 45:11, 45:14, 45:17-20, 45:26
- St. Onge, Rev. C.E., Director, Social Action Committee, Canadian Catholic Conference 49:9-11, 49:31-32
- St. Pierre, Jacques, Chairman, Council, Eastern Quebec Regional Development 70:19-25
- Sanderson, Solomon, Federation of Saskatchewan Indians 65:47-50
- Sandford, A.E., Social Development Program Designer, Prince Edward Island Newstart Incorporated 4:48-50, 4:52-56
- Saunders, Richard, President, Crescent Valley Tenants' Association, Saint John (N.B.) 60:43, 60:75, 60:78-79
- Savoie, Guy, Tracadie (N.B.) 68:38
- Savoie, Sylvio, East End Boys' Club, Moncton 62:11, 62:14
- Schmidt, Erick, Special Consultant, Executive Council, Government of Alberta 57:43-51
- Schofield, C.H., General Manager, Canadian Chamber of Commerce 51:24-25, 51:30
- Secord, Donald, Executive Member, Board of Evangelism and Social Service, United Church of Canada 31:19, 31:35-36
- Seeharam, Mr., Winnipeg 6:38
- Seepe, Mrs. A., Victoria Day Care Services, Toronto 26:44-45
- Séguin, Jean, Director, Welfare Social Services, Montreal 29:7-21
- Serre, Bertrand, Co-ordinator, Neighbourhood Improvement Committee, Ottawa 17:7-20
- Setchell, Miss Alice, Toronto 26:60
- Sewell, John, Alderman, Toronto 27:11-12, 27:14-16, 27:19
- Shand, Samuel, Vancouver 9:30
- Shapiro, Mrs. Pauline, Toronto 27:59-61
- Shaw, Mrs. Eva, Principal, R.B. Bennett High School, Calgary 56:31
- Shea, James, Mundy Pond, St. John's (Nfld.) 52:28-29
- Sherman, Mrs. Anna, Monica Society, Edmonton 55:26-29
- Sherman, Mrs. Grace, Information Centre, Toronto 26:121-122
- Shields, Dr. R.L., Superintendent of Education, Yukon Territory 59:21
- Shimizu, Mrs. K., Social Worker, Regional Municipality of Ottawa-Carleton 15:21
- Shuttleworth, Dale, Social Service Consultant, Community on the Move, Lawrence Heights, Toronto 26:108-109, 26:128
- Siegel, Mrs. Lillian, Public Issues Committee, Family Service Association, Montreal 36:16
- Sigsworth, Frank, Counsel, Fraternity of Grey Knights (P.E.I.) 4:25-31, 4:34-37
- Sigurjonsson, Miss Janis, Teacher, Duke of York Public School, Toronto 26:84, 26:90
- Silman, Mrs. W., Director, Nursing School, Central Neighbourhood House, Toronto 26:94
- Simmonds, Wylie, Executive Director, Poverty Committee, Saskatchewan Co-Operative Credit Society 64:13-14, 64:17-18
- Simpson, Father, Charlottetown 4:44-45
- Simpson, Mrs., Vancouver 8:72-73
- Sinclair, Walter, Principal, Duke of York Public School, Toronto 26:81-82, 26:84-85, 26:88-94
- Singer, Vernon, M.P.P., (North York) 26:127, 26:130-131

- Skahan, Mrs. C.F.H., Member, "Up to the Neck" Newspaper, Montreal 12:8-27
- Smith, Dr. A.J.R., Chairman, Economic Council of Canada 5:9-29
- Smith, Archibald, Chairman of Submission, Saint John Community Workers Association, Saint John (N.B.) 61:22-36
- Smith, Rev. D.G., Christ Church Cathedral, Anglican Church, Ottawa 49:17, 49:25-26
- Smith, Chief Elijah, Yukon Native Brotherhood 59:7-26
- Smith, Gary, Consultant, Family Planning Federation of Canada 19:27-28, 19:31-32
- Smith, James, Member, "Up to the Neck" Newspaper, Montreal 12:21
- Smith, Col. John, Public Relations Officer (Ottawa area), Salvation Army 48:10-16, 48:23-25
- Smith, Miss Marie, Grade 11-A, Sydney Academy, Sydney (N.S.) 1:48-49
- Smith, Murray, Social Deviance Class, St. Francis Xavier University, Antigonish (N.S.) 3:7-15
- Smith, Michael, Yukon Native Brotherhood 59:23-24
- Smolsky, Mrs. I., Toronto 27:59
- Snowden, Prof. Donald, Director, Extension Service, Memorial University of Newfoundland, St. John's (Nfld.) 52:38-51
- Snyder, Sam, Toronto 27:61
- Sopp, Edward, Administrator, Social Services, Vancouver 9:28-32
- Speaker, Hon. R.A., Minister, Department of Social Development, Alberta 57:36-52
- Spencer, Miss Sheila, Grade 11-A, Sydney Academy, Sydney (N.S.) 1:47-48
- Stacey, Mrs. G.E., Member, Social Planning Council, Edmonton 55:38, 55:47-48
- Steadman, Miss S.M., First Vice-President, National Council of Women 50:28
- Steele, James, Advisory Chairman, Neighbourhood Youth Corps, Toronto 26:95-98, 26:101-107
- Steeves, Mrs. Helen, Moncton 62:27
- Stegmayer, H.E., Executive Director, United Fund of Greater Saint John, Inc. (N.B.) 60:8-19, 60:33-37, 61:36, 61:64
- Stewart, Miss Barbara, Nurse, Pointe St. Charles Community Clinic, Montreal 45:10, 45:15-19
- Stewart, Mrs. Gail, Research Officer, Economic Council of Canada 5:11-12, 5:18-19
- Strasbourg, Mrs. Laurette, Secretary, General Assembly, Île de Hull (Que.) 16:20-23, 16:26
- Sutton, Stuart, Secretary General, Vanier Institute of the Family 21:33-36
- Sykes, Rod, Mayor, Calgary 56:21-26
- Taman, Larry, Chairman, Community and Legal Aid Services Program, Toronto 27:28-39
- Tassenari, Rev. Fred, Halifax 2:17
- Teed, E.L., Chairman, Brief Committee, Saint John District Home and School Association (N.B.) 60:19-30
- Tennant, W., Chairman, Finance Committee, Prince Albert Work Training Program, Prince Albert 65:37-38
- Thériault, Rev. H.E., St. Jean Baptiste (N.B.) 68:26-33
- Thériault, Bruno, Executive Director, Canadian National Institute for the Blind 67:8-14
- Thériault, Hermel, Campbellton 68:34
- Thériault, Hon. L.N., Minister, Department of Health and Welfare, New Brunswick 44:7-32
- Thériault, Napoléon, Campbellton 68:33-34
- Thibault, Ernest, Campbellton 68:39-40
- Thomas, Dr. A.M., Executive Director, Canadian Association for Adult Education 24:8-22
- Thomas, Mrs. Dorothy, President, Vancouver Housing Inter-Project Council 8:64-72
- Thompson, Ed, Toronto 27:100-101
- Thompson, Mrs. Ellen, Director, Humans on Welfare Society, Edmonton 57:61
- Thompson, Miss Nancy, School of Architecture, University of Manitoba, Winnipeg 6:38-46
- Thorbury, Len, Vice-President, Moncton Boy's Clubs 62:9-10
- Tidman, Hon. G.A., Minister, Department of Public Welfare, Nova Scotia 37:7-37
- Tiessen, Rev. Isaac, Mennonite Brethren Church, Toronto 26:113
- Timbrell, Dennis, Alderman, Ward 10, Borough of North York (Ont.) 27:113-114
- Tomecko, Dr. J.W., Chairman, Board of Governors, Frontier College 13:9-24, 13:28-29
- Topshee, Rev. G.E., Director, Extension Department, St. Francis Xavier University, Antigonish (N.S.) 2:30-31, 2:37-41, 2:44-46
- Torunski, J., New Brunswick Forest Extension Service 61:61
- Towers, Mrs. Hilda, Chairman, Winnipeg Welfare Rights Movement 7:19-32
- Tremblett, Mrs. J., Toronto 26:78, 27:104-105, 27:110-111
- Troop, F.W., Treasurer, Victorian Order of Nurses for Canada 47:24, 47:32-33
- Tucker, Rev. R.D., Cochrane United Church, St. John's (Nfld.) 52:34
- Tugwell, Mrs. Marg., Toronto 27:102, 27:108
- Turgeon, Mrs. Monique, Executive Member, Neighbourhood Improvement Committee, Ottawa 17:8, 17:15-21
- Upshall, Ray, Householders' Association, Mundy Pond, St. John's (Nfld.) 52:27-29
- Van der Leest, Canon, Member, Inglewood-Ramsay Redevelopment Committee, Calgary 56:76-80
- Van Hees, Mrs. Laetitia, Churchill Park Day Care Society, Calgary 56:66-68
- VanLammers, Miss Pauline, Canadian Association of Social Workers 30:12-13, 30:18, 30:23, 30:25-27

- Vaz, Antonio, Toronto 27:62
- Viana, Delfim, Toronto 27:65-66
- Vigoda, Mrs. Morris, President, National Council of Jewish Women of Canada, Toronto Section 27:39-45
- Villa, Mrs. Joyce, Toronto 27:106, 27:108
- Vineberg, Philip, Q.C., Vice-President, Bar Association, Province of Quebec 39:10-31
- Vinnicombe, James, Blackhead Road Householders' Union, St. John's (Nfld.) 52:53
- Waldman, Mrs. Reva, Neighbourhood Services Centre of Greater Winnipeg 6:23-24, 6:28-29, 6:33-36
- Waldron, Alan, Toronto 26:107-108
- Walker, Rev. Gordon, Representative, Baptist Federation of Canada 49:18, 49:30-33
- Walker, Ian, Calgary 56:46-50
- Walker, Miss Lorri, Chairman, Vancouver Opportunities Committee, Vancouver 9:18-19, 9:24-25, 9:31
- Waller, L.G.P., Chief, Educational Development Division, Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development 14:31-36
- Walter, J.R., President, Canadian Operational Research Society 50:7-22
- Warford, Cecil, Member, Executive, Blackhead Road Householders' Union, St. John's (Nfld.) 52:58
- Warner, Carlyle, Chairman, Black United Front 1:27-32
- Warren, Mrs. C., Calgary 56:68-69
- Warrington, Murray, Nova Scotia Tenants Association, Halifax 2:13-14, 2:17, 2:30
- Wass, D.K., Superintendent, Social Service Department, Edmonton 55:9-10, 55:13-20
- Weatherhead, David, M.P., (Scarborough West) 26:77
- Weekly, Mrs. Barbara, Volunteer Nurse, Health Clinic for Transients, Gardenside Development Agency, Edmonton 57:34-35
- Weibe, Victor, Secretary, Prince Albert Work Training Program (Sask.) 65:29-30, 65:34-35
- Weihs, Ron, Member, Students' Administrative Council; Varsity Downtown Education Project, University of Toronto 27:88-90, 27:93
- Whalen, Augustus, St. John's (Nfld.) 52:15, 52:17
- Whalen, Mrs. Augustus, St. John's (Nfld.) 52:17
- Wharf, Dr. Brian, Chairman, Canadian Association of Social Workers 30:7-28
- Whipple, Mrs. M.J., Social Worker, Crescent Valley, Saint John (N.B.) 60:12-13, 60:16, 60:74-78
- White, W.J., Supervisor, East District Office, Family Service Association, Metropolitan Toronto 27:19-27
- Whitford, J.R., Executive Director, Yukon Family Counselling Service, Yukon 58:7-21, 58:33
- Whitworth, Dr. F.E., Director, Canadian Council for Research in Education 46:29-38
- Wiebe, Dr. J.H., Director General, Medical Services Branch, Department of National Health and Welfare 23:48-56
- Wiener, Mrs. Gerard, Vice-President, Service, National Council of Jewish Women of Canada, Toronto Section 27:41
- Wilkinson, Canon Maurice, Associate Secretary, Canadian Council of Churches 49:11, 49:13-23, 49:27-30, 49:34
- Willard, Dr. J.W., Deputy Minister, Department of National Health and Welfare 23:7-49, 23:54, 23:57
- Williams, Mrs. Denise, Social Planning Council, Edmonton 55:38-39, 55:48-49
- Williams, James, Member, Executive, Blackhead Road Householders' Union, St. John's (Nfld.) 52:56, 52:62
- Williams, R.J., Chairman, Action Committee, Resource Mobilization for Employment Demonstration Project (Client Committee), Edmonton 55:77-79, 55:85
- Williams, Mrs. R.J., Resource Mobilization for Employment Demonstration Project (Client Committee), Edmonton 55:78, 55:81, 55:83
- Wilson, Collis, Chairman, Board of Directors, Pointe St. Charles Community Clinic, Montreal 45:9-21
- Winnick, Miss Nora, Winnipeg 6:22
- Wood, Mrs. L., Toronto 27:60-61
- Wood, Peter, Chairman, health and Welfare Committee, Saint John Board of Trade (N.B.) 60:30-36
- Wood, Mrs. W.A., Co-Chairman, Poverty Study Committee, Provincial Council of Women of Ontario 50:26-29, 50:37
- Woods, Professor Brian, Faculty Adviser, School of Architecture, University of Manitoba, Winnipeg 6:38-46
- Wyatt, Mrs. Dorothy, City Councillor, St. John's (Nfld.) 52:12-17
- Wynott, R.N., Manager, Saint John Board of Trade (N.B.) 60:36-37
- Yagi, Miss Kie, Secretary, Association to Tackle Adverse Conditions, Vancouver 8:54-55
- Yaremko, Hon. John, Ontario Department of Social and Family Services 43:9-39

- York, Miss Sally, Journalism Student, Ryerson Polytechnical Institute, Toronto 27:77, 27:89, 27:93-95
 - Young, Rev. W.L., Past Chairman, Board of Evangelism and Social Action, Presbyterian Church in Canada 33:9, 33:11-28
 - Zeidman, Rev. Alexander, Superintendent, Scott Mission, Toronto 33:20, 33:22
 - Zimmerman, W.M., Assistant Director, Social Planning Council, Ottawa and District 15:28-38
 - Zwerver, Harry, Lawrence Heights Family and Child Service, Toronto 26:109-111, 26:128
- For additional witnesses consult the individual Minutes of Proceedings

Published under authority of the Senate by the Queen's Printer for Canada

Available from Information Canada, Ottawa, Canada

Second Session—Twenty-eighth Parliament
1969

THE SENATE OF CANADA

PROCEEDINGS OF THE SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE ON

POVERTY

The Honourable DAVID A. CROLL, Chairman

No. 1

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 3rd, 1969

WITNESSES:

The Staff Members and Associates of The Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University, Halifax, Nova Scotia: Mr. Donald F. MacLean, Head of the Conference and Course Section; Mr. Guy Henson, Director; Dr. Donald H. Clairmont, Director Africville Relocation Study; Mr. Byron A. Anthony, Director of Labour and Management Bureau; Mr. John A. Dougall, Industrial Relations and Management Development Associate; Mr. Andrew S. Harvey, Economic Research Associate; and Dr. Harding P. Moffatt, Lecturer and Writer.

The Black United Front: Mr. Carlyle Warner, Chairman; Mr. Jesse Dillard, Secretary-Treasurer; Dr. W. P. Oliver, Regional Representative; and Mrs. Carrie Best.

Class 11-A, Sydney Academy, Sydney, Nova Scotia: Miss Patricia Graham, Spokeswoman for the entire class; Greg O'Neill, Student Chairman; and William Neil MacKenzie, Class 11-A History Teacher.

APPENDICES:

A.—Brief submitted by the Staff Members and Associates of the Institute of Public Affairs of Dalhousie University.

B.—Brief submitted by Class 11-A of Sydney Academy.

MEMBERS OF THE
SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE ON POVERTY

The Honourable David A. Croll, Chairman

The Honourable Senators:

Belisle	Hastings
Carter	Inman
Connolly (Halifax North)	Lefrançois
Cook	MacDonald (Queens)
Croll	McGrand
Eudes	Pearson
Everett	Quart
Fergusson	Roebuck
Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche , Deputy Chairman)	Sparrow

(18 Members)

(Quorum 6)

Patrick J. Savoie,
Clerk of the Committee.

ORDERS OF REFERENCE

Extract from the Minutes of Proceedings of the Senate of Tuesday, October 28, 1969:

"The Honourable Senator Croll moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Roebuck:

That a Special Committee of the Senate be appointed to investigate and report upon all aspects of poverty in Canada, whether urban, rural, regional or otherwise, to define and elucidate the problem of poverty in Canada, and to recommend appropriate action to ensure the establishment of a more effective structure of remedial measures;

That the Committee have power to engage the services of such counsel, staff and technical advisors as may be necessary for the purpose of the inquiry;

That the Committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, and to report from time to time;

That the Committee be authorized to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the Committee, to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate, and to adjourn from place to place;

That the evidence taken on the subject during the preceding session be referred to the Committee; and

That the Committee be composed of the Honourable Senators Bélisle, Carter, Cook, Croll, Eudes, Everett, Fergusson, Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche), Hastings, Inman, Lefrançois, McGrand, Pearson, Quart, Roebuck and Sparrow.

After debate,

In amendment, the Honourable Senator McDonald moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Burchill, that the motion be not now adopted, but that it be amended by striking out paragraph 4 thereof and substituting therefor the following:

"That the Committee be authorized to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the Committee, to adjourn from place to place, and notwithstanding Rule 76 (4), to sit during sittings and adjournment of the Senate."

After debate, and—

The question being put on the motion in amendment, it was—
Resolved in the affirmative.

The question being put on the motion of the Honourable Senator Croll, seconded by the Honourable Senator Roebuck, as amended, it was—

Resolved in the affirmative."

Extract from the Minutes of Proceedings of the Senate of Wednesday, October 29, 1969.

"With leave of the Senate,

The Honourable Senator McDonald moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Smith:

That the names of the Honourable Senators Connolly (Halifax North) and MacDonald (Queens) be added to the list of Senators serving on the Special Committee of the Senate appointed to investigate and report all aspects of poverty in Canada; and

That the name of the Honourable Senator Nichol be removed from the list of Senators serving on the said Special Committee.

The question being put on the motion, it was—
Resolved in the affirmative."

ROBERT FORTIER,
Clerk of the Senate.

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS

Dalhousie University Auditorium,
Halifax, Nova Scotia.

Monday, November 3rd, 1969.

(1)

Pursuant to notice the Special Senate Committee on Poverty met this day at 9.15 a.m.

Present: The Honourable Senators Croll (Chairman), Belisle, Connolly (Halifax North), Cook, Eudes, Fergusson, Hastings, Inman, McGrand, Pearson and Sparrow.—(11)

In Attendance: Frederick J. Joyce, Director.

The following witnesses were introduced and heard:

The Staff Members and Associates of THE INSTITUTE OF PUBLIC AFFAIRS, Dalhousie University, Halifax, Nova Scotia:

Mr. Guy Henson, Director;

Mr. Donald F. MacLean, Head of the Conference and Course Section;

Dr. Donald H. Clairmont, Director Africville Relocation Study;

Mr. Byron A. Anthony, Director of Labour and Management Bureau;

Mr. John A. Dougall, Industrial Relations and Management Development Associate;

Mr. Andrew S. Harvey, Economic Research Associate; and

Dr. Harding P. Moffatt, Lecturer and Writer.

In Attendance:

Mr. Dennis W. Magill, Co-Director, Africville Relocation Study;

Mr. Kell Antoft, Special Projects Associate;

Mr. John R. Palmer, Economic Research Assistant; and

Mrs. Arlene Dale Duncan, Economic Research Assistant.

(Biographical information respecting the above witnesses follows these Minutes.)

At the conclusion of the Institute of Public Affairs' presentation, the Chairman thanked the Director and his associates.

The following witnesses were then introduced and heard:

THE BLACK UNITED FRONT:

Mr. Carlyle Warner, Chairman;

Mr. Jesse Dillard, Secretary-Treasurer;

Dr. W. P. Oliver, Regional Representative; and Mrs. Carrie Best.

In Attendance:

Messrs. Jeffrey Delisle and Jules Oliver.

The presentation opened with a videotape submission followed by a brief statement; a question period then ensued.

At the conclusion of the question period, the Chairman thanked the delegation of the Black United Front for a very enjoyable presentation.

At twelve noon the Committee adjourned until two o'clock in the afternoon.

At two o'clock in the afternoon the Committee resumed its hearings.

The following witnesses were introduced and heard:

CLASS 11-A, SYDNEY ACADEMY, Sydney, Nova Scotia:

Miss Patricia Graham, Spokeswoman for the entire class;

Greg O'Neill, Student Chairman; and

William Neil MacKenzie, Class 11-A History Teacher.

During the question period which followed Miss Patricia Graham's introductory remarks, the following students participated: Misses Beverly Davis Debbie Reid, Judy Canning, Nancy Monroe, Anne Gardner, Sheila Spencer, Mary Smith, and Patsy MacDonald; Messrs. Colin Matheson, Stan Ardelli, Davis Johnston, Richard Crooks, Fred MacLeod, Wayne MacVicker, Tom Manson, Gerry Harris and Richard Hayson.

The Chairman thanked all the students of Class 11-A of Sydney Academy, Miss Graham and Messrs. O'Neill and MacKenzie for their fine presentation.

The brief submitted by the Staff Members and Associates of the Institute of Public Affairs of Dalhousie University, together with the brief submitted by Class 11-A of Sydney Academy, are printed as Appendices A and B, respectively, to these Proceedings.

At four o'clock in the afternoon, the Committee adjourned until Tuesday, November 4th, 1969, at 9.30 a.m.

ATTEST:

Patrick J. Savoie,
Clerk of the Committee.

Biographical Information Respecting the Staff Members and Associates, Institute of Public Affairs
Dalhousie University

Anthony, Byron D., born 1922 at Noel Shore, Hants County, Nova Scotia, is a graduate of Dalhousie University (Bachelor of Commerce). Mr. Anthony served with the Royal Canadian Naval Volunteer Reserve during the Second World War. After graduation from university, he joined the Nova Scotia Department of Labour, where he began as a Statistical Clerk and progressed through a number of positions to become Chief Executive Officer, Nova Scotia Labour Relations Board. Subsequently he joined the Dominion Steel and Coal Corporation Ltd. (Coal Operations, and later Halifax Shipyards Division) as Manager, Personnel and Industrial Relations, a position he held later with Hawker Siddeley Canada Ltd. (Halifax Shipyards Division). At the present time, Mr. Anthony is Director of the Labour-Management Bureau, Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University. Mr. Anthony is a Member, Industrial Relations Committee, Halifax Board of Trade; Member, Education Council, Voluntary Economic Planning; Member, Nova Scotia Joint Labour-Management Study Committee.

Antoft, Kell, born 1923 in Roskilde, Denmark, is a graduate of Dalhousie University (Bachelor of Arts). Mr. Antoft served as a navigator with the Royal Canadian Air Force during the Second World War, and later became Adjutant, 2401 A.C. & W.U., R.C.A.F. Auxiliary; President of Viking Air Services Ltd., Montreal; President of Biochemicals Ltd., Montreal; Assistant Executive Director, National Cancer Institute of Canada, and Canadian Cancer Society, Toronto. At the present time, Mr. Antoft is Special Projects Associate, Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University. Mr. Antoft is a Member and Acting Secretary of the Medical Research Council of Canada's Committee on Human Pituitary Hormones; National Chairman of the Nancy Green Ski League of the Canadian Amateur Ski Association; a Member of the Worcester Foundation for Biological Research and a Member of the Atlantic Chapter, Institute of Public Administration. Past memberships and offices include: Secretary, Nova Scotia Youth Hostels Association; Executive Member, Local 1, International Union of Shipyard and Marine Workers; various offices in Home & School Associations; Member, Mayor of Beaconsfield's Advisory Committee; Chairman, Beaconsfield Combined Appeal.

Clairmont, Donald H., born 1938 in Hamilton, Ontario, is a graduate of McMaster University (Bachelor of Arts, in History, Master of Arts, in Sociology), and Washington University (Doctor of Philosophy, in Sociology). He was a recipient of the Elmley Scholarship (University of Toronto); fellowships from McMaster University and Washington University; and research awards from the Canada Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Dr. Clairmont was Lecturer for two years at Saint Mary's University, and spent two years as Teaching Assistant, then Lecturer, at Washington University. At the present time, Dr. Clairmont is Professor of Sociology, University of Guelph, and Co-Director, Africville Relocation Study, Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University. Dr. Clairmont is the author of a number of published studies on deviance among the Indians and Eskimos of Northern Canada and other groups, and has collaborated in studies of social conditions among the poor of Nova Scotia.

Dougall, John A., born 1932 in Montreal, Quebec, is a graduate of Dalhousie University (Bachelor of Arts, in Psychology), and the University of Western Ontario (Master of Business Administration), and holds a C.D.P. Professional Certificate, Data Processing Management Association. After a six-year career as a commissioned officer in the Royal Canadian Air Force, Mr. Dougall joined the staff of the Nova Scotia Light and Power Co. Ltd., Halifax, where he was initially in charge of the Data Processing Centre; later, he acted as special assistant to a firm of consultants engaged to implement changes in the urban mass-transit facility (a division of the Company) in Halifax. Mr. Dougall has acted as special consultant to Savage Shoes Ltd.; C.J.C.H. Radio, Halifax; the Nova Scotia Department of Public Welfare; the Construction Association of Nova Scotia; and others. At the present time, Mr. Dougall is Industrial Relations and Management Development Associate, Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University. He is, also, a lecturer in the Master's Program in Business Administration, Dalhousie University, and is a regular commentator, C.B.C. Radio, on labour and management affairs. Mr. Dougall has been President and Secretary, Atlantic Chapter, Data Processing Management Association; and Member of the Board, Halifax Branch, Canadian Mental Health Association.

Harvey, Andrew, born 1939 in St. Stephen, New Brunswick, is a graduate of the University of Maine (Bachelor of Arts, in Business and Economics), Clark University (Master of Arts, in Economics), and currently is completing requirements in a doctoral program in Economics, at Clark University. Mr. Harvey served two years as a teaching assistant at the University of Maine, and two years as a teaching fellow at Clark University while pursuing graduate studies. He has taught Economics at Ricker College, Houlton, Maine and Mount Saint Vincent University, Halifax; and has lectured in Statistics at the Maritime School of Social Work. He has served as a consultant for the Economics and Research Division of the Nova Scotia Department of Labour, the Nova Scotia Programme Development Agency, the Houlton Regional Development Corporation, and others. At the present time, Mr. Harvey is Economic Research Associate, Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University, having joined the Institute on a full-time basis in 1966 after four consecutive summers association with the Institute. Mr. Harvey is the author of several studies and articles relating to the Nova Scotian economy, and has collaborated in and contributed to several other studies. He is, also, a member of the Halifax-Dartmouth Welfare Council's Housing Committee and Agency Review Committee.

Henson, Guy, born 1910 in Paris, France, of British parents, is a graduate of Acadia University (Bachelor of Arts, Magna Cum Laude), and studied for short periods at the Institute of International Affairs, Geneva; in Paris, and at Columbia University. During his early career, Mr. Henson was in newspaper work; Assistant Commissioner, Maritime Provinces Trade Commission to Ontario; school teacher and principal; Secretary to the Premier of Nova Scotia; 21 years in the Nova Scotia Department of Education, as Secretary and later, Director of Visual Education, and as first Director of the Adult Education Division. He was responsible for the organization of the first regional library in Nova Scotia, and for the engagement of the first provincial and regional library directors. During the Second World War, he was Headquarters Representative in charge of the Atlantic Region and, later, Assistant Director Overseas, with the Canadian Legion Educational Services. In 1957, Mr. Henson was appointed to his present position as Director of the Institute of Public Affairs and Professor of Public Administration, Dalhousie University. Since 1962, he has been chairman of the Nova Scotia Joint Labour-Management Study Committee, whose work has led to the well-known Nova Scotia Labour-Management Agreements. As a citizen, he has been actively concerned since the mid-1930's with voluntary work in labour education, credit union and co-operative promotion (including help in organizing 22 credit unions), and other civic programs, particularly in the arts. Mr. Henson has written a number of published reports and articles in the fields of public administration, adult education, and industrial relations, and has been administratively responsible for some 70 research and conference reports published by the Institute of Public Affairs.

Duncan, Arlene Dale, born 1947 in Winnipeg, Manitoba, is a graduate of McGill University, (Bachelor of Arts, in Economics). Mrs. Duncan is at present an Economic Research Assistant with the Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University.

Maclean, Donald F., born 1926 in Halifax, Nova Scotia, is a graduate of Acadia University (Bachelor of Arts, and Bachelor of Education) and Dalhousie University (Master of Arts). Mr. MacLean was a high school teacher in Nova Scotia, Manitoba, and British Columbia; Secretary of the Adult Education Division, Nova Scotia Department of Education; and Assistant to the Director, Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University. At the present time, Mr. MacLean is Head of the Conference and Course Section, Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University. His work in consultancy, design, development, presentation, and evaluation of educational programs has brought him into direct association with a variety of organizations and their respective training programs, including departments of the Governments of Canada and Nova Scotia; the Canadian Labour Congress; the Nova Scotia Federation of Labour; the Labour College of Canada; the Halifax-Dartmouth District Labour Council; the Nova Scotia Federation of Agriculture; the Nova Scotia Federation of Home and School Associations; the Nova Scotia Teachers Union; the Nova Scotia Union of Urban and Municipal School Boards; and the Nova Scotia Association for the Advancement of Coloured People. Mr. MacLean is, also, Secretary of the Nova Scotia Human Rights Federation. Mr. MacLean has had editorial association with most of the 73 research and conference reports published by the Institute of Public Affairs. He has written a number of book reviews and is co-author of Feasibility Study of Centres for Residential Adult Education in the Maritime Provinces, commissioned by ARDA (1965).

Magill, Dennis W., born 1939 in Sudbury, Ontario, is a graduate of Acadia University (Bachelor of Arts) and McGill University (Master of Arts), and is a doctoral candidate at Washington University. From 1964 to 1967, Mr. Magill was a Lecturer at Saint Francis Xavier University. At the present time Mr. Magill is Co-Director of the Africville Relocation Study, Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University.

Moffat, Harding P., born 1905 in Canso, Nova Scotia, is a graduate of Acadia University (Bachelor of Arts, Honours in Psychology), and Harvard University (Master of Education), and completed further graduate study, specializing in Educational Administration and Finance. Acadia University has conferred upon him the degree of Doctor of Civil Law, and he was the recipient of the C.C.R.E. Whitworth Award for Service to Educational Research in Canada. Dr. Moffat has held positions as high school teacher in Sydney, Nova Scotia, and New Rochelle, New York. During his career with the Nova Scotia Department of Education, his appointments were as follows: Research Assistant; Secretary of Curriculum Committee; Registrar of Summer School; Secretary, Commission on the Larger School Unit; Assistant Superintendent of Education; Deputy Minister of Education. At present, Dr. Moffat is engaged in lecturing, research, and writing at the Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University. Dr. Moffat is the author of a book on Educational Finance in Canada. He is the Editor of and contributor to the Handbook to the Course of Studies, Nova Scotia, Report of the Commission on the Larger School Unit, and has written a number of articles on educational finance in Canada for various educational and other journals. Dr. Moffat has served as a member of the Board of Directors, and President, Canadian Education Association; Chairman, National Advisory Committee for Educational Research; President, Canadian Council for Research in Education; Chairman, National Advisory Council for School Broadcasting; Member, Canadian National Commission for UNESCO, and in other official capacities.

Palmer, John R., born 1945 in Dorset, England, is a graduate of the University of Leicester (Bachelor of Arts, Honours in Social Sciences, and specializing in Economics). Following graduation from university, Mr. Palmer was employed in the Economic Advisory Service of the London (England) Transport Board. At the present time, Mr. Palmer is an Economic Research Assistant, Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University.

THE SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE ON POVERTY

EVIDENCE

Halifax, Nova Scotia, November 3, 1969.

The Special Senate Committee on Poverty met this day at 9.30 a.m.

Senator David A. Croll (Chairman) in the chair: I will call to order the meeting of the Special Senate Committee on Poverty. All the members indicated they would be present and the Senators are here and the witnesses are here.

Let me just say a few words that I think are appropriate before we begin.

We are here at the historical city of Halifax which has meant a lot to us in Canada particularly to our fathers who went over in the First World War and left from Halifax and returned to Halifax and to those of us who went over in the Second World War.

We recalled Halifax with a tear in our eye and a lump in our throat but looked at Halifax first and said "This is my own, my native land," and we regretted to leave Canada.

Sometimes in Halifax we became a little exuberant and we acted up a bit but Halifax's built-in tolerance for service personnel gives a broader understanding and we passed on.

We are in this traditional Province of Nova Scotia which from pre-Confederation days had an understanding of liberty and freedom and tolerance. We thought this was a good place to start, not because it has any more poverty than any other province (in absolute numbers Toronto and Montreal have far more) but they have a reputation here of making an intelligent approach to problems that concern the poor and Canadians generally.

We thought this was a good place to start on the first leg of our journey and we came here to see and hear and to indicate our sense of involvement and to see if we can get something of the sense of experience.

The senators who are sitting here today are a very distinguished group. They have known poverty and they have known poorness almost all their lives. Many of them have long years in political life and they have continued daily contact with those in need. They have long participation in community affairs.

That is only part of the story for it is well that the public should know their record of accomplishments and their contributions.

They are not all here today. Some of them have other commitments and some of them had to stay for Parliamentary duties in Ottawa but I think that it is well for the public to know that members of this Senate Committee have been members of investigative committees.

The first one was Manpower, one dating back a few years, from which resulted the Department of Manpower which was established by the Federal Government.

The Committee on Land Use brought forth as its child ARDA. We had a Committee of the Senate dealing with truth in lending which at least told you what you had to pay in the way of interest rates and after that it was up to you if you paid them.

There was a committee dealing with food costs which helped to stabilize food costs a year or so ago and as a result there was created the very useful Department of Consumer Affairs.

There was a committee on Old Age Pensions, old age security, which brought forth the first guaranteed income in the civilized world. It was born in the Senate. The Senate gave it life and the House of Commons gave it substance and it is enjoyed by over three-quarters of a million Canadians every day.

There was the Committee on Divorce which finally brought forward an Act with which civilized people could live.

The members of this Committee here have all sat on one Committee, most of them on many more than one or more of these Committees and they have some knowledge as to how these matters should be proceeded with.

They come from all walks of life and all provinces and all shades of opinion and they are here because they want to be here. They wanted to be on this Committee and they are dedicated to the thought and the purpose of the poor people.

Now, let me just say a few words about poverty. One cannot write a definition of poverty any more than one can write a definition of poorness but in economic terms, one can reach a realistic understanding. What are we talking about? Take the figures of the Economic Council, who take their lead from some of the experts in the Canadian government, in the Bureau of Statistics and the American definitions which are very similar to ours.

They say that if you do not have this much in income you are below the poverty line. One man should have $1800; two people $3000, three people $3,600, four people $4,200 and five people $4,800.

Now, the Economic Council adopted that as being a fair figure. We go along with it except that we say it is a spartan measure but nonetheless we must have some measuring stick.

One of the other definitions made by a very capable person in the Government is that if a family spends 70 per cent or more of income on food, clothing and shelter, it is living below the poverty line.

These are accepted definitions. We are not dealing with poorness here because poorness is a state of being, much different than poverty.

Now, people keep saying, well, "We have been studied. We have been looked at. We have been researched. What are you doing that is different or why are you doing it?"

Perhaps we will tell you why we are doing it. We are doing it firstly because it needs to be done and someone needs to do it because it is the most important problem in all of Canada. 840,000 families by the latest statistics are below the poverty line in Canada which means three and a half million people. That is what we are talking about.

What this Committee is doing that is different is just this: who are they? Where are they? How do they get there and how do we get them out?

We have looked at it. We have tried to identify the people. We took a group that is easily identifiable, the disadvantaged people, the blind, the crippled, the maimed, the pensioners, the old age people. They are out of the main stream of labour but they are not out of the main stream of life and they need a certain kind of help. That is group one.

Group two, the single woman with a family. She is a widow, deserted, divorced, perhaps separated legally. She is a large problem in this country and she is responsible for 250,000 young children.

Number three. We have the hard core. Now, these first two groups that I mentioned are about 25 per cent of the problem. We now get to the hard core and they are the misfits, the emotionally disturbed. Some of them sick, don't want to work. Some of them cannot work for a living, whatever the reason. They are a small percentage of the people involved, about four of five per cent. They are really no problem for us to deal with. We know how to deal with them.

Then we come to what we may call the real depths of our problem, the working poor. These are the unskilled, the unlettered, the unorganized, the unrecognized, the faceless and they are 65 to 70 per cent of the poor people in this country and they are suffering from lack of employment.

When they get employment they receive wages, minimum or less, which are poverty wages. That is the problem in this country and they need a different remedy for different groups and that is what we are trying to find out. What remedy can we apply?

Now, it is not possible to apply the same remedy here for all of the people and we have to look about to see what needs to be done and those people who come to us and want instant remedies are wasting their time.

This is not a new problem. It is going to take us a few days—not to collect data. We have lots of data. We are out here searching for solutions and we are searching for solutions where we think we can find them from people who have contributions to make.

We may overlook some people. We do not intend to but there is only so much we can do when we have to visit other provinces and visit some of our larger cities and make some judgments.

Now, in coming to Halifax and to the Province of Nova Scotia we were not disappointed. This is exactly what I thought it would be, that people here would take our coming and our hearings very seriously and the Staff Members and Associates of the Institute of Public Affairs of Dalhousie University have done just that.

They said it was not the Institute's policy to make public presentations but they are making one to the Senate Committee on Poverty and it is a very excellent brief.

Mr. MacLean deserves considerable credit for co-ordinating the brief which we have not had quite enough time to digest, but I assure you that the contents of the brief will be studied by the Committee and research staff and it may be necessary that we will approach you for some clarification. We will try to meet you today.

On behalf of the Committee I wish to thank you for the observations and the effectiveness of the brief. Like you we believe that the Canadian society has the will to eradicate poverty from the Canadian scene in the foreseeable future.

We are going to include the geographical details as part of the brief so that for all time it is recorded that these people participated.

We have Mr. Henson here who will be a witness and he will call other people to assist him if he needs any assistance. He will speak for about fifteen minutes.

The rules are very clear here. You will not be interrupted while you are speaking. After you have finished the Senators will indicate to me that they wish to question you and they will be given an uninterrupted five minutes each to begin with, and then we will come around to the second time and you may get a few interruptions at that time. By that time we will have the complete scene.

Mr. Guy Henson, Director, Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University, Halifax, Nova Scotia: Honourable Chairman, and Members of the Special Senate Committee on Poverty. My name is Guy Henson and I will introduce first of all a number of my colleagues from the Institute of Public Affairs who have contributed spare time or overtime with little relief time and worked very hard during the past three months in the preparation of this brief and their names are given in the bibliographic summaries here.

Perhaps I will introduce them in turn. On my right Mr. Donald MacLean, Director and Co-ordinator of the brief and Mr. Byron A. Anthony, Mrs. Duncan, Mr. John Palmer, Mr. Andrew Harvey and Mr. Kell Antoft. There are two or three others who are detained. We hope to have them with us later. Their names are given here. Dr. Clairmont and Mr. Dennis Magill. Dr. Moffatt, I believe, for reasons of health was unable to attend this morning.

Pershaps, sir, I could pick up one of your most interesting and forceful comments. You spoke of the need for identification. Who, where, how and why are people in poverty?

This brief is devoted primarily, not exclusively, to identification to an analytical description of poverty as it exists in Nova Scotia. Perhaps I might review in the briefest way (it may be quite unnecessary) to the circumstances leading to the preparation of this brief beginning with a telephone call and a visit from Mr. Lord and Mr. Claque in late June or early July and very stimulating discussions with them.

Official communications, of course, from Mr. Joyce following. Our undertaking as set forth by letter of transmittal to concentrate on the two areas as requested by the Special Senate Committee, namely and I quote Mr. Joyce's letter "Factual, descriptive information about poverty from your study or experience, together with specific recommendations for dealing with it; and earlier Mr. Lord had asked that perhaps you could emphasize in your brief"—I am quoting, of course—"the position of the blacks of Halifax as well as people in low income areas."

I would like to clarify a point made by yourself, Honourable Chairman, that the Institute of Public Affairs is a branch of Dalhousie University and Dalhousie University itself, to the best of my knowledge, normally does not engage in advocacy and issues of this kind.

Our role is in the area of research publication, art works, conference teaching, consultancy, but by authority of the President and the University authorities a staff group under individual responsibility undertook to prepare a brief which has been presented. We had a small grant or a helpful grant from the Nova Scotia Department of Public Welfare which meant that we retained complete independence. The Department retained also its complete independence and detachment from any findings or recommendations. This was most helpful.

We have not attempted a comprehensive study relative to the Special Senate Committee's biased and complex field of inquiry. Such a study is clearly beyond the terms of your Committee's request and of our capability under these circumstances at any rate. But we have undertaken to provide a body of descriptive information and observations.

We have responded eagerly to the request of your Committee to be here. We feel that you are concerned with the crucial problems of mankind in a new age of potential for all. The solution of poverty is the key to Canadian survival, as you have indicated, Honourable Chairman, and a new level of national being arising from a sense of sharing and a sense of justice among ethnic and racial groups as well as among geographical regions.

We trust that you present efforts to study and recommend in regard to poverty will be effective. If they are not, more ammunition will have been given to those who point to the hard and inescapable facts of poverty in this rich new country as evidence of sickness, and it is a sickness.

The Canadian society, including parliamentary institutions and, of course, universities, are not exempt from that responsibility either for the present condition or for analyses and programmes leading to change.

Now, perhaps I could just say two or three things in a general way about the brief. What we are not trying to do, we are not trying to provide a blueprint for the solution of poverty. We are not trying to suggest a programme for the elimination of regional disparities or for economic development on a national or provincial scale which will overcome unemployment or even inflation and provide affluence for all.

We are not attempting in any specific way to provide a solution to the urgent question about minimal or guaranteed minimum incomes, new welfare systems or other major factors.

Your comprehensive attack on poverty is the whole area of the Senate Committee's inquiry. We are attempting to do several things—provide a factual picture or analytical description of poverty in Nova Scotia; rural, urban, rural fringe communities, urban fringe communities, ethnic groups, black people and Indians.

As requested we have drawn upon a number of publications, no fewer than 18 of Institute studies or publications about civic situations and problems over the past twelve years.

We have drawn also upon other published and unpublished materials. Several persons or agencies were very generous in providing us with the raw material incorporated here to provide new bodies of facts and insights about particular situations.

I refer particularly to the section on rural Nova Scotia drawn from studies by Mr. Connor of Dr. Rayburn's group, the Department of Mines, Energy and Resources, and from a recent new life study of Halifax City under the auspices of the Canadian Welfare Council.

We have put forth—I think you will find that it is inherent in the text, coming out of the text for the most part—limited findings and recommendations.

We have certain observations and we would be glad to elaborate in respect to these very limited observations.

With respect to this great question of a guaranteed annual income, we recommend particularly and most urgently that an effective attack upon poverty programmes require detailed—not only identification, sir—but a detailed knowledge from fieldwork; interdisciplinary efforts in communication with the poor itself without the socio-economic set.

The condition in which people find themselves, the levels of education—all these things are well known and not only that but land use studies particularly in this long settled area of Nova Scotia and the neighbouring provinces, including Quebec, of course, and perhaps parts of Ontario and perhaps even the West.

You know, just at the time of Confederation and just afterwards, Nova Scotia had the most advanced economy, the most advanced social and economic situation of any Canadian province. It is not enough to find superficial and trivial reasons for the decline. Among the historical reasons it had to do with geography and economics and national policy rather than the vitality of the people or the vast efforts that were made and are continuing to be made by the people of Nova Scotia and neighbouring provinces.

And it is in this spirit, in the light of the great efforts of modernization in Nova Scotia that is going forward in harmony with national policies, particularly under the new Department of Economics expansion that we feel that it is timely and necessary to bring forward this analytical description, statement of fact, such insights as we can provide in respect to poverty as it exists in Nova Scotia.

Thank you, sir.

The Chairman: Fine. Let me just say this to you. I am sorry but the Chairman in his usual way stole most of his time for speech-making this morning but I thought something had to be said in connection with the Committee and that it had to be said at the beginning.

But please stick to questions. Try to stick to three minutes to start so we will have a second round because we have got an hour.

Senator Hastings: Mr. Henson, in your brief you refer in various places with respect to education prevailing in the relationship between lack of education and poverty or low income, on page 5, page 17 and page 30.

I wonder if you would care to comment as to any meaningful allowance to keep a student in school? I am not thinking of $10 a month but say $45 or a meaningful allowance where it is needed to keep the students in school.

Mr. Henson: I personally have not made any recent examination of this particular problem. I will see if my colleagues, particularly Andrew Harvey or Donald MacLean or others might wish to make any comments on this matter.

Mr. Andrew S. Harvey, Economic Research Associate, Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University: Any comment I might make here is that while an allowance for the student is important, the point that seems to have come across quite clearly is that the family itself often depends on the income which an individual would earn were he to leave school and go out working.

While I cannot give you a firm figure of what a student should get, one has to look at both situations of what is required to support the student and also what the family itself might need.

It may be a motherless family. It may be a fatherless family. It may be a family where the father and mother, about six of them, are working and they are just able to support a family. They need every dollar they can get.

I am sorry I cannot give you a firm figure. I think it is important to know that there are these two facets.

The Chairman: Mr. MacLean, would you have anything to add?

Mr. Donald MacLean, Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University: No.

The Chairman: That is it.

Mr. Henson: Honourable Chairman, there are three members of our group whom I mentioned to you. I wonder if I might ask them to come forward to the platform?

The Chairman: By all means.

Mr. Henson: Dr. Moffatt, Dr. Clairmont and Mr. Magill.

Senator McGrand: I have a number of questions. I know you have not time to answer them but I will give you two or three questions in the form of a sort of statement.

Now, on page 7 you mention that Nova Scotia had a high standard of living in the 1860's and 70's. Now, this was a period in which Nova Scotia had reciprocity with the United States and it was a time when the American Civil War contributed a great deal to the prosperity of this part of Canada.

Now, this was a period of wood, wind and water. It was a saw mill economy. They had saw mills, lath mills, shingle mills. Much of the sawn lumber and lath and shingle went to New England and New York and it was carried by the schooners which have passed out of existence.

I suppose that had something to do with the prosperity of Nova Scotia in that period.

Now, the next question I have is that you mentioned on page 25 only a small percentage of farms can compete in the agricultural market. What does this mean to the future of Nova Scotia?

My other question was: there are pockets of poverty in all our cities and very large areas of low income. Now, how much of the present poverty in the cities is due to the rural poor who cannot make a go of it due to the decline of rural prosperity and have migrated to the cities.

Mr. Henson: There are three points, as I understand it sir. An indication was made which I think in part is correct that Nova Scotia was a saw mill economy. I think there was much more than that but at any rate unquestionably the termination of reciprocity and the decline of wooden ship building and a variety of other facts of economic nationalism and so forth entered into the economic decline of Nova Scotia.

But why was Nova Scotia unable to adjust? These other parts and other small countries or other small regions have been able to adjust. To what extent are the answers (if it is profitable to look for them—it may not be any more) to be found in national policies, continental policies of the new nation and so forth?

I agree in general that there were drastic changes which had to be made in the economy. I think this is the Senator's point, as I understand it, but to go into the reasons for economic decline, whether or not they were inevitable and what we can do about it now is rather beyond the scope of our undertaking.

Number two—a considerable number of farmers are unable to adjust and what is the answer here? I believe that the answer is being found better than anywhere else in the Maritime Provinces and perhaps in North America in the studies and programmes of action being developed in Prince Edward Island.

I looked not long ago at a map of a particular part of Prince Edward Island where half of the best soil (and it is in the number two classification, northern agricultural land in Canada) is out of production because of absentee ownership.

So the people who live in the farm houses or what were once farm houses are selling insurance or are perhaps old people and half the land is out of production.

The Chairman: Who is making that study?

Mr. Henson: This was made under the Federal-Provincial, as I say, successor to our ARDA and successor programmes and the results have been incorporated, of course, into the Canada-Prince Edward Island agreement, so that the same kind of...

Well, I was just going to add that the farmers with capacity, know-how, enterprise, were buying land three miles and 15 miles from their own farms so it is a matter of urgency that the historic land settlement pattern be discarded and there be a new state of mind and a new approach of land consolidation and new viable uses.

The third point, if I understand it correctly, had to do with the migration of people from the rural areas of Nova Scotia where mechanisation and other factors and forces are causing a large decline in employment of primary industries and are they moving into the towns and cities of Nova Scotia.

Well, actually this is one of the areas in which details vary in that a specific study is required so we will know. As a matter of fact one of our staff conclusions (which perhaps does not come through as clearly in the document as it might) is there is (to use an unfortunate term) a gray group; rural people who are being displaced through this historical process of obsolescence of the old subsistence homes which provided a good life at one time, a good life for people relative, let us say, to London or Montreal or what-not, but which collapsed.

I might say subsistent agriculture or semi-subsistent agriculture collapsed and we just don't know enough about what or who the people are, this business of who they are, where they are, what the facts are, why they are there and what can be done about it.

Instead of a generalization, we have recommended very strongly that as a basis for attacks on either people in poverty or people who may be slipping into the poverty circumstance, we need and need urgently this kind of (I hesitate to use the word "research" because there is so much to do) but this kind of knowledge as a basis for action.

The Chairman: Senator Pearson.

Senator Pearson: Yes. I refer you particularly to your clause 12 and 13, the definition of poor and poverty.

My first question is: how many of the witnesses who prepared this voluminous and wonderful brief which contains a great deal of work and a great deal of which we can make use; but at the same time I would like to know how many of those who prepared this brief have any real contact with poverty or is this purely an academic report? Is it done from an academic point of view or done from actual contact?

Then the next question is: could you define the difference between poverty and poor? I cannot quite make a thing out of 12 and 13. They both seem to run the same, but I would like to have your definition of it.

Mr. Henson: May I ask is it page 12 or 13 or section 12?

Senator Pearson: Page 7, 12 and 13.

Mr. Henson: I am going to ask in a moment Mr. Harvey to come forward and deal with this question of the basis of the analysis but first I will speak briefly on this question of whether it is an academic exercise or efforts put forward by a group of persons connected with some contact or even personal experience or possibly perhaps concern.

I don't suppose—and I didn't interpret this question as argumentative ad hominem. It is very difficult however, for myself or for anybody, you know, to speak in a personal way, but I will speak of people I know as impersonally as possible.

And I know that one member of this staff group is perhaps one of the leading specialists in Canada—qualified—very well qualified Doctor of Sociology who voluntarily left his family and lived for a year with the Eskimos, for example; who knows the slums of one of the major cities; who has been concerned with studies of the blacks of Nova Scotia and—well, how can one say he is an academic?

In the first place he has very academic standards to this matter.

Senator Pearson: Right.

Mr. Henson: But he brings a depth of personal understanding and conviction and concern.

Senator Pearson: This is what I want to know, yes.

Mr. Henson: And a member I know is a university student who spent one or two vacations with various groups in the slums in Washington some years ago.

I could go on. I can tell you that I personally grew up into manhood, if you like, at the time of the Depression and I concern myself with labour education and co-operative education through the Antigonish movement and the great work of Saint Francis Xavier and in 1935, primarily as a volunteer, I helped to organize 22 credit unions I think, or 23.

This meant for years in a voluntary way night after night, weekend after weekend in this city and 30 miles or 50 miles in various directions, but I don't propose further to put my heart on my sleeve but rather to say we will leave the document as it stands and we take second place to none as a group in our deep concern and we have endeavoured to prepare a document which will be reputable academically and intelligently and defensible, subject to improvement, of course, because much of this is new work.

I do not like to say it represents our best work. It represents our best work under intense pressure, because it has been a voluntary overtime exercise for the most part and we were very late.

We interpreted your request perhaps too—I will not say—seriously. Perhaps we were too ambitious but in any rate in general I think we stand behind this document and say, "Well, my first nickel was earned picking up apples and picking up potatoes and driving cows. When I was 13, I was out of school picking up apples in the Fall and the truant officer said I ought to be back in," so you know, if you want to talk about poverty problems, I will be prepared to discuss the matter.

I hope I have not been aggressive.

Senator Pearson: Not a bit. That is what I wanted.

The Chairman: Senator Pearson asked for information and your answer was far more useful than you think it is at the moment.

Mr. Henson: Thank you, sir.

Senator Pearson: The other question was the definition of poverty and poor.

Mr. Henson: Oh yes. Well, Mr. MacLean.

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Chairman, the expression "poverty" and "poor"—those expressions are used in paragraphs 12 and 13.

I do not think we want to make any particular distinction in the use of those two words. The Chairman suggested earlier there is a distinction between poverty and poor. Our reply is it might be, and I think for our purposes we were using these terms synonymously.

We go on to indicate a definition in respect to income. We set forth other characteristics in which we describe where a family is in a state of poverty.

Senator Pearson: You indicated you interchanged the words between poverty and poor. You keep changing words.

Mr. Harvey: That is correct. We used the term synonymously and interchangeably.

The Chairman: Senator Fergusson?

Senator Fergusson: Mr. Chairman, I would like to first compliment Mr. Henson and his staff for this wonderful brief which we are certainly going to find very useful.

I have read all I was able to since I arrived in Halifax and I realize from that both our staff and our committee are going to find it practically invaluable for the information that is in it.

I am sorry I am not more thoroughly familiar with it this morning but there are some things that I have clipped out that I would like particularly to ask, especially on page 3, section 7. You say:

If one has explicit regard to incidents of poverty among given groups, the highest incident is found in families with young female heads...

We have had this brought to our attention from other sources, of course. We realize that this is the case, but one thing I would like to ask is: in this incidence of families with young female heads being in a poverty area greater than it is in other parts of Canada?

Another thing I would like to ask is: what do you think is the reason for this? Is it because young women who are left as the support for their families have not had a proper education and training so that they can earn an income similar to what the husband might have earned and therefore be able to support their families in the same way they could have if it was a male head; or is it because even if they have such training they are not appointed to the same sort of position and they are not given the opportunity to earn the salaries that men would have earned?

That is my third question. They are not appointed to the sort of positions that their husbands might have held, or is it because even though they are quite well trained and quite capable and do hold positions and do the same work they are paid less money for doing that work?

There must be some reason why women, who are the heads of families, cannot support their families with as high an income as men, and is there anything that you think we can do in this area? Is there anything we can recommend so that the women who are heads of families, can keep their families out of this area of poverty?

Mr. Henson: May I, sir, ask Mr. Harvey if he would deal with the question as to whether the differential is greater than elsewhere, and Mr. Byron Anthony has had extensive industrial experience, especially in industrial relations, if he has any comments on the reasons for differential of income between female and male heads of families; and anyone else that may wish to speak on this question.

Mr. Harvey: In answer to the first question I think you will find the incidence in any given group that we might want to identify in the economy is higher in Nova Scotia. One can speculate on the reasons for this.

I think it is essentially a fact that the lower level of economy activity tends to raise, you know, everybody. No group is in.

In terms of education I would like to speak to one other point in terms of education of females in Nova Scotia my experience, working with this material, indicates that women are in general (I cannot speak specifically) who are low income or poverty are not as well trained as the men.

As Mr. Henson mentioned, probably Mr. Anthony will speak to some of the other questions.

The Chairman: I did not understand your answer to the question that Senator Fergusson asked you about the incidence. You said the incidence was higher. Why higher?

Mr. Harvey: The why is that the general level of economic activity here tends to make everybody worse off with lower incomes; say given $3,000 income in Canada on an average, well, you have got something like—just picking numbers—50 per cent in Canada have incomes below $3,000.

In Nova Scotia there would be something like 60 to 75 per cent. This is true right across the board regardless of what group you pick.

The Chairman: Yes, but what about New Brunswick?

Mr. Harvey: This is true in New Brunswick.

The Chairman: Is the incidence higher in New Brunswick than in Nova Scotia, which is what Senator Fergusson spoke about?

Mr. Harvey: Right. This is due to the mathematics or calculations. You have more people below in any given category. We mentioned in the brief this is a very nebulous exercise in measuring some of these thing, of which I am sure you have been made aware.

You can draw up by moving the line just slightly, you can get more changes.

Senator Hastings: Did the witness say that female education is lower in the Maritimes?

Mr. Harvey: No. In my experience there is no significant difference in the education of females and males in Nova Scotia in the work I have done.

The Chairman: Mr. Anthony?

Mr. Byron Anthony, Director of Labour and Management Bureau: Mr. Chairman, I am not sure I can contribute really anything to those answering these questions except to say that in Nova Scotia there is equal pay for equal work legislation.

Senator Fergusson: How does it work? How does this legislation work? Is it satisfactory?

Mr. Anthony: Well, let me put it this way. I am not sure whether it is or not, and it is not unlike equal pay for equal work legislation that is in effect elsewhere.

The only thing I can say about it: even though we have legislation for equal pay for equal work the fact of the matter is that in the minimum wages standards that are set up by legislation there is a differential between the minimum for females as opposed to males.

Senator Fergusson: Right in your Minimum Wage Act.

Mr. Anthony: Right. Insofar as collective bargaining is concerned, Mr. Chairman, I am not sure enough to say that, as I recall, the collective agreements I have dealt with down through the years, generally the rates of pay for females are lower than that of males.

I think it is true to say this is changing to some extent. I think it is also true to say that the differentials between male and female rates in the Minimum Wage Act are shrinking and narrowing.

Senator Fergusson: Let me ask you one more question about equal pay. Would you know if there had been many complaints about the equal pay Act?

Mr. Anthony: I really would not.

Senator Fergusson: And how they have been satisfied.

Mr. Anthony: I really don't know.

Senator Hastings: May I ask you, sir, this question. We have made no special examination of this particular question to my knowledge, but there may be one or two members of the staff who have information and would like to speak of it. I am not sure.

The Chairman: By all means.

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Chairman and Senators, I have no information right now in reply to Senator Fergusson's question but I understand there are a large number of women who are in this situation because they have been deserted and it is a very expensive procedure to require deserted husbands to pay the support of the family. It involves the deserted person in other provinces and in the courts of other provinces. It is costly and time-consuming and difficult, and even if the deserted person is required to pay and he fails to continue paying, the procedure has to be done all over again.

I think certainly if this kind of problem were looked at closely and this whole process made simpler, it may solve the problem of some of the women in this country.

The Chairman: That problem doesn't belong necessarily to Nova Scotia. From my own experience I can tell you it belongs to the whole of Canada.

Mr. Anthony: Yes, but the problem is here. The problem exists here.

The Chairman: The problem exists every place you can think of.

Mr. Anthony: Oh yes. I was not suggesting it would meet this problem. The fact is there are a large number of women who are in this category.

Senator Fergusson: Do you think the incidence of women in that category would be greater than the incidence of women in that category in other provinces?

Mr. Anthony: Oh, I have no information of that, but I am sure it is a problem and certainly if we are looking for as many as possible ways of improving poverty situations in this province, this is one of the things.

Senator Hastings: Supplementary. What is the minimum wage in Nova Scotia?

The Chairman: $1.25 for men and $1 for women.

I had hoped someone would answer Senator Fergusson's question because it is a very vital one. You are not giving answers to it. We did get an answer to it in Ottawa. Senator Fergusson asked the question. I think I am safe in saying that the answer we got was that women are being discriminated against in employment, in promotion and in pay at the Federal government level. Is that what he said? That was the evidence anyway that was given to us in Ottawa.

Is that true in Nova Scotia?

Mr. Henson: Our circumstances, I would think, would follow the national experience.

Senator Hastings: Only worse.

Mr. Henson: I certainly would not want to assume the defendant's role. I do suggest—you know, we discussed this whole principle of equality per se. I should say we have to take into account factors having to do with pregnancy.

The wife may follow the husband as and when he moves. There are a variety of things like this which, sometimes being blunt (although I endeavour to be as diplomatic as possible as often as possible) but they have to be taken into consideration.

I have made no special investigation of this matter. I would certainly feel that many women who are secretaries and other people in key roles have more brains than their bosses and all this kind of thing. But I think there are some of these biological factors that enter into the picture.

I am not defending them. I am just saying in our existing scheme of things they are there.

Senator Fergusson: I would like, if I may be permitted, to say I am not a militant feminist either, you know, but this is one of the big problems that has been brought to our attention many times.

I am just as interested in any other problem but this is one I think we should consider.

The Chairman: That is the answer. Is that everything that you have to say?

Mr. Henson: On that question, yes.

Senator Cook: Mr. Chairman, I would like to congratulate this gentleman for this excellent brief because it is going to be very, very helpful to us. It seems that many of the suggested solutions will involve plans for all levels of government to improve the lot of those suffering from poverty, to educate people, to retrain people and perhaps move large numbers of people from point A to point B.

Mr. Henson, would you agree the biggest practical step is to endeavour to build—all this will take time—would you think the biggest factor would be to build a floor by means of some type or kind of guaranteed income so that as far as possible, people would not continue to suffer from the effects of what is described in page 7—and I agree with the term—of grinding poverty?

It may be possible to beat your way out of the vicious circle of being poor, but to beat your way out of the vicious circle of grinding poverty, it seems to me that the best and most practical solution is to have some type of guaranteed annual income now and not to wait for plans in the future. Would you agree with that?

Mr. Henson: Yes. I think I am correctly representing the consensus of the staff group as stated on page 5 in the abstract in respect to a guaranteed annual income. An acceptable rationale for the adoption of a universal guaranteed income is needed and can be aided by a programme of experimentation.

I am not going to endeavour to go into a kind of instant exposé of the case against or the case for a guaranteed annual income. We recognize this floor idea put forward by the Honourable Senator as valid and as necessary in our society.

The main source of the case against it is that it is going to increase dependence. The counter argument, that is essential, is that when people have a sense of security and are able to participate at least in some of the good things of life and are in a better position when they get out and earn something to buy more of the good things in life, then they will want more of them.

They will be drawn back into the main stream of society and better able, if not in any other way, from this point of view.

I hope it is correct. I believe it will come and then this is perhaps the only way—not by itself, but in a combination with a whole lot of other things mentioned in the brief and by other witnesses. This is the only way in which people can be drawn out of or rise out of a sense of alienation and all that that implies.

Now, on this matter we have a solid recommendation, Honourable Chairman.

The Chairman: Page 105?

Mr. Henson: Well, it is really on page 105. I think I can sum it up in this way.

There are two ways—there may be three or four or five ways, but there are two ways in particular by which we in this country are likely to go to work on the problem.

We may have a debate, no doubt, a first-class debate between Mr. Trudeau and Mr. Stanfield and Mr. Douglas no doubt, and some others.

The Chairman: And Mr. Caouette—get Mr. Caouette in there.

Mr. Henson: I thank you, Mr. Chairman. We will be as inclusive but as neutral as possible. Mr. Caouette and any others who should be named—but a first class debate from first the principles and in the light of such debate—you know, it can remind you of the debate among theologians as to the number of angels that can dance on the point of a needle and in the light of the great debate we will then experiment.

We will not call it an experiment. We will call it serious public policy, which it certainly will be, with billions cumulatively and effort for many years, tens of billions of dollars and the lives of many people should we venture to suggest that.

In this context we have a figure here of 2.6 billion as the present expenditure on relief and this is...

The Chairman: The present expenditure of 2.6 billion was a figure that is being bandied about as the possible cost of the guaranteed annual income overall; but the total cost of welfare measures and relief in the Dominion is in the neighbourhood of $6 billion.

Mr. Henson: Thank you, Senator. I got a little adrift there. You have fortified my position. I was going to say three or four billion and you have said six billion.

The Chairman: The total municipal provincial is $3.5 billion.

Mr. Henson: Thank you, sir.

Now, what we say is that there should be some programmes in social experiment, that there could be a number of projects in the field.

Granted we have not the time. You need ten or twenty years but in one or two years or three or four or five years you are going to find out some things if you have a proper design and proper competence in the administration.

We suggest Boards representing the poor themselves, organized labour, business, social scientists, professional and voluntary welfare personnel, local government, public administrators, and if there could be a national framework—there could be a number—whether three or 30—we do not suggest specifically—if there could be a number of well-designed programmes and experimental frame of reference involving millions of dollars, maybe $100 million annually...

You see, the late Mr. Howe said "What is a million dollars?" What is ten million, you know, in relation to a $6 billion programme which is regarded as unsatisfactory today and in relation to a new kind of ad hoc first principle new programme worked out by debates through first principles, without this kind of down to earth approach.

It is true, of course, certain programmes like this are being initiated in the United States but we require Canadian experience (a) to extend the body of knowledge and (b) for information and education of ourselves.

The Chairman: Senator Eudes.

Senator Eudes: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Mr. Henson, on page 94, paragraph 140, you start out by saying, and I quote:

It is obvious that limited education and poverty interact to perpetuate each other and that earning power is restricted by limited education. If the poor could increase their educational level, they would stand a good chance of increasing their income and of lifting themselves out of poverty. The Nulife Study Reports, that over 50 per cent of the low-income group states that their reason for leaving school is financial. Less than 17 per cent of the comparison group indicate that they left school for financial reasons. Over 90 per cent of the low-income group started their first permanent job before the age of 21.

Then you go in paragraph 142, and you say:

Free elementary and secondary education is of little value to the poor, if they cannot avail themselves of it. Although it 'costs' the poor nothing to attend school or to participate in training programmes, the low income family needs the money which would be foregone if its children remained at school.

My question is this: how can we overcome this inability of the poor to take advantage of the free education, or do you feel that if allowance was given to those attending either high school or university up to the age of 21, they would be better equipped and they would not go out on these near-poverty line wages; or do you feel that the loans in their present forms are not adequate for that need?

When I speak of loans, I am speaking of the university level, because high school is free.

Mr. Henson: My personal view is that university education should be free. I may or may not be in the minority view here but at least I am in very good company from the capitalistic point of view.

The Chairman: You are in good company with Joey Smallwood. He can't be all wrong.

Mr. Henson: One of the most powerful advocates of free university education was Bernard Baruch and he, and, if I am not mistaken, Joe Lasoc, and a number of other famous people, had a wonderful opportunity, the privilege of receiving a free education from the City colleges of New York City.

And if anyone wants—whether they call it the capitalistic, conservative or any other point of view, a better statement of the case then I recommend Bernard Baruch.

The Chairman: Where will you find him at the moment?

Mr. Henson: Well, I should say to his legacy of writing which can be found, sir. I can endeavour to supply it to you. I think I have it somewhere.

You know, there was a proposal for $10,000 scholarship that was never acted upon.

The Chairman: Ten thousand scholarships, not $10,000.

Mr. Henson: Did I say dollars? I meant to say scholarships.

The Chairman: I remember it was the Liberal Party suggested that.

Mr. Henson: Whatever the party, it was not acted upon and this is a matter of disappointment and frustration to a great many people.

The other thing, I think, goes even deeper. You have environment, home and neighbourhood. Where is the child to study? What is happening in the home? What is the condition of the parents?

I do not mean to say that poor children in some ways are not better off than those of well-to-do families who are coming and going to cocktail parties and all the rest of it, but poor children live in homes and neighbourhoods or they tend to live in homes which do not encourage or inhibit the development of good habits of study; mental intellectual interest, exposures of all kind.

The best piece of writing of which I know—I used to know the literature here perhaps ten years ago but I don't know now; but the best piece of writing that I am aware of is a statement which is not as yet published (which will soon be published by Dr. Clairmont, who is here) with respect to the situation of the black people and the children in three Guysborough communities and the handicaps under which they operate.

The poor attitudes—this whole complex of forces which is part of the locking-in business, that everyone seems to recognize, at least as a generality.

There are a number of proposals made in Dr. Clairmont's section on education which I think get to the heart of the problem. Of course, there is a great deal of effort being put forth both in the United States and Canada through special enriching experimental programmes designed to enable children particularly to lift themselves up and participate in the main stream of our society.

We may or may not have a very worthy society and I will be glad to make a case against it at any time, but at any rate it is presumably better to participate in the society that we have or else do something about it.

The alternatives are either to participate in it or bowl it over if you can, so that this is the kind of approach. This is the kind of, this is the kind of thinking, I believe, which lies behind the statement that poor children are not able adequately to benefit from elementary or secondary education.

The Chairman: Senator Inman.

Senator Inman: Mr. Chairman, I also would like to congratulate the members of the staff of the Institute of Public Affairs for this very interesting and informative brief.

On page 95, paragraph number 142—this is supplementary to Senator Belisle's question—you say:

Free elementary and secondary education is of little value to the poor.

Now, I am wondering why this is so. Of course we know to a certain extent; but the family allowance is to stop if the children do not attend school. Is the amount so small it is not worthwhile considering, and is this law being adequately enforced? Is it a lack of clothing or is it that the children of teenage have to work to contribute something to the family finances?

I see here on page 30, section 49, you say:

In general, the heads of low-income families left school early for financial reasons. Over 93 per cent of them held their first permanent job before they were 20 years old, in contrast with 40.4 per cent of the comparison group.

Now, have you any thoughts regarding the solution to the inability of the poor to take advantage of free education in the elementary or secondary level?

Mr. Henson: I believe, Honourable Chairman, I would not try to add anything further to my own comments on the nature of the problem but to call on one or two other members of the Institute staff group.

Dr. Clairmont might speak perhaps with respect to the Guysborough situation, and Dr. Moffatt, the former Deputy Minister of Education who is well aware of the kinds of problems. I would ask Dr. Clairmont if he would say a word about the problems as he has encountered them.

Dr. Clairmont: I am sorry. I am deaf. I didn't get that question.

Mr. Henson: It was really, if I may rephrase, why the public education system is not more effective. The schools are there. The teachers are there. The books are there. Why are the children of poor families not benefiting to the extent of children of more well-to-do families, and to the extent that everybody thinks in general they ought to be able to benefit.

Dr. Clairmont: Well, in the case of the black population of Guysborough County, with which I have had some contact, part of the problem there is that these people have never really had an opportunity.

In a sense, they are a much worse off than the white poor or the poor in some urban centres because throughout history you have a problem there of inadequate teaching, segregated schools, a problem of no place at home study and so forth.

This is a very exploited population, the black population in Guysborough Township. There is no other way in which to discuss them other than the fact they were unfortunately involved in a racist society in Nova Scotia and this is reflected in the type of education that they have received.

When I went to study this particular population, the situation was so blatantly bad—that this was 1964-1965—that it was hard, as it were, to get a picture of the real problems of education among the poor because this group was very, very oppressed indeed.

Since that time they have done something in Guysborough County. They initiated programmes like Headstart and they de-segregated some of the schools, although not all of them, but it is quite clear that if you went back this summer the situation has not improved too much.

I think it is getting, up in Guysborough County, now that the exploitation has diminished, the problems of the black people are being more like those of the white poor and with respect to our educational system, it doesn't work.

It seems to me that now it might be possible to say something about the black people of Guysborough County which has generalized implications.

I think one of the most important things is the fact that when you have children whose parents are themselves not educated and when those parents are poor, it is not a very appropriate climate for poor children to develop and to participate meaningfully in the educational system to the extent it becomes a rewarding experience for them.

For most of the people in Guysborough County, most of the black people who are going to school there, the educational system tends to be very much a punishing one, particularly after they leave the elementary segregated school to go into the integrated schools of Guysborough County where the teachers are white, where the people are a little better off, where they can dress better. They have more experience that they share with the teachers and so forth.

As a result when these kids go to the integrated junior high school it is a very, very painful experience for them.

On the other hand, what they have back in their community is a fairly developed system of reward which offers them a great deal of opportunity. There are all kinds of games, all kinds of relations with people that are fairly highly established. They participate in these in a very meaningful way and the pressure of this reward system in the community seems to be much greater than that which you find in the schools.

So I rather think that part of the problem therefore is that when it comes to the poor, we generally think about providing adequate services at some fixed point in time. This generally follows a history of oppression and neglect and rather than doing something which will attempt to alleviate the stresses of this background we just talk in terms of equal educational resources and this I think is very inadequate.

The poor should be getting the best teachers because they need them the most. The poor should be getting the best educational facilities because they need them the most. The poor should be getting more than the white middle class and should be involved. The community should be involved in the educational process. None of these things happen.

We have a system of rewards in society generally which directs the best resources and the best teachers to the best off people. I mean, it seems to me to be quite clear that is the case.

So with respect to my own experience in the Guysborough black population, among these people, they never had an equal opportunity although it is very, very recently getting a little more equal.

As it gets more equal the general problem of education of the poor becomes evident in their case as well and the thing is they are just not getting anywhere near the kind of attention and resources and adequate teachers and specialized tutors and so on that they need.

The Chairman: Thank you very much. We have here on the platform a very, very distinguished gentleman, the former Deputy Minister of Education, Dr. Moffatt. Do you feel you would be inclined to give us a few words? Have you something to say on this submission?

Dr. Moffatt: I did not think that I was going to be here in the first place or to speak in the second place, and I have a dentist's appointment in three minutes time.

The Chairman: You have three minutes then.

Dr. Moffatt: I think Dr. Clairmont has summed up the situation in respect to the individual poor child in a disadvantaged community. I cannot add anything to that.

I just look at it from an historical perspective. Speaking of the poor in general as being the working poor people with low incomes, they are divided into the rural poor and the urban poor.

It can be stated I think pretty clearly that 30 years ago for the rural poor—that is the working poor who had low incomes—there just were not adequate educational facilities for anybody, rich or poor, in rural areas.

In the large urban communities there was relative equality of opportunity, but there was this society that Dr. Clairmont mentioned that in the poorer parts of the cities, the schools were rather run down and shabby. They tended to put the beginning teachers, the inexperienced teachers and the poor teachers in the poor communities and so on. Whether this is discrimination, I don't know, but looking at it historically the situation has changed tremendously in the last 30 years, and particularly in the last ten years.

In 1950 only 30 per cent of the average grade 3 class reached grade 11 in Nova Scotia. The figure now is about 65 per cent.

In other words, one of the factors of lack of opportunity which bore most heavily on the poor was the inadequacy and narrowness of the school programme; you had an academic elementary education followed by an academic high school education and the poor were not oriented to that type of education. They felt they were shut out from it, and until we broadened our programme at the junior high school level and the senior high school level to include general courses, vocational training programmes and a semi-vocational training programme and adult education, there was in fact not a conscious discrimination but a factual discrimination against them because the opportunities were not available for the kind of programmes they needed.

That is all I can say on the matter now. I have to go.

The Chairman: All right, thank you doctor.

Mr. Harvey, have you something to add to this?

Mr. Harvey: I will just take a second here. I think this is a very good point which brings up the interrelatedness of most of the issues which we have treated in our brief; housing, transportation, working and so on, because you have a situation where the student has crowded facilities, crowded housing because the family is poor. He can't study.

Elsewhere in the brief we show where the poor are heavily dependent on public transportation. They don't have the opportunity to get to many of the recreational facilities where they might be able to study, or they are not able to get to the libraries to use the reference materials to the extent that the middle income people are able to. They have to leave school earlier to get to work.

The attack on the problem then has to be one of attacking transportation, making it possible for them to get the materials that they need, to get the housing, to supporting the family with some sort of guaranteed income, so that the family is not dependent on the income from this child, and then providing the child with the money he needs for his education.

The Chairman: Well, we are getting close to our finishing time and the Chairman has a question, and anybody can take a crack at it, Mr. Henson, and you can call for all the help you like on this one.

We as a country have social measures that are comparable with any country in the world, right from the beginning of the old-age pension in 1927, unemployment insurance, the various universal acts, old age security down to pensions and Medicare. I know of no other country that has anything quite as comparable.

Tell me now: why do we have such a great incidence of poverty and welfarism in this country? Wherein have we failed?

Mr. Henson: Honourable Chairman, you have asked the most profound of questions. I would have to go to the philosophers and the moralists, you know, before you have all this with you.

If you want an easy answer or if you want to salve our consciences or if you want a Calvinistic idea of the few elite, you know, the not so fortunate...

The Chairman: Give it to us in the raw. Let us have it.

Mr. Henson: You will find other countries, the Scandinavian countries, and you will find rural communities in North America, in Canada and in Nova Scotia where there is very little poverty.

But we have a condition that has to be sought in the values in our society and in the economic social history.

You know, you are asking a very searching question. I am tempted to ask (but it would be improper) how many members of this Committee have read, for example, Upton Sinclair's book "The Jungle"?

The Chairman: I am sure all of them have at one time or another; a little out-dated.

Mr. Henson: Not at all, sir, not at all, if I may dissent.

The Chairman: All right.

Mr. Henson: "The Jungle" described the destruction of magnificent Yugoslav people with great qualities, willing to work and to share; warm, cultured people who went into the stock yards and went into the slums of Chicago and had their eye-teeth cheated out of them or exploited.

You know what Upton Sinclair said about the net effect of that book. He said he aimed at the heart of America but it hit America in the stomach because the housewives and the rest of us good people got concerned about the impurities of food coming out of the stock yard.

Well now, where are those Yugoslav people who were destroyed as citizens and as functioning persons, which they were, when they got to Chicago? Will you find them still in the slums of Chicago or the slums of Montreal or the slums of Halifax?

So I am saying that in our particular socio-economic history we have had forces of exploitation. You don't have to go further than Cape Breton Island to see one of the most damning pieces of evidence of the result of unbridled industrialization where we had people moved in from the farms. They were brought in from Britain and what happened to the people is that their minds were worn out without adequate food supply, without adequate provisions.

I am not laying the blame to private industry or to government. I am just saying we didn't have the foresight. We had a city which is referred to as "Fringeville"; 28 families who are practically outcasts down on the south shore of town. How did they get there?

There was a shipowner and a very capable fellow, about 100 years ago more or less, according to the local people—we have not got this fully documented. He faced a very difficult problem. He needed the cheapest kind of labour to clean out the bilges of the old sailing ships.

He brought these people in and settled them in on the edge of town and this group went down, down, down.

With welfare provisions, I am told by people who have observed this Fringeville over 30 to 40 years, actually there has been a great deal of improvement in their situation through family allowances and some of the things that will provide a floor to enable them to participate and hold their heads up and get to school and to dress and do all these things which we take for granted.

The Chairman: Pardon me. Are they still working at the same job, cleaning out the bilges.

Mr. Henson: No. The bilges of sailing ships are gone, but that was the major source of employment in this town for 30 years.

However, they were outcasts. They would not be acceptable either by management or other areas, but today they are as a result of certain programmes of public housing and so forth, and as a result of the concern of the people themselves there is improvement.

I suggest there are also cultural differences. We like to call it a cultural lag because we regard our way of life as normal and superior. We are in this technical and competitive society. I don't know but I think this has to do with it. I think some of the cultural lagging of some of the people, the Indians, the blacks and others who have warmth and feeling for each other which we do not have. . .

So I go back to this question basically that we have to go to the philosophers and the moralists or the anthropologists, the socio-economists, the sociologists, the political scientists for insights but in the end it has been and it is a matter of values.

I think that all of us have not particularly given a damn, and not many damns. Well, there is a lot of charity for which we pay taxes. Well, Marie Antoinette said "Let them eat bread." We say "Let them have public housing. It is not good enough."

The Chairman: They had cake.

Mr. Henson: Pardon me, cake. We are very fortunate to have such a knowledgeable Chairman, you know.

I am finished with this point, but I would invite my colleagues to say whatever they wish. Either we wanted it this way or else we have been sufficiently satisfied so that it stayed this way, and we have not been prepared to recognize it. We have not made a collective judgment as individuals, as people.

I am talking about what is an adequate environment for man, for you and me and our children and all the rest. We have got to have this insight but we would rather have three cars and pretty soon we will have four-car garages and five or ten T.V. sets, one in every room.

We would rather have this type of civilization, so I come back to the fact it is a matter of values.

You know, Mr. Stevenson came into Halifax—there is a reference to all of this—12 years ago and there have been humanitarian appeals for slum clearance which fell on deaf ears. We can't afford it. We are over-taxed and this, that and the other.

Mr. Stevenson did in a way what Upton Sinclair did. He went out, family by family, block by block, neighbourhood by neighbourhood, drew maps, had some calculations and said this is the cause of delinquency. This, this, this and this.

The community is paying a high price for slums. The people who live in the slums are paying a high price, you see, for their accommodation. They could get a lot better accommodation if we had better social arrangements in the community.

Slum landlords—well, I do not see any point in making scapegoats. All I am saying is that the Stevenson report led to public housing. It led to great slum clearances which after one or two false starts did generate a programme of action.

What I want to say is, if we can see this in correct values and make right determinations, we will be better off as people and we will be better off economically than if we allow this morass to carry on.

The Chairman: Quickly now. Is there anyone who would like to add anything? It has been such a useful hearing.

Mr. Harvey: Just one quick comment, and here again I think the welfare programmes that we have had like Topsy have just grown. We did not relate one programme necessarily to another programme. What is necessary is as I mentioned when I was here before, that all of these things are interrelated. All the welfare programmes have to be interrelated.

We found out in Energy, Mines and Resources when they were going into rural areas showing the people how to get more money out of the land, and you had welfare people going out and moving them out into different communities, so we had two government programmes working against each other.

We have to relate all the programmes and if we relate them to one another then maybe we can get some value for our dollar.

The Chairman: Just quickly because I see we are way behind.

Senator Sparrow: Mr. Chairman, we have had many definitions of poor and poverty and in the brief there was a definition of poor. Does anyone on the Committee or can any one of those who have prepared the brief give us a definition of rich? We haven't had one yet.

Poverty as set out here states adequate food, shelter and clothing. So on the basis of an income of $3,000 that doesn't mean someone who makes $3,100 is rich. We have obtained many demands by people who say take from the rich and give to the poor. Is there such a thing and what do you consider a definition of being rich is in the Canadian society?

Mr. Henson: Before I venture a comment, I will see if anyone else wishes to say anything.

We are concerned with people who are in poverty and have a minimum income. But may I say this? Maybe Ralph Galbraith's name was mentioned improperly. I have quoted it here.

About 12 years ago he received a request to write a book on why people are poor, 12 or 14 years ago. I tried at the time to get a copy of the book.

At any rate, in the Atlantic Monthly a couple of months ago he explained why he didn't write it. He reviewed the theme of the affluent society as we all know it. In other words, he thought it was more creative or productive or useful to say "Well, how can we become affluent?" "What are the main considerations to the affluent society?"

And, of course, he has turned the question how can the poor rise in the level of affluence. So richness does not automatically bring in poor. They are alienated and locked out. So he addresses himself to this problem now in practical terms.

What is poverty, poorness, marginality, minimum degree of comfort and right up to Mr. Onassis' level or something of that kind.

We have not gone into that kind of exercise to adequately deal with richness. How do you define richness? It is more or less self-defining but is it relevant?

Senator Sparrow: I think the problem is if we wish to bring up the level of affluence or richness, society should try to bring up the lower level to the people of affluence rather than bringing the affluence down to the level of the poor as such or to a happy medium.

I think society should be endeavouring to lift from the bottom up rather than stretch up from the top down or from the bottom up, if it can be done.

Mr. Henson: This is the approach in the brief, sir.

Dr. Clairmont: We have not got around to discussing the last 50 pages of the brief which was the production of myself and Mr. MacLean particularly on the black population of Nova Scotia.

We talked about the poverty of the rural farm worker, but where it becomes important, I think, is that we should examine some of the policies that the government is engaged in in Nova Scotia.

Because it seems to me, as I indicated in the brief, that the economic policies of the government are failing in Nova Scotia, and that rather than eliminating poverty, may in fact be maintaining that poverty, may in fact be creating a state of exploitation among the rural and farm poor.

I know we have not got enough time to go into it here. I think the problem of the rural poor and the black and white poor and the exploitation is the function to some extent of the different policies that have been maintained and by our economic policies.

Another thing very quickly. One of the conclusions we reached in our submission was simply that this is an involuntary restraint society and one of the ways to eliminate restraint is to encourage progressive relationships among people.

We think this is the kind of thing that may lead to the elimination of restraint and these two suggestions are very critical. We have not covered them at all in the last 50 pages of the brief.

The Chairman: The Black United Front are speaking to us. You can help them out this afternoon if you can make yourself available. You can help them out.

May I just say this on behalf of the Committee to you, Mr. Henson, and to every member of your Committee here how useful and how helpful your brief was. Moreover, it is a signal to others across the country of what can be done and it points out the way, as you said a few moments ago, the concern of citizens and others. That is a very important thing.

Now, on behalf of the Committee, all I can tell you is you stand tall in our estimation. Thank you very much.

The next brief we have is submitted by the Black United Front. Mr. Carlyle Warner, Senior Long Range Planner for the City of Halifax and Chairman of the Black United Front is an economist and planner, and will speak for the Committee.

He has here with him Dr. W. B. Oliver, regional representative; Mr. Jules Oliver, chief of the Human Rights office in Nova Scotia, Human Rights Commission; Mr. Jesse Dillard, Director of Recreation in Halifax and Secretary-Treasurer of the Black United Front, and Mrs. Carrie M. Best, economist, freelance writer and researcher of the black man in Nova Scotia and a number of Human Rights projects.

I understand that Mr. Warner will speak first.

Mr. Carlyle Warner, Chairman, Black United Front: Honourable chairman, senators, ladies and gentlemen, the Black United Front will commence its presentation with a videotape and follow it with a narrative, and then we will field questions from the Senate Committee.

(Videotape shown to Senate Committee)

The Chairman: Honourable senators, the Chairman of the Black United Front has a two-page brief which will go on the record.

Mr. Warner: Honourable chairman, senators, ladies and gentlemen, we have got to zero in on the insidious problem of poverty in our social system, and in doing so we have got to address ourselves to a value system.

Let us take, for instance, a particular case which I mentioned in another place the last time. Our social system decides to reward a garbage collector who, as a result of doing the job efficiently, protects the community from an epidemic.

In juxtaposition it elects to reward a public health doctor who treats the epidemic which is caused by the malfeasance or non-feasance on the side of the garbage collector or what-have-you at the rate of $10 a visit or what-have-you, so what do you have—a wealthy doctor and a poor garbage collector; but the doctor would not be able to accumulate his wealth if the garbage collector was functioning efficiently. There is dignity in that type of labour and it is as important, I submit, as the public health doctor.

I would submit that the garbage collector is an arm of preventive medicine, and society might re-arrange its value system in rewarding people for their labour based on the fact that they have got to live in the society and that the contribution of each individual in the social contract is terribly significant and goes a far way in making the social system work.

The other point to which I would like to address myself is the problem of economic leakage of programmes which go into minority communities, black communities or what-have-you. It is wonderful. Send in some white social workers or get delivery into your area or black area—send in some white carpenters. They buy their lumber from a white supplier.

You may get some houses in the black community but what is happening? If each unit costs $10,000, $9,600 is leaked into the white community and there is not any capital left in a society to generate any self-sustaining growth.

It is a part of the identical problem of colonialism. I think if the programmes are zeroed in on poor people and minorities, due consideration should be taken of the fact that if they are allowed to participate in the work endeavours of these programmes, set up co-ops to buy lumber and what have you.

You can train people in management and you can train people in other trades and as a result of the programme you have left in the community not only some shelter but people with a microism of training who then can be integrated into other adult education programmes.

You then have launched your vessel of human resource development which can assist in integrating the strident poor in the minority groups into the main stream of society.

In my relationship in BUF and other organizations, similar organizations, I have learned to recognize that you can only get your message over to the top structure when you talk in terms of the Bible.

Well, I submit to you that the type of programme I am talking about will remove black people from being tax receivers and convert them into tax payers.

You might say "Well, what do you do, how do you help develop that sort of thing?" You are unaware of the tax burden which you are so beholden about when you look at your own different welfare programmes which come from your pseudo-altruism and might look munificent and become relevant, but I submit to you that the true goal of any welfare system, any welfare programme is to make that particular programme irrelevant and have no significant in the social system.

It appears to me that we have begun to treat our human beings in our productive system as part of the industrial waste. Our poor are the industrial waste of our industrial society and you are now getting interested in solid waste and air pollution.

I submit to you that your task force Committee should address itself to the human waste of the industrial system, the poor. Thank you.

The Chairman: Well, Senators, are there any questions?

Senator McGrand: Of the 20 or more black communities in Nova Scotia, are the blacks in the smaller communities better or worse off on the average than they are in Halifax?

Mr. Warner: The difference is miniscule, not socially significant.

The Chairman: You do say here in your brief, and I gather from what you are saying is that these communities you are talking about are predominantly consisting of school-age children and old people. What you are trying to tell us is that the fathers particularly have left the community to go out and see if they can get a job some other place and the families remain behind. Is that what you are saying?

Mr. Warner: Not necessarily. What you have really is what I will call the aggressive segment of your labour force, that 18 to 35 age group out-migrate into the areas where they can find work. So what you have left in the community is the elderly and the young and the communities to some extent do not have bred into them the pre-conditions by which they can pick themselves up by their bootstraps.

I would invite Dr. Oliver to assist with some remarks on my rebuttal.

Dr. W. B. Oliver: I think the question is very relevant to this whole matter of well-being of the black people in Nova Scotia.

I think it has a bearing on the ongoing development of the people.

We find that there is a sector that migrates because of the fact that they are unable to be employed, and it is my feeling they are unemployed because of the difficulty to break into—shall we say—from the unskilled to the skilled sector.

The historic pattern has been for the development of black people to sort of move from the unskilled to the professional.

Now, there may be a number of reasons for this; this evasion of the skilled technical sector. It could be a multiple of things, but this has been the pattern, and the feed-back I received is that these people who migrated to the larger areas where there are more jobs in the unskilled or semi-skilled sector, are happier and they are making great progress.

The Chairman: Doctor, is it not the history of all minority groups that they move from the unskilled to the professional because they are then not dependent on anyone for employment, they being in the professional group? They do not have to work with an engineer or chemical engineer or others where they have to be part of a large organization. Is that not the history?

Dr. Oliver: That is partially true. I think there may be another factor, sir, and that is the social aspect.

As human beings, black people have many other needs. Basically their first need is for food, shelter and clothing, a sense of security, but there is also this greater need called "being accepted."

Social status is attached to certain vocations and professions so in order to overcome the embarrassment and pain of the social stigma, the carpenter's son becomes a social worker. The steelworker's son becomes a medical doctor or psychiatrist—he skips this stage.

The Chairman: But that is good.

Dr. Oliver: Oh, of course it is, except that we have to find ways and means to feed the financial resources to provide this type of academic training.

Skilled workers have a fair economic base upon which to educate their children and this is probably the reason why we have been encouraging scholarship funds, bursary funds. We are touching service, but if we are going to raise the standards of black people it is going to be through realizing the fact and recognizing the fact of racial prejudice.

The Chairman: Of which?

Dr. Oliver: Of racial prejudice. The only way, if we are going to leave that stage as it is, the answer is in higher education.

The Chairman: Well now, if any of the Senators wish to ask a question they may do so.

Senator Pearson: I would like to ask a question.

The Chairman: Yes.

Senator Pearson: In Nova Scotia, is there any industrial area where the blacks own the whole corporation and are building it up?

Dr. Oliver: Not that I know of.

Senator Pearson: Well then, why can't you with your higher education? You have got some engineers and a few are well educated now. Why not start a co-operative industry where the blacks control the whole situation?

Mr. Warner: Might I suggest that is what the Black United Front is attempting to address itself to.

Senator Pearson: Is that right? That is what I think. Instead of always working for the white man and looking for the white man to help you, build yourself up by your own industries.

Dr. Oliver: That is the basic philosophy, sir, of the Black United Front; self-determination.

Senator Pearson: Yes.

Senator McGrand: Where would you get the capital to do this?

Mr. Warner: That was the very question I was about to pose. You have got to control the lending—you have got to have the empathetic consideration of the lending institutions and you need programmes like the Small Business Administration in the United States.

I gather that black people are supposed to not have good credit in entrepreneurial activities and this sort of thing, because they are not supposed to be entrepreneurs; this is the image one has with bankers.

So these are the sort of things your Committee wants to address itself to.

Senator Pearson: Yes. If you form your co-operative, the co-operative then goes to the bank and puts their case before them.

Mr. Warner: We are entering a period in industry based on third-generation industry.

Senator Pearson: Yes.

Mr. Warner: We want large pools of capital to play in this major league. If you are talking about a blacksmith shop, fine, but to participate in the electronic industry or this sort of stuff, you don't do that with a little co-op.

Senator Pearson: Little co-ops started in Saskatchewan with the local stores et cetera. People joining little stores and then they got into the oil and gas business and they are gradually moving up into what they call a federated co-operative now, and they are building up a whole lot of lines of industry.

Mr. Warner: We have been gradually building up, Mr. Senator, for 200 years. We now want to take off.

We look at the particular economy and we know it about a decade behind the U.S. economy in cycle of growth. We see the U.S. economy moving up out of secondary manufacturing into third-generation industrial research and development. We know that is where the game is and that is where we want to play. That is where the major league is. We want to enter the industrial society and enjoy the last phase of the nuptial society in the cycle of its economy, and we want to be ready for the third-generation industrial society.

This gradualism is over. We want to take off. We want to join the major leagues. We are not interested in playing the professional because we know that in the service-oriented society of tomorrow, the high service industry, the blue collar worker and so on—you know you see it in the wage settlements. Sometimes I feel like taking the equivalent education into the auto industry and do bloody well better than I do as a professional planner. We want to participate where the grapes are more luscious too.

The Chairman: What are you doing to qualify yourselves for these luscious grapes?

Mr. Warner: That is what we are asking you to do.

The Chairman: Do what?

Mr. Warner: Programmes like the Small Business Administration in the States.

The Chairman: Wait a minute. Just take a minute. We have the Small Business Administration in Canada and it is a very well-run organization. Take my word for it. We have it.

It is not as big at the States. It has been there for years and it is very helpful. Go ahead, what else?

Mr. Warner: Actually entering into vocational education, technical education, recognizing the black people are being disadvantaged and we can't foot the bills to enter some of these programmes.

Across the street from me there is a lady from Poland who was in a prisoner of war camp and went to school at the age of 10 for the first time. She is at Dalhousie working on her Masters in German Literature.

Now, she probably was disadvantaged and what have you, you know, but she got the programmes.

I have got a colleague who was in a prisoner of war camp in Malaya and went to school at 9 and is a planner with the City here. We want to get some of these compensatory programmes that will get us to take off.

Senator McGrand: If you had the money to start a co-operative, in what field of endeavour would your co-operative operate?

Mr. Warner: Well, I would suggest to you that there is an interesting service industry that I can think of that is necessary in this community and if I were to mention it, one of my colleagues will get in before I can, or our competition would get in.

Senator Belisle: Mr. Chairman, the witness just said he would like to have technical and vocational training. Is technical and vocational training not available in this province to every colour and creed?

Mr. Warner: Well, as a result of some activities in the field there seem to be some problems in getting admission. In fact, just yesterday at a particular community I was in, my attention was drawn to a particular kid who would like to pursue vocational technical education and he is experiencing some problems.

In fact we have six—the BUF is attempting to place six people at the present time.

Senator Belisle: Well, do you have a Human Rights Commission?

The Chairman: No. I don't think we can go back on that tack. I don't think he is suggesting there is any such thing.

What problem is involved here, I was just going to ask you that question—perhaps the boy hasn't enough education for whatever he may want to take, and they may have suggested something else to him. That often happens.

Mr. Warner: We do not yet have all the information to speak to the specific issue. Rather than be inaccurate, I would prefer to only place before the Committee the information I have that there are six people in a particular community who are interested, and for some reason—there is a technical school in the particular area, and there are some problems. I do not know the nature of them at this point. In probably another week I probably could reply to you by mail.

The Chairman: As a matter of fact, Senators, when we finish this afternoon we are going over to the Manpower office. We are going to have a very interesting time there, and we are going to have a good look at what ticks there. Save you questions for over there.

We felt there was something in the air here that we didn't know about technical training. We did not particularly have it from the point of view of the black people.

Mr. Warner: I think another issue is very relevant here, the question of the guaranteed income or negative income tax, and the attitude of the welfare programmes that discourages incentive, and do not assist in encouraging people to participate fully in the system.

In fact, they penalize them, and these are some of the areas that your Committee might want to address its attention to.

The Chairman: Well, you address our attention to it. The guaranteed income, I can assure you, with all due modesty, that the members of this Committee know more about the guaranteed income than any ten people in Canada at the present time.

They know all that is going on in the American experiment and we have had our people sleeping with them over there, living with them over there and anything that is going on we know in our country.

We have had two experts there all the time so we know what is happening in the experiment too.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Chairman, if I may suggest to you with all due respect, knowledge is one thing but the application of the knowledge is what we seek. The application of this knowledge in the implementation of programmes.

The Chairman: Yes, but you can't apply the knowledge until such time as you know you have got the knowledge.

At the moment they have got an experiment going on which is costing the very slight sum of $4 billion. That is all it is costing them over there.

Since we haven't got that kind of money we are just watching alongside and getting the benefits of it. We have seen all kinds of people. We are not jumping into anything. We are waiting to see what that looks like, although we have in our own country already experience with the guaranteed income. We have had it for two years.

Senator Hastings: Mr. Chairman, would you speak into the microphone, please.

The Chairman: I am sorry. I say we have had it for two years, so we have some knowledge in this country about these things.

Now, specifically what else would you like us to look at?

Mr. Warner: At this point I would like to invite some of my colleagues to participate and speak to some of the issues. They would like to have an opportunity to speak to such an august group.

The Chairman: You are doing very well.

Mr. Dillard: I will try to be brief.

I would just speak to a couple of things that I jotted down as I was listening to the other brief.

One is, I think, the question which asked "What is poor and what is rich in the Canadian society?" Well, from the mass media of television, what we see in commercials are not poor people shopping. We see upper-middle class people buying the break-away cars and the buggies full of groceries, and most people in deprived areas have televisions and they see this and to them this is it.

You know, the big car, able to wear the Elephants or the bell bottom pants and this sort of thing, and the only real thing that we see of poverty on television beside documentaries are Unitarian relief camps.

That to me is a sign that we are depicting the good life when for some people, yes, but for the people that do not see it quite this way, they don't see much else, and they are not able to get out of that area to get into the good life.

Just Saturday I was talking to a member of a labour union who said he was making $20,000 a year. He was working four to five days. I made the enquiry as to how I could get into the field because I am working longer than that and I am sure you are too.

And if this is in fact a fact, then we are discouraging people—management is discouraging people from seeking the higher education because this guy only had a grade 10 education because they can make more money.

The most important thing appears to be getting bread on the table and you only get that on there by working.

Lastly, the educational system as it is now appears to be geared towards the upper-middle class or middle class strata of society and we are approaching the age of computers and the four-day work week is fast approaching. So it means that there are going to be a lot of people not working.

There won't be jobs for them unless they are technically trained, so what are we producing? I think that we should try and step up our educational system to prepare people for the future rather than the present and I think that we will only get the answers—I do not have any answers as to how we would approach this but I can say it is a problem that some time in our lifetime it will be in all probability a pleasure to work as opposed to now being a pleasure to enjoy leisure.

And I think we are going to have to do something about that, not only for blacks but for everybody.

The Chairman: Thank you.

Mr. Warner: Mrs. Best, do you want to make a statement?

Mrs. Best: Mr. Chairman and senators, ladies and gentlemen, I am not going to give a sob-sister approach to this Committee. I realize that being a woman I may have a different view on poverty than some of the men here.

I have been associated with it intimately for nearly half a century. I am speaking now as one who has been very deeply and intimately involved with black poverty, and I am suggesting there is a difference between black poverty and the poverty of a white man; that if you are white and poor you can overcome it in one generation.

In my work as an unpaid social worker I have seen it. I have seen a family of the most abject poverty rise in my community from a state of filth and dirt and degradation to leading citizens in my community, members of social clubs and just about what you would call the elite.

But, if you are black you can run but you simply cannot hide. You are doubly cursed as a black person because of this.

Now, I am suggesting—and further I would like to say I did not see that movie the other day but I would like to rise to the defence of Dr. Oliver. Perhaps my hearing has deceived me. I hope it has not.

Am I lead to believe that he was supposed to be the father—this is not for the press, please—of some of those illegitimate children?

I happen to know Dr. Oliver. I will personally vouch for his morality. I can realize the situation that one can get into. My name is Best. I am a director of BUF. Another director is Dr. Reverend Best, whom I have never seen before, and we are quartered sometimes at the same motel and it is rather embarrassing to hear the clerk say "Your husband is already in 108, Mrs. Best."

So I can understand just what poor Dr. Oliver must be going through. I just throw that in. I will vouch for his morality.

The point I was trying to make is this: that there is difference, as I said, between white poverty and black poverty, and poverty—I made a note of this—of black people is doubly degrading because of segregation, inferiority complex, the state of hopelessness that prevails among the black poor and the fact that they have no history.

Now, if you are wondering what history has got to do with poverty, I am submitting to you that it has a lot to do with it, because I live in a Scots community and I am rather amused sometimes at the festival of tartans when I see people who do not have one drop of Scotch blood down Front Street strutting.

Do you know what they say? It gives them a certain feeling of belonging. One man happens to be a member of the Jewish race. He actually wears a tartan on St. Andrew's Day.

I have been doing a bit of history of the blacks of Nova Scotia, and I can tell you with certainty there are a great many blacks who have more right to wear it than he has.

If I may take another moment. I believe it was Dr. Clairmont who said he was slightly deaf. He was working in the Guysborough area. Well, it so happens my forefathers came from that area and I passed through there two years ago for about a half an hour and I heard an awful lot.

I am not working in the Guysborough area and I am not slightly deaf, and someone else speaking of history referred to Topsy and when I listened I was not amused. I hope you get the point.

When I say that history is important to anyone, I think it is the most marvellous thing in the world that we were slaves. I cannot prove that my ancestors were slaves, but I sincerely hope so. I am delighted to have read about the degradation and lust and filth and de-humanization of my race because it proves one thing: that we are human beings, and given the chance we can compete with anyone. I hope my ancestors were slaves.

Now, we know where we are going and we know where we have come from, and we are on the way up. There is no power on earth that can keep a human being from ascending skyward. You can if you wish keep me in the gutter. You can do it. It has been done for 300 years, but one thing you must remember; to keep me here you must stay down there with me.

That is all I have to say.

The Chairman: Are there any questions from any of the Senators? If not, our time has expired.

Senator Belisle: May I, Mr. Chairman, just be permitted to say that when I asked the question I was not anti-black or anti anything.

The Chairman: Of course.

Senator Belisle: I wanted to know if there was discrimination.

The Chairman: Senator Belisle is one of the leaders in the fight and president of the University of Sudbury, so he has a great history of civil liberties.

When the brief starts, you can hardly foretell what will happen before you are finished so today we had some new views. We have had some intelligent and capable presentations.

Mrs. Best, it is exciting to hear you and to hear what you have to say. Be assured of one thing. We will help in any way that we can in order to fulfil some of the dreams you have, and the other people have. To us you are a very important Canadian minority. You have contributed a great deal; more than you think you have. As far as we are concerned you are Canadians and that is the way we want it to be. We do not need anything else.

You have got some special problems as Canadians and we will try and deal with them in the best way that we possibly can.

On behalf of the committee I thank you all for coming here today. This has been a very enjoyable presentation.

The next meeting is at 2 o'clock.

The meeting adjourned.

On resuming at 2 p.m.

The Chairman: I will now call this meeting to order. We have a brief prepared by the 11-A Class of Sydney Academy and the brief which all of you have before you is quite worthy of their elders and I am delighted as I am sure the other members of the Senate are by the example set by the young Canadians who have briefed themselves, expressed their views and at six o'clock this morning got on a bus and it took them six hours to get here.

In looking at them they are the freshest faces I have seen in a long time.

Well, feel free and easy here. The senators here are very distinguished Canadians who have many years of political life and community life and contributed much to Canada but they are no different than your uncles or grandfathers and his father who used to sit around and feel at ease. You are very welcome here.

All I can tell you is on behalf of the Committee using your own understandable language; it isn't quite senatorial language but we like the way we do your thing.

Now, on my right I have the spokesman for the Academy, Miss Patricia Graham.

Miss Patricia Graham, Class 11-A Sydney Academy: Mr. Chairman, Honourable senators, ladies and gentlemen, while speaking to a group of young people shortly before he died, Senator Robert Kennedy made substantial reference to the complexities and problems of the revolutionary world in which we live.

He decided that this generation had thrust upon it a greater responsibility than any other generation that has ever lived. He said that each time a man stands up for a principle or an idea or asked to improve the lot of others or start out against injustice he starts forth a tiny ripple of hope.

In effect that is why we are here today. When we accepted the challenge of assisting the organization, the organization of the Canadian politician, little did we know what we were getting into, but it wasn't long before we found out. It didn't seem feasible that we were coming here on common ground at the end of two weeks; but we were divided into seven committees each dealing with a vital link of poverty.

A representative of each one of the coordinating committee had a job to do—had to add and subtract and combine the material which we relied upon.

At the first meeting of the finishing committee an uproar slightly resembling pandemonium shook a number of students both to ways and ideas of their committee, and the way it had been represented in the brief. And naturally at this time total revision was impossible so that overnight a separate dissenting opinion along with 31 recommendations and other items were compiled.

It introduced a drawn-out meeting, the general half and sweat of it all was really worth it. It was really worth the effort to be here today to try and tell it like it really is.

The war on poverty should be a hot and furious war. The actions ultimately multiply to each and every corner of the nation. Our war with the generation gap should never have been allowed to grow in the first place which would create a large new neglect of which we should take our share of the blame.

The uniform set policy to rid poverty on a national scale could not be effectively carried out in each region with characteristics and problems which must be treated individually. In Cape Breton for example you don't have to look far in any direction to find poverty in its varying degrees. The truth is it has been taken for granted for too long.

Poor people are finding themselves in a profound disadvantage in that they are surrounded with the evidence of the so-called affluent society. The constant struggle to keep up with the Joneses and even to make ends meet ends in frustration and despair. What is definitely needed is a program some of which would even be included in the school curriculum which would provide knowledge of money management to those with a limited income.

Failure to agree in a family where money should go can easily result in overspending and there is a vast difference between the situation where the husband drinks and gambles compared to when he does not.

An increase in publicity and publication of all readily available management programs is needed. We have also recommended that a committee be set up to investigate the part played by finance and loan companies in their treatment and admonition of poverty.

Lower class citizens must be involved in the curriculum to the core of the community. Nothing will do more for them and have the lasting effect—until they are a functioning part of it. The same applies to the rural core even though they are outside society generally.

The society which we Canadians take pride in can never be complete until equal culture facilities are extended to every level and corner of our society. As it stands, many people cannot even afford money for anything as basic as swimming lessons. Such things are not luxuries but necessity in order to develop a rich and full society as a whole.

But the key to any successful war on poverty is individual participation. The government is not as effective as the individual citizen in getting local community action underway.

By the same token the individual citizen cannot organize national insurance programs and old age pension programs or national booster campaigns. That is the present situation. We need total cooperation if we are to win the war for after all the end objective is to ensure that adequate compensation is available for those who cannot cope with circumstances largely created by our fellow-man.

In the second annual report of the Economic Council of Canada emphasis was placed on the growing need for a drastic upgrading of education if Canadians are to cope with the kind of technological society developing around us today.

There are many breadwinners in this society who now recognize a drastic mistake of leaving school too early. This will often affect their children accordingly. One of the greatest assessments made by the Canadian Government of the post-war years was to establish central training centres often enabling these children to acquire a crash course through grades nine, ten and eleven over a period of eight to ten months and they would then have a certificate which would qualify them to enter into any university in Canada.

We suggest that the responsible departments of government think seriously of re-establishing this kind of school in specific areas at the same time provide participants with reasonable allowances to enable them to maintain families and other obligations.

In Cape Breton through the cooperation of Saddle College, the Provincial Department of Education and the Federal Department of Manpower, thousands of adults arrive at the classroom taking courses in basic history to complicated technology.

We must also remember that a great many people who make up unemployment figures are actually unemployable. This is because they lack the necessary training. It has been proven that lasting jobs contain more future if students become established in their fields and follow up.

Within the poverty circle greatest assimilation in the school especially during the formative years is a must in order to hold the interest of the students. Teachers must be qualified to deal with the situation due to a lack of interest on the part of the pupil. This should never be the case but we must do so because of financial reasons.

If everyone is to have the opportunity to progress at an equal rate a basic uniform education stand must be set up with the cooperation of the Federal Government and all the other provinces in Canada.

We also suggest that there is a direct relationship between education and prosperity. Between poverty and ignorance.

Housing is one of the greatest problems facing most families in Canada today particularly those in the Atlantic provinces whose housing requirements lag behind the rest of the country. The scarcity of money and high interest rates make it either impossible or prohibitive for those thousands of Canadian families to be housed in adequate decent surroundings. The home is the base on which an individual outlook on life is formed; physical and mental, working habits, emotional stability and attitudes are all likely to be influenced through housing conditions.

Development made in the entire community is effected by the absence of proper housing for everyone. Ninety per cent of the homes being built in Canada today provide housing for middle and upper class societies. Obviously we need an increase in low income and public houses in Canada.

Incidentally, just recently in a daily newspaper I read a curious paradox where a Canadian with a salary of $5,000 today is making too much money to meet the low rental housing needs; and too little to have a private home of his own.

The recommendation is taken to make more mortgage money available with lower down payments and lower interest rates. In March of 1966 the Honourable Allen McEachern,—the then minister of National Health and Welfare made what was possibly the first public reference to a guaranteed annual income for Canada. He indicated that his department was examining the possibility of applying this concept to old age pensions. Later in the same year this application was used by the Federal Government to provide a guaranteed income of $105 a month to all persons in receipt of old age security. That was for a specific identifiable group.

Surely the time has come to guarantee a certain annual income principle to the population generally, but we must do it today without destroying individual dignity. More than this we must take care ensure that we are not merely giving handouts but that we have a common interest with the hope of getting a worthwhile contribution in return.

We must also guard against the danger in giving the poor people more money for assistance in meeting the high cost of living and to eliminate this possibility a prices control board could be set up.

For 25 years now Canada has operated a family allowance program. It has undergone only minor changes since it came into being. It is time for a thorough review and to see how it might be updated to meet the needs of today.

If this system is to be continued, the allowance needs an upward revision. Greater consideration should be given to (a) individual circumstances and "(b)" the actual number of dependents in any one family.

We would also like to make some observations with respect to widows allowances. Under present legislation, the maximum a widow can receive a month is $175, whether she has two or 10 children. This amount is not fair.

Also, when a widow's child becomes 18 the benefits stop.

In the United States by comparison, widow's children receive benefits until they are finished school or college if they attend full-time. Charity in its broadest sense may be defined as love and care for one's neighbours. In the case of poverty, it means being prepared to spend time and patience in the belief that the benefits of human kindness would be shared by all. It is very easy to recognize the proof of poverty, but we want to bring to your attention other hidden problems.

The hidden poverty. The poverty of the mind, poverty of the spirit and poverty of the body. We must take remedial steps to eliminate the longing of our older people and the lack of motivation in our younger people. These are not problems that can be solved with money. They are obscure and elusive. They are found in the recesses of the mind and the back alleys of our towns.

We must find the ways and means to find the cause and find solutions to these problems. The present nation of health and strength of the population is surely the best of all the guarantees of a nation's power of progress and of its prosperity.

Our greatest asset is the health and well-being of our people. We need a just society, but it must be just for all.

Thank you very much.

The Chairman: Are there some questions? Does anybody have any questions?

Senator Hastings?

Senator Hastings: Mr. Chairman, the brief deals with and a great deal of consideration—has been given to education and to the poverty that has been associated with the lack of education. I wonder if the students have any views or observations with respect to a meaningful allowance to be paid in cases where students are in need of it to stay in school and continue their education. Indeed, being paid to go to school instead of leaving school and going into the labour market? Where they perpetuate low income. Did the students discuss this at all?

Miss Graham: Well, I would like Colin Matheson to comment on that.

Mr. Colin Matheson: I wouldn't exactly term it as payment for going to school. I wouldn't classify it as a payment; just sort of subsidizing a person for going to school. It costs money and if you are from a poor family, your family can't afford to send you to school. Naturally, they are going to want to get a return of money to put into—but a person who could really answer that would be Stanley Ardelli.

The Chairman: Well, young man, we have had come evidence here today given by Dalhousie University—knowledgeable people and one of the reasons we come to this province is that the family is working for poor wages and a young fellow goes out to try and earn enough money to help out the family and has no training and finds himself years later without skills—a drug on the market.

Now, what Senator Hastings, if I understand him correctly is saying, is that even going out there to earn whatever he is going to earn in the way of money to help the family, isn't it better that we should be paying him while he is going to school and making his grades and attending his classes so that we don't have to pay him later on to retrain him when he comes back four or five years later—paying him at the rate of $50 or $60 a week when he brings his wife and two children that he has acquired in the meantime.

That is the question—do you have any views on that?

Mr. Matheson: Well, that is a waste of money. That is a waste of money on the part of the Federal and Provincial Government to put a guy through a school and then bring him back in. I just didn't like the idea of calling it a payment or job or so. I didn't agree with that.

Senator Hastings: Well, I think it is a waste of money—maybe not a waste—I don't think that is the right connotation, but we are going to invest money in this man later in life in welfare and so forth and some sort of guaranteed minimum income. Wouldn't it be better to invest it now when he is 16 to 22 and keep him in school?

Mr. Matheson: Well, say the government put $5,000 into a guy's education at the time—well, if he can go out and instead of making say $10,000—you are getting tax on $10,000 and say he increases it to say about $30,000, the government will make such a great return on him it pays for it now. Also, you don't have as many people on welfare. You cut it right off at the stem.

Senator McGrand: Is it the experience of your group that young people drop out of school in order to help their parents and in your opinion what is the chief cause of school drop-outs?

Mr. Matheson: Well, I know of a particular person who had to drop out of school because his family was poor but he didn't drop out because he couldn't cope with the courses or anything. He had to go to night school and he finally became a doctor. The only reason he had to drop out was because of his family. They couldn't afford to keep him in school.

Senator McGrand: What I mean is in your work that you have done in preparing this excellent brief, you must have covered a lot of ground and had the experience of a lot of students and do you find in your experience—do you know of many students who dropped out of school to get a job to help their parents?

Mr. Matheson: I would say a few but quite a lot of drop-outs dropped out because they were frustrated by the courses they had to take.

Senator McGrand: Well, in your experience it is not common for children to drop out of school in order to help their parents. It was common years ago but I didn't think it was very common today. What do you have to say about that?

Mr. Matheson: I wouldn't say it is not common but in some cases—if you live in the country you have to get out of school in order to keep the family existing. But in some instances it's just that you don't want to take the courses and things like that.

Senator Pearson: On page 3 of your brief under "Education" the third paragraph you state:

At the present time, there are teachers within the system with normal College Education. Here are people, themselves only two or three years out of high school, running our learning institutions. Such young, uneducated persons with narrow outlooks on life are harmful rather than useful to the school system.

My question is do you feel that you should have middle aged or elderly teachers rather than young ones?

Mr. Matheson: Well, let's say it is not exactly your age. It is your attitude towards what you are doing. You can be a middle aged teacher and to put it mildly could be lousy. You can be a young teacher and you can be a great one. You are born a teacher.

Senator Pearson: I know quite a number of students who leave and learn how to teach. Their idea of doing this is because the educational system is what appeals to them because this was their main interest through high school and college and normal education. This is a chance of getting a job where they can further their education to get an M.A. or PhD. et cetera.

Have you any objections to those ones going into teaching of the junior grades?

Mr. Matheson: Well, as long as they are good teachers. If you want a PhD and you have to take a course...

Senator Pearson: What would your idea be—how would they become good teachers?

Mr. Matheson: It is just something you are born with—you are either good or you are lousy.

Senator Fergusson: First, I would like to compliment the students that brought in this brief and particularly Patricia Graham who presented it because they did an excellent job and I know that we are all greatly impressed with the amount of time taken by all of you to present it to us. We do thank you very much. I think we should also thank Mr. MacKenzie, your teacher who certainly must have inspired his pupils to make them take on such a tremendous project. It is very heartwarming to all of us to see you young people so interested in this problem. It certainly is a great problem of Canada and I think it has given us great hope for the future of Canada when we know that young generations are taking an interest in this subject.

The question on education that I would like to bring up is on page 3 of your brief on Education and it says:

For those who do not wish to take day training and re-training there are night classes. There are courses in academic and technical studies but there are no classes offered on food values, credit cards, finance companies and interest rates in Cape Breton. As a result, what little money and personal belongings the people have is being unwisely spent or taken away from them.

Now, the question I want to bring up is this. Do you think that this type of course is something that should be given in the schools as well as at night classes?

Mr. Matheson: Well, in this day and age quite a lot of the things you buy you use the credit card and if you don't know its workings, you will end up in debt so you have to have a general idea of its workings.

Senator Fergusson: Do you get this type of knowledge in the schools at the present time?

Mr. Matheson: No.

The Chairman: You do or you don't?

Mr. Matheson: We don't.

Senator Fergusson: Thank you.

The Chairman: Any other questions?

Senator Inman: I would like to ask the witness a question. I have often wondered if what the students would think from grade 8 or 9 having an aptitude test and if they are not really academically inclined shall we say should they go on and take subjects which would be of a technical nature.

Miss P. Graham: I suppose it depends—I don't think really you can tell. A person who appears not to have the aptitude to go on might in fact be able to push through college to a higher education instead of going to a technical college or something like that.

The Chairman: Now, are you saying that at that age the aptitude test doesn't mean a great deal?

Senator Fergusson: Let's say from grade 1. Take a student wanting to go into carpentry work or some other sort of manual labour? Supposing he doesn't feel that he wants to go on with the sciences and that sort of thing or some sort of manual labour. Would it be wise for him to take some other sort of training instead of spending years doing something academically?

Miss P. Graham: Well, in my opinion I think he should get a broad general outline first—a wider course of subjects that he could take—to get this broad viewpoint. In my opinion I think he should be able to get a broad outline of his education going right through to grade 10 with a wider choice of subjects and he could have a better idea of what he wanted to specialize in.

The Chairman: Well, grade 10 is high school, that is the same every place.

Miss P. Graham: Well, you should have a broad outline before you come to grade 10.

Miss Beverly Davis: I think you should have a broad outline before you come to grade 10. It is important to get through the primary grades; if the school system is adequate in these grades by the time you get to grade 10 you will have a general English background, let's say taking things that are important in everyday life and you could possibly go more toward either technical training or academic.

Senator Pearson: In your brief on page 4, the fourth paragraph down, it says:

For those adolescents who are able to discuss their future rationally at home this is not a serious handicap.

This is referring to the idea of what you do later on.

But what of the child from a poor family where all the time and energy is devoted to either making ends meet or the parents are unwilling to co-operate? He may not understand how very important this decision will be or realize his own potentialities and the numerous fields in which they could be exploited.

My question is do you have a counsellor in your school district that goes around from school to school and if not why shouldn't you have one? You have teachers but do you have a specialist on counselling?

Miss Davis: We have guidance counsellors.

Senator Pearson: In the schools?

Miss Davis: Yes.

Senator Pearson: Made up of whom?

Miss Davis: Well, as far as I know they do have a degree.

Senator Pearson: It is a specialty for them, is it?

Miss Davis: Yes.

Senator Pearson: They don't teach classes or anything?

Miss Davis: We don't have classes in guidance counselling. If you want to go and see the guidance counsellor, it is up to yourself.

Senator Pearson: Where do you find them?

Miss Davis: He has an office.

The Chairman: The guidance counsellor doesn't teach?

Miss Davis: No.

The Chairman: And if you want to go and see him you merely go and see him?

Miss Davis: Yes.

Senator Fergusson: Would you have one at every school?

Miss Davis: Yes, now we do.

Senator Fergusson: Well, that must take care of the needs?

Miss Davis: I don't think it is because it is too hard to get across to all of the students.

Miss Debbie Reid: On this matter of guidance counsellors just recently the Sydney system has instituted more guidance counsellors but there is not nearly enough. I was attending junior high and they had one guidance counsellor for about two junior highs and that is not nearly enough. Once a person leaves junior high they have to make a choice whether they want to go into the academic or if you don't have a broad outlook then you don't really know what you are getting into. If you don't know what you are getting into you only lose time so there is a shortage.

You have to find the information out for yourself and those people who don't have any initiative they just don't know what is going on and start lagging behind.

Senator Inman: Do you think that all students would have to consult the guidance counsellors? Do you think that the ones who haven't the initiative wouldn't do so?

Miss Reid: Well, I don't think you should really have to attend. I believe today that the students have to be made aware that the need is great because unless they have their own set of ideas and until they realize right up and down the line they won't know what is happening to them.

Senator Connolly: Mr. Chairman, I was about to say that we should take great care in the type of question we pose to these students. They have presented a remarkably fine brief but they don't pretend to know all of the answers to the questions that are in our minds and I want to say to this Committee, and to the students, that viewpoint they raise, and namely about normal school products now known as teachers' colleges I believe and vocational guidance teachers—in both these fields we are very deficient in this province and the brief is absolutely correct in both those two respects.

You must remember that normal college or teachers' college graduates do not compare to university graduates, products of an education system for example in this university here and as for guidance teachers I don't suppose we have in the length and breadth of this province six qualified guidance teachers.

I think in both these respects, as I said a moment ago, that the students have made excellent points. I agree with them completely.

The Chairman: Thank you, Senator Connolly.

Senator Hastings: We had a very interesting brief this morning by the Black United Front with respect to education opportunities for the black students. I am wondering if someone would care to tell me why there isn't a black student in your class?

Mr. Stan Ardelli: Senators, I feel the reason that there isn't any black students in our class is not because of prejudice or anything like that but no black student wanted to be in our class. There isn't that many in our school. It is just by chance that there doesn't happen to be any in here.

The Chairman: What are you saying? This is an accelerated class, isn't it?

A voice from the floor: No.

Senator Hastings: Is there more than an 11th grade?

Mr. Ardelli: They go 11 A, B, C, D et cetera. If I may, I would like a reply to a question before by Senator Hastings that I feel was not answered quite well enough. The question asked was if many people leave school because they feel that their parents are poor—I feel this is quite true. These people, if they had financial aid they would not leave school.

For instance, there are students in our school that wanted to leave for six years to help his family because they needed the money and he came back and finished his education. If there was some sort of program to help him this wouldn't have to be done. It's not many drop-outs from poor families—they don't drop out because they are forced to but they feel they should because their parents need whatever help they can give.

Now, the student loan program as it is now in Nova Scotia now applies only to poverty students. If this was expanded to high school students these poor people could get some money and go through high school and continue on to college. They need this money and there is no way they can get it.

Senator Hastings: If you had this money would you have a black student in your class? What I am trying to get at that if there is a drop out in your high school to let's say from grade 9 to where you are now grade 11...

Senator McGrand: You don't have many black students in Sydney, do you?

Mr. Ardelli: Yes.

Miss Judy Canning: Well, to get this question straight about the black students when you go in and register on registration day you are given a sheet and each class has listed subjects and you are given your choice of the subjects you want and it just happens that a black student didn't want the subjects that we were given in our class.

The Chairman: How many students in the school?

Miss Canning: About 1,500.

The Chairman: And how many black students would there be?

Miss Canning: I wouldn't know but last year we had a black student in the class. It is not prejudice. I don't think there is any prejudice.

Senator Hastings: What is it this year?

Miss Canning: Well, I don't know.

The Chairman: Well, I understand there are about 25 to 30, is that correct?

Miss Canning: There would be more than that.

The Chairman: About 40?

Miss Canning: 40 or 50.

The Chairman: Any more questions?

Senator Pearson: From the statement that Senator Connolly made earlier regarding the lack of teachers, could I be informed as to what the bare minimum requirements to attend Teachers' College are? Is it grade 13? Do you have to have a B.A.?

The Chairman: Well, perhaps Mr. MacKenzie could give us the answer to that question.

Mr. William Neil MacKenzie: To enter Normal College or Teachers' College as it is now called in Truro, the student must have completed grade 12 academically and in Normal he takes a two year course designed primarily to teach him to teach subjects from grades primary to kindergarten through to the end of grade six. Now, just carrying this career through to its logical conclusion, a graduate of Normal College would carry something like four years and the graduate of Normal College during the summer months—for four years can attend Nova Scotia summer school on this Dalhousie campus.

At the end of which time the graduate in some particular block or field of teaching he could take the intermediate block over the four summers—two years is normal and teach intermediate classes or after four summers a specialist in teaching intermediate classes for a specialist in teaching reading or after completing four summers of general study he could complete the junior high school block and qualify to teach grades 7 to 9.

This applies particularly to the new mathematics courses being introduced in the curriculum of the Nova Scotia summer school under the Department of Education. On this campus during the summer they specialized in the teaching of the new courses coming on the curriculum.

Now, the other angle is for a teacher of course to go and get a bachelor's training or a B.A. or B.S.E. or Masters and at the end of that time either spend one year on the university campus taking a Bachelor of Education Degree or going for four summers to the same Dalhousie summer school and taking the equivalent of a PhD here.

Now, normally it is the practice of the school board to hire only those people with Bachelor Degrees and Education Certificates—one way or the other to teach grades 7 to 12 and they tend to hire Normal College and/or summer school to teach primary through grade 6 because of very specialized training.

I myself wouldn't know what to do with a class of six, seven or eight year olds because I am accustomed to working with people 15 and 16. It is a kind of specialized training which the normal school gives you.

Senator Connolly: This is a question of academic training?

Mr. MacKenzie: Yes.

Senator Connolly: And the salary is based on your academic qualifications?

Mr. MacKenzie: Yes. The salaries are based on years of study and university of course gives a person four years—grade 12 and four years training whereas the person with normal school would have two years.

The Chairman: Any further questions?

Senator Pearson: On page 5 of your brief about five or six paragraphs down it says:

Most school systems follow basically an academic program at least up to the start of high school.

My question is do you feel from primary school they should start to direct a student into a particular idea of what he wants? What I mean is should he go into academic or vocational?

Miss Graham: Well, I would have to say no. We have the block idea and that is it.

Senator Pearson: Do they have counsellors at that age?

Miss Graham: No.

Miss Nancy Monroe: There was a junior high school in Sydney and they started—the students were picked and they show that they are going to do with the general course and when they go on to grade 10 they are picked to be in a course.

Miss Canning: About that paragraph on page 3 about the Normal College teacher—in our brief we say that they don't—we don't think that these teachers are ready to teach. Well, my sister went to a Normal and she was told that in some places they don't have any teachers from Normal College because they are taught how to teach the students but when they go up they are more interested in people getting their degrees in the Normal College—they would be able to teach high school and it says in the brief that they should have a minor in psychology.

In Normal College there is a course in psychology which is worked into the curriculum.

Mr. David Johnston: Just getting back to the topic of high school drop-outs, I would just like to say that I believe in a large part of high school drop-outs is caused by the lack of sufficient guidance counselling. By this I mean it seems to me that a college diploma is the end all for most everybody. As we all know, not everybody can attain this and I think that if a person goes or gets possibly grade 8 or so the guidance counsellor should observe his case and if he notes that he is not intelligent enough to go to college he should be screened out and guided into a particular field where he would be able to handle the work.

I believe that for people such as this who are not capable in handling college work for them a trade of some sort is just as valuable as a college education.

The Chairman: Thank you. Are there any more questions?

Senator Cook: I just wanted to tell my colleagues on the Committee that I believe that in Sydney High reached one of the top competitions, didn't you?

Miss Davis: Second.

Senator Cook: That was for the whole of Canada, wasn't it?

Miss Davis: Well, on Sunday there were three teams from Hawaii one from Truro and one from Sydney and there is to be a tour of Canada starting here and going to Hawaii and during this time we will be playing "Reach the top" trying to beat Trans World top teams.

Senator Sparrow: Mr. Chairman, in the remarks made by the young lady in the brief it refers to a guaranteed annual income and the motivation of people. The young people who made the presentation referred to people who would be guaranteed a guaranteed annual income and that they must have motivation. I am wondering if the students might have suggestions or recommendations as to how people can in fact be motivated if they are on a guaranteed annual income?

This is the greatest concern I think of people through discussions on guaranteed annual income and that is that you take away the initiative of the people to work. Could you or your students give us some ideas of how these people can be motivated if they are in fact on a guaranteed annual income?

Mr. Richard Crooks: In the guaranteed annual income you are getting people a guaranteed salary so you can bring them above the poverty level. By doing this you are making them suitable for a standard of living in their particular area and there is no incentive in giving a nation-wide Booster Campaign presentation and the only alternative would be the setting up of a cooperative for employees in various fields of work subsidizing one family living below the poverty level.

These four families would pay for this one family living below the poverty level. This would be done so that he could increase his education to be more suitable for the manpower field.

The effects of this would be personal contact between the four families subsidizing the one family.

Senator Connolly: Does this brief envisage the elimination of the means test? Do you suggest that certain bonuses would not be paid to people who do not need them? I am wondering if you have that in the back of your mind?

Mr. Johnston: Well, a means test is necessary but not necessarily a means test.

Senator Connolly: Well, let me put it to you this way. I am in the very fortunate position under the circumstances where I do not need an old age pension. I do not need a Canada Pension Plan and why therefore should I receive from this country cheques for old pension and for the Canada Pension Plan?

Mr. Johnston: Well, I think you could find a reason partly due to government failure but I think Nancy Monroe would be best suited to answer this question.

Miss Monroe: Well, Mr. Senator, anybody who is 65 of age can get the old age pension and if one is able to get along without the old age pension one shouldn't get it. It is like the old people that are just getting by with the $75 a month and if they can get more money up to $120 but still that is not enough then there should be some way of finding out these people and to make the wealthy to not get the old age pension and the unfortunate people to get more because the old people have to have some money to get along. They are married and they have families and they don't want to rely on charity.

Like my grandfather; he likes to be independent and that is one of his chief goals. They would just like to get along like everyone else without their families and if they are dependent their goal is shattered and they don't have anything to work for.

The Chairman: I think in fairness that since this is a class that has been thinking about it something should be said about why government do the things they do. They are not entirely stupid and you find that there is a certain limit and I don't know whether $7,500 or $10,000—I am not just sure but it is much cheaper for the government to pass out the cheques on old age security than to make an investigation to the income of each one of those people.

There is enough recovery of taxes at that level so that they get so very little and there is so much saved in administration that that is the theory behind it and I think you should know what the government is thinking.

Actually, it has been borne out that that approach is more efficient and cheaper than it would be the other way.

Mr. Fred MacLeod: I would like to clarify a position of our committee. While the people outside of our committee seem to think that the guaranteed annual income would be great; after looking into it I don't think it is feasible at all. We should think that maybe the minimum wage should be broadened. I don't think Canada is not a very wealthy country and rather than have a guaranteed annual income you might want to see a raise, perhaps 20 per cent in the minimum wage.

Normally if the minimum wage is raised, prices would go up but we would like to see a prices control board established. With this in mind, I think we could bring more people above this poverty level. I shouldn't say poverty level; perhaps I should say a bare subsistence level and the government would still have the same number—amount of money for welfare.

However, there would be less people so that money could be given out in greater proportions. I think maybe Wayne MacVicker would have more ideas on this.

Mr. Wayne MacVicker: I think we could establish the co-op and I think that is the best way we could do this. This way it would take in the money instead of the government because this would be publicly owned and run by the public and the government wouldn't have to pay any money except to set it up.

This would also be a good way for a decrease in taxation for the elderly people who are working. They wouldn't have to be on welfare either so this could be the case.

Mr. Greg O'Neill: The first step should be to unionize these part-time workers who aren't even getting the minimum wage or Workmen's Compensation up until just recently. Recently legislation has been passed for Workmen's Compensation so if you can unionize both the C.P.E. and the G.W. which is presently organizing the public employees—into unionizing part-time workers then the workers could have more to say in the wages that they received. They are not even getting the minimum wage now.

Now, you could have some sort of legislation and by doing this you would have the existing unions implementing industrial democracy so that they could put more stress on to the management getting less, so that you get increased benefits.

While all this is going on you should have a prices control board, so that prices won't go up, and as I said before, the co-ops with four employee families subsidizing one family, either on welfare or making less than the subsistence level, this would give five families buying power instead of the four that now have it.

It would enable people to buy more products plus giving more money to the management of the institution that is employing industrial democracy.

Thus, the economic system would remain stable.

Senator Hastings: We were told this morning that the minimum wage is a dollar and a quarter in Nova Scotia for males and one dollar for females. You say in your brief it is regional disparity?

Mr. O'Neill: Well, in legislation that was passed it allows for different minimum wages to be paid in specified areas.

The Chairman: It is $1.05 in rural areas for men and 90 cents for women, isn't that right?

Speaking of the minimum wages, take your pencils out and mark this down. This will tell you what we are talking about when we talk about the poverty line. These are the economic figures that we get from the Economic Council of Canada, and which we accept.

For one person, $1800; two persons $3,000; three persons $3600; four persons $4200 and five persons $4800. Anyone who is less than that for the size of the family, any place in Canada, is considered to be below the poverty line. That is what we have been talking about.

Miss Monroe: Widows in Canada, in Nova Scotia—the maximum paid to widows is $175 and there could be three children or ten children and they get $175 a month.

Now, the government is giving this and they are under the poverty level. The government is the cause of that, and if they get a little bit more money they would be cut off.

I was born in the United States and my father died and my mother and all the family—we had to move down, but if she stayed there she would get monthly as much as my father made a year in dividing it into twelve times plus $90 a week for child care.

There is a lot of difference from $175.

The Chairman: Well, did I understand you to say in effect that the families you had in mind were receiving less than the amount that I have specified?

Miss Monroe: Yes.

The Chairman: That is what you are saying?

Miss Monroe: Yes.

The Chairman: Well, what I don't quite understand from some of your dissenters and others there is that you talk about the minimum income doing something to people other than providing for their needs. Did I understand some of the boys saying that or did I miss the boat on it?

These are the figures and what we are saying is that a family of one, two, three, four and five should have so much by way of income and if they haven't got it they are living below the poverty line.

Now, as we all know, this isn't good but what is the other side of it? Is there another side to this argument?

Mr. Tom Manson: You made the comment and I don't agree with the facts. Here you are taking figures and you are pointing to a country. How can you say for example that a person who is married has to make $3000 and if he is under that he is poor. Is that what you are saying?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Manson: Well, if you live in Baffin Island and you make $3000 a year you are rich. You can take any place and you can bend these figures so that they are sort of ridiculous.

The Chairman: Aren't you Canadian whether you live in Baffin Island or here in Halifax? Don't you receive the same money if you are unemployed whether you live in Baffin Island or Halifax? Don't you receive the same family allowance? Don't you receive the same old-age security whether you live in one place or the other?

Mr. Manson: Yes.

The Chairman: No matter where you live you receive the same money, and so that if they have more money in Baffin Island aren't you likely to pick up the economy of Baffin Island if you give them a few more pennies?

Mr. Manson: Yes, but you are saying that a person is poor if he makes less than $3000. There are a lot of people that make below $3000 and they are not poor in their community.

The Chairman: Well, that may be so, if they don't consider themselves poor they have other values, and there are very important other values.

From an economic point of view we believe this is the basic minimum and the authorities on all sides agree, and it doesn't make any difference where you live.

Mr. Manson: Well, I don't agree with that. You can't base anything on money. Money is not stable itself, so you can't base anything on it.

The Chairman: Well, money may not be the answer but you have no answer at all until you do have the money. There are other things beside it, but you start with money.

Mr. Manson: Well, you keep referring back to money in the first place.

The Chairman: Yes, you must have that to start with.

Mr. Manson: Well, there are quite a few other things if you don't have the money.

The Chairman: No matter what you have, unless you have the money in order to buy the things that you need you are not off first base.

Mr. Manson: I don't believe that.

Senator McGrand: Now, you said $3,000 but not poor in the community. Now, you must be thinking of certain people and certain communities in Nova Scotia, because I am inclined to agree with you.

Mr. Manson: Well, a few places like Grand Routes. There they depend on fishing for lobsters and cod. If you make $3000 off of cod, you are doing pretty well. The community is geared so that $3000 is rich and then you have your poor families.

If you live in Sydney and make $3000 a year, you are poor.

Senator Sparrow: Mr. Chairman, might I just get off the subject of the brief for a moment. There has been a great deal of discussion on the use of drugs in schools; in high schools and down to even the level of public schools throughout Canada.

If there is a drug problem as such in Nova Scotia within the school system and if the problem can be related directly to a rejection of society as such by the young people, or if it is in connection with poverty or affluence, does it affect those people who are at the poverty level or at the affluent level or does this in fact have any basis or bearing on it?

Miss Davis: Senator Sparrow, I think that drugs and drug addiction and these things don't necessarily have to do with poverty because you have this problem both in wealthy and in poor families.

It is mainly a rejection of society. Our parents were born during the war and they lived in a certain society; in a society where everybody was pushed to sort of make ends meet—in a very stringent society, but today the wealth is evident in our existence.

People don't want to get rich just to prove that you can get ahead of poverty from the war. There is no war that is directly related to us. We can't remember the World Wars. To us it is just a story in the history books and the Vietnamese war is even farther away from us.

It is just a rejection of pushing forward and money and these things. There are other values that are more important today.

Miss Anne Gardner: Mr. Chairman, Senators. I don't think that drug addiction pertains just to people below the poverty line. I believe it has a lot to do with the mind.

If people take drugs—there are some who take them because they have nowhere else to turn to, but I think quite a few do because often they don't know how to use their mind. Maybe it is an escape because they don't know exactly what to do with their time so this is just another way to use up their time.

I think many of the kids do take drugs because things don't bother them; they know that problems are facing them but when you take the drugs you forget about them. They really don't have the time to use their minds.

I think this often stems from family life. This is important to use your mind constructively and this is really not too much of a problem.

Senator McGrand: Do you know of any students who have used drugs and were unsuccessful in graduating? Do you know of any students who have taken drugs and yet they were able to graduate from high school—they were successful in graduation?

Miss Gardner: No. I know students who take drugs and they are getting along in school but they are not what you would call drug addicts.

Miss Canning: Mr. Chairman and Senators, some kids just take drugs for kicks like. In Sydney, some kids drop into the hole and it has nothing to do with drugs.

I think that if they are just going out for kicks they are sick. I don't think they are really trying to be cool or anything like that, because I know one boy who I was talking to quit school and is on drugs.

I asked him why he was taking the drugs and he said "Oh, I would take anything for kicks."

He said that there wasn't anything to do but there is the YMCA and things like that. What we are trying to get across is that it is not necessarily poverty that drives teenagers to drugs.

Senator McGrand: Mr. Chairman, may I just ask a question which relates to the brief on page 11, paragraph 6:

The Sydney school system is definitely lacking in facilities for tours and outings. One project which our class planned last year—an outing to Louisbourg—was handicapped by red tape in all quarters. In the end we did not go.

Was that a councillor outing?

Miss Davis: Could you just repeat the last part of your question?

Senator McGrand: Yes. You say that an outing to Louisbourg was handicapped by red tape in all quarters. Was that a councillor outing?

Miss Davis: Well, this outing was planned and I was in the class and we had planned to visit Louisbourg as sort of a symposium.

We wanted to go to Louisbourg because of the lack and there was so much difficulty in getting to the office, and in the end when we finally did get permission it ended up that we couldn't go.

The main point of this is to bring out the facilities for outings and extracurricular work. It just doesn't exist.

A student can go from primary right to high school without getting a class outing, and it is ridiculous. I mean there is so much you can learn of what the world is all about. That is why a lot of people are narrow-minded. They are poor and they can't go to these places by themselves.

Senator Hastings: In other words, those who had the money went?

Miss Davis: Not for that specific example. That was a class outing and nobody went.

Now, supposing people in our class have the money to go, they would have probably already gone. Perhaps, there were people in our class who didn't have the money to go; they would never see Louisbourg. These are the things to see, you know, when you are in Cape Breton.

The Chairman: Thank you. Any other questions?

Perhaps Mr. MacKenzie would take a few minutes to talk to all of us. Have you anything, Mr. MacKenzie?

Mr. MacKenzie: No remarks on poverty in Canada as such but a couple of remarks on my students and Canada.

When I began this project, it began as a choice for the students between doing a formal term paper on the topic of the French Revolution or doing a topic in European history and religion.

The class decided to go for the Senate Committee under David Croll rather than the Committee of Public Speaking in the Rose Theatre.

However, I think it was a unique opportunity for the students. Certainly, I learned two things in the course of this: what students can do when they apply themselves to it and I learned what the young people of Canada are willing to do when they have people who are approaching them for information.

I was going to university—I minored in political science and even marked papers in the Political Science Department and read books on Political Sciences and papers on Political Science, and between books and papers and essays read and essays written and the government department contacted, slowly I gained the impression that like the “fabled trip to Louisbourg” red tape is strangling a great deal of public life in Canada.

I take that back now. In the last three weeks between the offices of the Senate Committee under the direction of Mr. Fred Joyce and through the various agencies in Ottawa and through the offices of the Citizenship Branch headed by Frank Glasgow sitting out there in the audience, my students and I have received such a wealth of information and received so many hours of time of public officials, that if this project accomplished nothing else, it demonstrates that there are people in Ottawa and other parts of Canada in responsible positions who are willing to listen to the young people.

While the content of the brief may or may not change the course of legislation on poverty in Canada, one of our presentations here today may or may not frankly reflect on possible future laws, but the fact has been demonstrated beyond a doubt that if young people wanted to speak to the Senate of Canada, or to any branch of the Canadian government, they will listen.

That is the salient thing far and above whatever may be done for poverty. This country, to judge by the reports of newspapers, is slowly passing into the hands of the anarchists and radicals, or whatever seems to be the term.

What happened here this afternoon happened on both sides in the three weeks while the Senate Committee was getting ready to meet the students and the students were getting ready to meet the Senate discloses that in Canada, that there are still young people in Canada who are not interested in having Molotov cocktails for breakfast; they would prefer to have Senators for lunch.

This is the significant thing in my mind and the significant thing for me as a teacher is that poverty, I suppose like taxes, will always be with us in any event. There will always be people with the money and people who don't have money, but while the measures, shall we say, used to curb inflation—prices going up and prices going up and people on fixed incomes remaining the same, this is an essential factor of poverty.

The important thing is, and an important experience for me, is what it shows; I don't want to use the term “democracy by participation” but politics by concession rather than politics by talking.

The Chairman: Thank you very much, Mr. MacKenzie.

Are there any other questions?

Mr. Gerry Harris: Senators, I would like to straighten up one of the most, or one of the more important aspects of poverty and that is the problem of housing.

You can't educate a person who lives in poor surroundings, a poor environment, and I think you should improve the environment or the environmental conditions before you try any other attempt to educate, because you can't expect a student to learn anything when he has ten brothers or sisters living in a small area in an apartment building.

I think there should be some improvement in housing. This is a very important aspect in dealing with poverty.

Miss Reid: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to bring out the point that most of us are of the view that the biggest problem facing the poor people now is that they don't realize how vital their participation is.

No one can truly imagine just exactly what their conditions are and how it affects them psychologically. You may send out people to investigate but they can't truly realize exactly what these people feel, and we feel that the poor people should be encouraged to participate, and they are the ones that should offer the solutions.

We feel that their participation should be increased and if our solutions had worked the government committee would not be here now.

We were just wondering if maybe you could consult these people and ask them just exactly what they want and have them participate in something like this, and have them present their own views. They may not have the know-how and they may lack the transportation to get out here, but they are the kind of people that we are trying to reach.

They don't realize that they are the ones that we have to speak to; the ones that have the problems and they are the ones that we have to help.

Mr. Richard Haysom: Mr. Chairman, Senators. I would like to continue with what Miss Debbie Reid has to say about individual participation.

I was chairman of Government Failures and I came to the conclusion that individual participation in amongst the poor people themselves would greatly help the stress on both the government and the poor people themselves.

To give you an example of this, I can take an example of the Indian. The Indians who live on the reserves in Cape Breton have no foresight whatsoever. They are quite happy to remain as they are with the help and aid of the government and to rest on their reserves.

What I think should be done, that instead of this, there should be a campaign in which pride and culture could be given to these people. To give an Indian his pride is to give him back his tools he had many years ago; to give him back his culture he had many years ago.

Once this has been established in an Indian, he no longer is in the position that he is in at the moment, no foresight.

He can get out and work for himself. He has his tools and he has got his pride he once had many years ago. There are many examples of this, and the example I just give about the Indian is worth-while mentioning.

Somebody else in my committee has something to say about Indians—Sheila Spencer.

Miss Sheila Spencer: Mr. Senators, I can only speak about the Indians in our area. I live by a reserve and these Indians really make a nuisance of themselves. They really do.

They come down to the parts of the city where I live and I am scared to walk down the street at night because some of the young Indian boys are easily aroused.

When the government gives them handouts, well, they know they can get money no matter if they work or not. They have lost all their initiative; or at least, most of it. They should have jobs given to them by the government; any kind of job; something that will be a well-paying job but not a seasonable job which most of them get.

They get the seasonal jobs because of the lack of education and lack of facilities, or they just don't have the opportunities.

People are prejudiced against Indians in Sydney. Some of the educated Indians or white men should go on the reserves as social workers. This would help them, to show them what to do.

I know of one example, a lady is on the reserve with the Indians and they have recreation centres built and they do what they want to do on it instead of hanging around the street corners.

Senator Hastings: Miss Spencer, in your brief you say that Indians are entitled to family and youth allowances, old age security pension, guaranteed income supplement.

Miss Spencer: Yes. Their houses are built for them but if the Indians were made to build their own houses they would take better care of them, instead of having government handouts and the government building them. They would take pride in their houses and they wouldn't have their children tearing them apart.

Mr. Richard Crooks: It is my dissenting opinion in the discussion of housing that nothing was mentioned about the 11 per cent Federal tax and the 7 per cent tax. I feel there is no need to have such a high tax even though I have the suspicion that it is for fighting inflation.

By the use of a prices control board we could settle this problem. You could press the manufacturers or get the public to press the manufacturers to get their prices down lower.

It is not reasonable to expect the public to pay 17 cents in taxes on the dollars. It is not fair. One reason, you are causing more poverty and more trouble in the family that wants to have a home. This is not right.

Miss Monroe: The Indian problem is very serious. They have this problem in California and their problem is with the Mexicans. If we don't take care of the Indians they may be as bad as the Mexicans.

One day my cousin, who is the principal of a high school, was in his office taking off his rubber boots. He just happened to see a shadow on the wall and he turned around and saw a Mexican with a switchblade ready to stab him. He would have been killed had he not turned around.

Here when students go to the washroom—he was cut up so bad he was in the hospital for almost two weeks. If something is done we wouldn't have the serious problem we might have in the future.

I know this family and the oldest boy is 18. She is a widow and her family payments have been lowered. There is another child who is almost 18—she will be 18 in February, and she has five more months of school. When she is 18 her mother and her won't get the same. The youth allowance will be cut off and the widow's allowance will be cut off and she won't have anything. You have to have money to go to school and what is she going to do?

I am an American citizen and I am in school and planning to go college and become a teacher. My mother, my brother and I, will always get this money, social security, until we are out of school. I think that is a very important thing. If they don't have the money they are not going to go to school.

They have to run the house, they have to run everything and what are they going to do without money? They will lose their pride.

The welfare agencies in Sydney don't pay very much—it is around $10 a week for groceries and that is not very much.

The Chairman: Young lady, will you undertake a mission for me and have a talk to the young man who said you don't need money?

Miss Monroe: You have to have money.

Mr. Matheson: You need money to get food but I don't see how that affects your poverty line. Sure you need money to get groceries and that, and sure enough the government doesn't give you enough, but that doesn't have anything to do with this poverty line.

I am arguing that you are taking figures and you can't base anything on figures.

The Chairman: Well, the Economic Council of Canada thinks they can.

Mr. Matheson: Well, they are an economic council of Canada. What are they going to base it on—something other than figures?

The Chairman: These figures come as a result of a complete and thorough study and consensus by all economists in Canada and the United States. These are not just taken out of the blue.

Mr. Matheson: I believe you might have a reason for them but...

The Chairman: It doesn't appeal to you, is that it?

Mr. Matheson: No, it doesn't. I am not saying you don't need money because in this society you need money. It is a society based on money.

The Chairman: That is the point we are trying to get across.

Are there any other speakers?

Miss Marie Smith: I would like to turn to another cause of poverty. People are poor sometimes because they have the money but they don't know how to spend it. They might have enough money to get along but they can't budget it.

There are some organizations, but not many, that teach people how to budget, but they are not advertised enough. If they could get across to all the people what could happen to them, how they could improve themselves, things would be much better.

To give you an example, you have a teacher advertisement where you have the average "Mr. Jones" who makes so much a year but he finds himself dropping in his economic position and he sees the advertising about the organization where he could learn how to budget his money and a year later the same "Mr. Jones" would be getting along much better and he can stretch his pay cheque and still have enough money left for luxuries.

The Chairman: Miss Smith, I must say to you that the Department of Consumer Affairs came before us as a witness and it said exactly what you said, in more elaborate terms.

They said they were going to do something about it from the Consumers Department, and they were going to try to get the message across in the schools and high schools and even in the public school level. So you are on the right track, young lady.

Mr. Tom Collins: Sir, on this advertising, if you were wondering where the money could come from—well, the government pays a substantial per cent now, but we could subsidize racing, horse racing in Sydney, and you could get money from there.

Another thing I would like to talk on is financing loans. In New York, there is a civic union set up to help students, people who are poor and who have no money. They give them loans interest free and there is no extra charge.

I was wondering if it was possible for different groups in Canada to set up something like this. This of course would be for poor people specifically.

The thing about this is, most of the money would be turned back.

Another thing, I would like to quote from the Royal Commission investigating finance and loan companies. Nova Scotia has done this through their Royal Commission of costs of borrowing money and related matters across Nova Scotia.

In this report...

The Chairman: What was the name?

Mr. Collins: It is a Royal Commission.

The Chairman: Who heads the Royal Commission?

Mr. Collins: This is for the Province of Nova Scotia.

The Chairman: The reason I am asking, there was a Royal Commission investigation here and they co-operated with us and I just forget his name, but they were the first to make a study on consumer credit. This was in all of Canada, even before we did in Ottawa. I am trying to think of the man's name, and I just can't at the moment. I have read the report, and it's a very good one.

Mr. Collins: Another thing, I would like to mention consumer education in schools. There are courses that can be put into the schools such as this one here "Money Spending." This one is elementary but it can be put in the schools to help to show people what they are getting into when they make loans.

Another reason I would like to investigate the finance companies is an example which I received. There was a youth who owed several banks and finance companies $10,000. This man was sued and had no resources. I was wondering how a person could get a loan if he didn't have any resources.

The Chairman: So am I, but go ahead.

Mr. Collins: The finance companies, on making the first payment, ask you if you want to borrow more money. Now, this is a ridiculous thing to do. Why would you need more money? Why would you need more money when you are trying to pay off your debts?

There was a man who visited disabled people who were in debt and the man would threaten to go around and tell all his neighbours about this man being in debt. This could ruin his reputation with all these psychological threats.

There are only two inspectors for consumer affairs in Halifax, and this is not enough. There are over 200,000 people concerned, and if there is only two people they can't get that much done.

On the topic of poverty—a person who makes $22,000 a year and he had very little furniture in his house, and he didn't even have enough to attend a show, so poverty is not only for the poor.

Another thing, our morals have a great deal to do with poverty. The person who could discuss this better than I is Debby Reid.

In discussing the morals we set out that the reason the person is considered poor is that they couldn't afford what everybody else had. We figured who had what everybody else had and it was the middle class, so we figured that the middle class should share in the responsibility of arriving at solutions.

Now, everybody is saying, "You are doing a project on poverty. Oh, yes, more money." It's not only money; but morally how you can help these people. If you set up public awareness programs to make people aware that they could do something to help morally, and they could then accept these people. They wouldn't have to turn their backs on them just because they are poor.

The Chairman: Thank you.

From the floor: I would just like to say that I have devised a method to finance poverty and to help welfare and help education. To help people build more schools. And I would like to refer back to the senator who said that he didn't need his old-age pension. Well, I am working on the same basis of family allowances for families that have more than $10,000 a year, who I consider do not need their family allowances.

If this was discontinued, this money—there are almost 300,000 families who do collect over $10,000 a year, and it comes up to—if this family allowance was taken away from them they wouldn't be losing that much. The government would save pretty close to fifty million dollars, and with this money they could make old-age security optional to people who did not need it. No matter how small the number may be it would still help in solving poor educational facilities, hospital facilities, and to help the Indians, and whoever else needs help.

It isn't that much compared to the Gross National Product, but it is a help.

The Chairman: Thank you.

Miss Patsy MacDonald: It was noted in some of my studies that women with less education had more children than women with more education. Other contributing factors to this are the husband's position, his income, and their social status in their environment.

My recommendation for this is that the government provide family life services starting at an age with which the child would be unaffected by his environment, so that later on when he is older he will be aware of the number of children that he should have in order to live within his income during the year.

The Chairman: Well, we have appointments, and you have an appointment, and it's been a delightful afternoon. You not only presented a good brief but the discussion of course was very helpful.

It is really a pleasure to see you young people walk up to a microphone feeling free and easy and making sense, and I must say that Miss Graham did something today in making a moving presentation. While she was talking there were thoughts going through my mind, and I saw young people of your age in other places in this age of protest throwing bottles and stones and sticks.

I saw you people presenting briefs and studies and solutions to problems, and I felt very proud of you people today.

You know, I have always known that there are people like you every place in Canada but you don't often see them. For a moment, let me just give you something of an experience.

Senator Connolly: Not quite like these people, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Oh, all right. The ex-premier of the province is speaking now, but I agree, anyway.

Let me just show you how young people get themselves involved. I was talking about these people who throw stones, bottles, and sticks in other parts of the country. Many of them are arrested, many of them are convicted; not seriously, but convicted.

Let me show you how they mess up their lives. Fifteen years later he applies for a job some place where he has to take some responsibility for money. In that position he has to be bonded. This is normal. And he goes to the bonding company and makes an application, or she does, and the company says, "Have you ever been convicted of something or other?" He can't get the bond, and he can't get the job.

He makes an application for a security commission and he has to answer, or she has to answer, and if he has been convicted the chances of getting a salesman's licence are nil. Or a real estate salesman's licence. If he wants to travel to the United States for permanent reasons for some reason or another, and makes an application where it says "Have you ever been convicted of anything?" And if he has, he can't get in.

These are the thoughtless things some people in this age of protest do. They have not given enough consideration to things that will hurt them at some later date. I have seen it happen time and time again.

I told you that we are very proud of you, and your presentation on poverty, and we were very proud that you could come here to the Senate of Canada where the senators could see you and you could see them.

I can't really close this meeting off without asking the former premier, or prime minister, of this province to say a word to you.

Senator Connolly: Mr. Chairman, you are very kind. You and I, I am sure, have a much greater appreciation after today of why I love this province so dearly. I am quite sure that nowhere in this land would you find a greater concentration of beauty and intelligence than what we have seen here this afternoon.

The Chairman: You are not running for election, senator.

Senator Connolly: No, Mr. Chairman. If I need to be refreshed, if I need to have my confidence renewed, or re-established, it has been re-established by this group of young people from Sydney Academy, because they have demonstrated their faith in the old-fashioned virtues, their willingness to work, and the value they place on integrity. They are concerned with their own future and the welfare of their fellow citizens. There are no hippies in this crowd—at least whatever hippies are—I have never been quite able to determine,—but surely there are none in this fine group.

There has never been another generation who have had a greater concern than these young people today. They have demonstrated this by this remarkably fine brief to which we have listened, and while I compliment them I must also compliment Mr. MacKenzie, their teacher, because without the guidance of such an outstanding teacher I am sure they couldn't have accomplished such a mighty feat.

So I thank you, if I may, on behalf of all of us. I want to say to you that you have warmed my heart. You send me on my way refreshed and, although I may meet others almost as good, I shall always remember in the course of our travels up and down this country of ours the afternoon we have spent with Sydney Academy 11-A group, and the excellent presentation they made. Thank you very much.

The Chairman: Ladies and gentlemen, thank you very much.

Brief for Special Committee on Poverty Senate of Canada

by
Staff Members and Associates
Institute of Public Affairs
Dalhousie University
Halifax, Canada

November 1969

CONTENTS

POVERTY IN NOVA SCOTIA

Abstract	1
I. Definition	7
II. Description and Evaluation	10
III. Rural Poverty	25
IV. Urban Poverty	30
A. Halifax City	30
B. Eroded-Base Communities	33
V. Urban Fringe Poverty	35
VI. Ethnic Groups	42
A. Indians	42
B. Blacks	46
VII. Findings and Recommendations	93
Bibliography	116

POVERTY IN NOVA SCOTIA

ABSTRACT

1. This brief is primarily an analytical description of poverty in Nova Scotia, as requested by the Special Senate Committee on Poverty. Set forth, also, are certain findings and recommendations which arose during preparation of the brief.
2. Nova Scotia has a disproportionately high share of poverty families relative to Canada. The 1961 Census of Canada¹ indicates that 40.3 per cent of all non-farm families in Nova Scotia are low-income. By comparison, in Canada only 25.3 per cent of non-farm families are low-income. The low-income families in Nova Scotia number 58,029 and represent 6.3 per cent of the Canadian low-income families.
3. In the national perspective, Nova Scotia's poverty problems must be dealt with through a two-pronged attack. Concurrently, opportunities must be created and people must be enabled to take advantage of them. Creating opportunities requires a high level of economic activity, made possible in part by renewal and modernization facilitated by national and provincial growth policies. Enabling people in poverty to take advantage of opportunities requires bold new social programs stressing education, mobility, housing, and environment. Supplementary to this two-pronged attack are the essential welfare measures for the disadvantaged, including the handicapped, aged, and infirm.
4. The strategy for economic growth and improvement of the human environment in Nova Scotia requires that hard historical facts of poverty be faced unequivocally, not minimized or side-stepped. The natural desire to create a better self-image, to project an attractive image, and to maintain autonomy, in the long run will not be effective in Nova Scotia's best interests, nor will the province's modernization program be well served if harsh realities are ignored. Identification of facts and a candid identification of the problems constitute a first step towards solution of poverty in Nova Scotia.

¹Jenny R. Podoluk, Incomes of Canadians (Ottawa: Dominion Bureau of Statistics, 1968)

Special Senate Committee

5. Poverty in Nova Scotia is limited neither to a particular area nor to a particular population grouping. There are, however, striking differences in the incidence of poverty among areas and groups within the province. In order to obtain a general picture of poverty, the incidence of poverty in a particular group and the incidence of that group in the total should be considered. On the assumption that the poor are represented by less than $3,000 annual family income, the following broad generalizations can be drawn from the 1961 Census of Canada. From a total population of 737,000, some 256,600, or 34.8 per cent, fall below the poverty line. By this measure, an estimated 57 per cent of the farm population are poor. This 57 per cent, however, represents only 4.5 per cent of the total population. The remaining 30.3 per cent of the population that are poor are non-farm. These are divided approximately two-fifths urban, and three-fifths rural non-farm. The actual incidence of poverty in rural non-farm families is approximately 52 per cent, and in urban families, 27 per cent.

6. It is apparent that, although poverty is predominantly a rural phenomenon, a large minority of poverty groups are found in urban areas. The largest poverty group, in terms of actual numbers, is the rural non-farm population.

7. If one has explicit regard to incidence of poverty among given groups, the highest incidence is found in families with young female heads, and in families without employment, each having over a 90 per cent level of incidence.
8. Poverty in Nova Scotia is the result of a complex set of forces. This brief indicates these forces and shows how they interact and affect particular groups. The division of poverty groups into the potentially employable groups and those requiring specific assistance, which is drawn in the Definition, is not explicitly referred to in the brief. With the exception of this latter group, the brief demonstrates that poverty is the result of in-built social and physical immobilities.
9. Economic development in Nova Scotia has become largely service oriented. Primary sectors have required a progressively smaller labour force as technology and changing market conditions have limited employment opportunities therein. In certain cases these developments are accentuated by physical resource depletion. While employment has declined in primary sectors, the service sectors have grown rapidly; this is closely related to the growth of urban areas. These developments have required physical movement of populations, whether it be within the province or away from the province. Factors affecting the physical mobility of persons have left certain groups stranded outside the mainstream of economic progress.
10. Factors affecting social mobility are derived largely from inadequate training and education. If the poor cannot utilize educational facilities, they are trapped in a "vicious circle" of poverty. Additional problems obtain in the Black community, where racial prejudice has directly affected social mobility.

Special Senate Committee

11. The following areas are examined in the brief:

(a) Rural Poverty

Many of the rural poor have migrated already. The residual group is locked into the countryside by land ownership. The small holdings are uneconomic to operate, and external sources of income are being eroded. A large proportion are pensioners.

(b) Urban Poverty

i) Halifax Even groups located at the centre of economic development suffer from poverty. These people are characterized by low levels of education. Female heads of households and broken homes also account for urban poverty. Present measures are inadequate to prevent the continuing circle of poverty, even at the centre of development.

ii) Eroded Base Communities The old coal mining towns have suffered exceedingly high rates of outmigration. Reduction of the tax base has left the local municipalities insufficient revenue to maintain basic services.

(c) Urban-Fringe Poverty

A study of this form of poverty reveals a lack of education, lack of motivation, lack of unskilled employment opportunities and alienation from the urban centre. Again, development alone cannot help these communities.

(d) Ethnic-Related Poverty

i) Indians Approximately 4,000 Indians lived on reservations in Nova Scotia in 1961, and 85 per cent fell below the poverty line. It is, again, the vicious circle of lack of education and lack of employment opportunities that maintains the poverty cycle.

ii) Blacks A history of oppression, discrimination and prejudice has produced the down-trodden Black communities of Nova Scotia. The 11,900 Blacks (1961) characterized by lack of education, are found mainly at the urban fringe or in remote parts of the province.

(e) Findings and Observations

i) Education The relationship between educational attainment and poverty is striking, as is the relationship between income of family head and educational attainment of dependents.

ii) Housing The immobility of the rural poor is increased on account of house ownership. By contrast, the urban poor generally rent or lease housing. Public housing appears to have a number of beneficial effects.

iii) Transportation The poor are highly dependent on public transportation; however, public attention is rarely drawn to this aspect of transportation. The poor will need, increasingly, public modes of transportation as the necessity of long-distance travel to work grows.

iv) Retraining General retraining programs have been of limited success. Specific training for a particular job appears to be a better answer for retraining and relocation.

v) Technological Change Gains through productivity should be made at minimum cost to individual workers.

vi) Guaranteed Annual Income An acceptable rationale for adoption of a universal guaranteed income is needed and can be aided by a program of experimentation.

vii) Organized and Unorganized Labour Less than a quarter of the labour force are organized. Improvements can come from greater participation in collective bargaining.

Special Senate Committee

viii) Credit Unions and Cooperatives These organizations can assist the poor to attain a meaningful role in production.

ix) Programs of Social Experiment These would provide a better basis for social action by testing the validity and effectiveness of alternative social programs.

x) The Total Situation The process of economic development will not, in itself, eradicate poverty. As Galbraith has said, "Growth is only for those who can take advantage of it."

I. DEFINITION

12. Poverty can be defined in terms of material well-being, social well-being, and cultural well-being, although a universally acceptable definition does not appear to exist. Poverty is, to say the least, a condition in which human beings lack food, shelter, and clothing sufficient to sustain life. But what is life? Surely contemporary Canadians regard it as being more than physical survival in minimum discomfort. An absence of poverty is no guarantee of the good life, but grinding poverty almost certainly precludes it. For most of the poor, poverty is a constant preoccupation that numbs and debases.

13. We may define the poor as those who, either as a consequence of personal insufficiency or environmental limitation, have resources inadequate to provide food, shelter, and clothing. Doubtless the numerous local and regional differentials in Canada explain, in part, the lack of a national standard of what constitutes minimum adequate resources. Nova Scotia, with the other Atlantic Provinces, has long had a per capita personal income appreciably less than the national average. In 1967, it was 77 per cent of the national average. It is not an overriding consolation to Nova Scotians to be reminded that their per capita income remains higher than that in most parts of the world, including the United Kingdom. In the 1860's and 1870's, Nova Scotians had a higher standard of living, compared with that of their contemporaries, than they have today. The forces that eroded that relative standard, for persons and for institutions, and the forces that can lead Nova Scotians out of the present condition need to be identified and assessed.

14. The victims of poverty may be classified into two major groups one of which should receive help in establishing a meaningful role in gainful employment, the other of which should be given special direct assistance. The first group includes people who are trainable and have potential for economic independence, as well as people whose skills are not marketable within their current environment; this group includes, also, those people whose alleged unwillingness to work is said to be a cause of their poverty. The second group includes the aged and the chronically disabled, who are beyond the scope of programs for training or retraining. There is need for a greater awareness that the latter group comprises an area of public responsibility which a civilized modern community should be prepared willingly to bear.

Special Senate Committee

15. Findings of a recent study of poverty in Canada indicate that, within the past generation, the number of poor people in this country has remained virtually unchanged; that the "level of poverty is deepened by the lack of alternative employment for seasonally employed men, or supplementary jobs for their wives;" that "... poverty lies heaviest in the Maritimes, where one half the rural wage earners and one quarter the urban have annual incomes less than $2,000"; and that one half the "male wage-earners (excluding students) drawing low incomes ... had only elementary education, one third secondary school and one sixth university training."¹

16. According to J.K. Galbraith:

"The problem of poverty is the problem of people who for reasons of location, education, health, environment in youth or mental deficiency or race, are not able to participate effectively - or at all - in the economic life of the nation. Being barred from participation they are denied the income that accrues to participants . . . Being unable to participate they receive nothing. They will continue to receive nothing no matter how fast the economy expands. . . ."¹

¹The Dimensions of Poverty in Canada: Some Preliminary Observations, by R.A. Jenness (Vancouver: University of British Columbia, February 1965) pp. 52-53

17. The next section of this brief discusses two approaches taken in estimating low-income families in Nova Scotia.

¹ J.K. Galbraith, quoted in A Socio-Economic Study and Recommendations: Sunnyville, Lincolnville, and Upper Big Tracadie, Guysborough County, Nova Scotia (Halifax, Nova Scotia: Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University, 1965) p.ii.

Special Senate Committees

II. DESCRIPTION AND EVALUATION

18. This section draws heavily upon, and extends Profile of Poverty in Nova Scotia, prepared in 1965 by the Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University.¹ The income sample of the 1961 census was the data base for the Profile and remains, despite the disadvantage created by a lapse in time, the only available data which can be applied rationally to the measurement of poverty.
19. In the following analysis, two approaches were taken in estimating low-income families in Nova Scotia. The first approach regarded all families earning below $3,000 as low-income families. This operational definition was chosen in order to highlight the incidence of poverty in a wide number of groups in the economy. By the second definition, ". . . low-income families are . . . those families whose incomes fall into those income groups in which, on average, most of the income received must be spent upon essentials such as food, clothing and shelter."²
20. The second definition chosen, that used in the Census Monograph, Incomes of Canadians, by Jenny R. Podoluk, takes specific account of family size, a variable which, given a specific income, is crucial in determining the extent of poverty. This definition becomes non-operational when one attempts to apply it in an extensive analysis of the published 1961 census data. In the

¹K. Scott Wood, Profile of Poverty in Nova Scotia, (Halifax, Nova Scotia: Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University, 1965).

Jenny R. Podoluk, Income of Canadians, (Ottawa: Dominion Bureau of Statistics, 1968), p. 185. This definition utilized expenditure data to determine the cut-off level. The levels chosen were as follows: for a single person, below $1,500; for a family of two, below $2,500; for a family of three, below $3,000; for a family of four, below $3,500; and for families of five or more, below $4,000.

published census material, size of household is classified only with the geographical distribution of income.

21. The effect of taking into account family size is an increase in the number of families, and thus individuals, in the low-income population. If $3,000 is used, regardless of family size, there are 54,929 non-farm low-income families in Nova Scotia; however, if income is varied according to the size of family, there are 63,899 low-income families.
22. When the criterion chosen is all families with incomes below $3,000, there are an estimated 185,903 persons representing 25.2 per cent of the total population of Nova Scotia. If, however, family size is taken into consideration, there are 242,969 persons in low-income families in Nova Scotia; that is, 33 per cent of the population (Table 1).
23. In addition to persons in low-income families, there are 37,247 persons, not in families, whose income is below $1,500, and there are an estimated 33,424 persons on low income farms.
24. In total, if one uses $3,000 as the criterion, there are in Nova Scotia an estimated 256,574 persons, 34.8 per cent of the total population, below the poverty line. If one takes family size into account, there are 313,640 low-income persons; this is, 42.6 per cent of the total population.
25. Every identifiable group in the economy is represented among low-income families, some groups much more strongly than others. The degree to which low income is prevalent among families with a given characteristic can be indicated by taking families with a low income as a percentage of all families having the given characteristic. In the discussion which follows, this is termed the incidence of low income. For instance, in Nova Scotia there are 146,825 non-farm families of which 54,929, or 37.4 per cent, have incomes below $3,000; thus the incidence of low-income non-farm families in Nova Scotia is 37.4 per cent. Figures 1 and 2 show the incidence of poverty for major groups of families and persons not in families. Derivation of the foregoing and the incidence of low income for a number of identifiable groups is given in Appendix A.

Special Senate Committee

26. Four family groupings, each based on the incidence of low-income families, are presented in Tables 2 through 5:

High incidence	75 to 100 per cent
Above average incidence	50 to 75 per cent
Average incidence	25 to 50 per cent
Below average incidence	0 to 25 per cent

These categories have been chosen arbitrarily, for purposes of exposition. By changing any particular category a few percentage points, groups with certain characteristics can easily be moved between them. Through a simple redefinition, it is possible to move families and individuals into or out of the poverty groups; indeed, this is one of the major problems in evaluating poverty. If, for instance, the criterion used in defining low-income families is $3,000 (Table 1), it can be said that there are 54,929 such families. If allowance is made, however, for family size as indicated, the estimated number of low-income families is increased to 63,899 families, a difference of nearly 9,000 families or over 67,000 persons.

27. The foregoing is stated as a caveat in interpretation of the material presented below. As was pointed out in the Fifth Annual Review, Economic Council of Canada, "Statistics cannot adequately describe poverty. But used with care they are capable of furnishing important clues to types of policies likely to be effective

FIGURE 1
INCIDENCE OF LOW INCOME BY SELECTED FAMILY CHARACTERISTICS, NOVA SCOTIA, 1961

Special Senate Committee

FIGURE 2
INCIDENCE OF LOW INCOME BY SELECTED CHARACTERISTICS, PERSONS NOT IN FAMILIES, NOVA SCOTIA, 1961 against poverty."¹ Further: "It is vital, in framing policy, not to be overinfluenced by rates of incidence, and in this way to form too simple and stereotyped picture of poverty."²

1. Families

(a) Major Income Source

28. A significantly high incidence of low-income families is associated with families having non-employment income as the major source of income. This incidence is true of rural non-farm families and of urban families; in contrast, urban families with employment income as their major source show a below-average incidence of low income. The Profile of Poverty points out that the $3,000 income level appears to be ". . . a critical dividing point, below which an increasing number of families are not able to support themselves from employment income and thus derive their major source of income from government transfer-payments."³

(b) Geographic Distribution

29. Because of the availability of income data by family size at the provincial and county level, low-income families are identified, by criterion B, by varying income levels with family size. The data related to counties and household size, presented in Tables 2 through 5, are not directly comparable to data for other characteristics.
30. Twelve of the 18 counties in Nova Scotia have ¹Fifth Annual Review, Economic Council, Canada (Ottawa: Queen's Printer, September, 1968) p. 110.

²Ibid., p. 113.

³Wood, op. cit., p. 4.

Special Senate Committee

an above-average incidence of low-income families. The other six counties (Annapolis, Antigonish, Colchester, Kings, Cape Breton, and Halifax) have an average incidence. Halifax County has the lowest incidence, with 25.7 per cent of its families classed as low-income. Consequently, in order to facilitate evaluation of the importance of each group to the whole, in the tables each group is expressed as a percentage of total population and total low-income population indicating its importance to the totality.

31. Although the incidence of low-income families among urban families is 27.3 per cent, the incidence among rural non-farm families is over 52 per cent. Rural non-farm families account for 56.6 per cent of the total non-farm low-income families in Nova Scotia. Sydney, Halifax City, the Halifax fringe, and Dartmouth have each a below-average incidence of low-income families, with the lowest incidence, 12.2 per cent, occurring in Dartmouth.

(c) Family

32. Families with male heads between the ages of 35 and 44 show a below-average incidence of low-income families; on the other hand, families with female heads under the age of 44 are associated with a high incidence. The incidence for husband-and-wife families is 33.9 per cent, compared with 47.3 per cent for broken families with a male head, and 71.6 per cent for broken families with a female head. The latter category accounts for 16.4 per cent of non-farm low-income families. Families with a female head age 45 and over had an above-average incidence.

(d) Labour Force

33. Families with a male head in logging and related activities, or not in the labour force, or with a female head in the non-current labour force, have a high incidence of poverty (Table 2). In contrast, families with a male head in managerial, professional and technical, clerical, sales and services, and recreation occupations have a below-average incidence (Table 5). Families with male head in the non-current labour force and families with female head not in the labour force have an above-average incidence (Table 3).

(e) Education

34. The incidence of low-income families declines as education increases. That possession of university education does not necessarily exclude one from the low-income category is evidenced by the fact that 1.4 per cent of all low-income families have a male head who has a university education.

(f) Households

35. Families maintaining their own household, whether owned or rented, experience an average degree of incidence. Above-average incidence is associated with families not maintaining their own households, with the incidence being approximately the same whether the family is living in a household with a related head or other than a related head.

(g) Housing

36. There is a strong association between the incidence of low-income and the condition of the dwelling in which a family is housed. Above-average incidence is associated with single detached owner-occupied dwellings in need of both major and minor repair and tenant-occupied dwellings in need of major repair. In addition, lack of refrigeration facilities is associated with an above-average incidence of low income.
37. Only 7.1 per cent of the low-income families live in a mortgaged single detached owner-occupied dwelling. In contrast, 17.8 per cent of all families live in mortgaged dwellings. It is interesting to note that, while the government is mortgagee for approximately 17 per cent of all families who have mortgages on single detached occupied family dwellings, it is mortgagee for only 13 per cent of low-income families in similar circumstances.

2. Persons Not in Families

38. The major portion, over 66 per cent, of the persons not in families having low incomes are not in the labour force. In contrast, only 34.7 per cent of the low-income families had heads not in the labour force.

39. Low income and non-participation of persons not in families would appear to be, to a considerable degree, the result of the age distribution. Over 23 per cent of the females and over 12 per cent of the males in the low-income group are over 70 years of age, while males and females between 65 and 69 years of age account for another 10 per cent.

40. The incidence of low income for rural non-farm families is nearly twice that of urban non-farm families, but a similar circumstance does not hold for persons not in families, where the incidence of low income was 77.0 per cent for the rural non-farm group and 54 per cent for the urban group; indeed, the incidence of low income for persons not in families living in urban areas exceed the incidence for rural non-farm families.

Table 1
LOW INCOME POPULATION, NOVA SCOTIA, YEAR ENDED MAY 31, 1961

	Criterion A		Criterion B
	Number	Percentage of Total Nova Scotia Population	Number	Percentage of Total Nova Scotia Population
Non-Farm
In Families	185,903 ^a	25.2	242,969 ^b	33.0
Not in Families ^c	37,247	5.1	37,247	5.1
Farm ^d	33,424	4.5	33,424	4.5
Total	256,574	34.8	313,640	42.6

^aBased on family incomes below $3,000.

^bBased on sum of:
Two-Person Families with Incomes Below $2,500
Three-Person Families with Incomes Below $3,000
Four-Person Families with Incomes Below $3,500
Five-or-More-Person Families with Incomes Below $4,000.

^cIndividual incomes below $1,500.

^dEstimated persons on farms where income from products sold, plus estimated income of operator from off-farm work totalled less than $3,000.

Source: Derived from D.B.S., 1961 Census of Canada.

Table 2
CHARACTERISTICS ASSOCIATED WITH A HIGH (75-100%) INCIDENCE
OF LOW-INCOME FAMILIES^a, NOVA SCOTIA, 1961

Characteristics	All Families ^a		Low Income Families		Incidence of Low Income ^b
	Number (1)	Per Cent (2)	Number (3)	Per Cent (4)
Total Families	146,825	100.0	54,929	100.0	37.4
Major Income Source
Rural Non-farm - non-employment	11,210	7.6	10,311	18.8	91.9
Urban - non-employment	10,866	7.4	8,743	15.9	80.5
Geographic Distribution	-	-	-	-	-
Family
Female Head - Under 25	697	.5	662	1.2	95.0
25 - 34	1,699	1.2	1,571	2.9	92.5
35 - 44	2,381	1.6	1,912	3.5	80.3
Labour Force
Male Head - loggers and related	1,494	1.0	1,194	2.2	79.9
Female Head in Non-Current Labour Force	424	.3	340	.6	80.2
Male Head not in Labour Force	16,843	11.5	12,664	23.1	75.2
Education
Female Head - elementary	6,192	4.2	4,678	8.5	75.5
Households	-	-	-	-	-
Housing	-	-	-	-	-

^aNon-Farm Families.

^bCol. (3) as a percentage of col. (1).

Poverty

1 : 75

Table 3
CHARACTERISTICS ASSOCIATED WITH AN ABOVE AVERAGE (50-75%)
INCIDENCE OF LOW INCOME FAMILIES^a, NOVA SCOTIA, 1961

Characteristics	All Families ^a		Low Income Families		Incidence of Low Income ^b
	Number	Per Cent	Number	Per Cent
	(1)	(2)	(3)	(4)	(5)
Total Families	146,825	100.0	54,929	100.0	37.4
Major Income Source
Recipients - Wife or Mother only and/or Children	13,018	8.9	9,337	17.0	71.7
Geographic Distribution
Rural Non-Farm Families	59,601	40.6	31,063	56.6	52.2
Counties - Guysborough	2,448	1.6	1,778	(2.8)	72.6
- Digby	3,980	2.7	2,787	(4.4)	70.0
- Shelburne	3,409	2.3	2,384	(3.7)	69.9
- Victoria	1,397	1.0	937	(1.5)	67.1
- Richmond	2,087	1.4	1,352	(2.1)	64.8
- Inverness	2,607	1.7	1,669	(2.6)	64.0
- Cumberland	7,550	5.1	4,745	(7.4)	62.8
- Yarmouth	4,814	3.3	2,942	(4.6)	61.1
- Lunenburg	7,387	5.0	4,211	(6.6)	57.0
- Hants	4,747	3.2	2,641	(4.1)	55.6
- Queens	2,910	2.0	1,524	(2.4)	52.4
- Pictou	8,618	5.9	4,497	(7.0)	52.2
Family
Broken Families - Female Head	12,560	8.6	8,999	16.4	71.6
Male Head - Age 65 - 69	6,736	4.6	3,902	7.1	57.9
70+	10,741	7.3	7,456	13.6	69.4
Female Head - Age 45 - 54	2,518	1.7	1,740	3.2	69.1
55 - 64	1,865	1.3	1,176	2.1	63.1
65 - 69	962	.7	588	1.1	61.1
70+	2,438	1.7	1,350	2.5	55.4
Labour Force
Male Head - farm workers	1,228	.8	883	1.6	71.9
- fishermen, trappers and hunters	4,477	3.0	2,943	5.4	65.7
- labourers	6,567	4.5	3,862	7.0	58.8
Male Head in Non-Current Labour Force	4,818	3.3	2,864	5.2	59.4
Female Head Not in Labour Force	8,751	6.0	6,358	11.6	72.7
Education
Male Head - elementary	60,889	41.5	30,536	55.6	50.2
Female Head - secondary	6,057	4.1	4,227	7.7	69.8
Household
Family Not Maintaining Own Household	10,331	7.0	6,257	11.4	60.6
Living In: Related	8,494	5.8	5,165	9.4	60.8
Other	1,837	1.3	1,092	2.0	59.4
Housing
Number of Rooms - 1 to 3	13,119	8.9	6,619	12.1	50.5
Refrigeration Facilities -
- icebox or other	2,193	1.5	1,473	2.7	67.2
- none	14,367	9.8	10,586	1.5	73.7
Single Detached Owner Occupied -
Value - under $3,000	23,711	16.1	16,285	29.6	68.7
Condition - in need of repair
- minor	20,127	13.7	10,396	18.9	51.7
- major	6,067	4.1	3,846	7.0	63.3
Tenant Occupied Family Households
Condition - in need of major repair	4,483	3.1	2,458	4.5	54.8

^aNon-Farm Families.

^bCol. (3) as a percentage of Col. (1).

() indicates percentage of 63,899, the number of low-income family households using Criterion B, income varied with size of family.

Source: Derived from D.B.S., 1961 Census of Canada.

Special Senate Committee

Table 4
CHARACTERISTICS ASSOCIATED WITH AN AVERAGE (25-50%) INCIDENCE
OF LOW INCOME FAMILIES^a, NOVA SCOTIA

Characteristics	All Families ^a		Low Income Families		Incidence of Low Income ^b
	Number	Per Cent	Number	Per Cent
	(1)	(2)	(3)	(4)	(5) ^c
Total Families	146,825	100.0	54,929	100.0	37.4
Major Income Source
Rural Non-Farm
- employment	48,491	32.8	20,012	36.4	41.5
Recipients
- husband or father only	70,050	47.7	27,018	49.2	38.6
- husband and wife	37,208	25.3	12,504	22.8	33.6
Number of Recipients
- one	76,654	52.2	33,061	60.2	43.1
- two	54,746	37.3	18,573	33.8	33.9
Geographic Distribution
Urban Families	87,224	59.4	23,866	43.4	27.3
Counties - Annapolis	4,221	2.9	2,059	(3.2)	48.8
- Antigonish	1,793	1.2	875	(1.4)	48.8
- Colchester	6,677	4.5	3,195	(5.0)	47.9
- Kings	7,762	5.3	3,552	(5.5)	45.8
- Cape Breton	26,561	18.1	10,475	(16.4)	39.4
- Halifax	47,857	32.6	12,276	(19.2)	25.7
Towns and Cities
Glace Bay	5,255	3.6	1,892	3.4	36.0
Amherst	2,529	1.7	865	1.6	34.2
New Waterford	2,102	1.4	652	1.2	31.0
Truro	3,085	2.1	938	1.7	30.4
Family Size
- two persons	40,679	27.7	18,387	(28.8)	45.2
- three persons	30,572	20.8	11,747	(18.4)	38.4
- four persons	28,117	19.1	11,076	(17.3)	39.4
- five persons	19,772	13.5	9,484	(14.8)	48.0
- six+ persons	27,685	18.6	13,205	(20.7)	47.7
Husband/Wife Families	131,311	89.4	44,533	(81.1)	33.9
Broken Families - Male Head	2,954	2.0	1,397	2.5	47.3
Male Head - all ages	134,265	91.4	45,930	83.6	34.2
- under 25	7,131	4.6	3,170	5.8	44.5
- 25 - 34	29,403	20.0	8,728	15.9	29.7
- 35 - 44	29,048	19.8	7,999	14.6	27.5
- 45 - 54	16,907	11.5	6,349	11.6	37.6
- 55 - 64	40,485	27.6	19,358	35.2	47.8
With No Children under 25	71,705	48.8	25,512	46.4	35.6
With All Children under 16	22,522	15.3	6,046	11.0	26.8
With Children under 16 and 16-24	8,962	6.1	2,844	5.2	27.8
- with no children 16-24 at school	11,431	7.8	2,884	5.3	25.2
- with children 16-18 at school	12,113	8.2	3,977	7.2	32.8
With Children 16-24 only	6,225	4.2	2,068	3.8	33.2
- with no children 16-24 at school	4,403	3.0	1,636	3.0	37.2
- with children 16-18 at school
Labour Force
Male Heads - all occupations	112,569	76.7	30,382	55.3	26.9
- transport and communications	10,654	7.3	3,386	6.2	31.8
- miners, quarrymen	5,816	4.0	1,565	2.8	26.9
- craftsmen and production	33,860	23.1	9,390	17.1	27.7
- not stated	1,194	.8	404	.7	33.8
Households
Family Maintaining Own Household	136,494	93.0	48,672	88.6	35.7
Owned	101,480	69.1	38,101	69.4	37.5
Rented	37,211	25.3	11,167	20.3	30.0
Housing
Type of Dwelling
single detached	106,138	72.3	40,030	72.9	37.7
single attached	11,666	7.9	4,145	7.5	35.5
Number of Rooms - 4 to 5	51,908	34.8	40,030	32.4	37.7
- 6+	74,474	50.7	24,848	45.2	33.4
Refrigeration Facilities - mechanical	122,131	83.2	37,209	67.7	30.5
Television Set	121,157	82.5	37,495	68.3	30.9
Automobile	91,346	62.2	23,157	42.2	25.4
Number of Persons per Room
less than 1	88,328	60.2	23,157	58.3	36.3
1 or more	50,363	34.3	17,242	31.4	34.2
Single Detached Owner Occupied	91,489	62.3	34,820	63.4	38.1
Value - $3,000 - $7,477	32,621	22.2	13,791	25.1	42.3
Condition - Good	65,295	44.5	20,569	37.4	31.5
Not Mortgaged	65,288	44.5	30,902	56.3	47.3
Tenant Occupied Family Households
- Condition - in need of minor repair	11,188	7.6	4,305	7.8	38.5
Holder of Mortgage on Single Detached Owner Occupied Family Households
Private Individual	4,105	2.8	1,216	2.2	29.6
Place of Birth of Head
Canada	136,692	93.1	52,016	94.7	38.1
Immigrated Prior to 1946	7,039	4.8	2,231	4.1	31.7

^aNon-Farm Families.

^bCol. (3) as a percentage of col. (1).

() indicates percentage of 63,899, the number of low-income family households using Criterion B, income varied with size of family.

Source: Derived from D.B.S., 1961 Census of Canada.

Table 5
 CHARACTERISTICS ASSOCIATED WITH A BELOW AVERAGE (0-25%)
 INCIDENCE OF LOW INCOME FAMILIES^a, NOVA SCOTIA, 1961

Characteristics	All Families ^a		Low Income Families		Incidence of Low Income ^b
	Number	Per Cent	Number	Per Cent
	(1)	(2)	(3)	(4)	(5)
Total Families	146,825	100.0	54,929	100.0	37.4
Major Income Source
Urban
employment	76,140	51.9	14,905	27.1	19.6
Recipients
husband, wife and children	8,239	5.6	1,740	3.2	21.1
husband or father and children	17,892	12.2	3,876	7.1	21.7
Number of Recipients
three+	15,007	10.2	2,877	5.2	19.2
Geographic Distribution
Sydney	7,121	4.8	1,431	2.6	20.0
Halifax - City proper	18,924	12.9	3,567	6.5	18.8
Halifax - Fringe areas ^c	9,745	6.6	1,589	2.9	16.3
Dartmouth	10,615	7.2	1,301	2.4	12.2
Family
Male Head - Age 35 - 44	34,299	23.4	8,236	15.2	24.3
With children under 16 and
16 - 24, and children 19 - 24	1,316	9.0	194	.4	14.7
at school
With children 16 - 24 only, and	1,118	7.6	206	.4	18.4
children 19 - 24 at school
Labour Force
Male Head - managerial	13,380	9.1	1,990	3.6	14.9
- professional and technical	6,671	4.5	368	.7	5.5
- clerical	6,080	4.1	868	1.6	14.3
- sales	5,527	3.8	1,166	2.1	21.1
- services and recreation	15,519	10.6	2,198	4.0	14.4
Education
Male Head - secondary	69,693	43.4	14,643	26.7	23.0
Male Head - university	9,683	6.6	751	1.4	7.8
Households	-	-	-	-	-
Housing
Type of dwelling other than single, attached or detached	20,887	14.2	5,093	9.3	24.4
Single detached owner occupied
Value - $ 7,500 - $12,500	18,488	12.6	3,545	6.5	19.2
Value - $12,500+	16,669	11.4	1,199	2.2	7.2
Mortgaged	26,201	17.8	3,918	7.1	15.0
Tenant occupied family households
Condition - good	21,540	14.7	4,404	8.0	20.5
Holder of mortgage on single detached owner occupied family households
- Government	4,359	3.0	538	1.0	12.3
- Bank, Insurance, Loan, Trust, or Mortgage Company	16,652	11.3	1,935	3.5	11.6
- Other	1,085	.7	229	.4	21.1
Place of Birth
Immigrated, postwar	3,094	2.1	682	1.2	22.0

^aNon-Farm Families.

^bCol. (3) as a percentage of col. (1).

^cExcluding the City of Dartmouth.

Source: Derived from D.B.S., 1961 Census of Canada.

Table 6

INCIDENCE OF LOW INCOME^a ASSOCIATED WITH SELECTED
CHARACTERISTICS OF PERSONS^b NOT IN FAMILIES, NOVA SCOTIA, 1961

Characteristics	All Persons Not In Families		Low Income Group		Incidence of Low Income ^c
	Number (1)	Per Cent (2)	Number (3)	Per Cent (4)
Total Persons not in Families	59,731	100.0	37,247	100.0	62.4
Sex Structure - Male	26,351	44.1	14,065	37.8	53.4
- Female	33,380	55.9	23,182	62.2	69.4
Age Distribution
Males
Under 25	3,968	6.6	1,762	4.7	44.4
25-34	3,215	5.4	1,200	3.2	37.3
35-44	2,836	4.7	1,112	3.0	39.2
45-54	4,124	6.9	1,771	4.8	42.9
55-64	4,156	7.0	2,107	5.7	50.7
65-69	1,992	3.3	1,305	3.5	65.5
70+	6,060	10.1	4,808	12.9	79.3
Females
Under 25	5,091	8.5	3,135	8.4	61.6
25-34	2,285	3.8	1,087	2.9	47.6
35-44	2,289	3.8	1,236	3.3	54.0
45-54	3,921	6.6	2,238	6.0	57.1
55-64	5,594	9.4	3,753	10.1	67.1
65-69	3,629	6.1	2,873	7.7	79.2
70+	10,571	17.	8,860	23.8	83.8
Major Income Source
Rural Non-Farm - Employment	9,055	15.2	5,005	13.4	55.3
- Non-Employment	10,697	17.9	9,753	26.2	91.1
Urban - Employment	21,436	35.9	6,868	18.4	32.0
- Non-Employment	13,440	22.5	10,518	28.2	78.3
Geographic Distribution
Rural Non-Farm	21,729	36.4	16,735	44.9	77.0
Urban	38,002	63.6	20,512	55.1	54.0
Halifax - City Proper	12,552	21.0	4,955	13.3	39.5
- Fringe Areas	4,733	7.9	2,238	6.0	47.2
Counties - Richmond	876	1.5	753	2.0	86.0
- Digby	1,717	2.9	1,405	3.8	81.8
- Victoria	695	1.2	559	1.5	80.4
- Inverness	1,408	2.4	1,123	3.0	79.8
- Shelburne	1,196	2.0	913	2.5	76.3
- Yarmouth	2,014	3.4	1,508	4.0	74.9
- Lunenburg	3,103	5.2	2,320	6.2	74.8
- Guysborough	1,120	1.9	833	2.2	74.4
- Queens	1,176	2.0	855	2.3	72.7
- Pictou	3,784	6.3	2,720	7.3	71.9
- Cumberland	3,376	5.6	2,381	6.4	70.5
- Antigonish	1,100	1.8	764	2.0	69.5
- Hants	1,904	3.2	1,289	3.5	67.7
- Annapolis	1,745	2.9	1,176	3.2	67.4
- Kings	3,008	5.0	2,016	5.4	67.0
- Cape Breton	8,720	14.6	5,734	15.4	65.8
- Colchester	2,931	4.9	1,883	4.1	64.2
- Halifax	19,858	33.2	9,015	24.2	45.4
Towns and Cities
- New Waterford	655	1.1	461	1.2	70.4
- Glace Bay	1,704	2.8	1,146	3.1	67.4
- Amherst	1,176	2.0	730	2.0	62.1
- Sydney	2,816	4.7	1,588	4.3	56.4
- Truro	1,485	2.5	799	2.1	53.8
- Dartmouth	2,720	4.6	1,234	3.3	45.4
- Halifax	12,552	21.0	4,955	13.3	39.5
Labour Force
In Current Labour Force	28,428	47.6	10,657	28.6	37.5
In Non-Current Labour Force	2,404	4.0	1,625	4.4	67.6
Not In Labour Force	28,767	48.2	24,859	66.7	86.4
Household
Persons Maintaining own Household	23,087	38.7	13,968	37.5	60.5
Persons Not Maintaining Own Household - Relative or Head	18,264	30.6	13,288	35.7	72.8
- Other	18,380	30.8	9,991	26.8	54.4

^aIncomes below $1,500.^bNon-Farm.^cCol. (3) as a percentage of col. (1).Source: Derived from D.B.S., 1961 Census of Canada.

III. RURAL POVERTY¹

41. In Nova Scotia, as in Canada as a whole, many of the poor are rural dwellers. Over the years there have been radical changes in the scale and technology of farming. With the introduction of more capital-intensive techniques, the demand has been for large farms and for farmers with an ever-increasing knowledge and understanding of farming and farm management. As farms consolidate, small holdings are unable to compete, and supplementary sources of income are being eroded. In the logging and fishing industries, part of the erosion has been caused by government policies designed to put these industries on a more rational footing. It is thus most important that the government interrelate its policies through a comprehensive development plan.
42. There has been a continual drift of people and production from the rural to the urban centres. Large numbers of the rural population have migrated to urban areas, but many are still "stranded" in rural areas; indeed, in Nova Scotia there seems to be an inextricable relationship between poverty and land ownership. Many of the province's poor are locked into the countryside, and can be said to form a residual group caught in the process of economic change taking place generally in the primary industries. Labour mobility is important if society is to achieve a high growth rate and if families are to maximize their income, but many individual persons are in a position where they are unable to migrate.

¹ This section is based on a paper by G.A. Connor, Canada Land Inventory Pilot Land-Use Planning Project, Nova Scotia: The Socio-Economic Dimension (Truro, Nova Scotia: Canada Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, (1968) and conversation with the author.

43. Two land ownership inventories completed by the federal Department of Energy Mines and Resources shed considerable light on the relationship among land ownership, poverty, and willingness to relocate. The inventoried areas are (a) in northern Colchester County and northeast Cumberland County, and (b) in the Musquodoboit Valley. Findings of the inventories are presented in Table 7.

44. The land inventories lead to the following conclusions:

- 1) Only a small percentage of the farms studied are in a strong position to compete for present and future agricultural markets. The group of 44 commercial farmers or candidates for expansion in the Cumberland-Colchester area represent only 8.4 per cent of all census farms in the study area. A more limited analysis of farms in other parts of Nova Scotia leads to a similar conclusion.
- 2) A large number of the viable non-farmers are only slightly above the poverty line and represent potential poverty cases. There has been for some time an erosion of employment opportunities in rural areas, resulting from employment decline in the primary industries, and there is a strong probability that the potential poverty cases will become actual.
- 3) A total of 125 pensioners in the Colchester-Cumberland area indicate their willingness to sell all or part of their property. Seventy-eight indicate a willingness to sell their farms, while an additional 47 want to sell only part of their land and retain their houses. In addition, a number of other landholders indicate that they would be willing to sell all or part of their holdings. Eleven,

Table 7

LAND OWNERSHIP INVENTORY OF HOLDINGS OF FIVE OR MORE ACRES, NORTH COLCHESTER-- NORTHEAST CUMBERLAND COUNTIES AND MUSQUODOBOIT VALLEY

	Cumberland-Colchester Households	Per Cent	Musquodoboit Valley Households	Per Cent	Total Households	Per Cent
Commercial Farmers and Candidates for Expansion	44	4.5	20	8.5	64	5.3
Non-Commercial Farmers	101	10.3	41	17.4	142	11.7
Viable Non-Farmers	290	29.6	75	31.8	365	30.0
Pensioners	359	36.7	53	22.5	412	33.9
Poverty Cases	169	17.3	27	11.4	196	16.1
Other	16	1.6	20	8.5	36	3.0
Total Resident Ownership	979	100.0	236	100.0	1,215	100.0

or 6.5 per cent of 169 poverty cases, are low-income families for which an income supplement is essential. Here various restrictions or difficulties appear to make persons ineligible for types of employment such as might be provided through retraining for income maintenance jobs.

4) A large portion, 43.7 per cent, of the poverty cases are persons with low incomes who require full-time employment and who, because of limitations (such as age, or large family size) which would make relocation difficult, do not appear to qualify for retraining programs. Employment for this group could be provided through public works programs (such as construction and maintenance of park or forest conservation projects), or possibly in the private sector.

5) The inventories conducted suggest, in combination with other material, that a large part of the low-income rural poor have very small holdings, less than five acres, and that many of them reside on small holdings on the fringe of built-up centres.

45. Studies like the land inventories described above have the effect of revealing issues leading to better understanding of the economic and social insufficiency that constitutes poverty, and they tend to yield a factual basis for intelligent solution. In view of their usefulness and importance, and in order that policy and programs can be formulated on the basis of fact rather than supposition, studies like these should be undertaken for the entire province.

46. The inventories completed to date make clear that coordination among all agencies should take place at the grassroots and extend to dealings with individual persons. We must not have, for instance, a situation where an agricultural representative encourages a landholder to embark upon an extended agricultural program while, concurrently, a welfare agent encourages the same man to enter a retraining program that would remove him from agricultural employment.¹ Agency representatives having the best of intentions cannot work effectively unless clearly defined and enunciated policy and goal structures enable them to act in conscious and informed collaboration. There must be a collective vision engaging inputs from all agents of change. The skills and insights of the sociologist are needed to complement those of the economist and other specialists dealing with poverty problems in Nova Scotia.

¹ "There appears to be a widespread lack of co-ordination between welfare and manpower services; good co-ordination is needed here to help family units achieve economic viability." Economic Council of Canada, Sixth Annual Review, (Ottawa: Queen's Printer, 1969) p. 119.

Special Senate Committee

IV. URBAN POVERTY¹

A. HALIFAX CITY

47. The picture of Halifax City, Nova Scotia's principal urban centre, that emerges from the recent Nulife Study reinforces general findings based on the 1961 census. Relative to a middle-income group used for comparison, the low-income group has significantly more female heads of households, more broken homes, a lower level of education, and is composed primarily of bluecollar workers or labourers.
48. Many of the urban poor, over 67 per cent of those surveyed, are employed persons. The low-income group indicates considerably greater instability in work patterns than does the comparison group. Only 57.2 per cent of the low-income group are working full time, compared with 85.4 per cent of the comparison group. It is significant that 38.2 per cent of the low-income group do not know whether they work full or part time. While 54.5 per cent of the comparison group have held only one job since the age of 20 and over 91 per cent have held only four jobs or less, only 16.2 per cent of the low-income group have held one job and 16.4 per cent have held five or more jobs.
49. In general, the heads of low-income families left school early for financial reasons. Over 93 per cent of them held their first permanent job before they were 20 years old, in contrast with 40.4 per cent of the comparison group.

¹This section is based substantially on findings in Halifax, set forth in Nulife Study, 1967, by Paul N. Geisel, under the direction of the Canadian Welfare Council.

50. Not only does the low-income family head have a relatively low level of education, but his father before him had a low level of education. Of those surveyed who know the level of education achieved by the father, in the low-income group 75.0 per cent of the fathers had only an elementary education or less, contrasted with 25.6 per cent with an elementary education or less in the comparison group.
51. The low-income family in Halifax is effectively unable to achieve home ownership.
52. The comparison group in the Halifax survey is 100 per cent white, but the low-income group is 90.9 per cent white, 8.5 per cent Negro, and .6 other.
53. The low-income group hold, in general, an attitude of alienation. They are less sure of their future and that of their children than are the comparison group, and they believe that there are fewer job opportunities. One of the most important observations in the Nulife Study arises from an analysis of questions relating to neighbourhood services and community activities available to low-income families in their own neighbourhoods. Many of the low-income group were unable to answer questions about services and activities. The Study's director observed,

"Who these people are is of vital importance to any community action, planning and/or welfare programmes. It is felt that these people represent the hard core poverty population. They are, in effect, alienated from society. We find that they are not aware of activities, programs and services available to them. They are isolated structurally and psychologically from the community in which they live. It is to these people that future research must be aimed. It is ironic to note that the group which needs and would best benefit from present programmes is the group that is least cognizant of and affected by these programmes."¹

¹Ibid., n.p.

Special Senate Committee

54. The Nulife Study makes clear that significant hard-core poverty exists within Halifax City, despite the fact that the Halifax economy is the most buoyant in Nova Scotia and that there are over 80 welfare agencies and associated institutions in the Halifax metropolitan area. These facts, and the presence of poverty in all major cities, indicate that a buoyant economy, progressive economic development, and welfare services are by themselves insufficient weapons against poverty.

55. The recent history of Halifax City affords, however, an illustration of desirable social and economic effects of research, study, and action focused on urban development, with particular attention to poverty conditions. The well-known Stephenson Report,¹ a redevelopment study of Halifax City, described the local situation in 1957, with special reference to the structure of the city, population, health, housing, welfare, children and their troubles, police problems, fire fighting problems, buildings and their uses, overcrowded families, unwholesome sanitary conditions, condition of residential buildings, and property values. Research into these areas was used as the basis for a series of urban renewal projects.

56. The Stephenson Report has become a classic document in Canadian urban development. By detailed study of households, blocks, and neighbourhoods, Stephenson showed conclusively the costs of slum ¹Gordon Stephenson, A Redevelopment Study of Halifax, Nova Scotia, 1957, (Halifax, Nova Scotia: Corporation of the City of Halifax, 1957); and Supplementary Volume, prepared under the auspices of the Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University, 1957.

The Stephenson Report is discussed in "A Regional City Plans Its Future", by Guy Henson, reprinted from Community Planning Review, Vol. XI, No. 1, 1961.

conditions both to people and in costs of health, welfare, delinquency, fire, and other burdens upon the community. His study led to public awareness and to a phased program of relocation, through public housing and other means, and of downtown redevelopment. The attack on slums and poverty by a concerned group of citizens, which gave rise to the Stephenson Report, has brought about both an environmental improvement for a substantial number of people and urban renewal (in particular, the Scotia Square complex) providing a dynamic influence in the economic life of the city and region. It must be added, however, that the Nulife Study provides evidence of the need for scientific evaluation of the net effects upon the people relocated.

B. ERODED-BASE COMMUNITIES

57. Technological change and physical resource depletion have caused certain communities in Nova Scotia to face a virtually complete withdrawal of economic activity. In the history of the province, locational change in response to technological advance has taken place frequently. (An example of this process is Maitland, Hants County, which was once a substantial shipbuilding and shipping centre.) The problems that arise under these circumstances can best be characterized by the candid statement, "Depressed areas have a slow death."¹ The problems experienced by people making adjustment to change appear to be increasingly complex and, more than ever, are a matter of serious concern.

¹Attributed to Dr. Stanislaw Judek by the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities in a brief submitted to the Special Senate Committee on Manpower and Employment, 1961.

58. Particular attention has been paid to the declining coal mining communities of Cape Breton. The problems faced by such areas have been studied in considerable depth by Harold A. Renouf,¹ and by K. Scott Wood and Harold F. Verge.² The coal mining industry has been underpinned by federal government subventions. Wages paid are reasonably high, and income per capita in the coal mining communities is commensurate with the provincial average. Declining employment opportunities have resulted, however, in exceedingly high rates of outmigration, general population decline, and high levels of unemployment. The structure of outmigration and the high rate of natural increase has left in the communities a high proportion of dependent children. The towns studies were characterized by falling property values, substandard housing, and the lack of the tax base required to provide basic government services. In certain cases, provincial support was necessary to prevent the municipalities becoming bankrupt. In particular, none of the municipalities considered could maintain its educational requirements. If fundamental services such as education and social welfare are tied to local sources of finance, clearly the background to inequality of opportunity and future poverty are present in Nova Scotia's declining municipalities.

¹Harold A. Renouf, The Financial Situation of Certain Depressed Municipalities: Westville, Dominion, New Waterford, Nova Scotia. (Halifax, Nova Scotia: Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University, 1964)

²K. Scott Wood and Harold F. Verge, A Study of the Problems of Certain Cape Breton Communities (Halifax, Nova Scotia: Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University, 1966).

V. URBAN FRINGE POVERTY

59. Several years ago, the Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University, completed a detailed and unpublished study of an urban-fringe community composing part of an incorporated town and the adjacent county municipality. This study provides insight into a type of poverty community that exists on the margins of many urban communities in Nova Scotia.

1. Attitudes of Outsiders

60. The study reports the attitude of outsiders (residents of the town proper) towards the dwellers of Fringeville. The people of Fringeville, who are looked down upon and appear to be alienated from the larger community, are mostly unskilled workers with a high rate of unemployment. They were originally brought into the area to do menial work for residents of the town and, subsequently, were stranded on its fringes. The children are regarded as having a high incidence of school retardation, and, possibly, mental retardation. Families are large, ordinarily with eight to ten members, usually all squatters on the land that they occupy, and live in substandard houses. No one could think of a single person who might be said to give leadership to the community.

61. The outside observers stress the lack of basic education in the children of Fringeville, who appear ill-adjusted to normal school habits. Observers point out that, although a number of bright children enter the lower grades, before they reach the end of elementary school their "brightness" has been replaced by apathy and indifference.

62. When the children move into the labour market, they are handicapped further by the fact that there is no vocational school to give training in skilled trades. (This situation has been remedied by the location of a regional vocational school in a nearby town) but there has been no report of the extent to which people from the town stated, or from Fringeville, are taking advantage of the school.
63. The employment picture of Fringeville adults is one of casual and irregular employment in unskilled trades or, at the very best, in semiskilled trades. Townspeople contend that the men really do not want to work at steady jobs because they prefer to take time off to fish, hunt, and pursue their own particular interests. The fact is that Fringeville men make tremendous efforts to secure employment when it is available. They have, however, limited understanding of their own situation, of the nature of steady work, and of many of the implications of working. They are greatly concerned, as are most of the marginal workers in the area, about acquiring stamps for unemployment insurance and in getting the maximum from available relief facilities.
64. The county urgently needs a coordinated welfare program, for it is evident that there are many relief agencies overlapping closely with one another. The general position of the major welfare agency, the County, is to spend as little as possible; indeed officials boast that they spend less than their budget allows.
65. The attitude of the outside community is that Fringeville people are uneducated, underemployed, inclined to avoid regular work, and are morally deficient. The leaders of the town regard the fringe community as a whole a "problem area". Some people regard it as a nuisance whose dimensions are growing annually; others see it as an area for action, either social or personal.

2. Fringeville as Seen by the Sociologist

(a) Social Characteristics of the residents

66. The majority of people in Fringeville were born either in Fringeville or its immediate vicinity. In the central part of Fringeville congregate the economically and socially unsuccessful. These include the physically disabled, the mentally handicapped, the illiterate and unskilled, a few aged persons, and several alcoholics. The study discusses, in addition to general social characteristics of Fringeville residents, patterns of social intersection, mutual assistance, and leisure-time activity.
67. Most of the homes are not "broken", and only two of the 27 couples live common law; these facts are in contrast to the impression held by residents of the town proper. The number of children is above average; a family of four or five children is the common pattern.
68. With respect to patterns of social interaction, most of the residents are affiliated in one way or another with a church. Church attendance is very low, and most of the residents attend only for christenings, weddings, and funerals. This is due partly to the fact that there is social discrimination against the residents of Fringeville; at least, the residents feel that there is social discrimination. The principal social activity is visiting friends and relatives. There is much mutual assistance, including the lending of food and clothing and the providing of one another with transportation to and from work. There is, however, often a conflict between friendliness and rivalry, particularly in securing assistance from welfare authorities.

Special Senate Committee

69. Leisure-time activities consist largely of watching television, listening to radio, and playing bingo. There are few organized recreational activities for children. Most of the young people go outside the immediate area for their recreation. They do not participate, ordinarily, in the organized sports of the town proper (for example, in the baseball league, or in swimming at the public beach), for these activities are too far away from Fringeville. Children's recreational activities are unorganized, for the most part, and are related to outdoor activities such as skating and coasting in the winter; and berry picking, swimming, and camping in the summer.

(b) Education, employment, income and debt

Education

70. In any study of poverty culture, education is recognized as a fundamental factor. Seventy-four per cent of the adults in Fringeville have had five years of schooling or less and are functionally illiterate. Only five per cent have had more than Grade VIII.
71. A lack of basic education on the part of the parents, plus a lack of interest in their children's education, makes it extremely difficult for Fringeville children to profit from the educational facilities now available to them. Most of the parents would like their children to find jobs better than those that they have themselves and, for this reason, want their children educated. For girls, the preferred occupations are nursing, teaching, and office work; for boys, the skilled trades. Three parents thought that, could they start again, they might like to enter a profession.

Employment

72. Employment is seasonal for the majority of Fringeville residents, although only three persons were not working at the time of the survey. Most of the employed hold summer jobs only. Only three persons, 11 per cent, have year-round employment. The workers themselves are largely in the unskilled and semi-skilled class.

73. It is interesting to note that, as in other poverty pockets, the occupations of the present adults are essentially the same as those of their fathers. Eighteen fathers were unskilled workers; six were semiskilled workers. There were no skilled workers among the fathers of the present labouring group.

74. A minimum subsistence level is considered normal by the residents of Fringeville. They think that, by acquiring "prestige" consumer goods, such as television sets, they are getting ahead; in fact, they remain in the same relative position.

75. Most workers have to travel over 15 miles to their jobs; seven travel daily more than 36 miles each way. In order to seek and obtain work, many workers move out of the area temporarily, in hard times they return home, and thus perpetuate the local problems. Sixteen of the 26 heads of families, when they are out of work, prefer Canada Manpower as the best means of getting a job. On the other hand, 10 think that it is best to get a job "on your own".

Income

76. The average income of male workers in the community is, from all sources, $2,465 per annum; of females, $881 per annum; the average of the two, $2,253 per annum. This compares with average wage earnings of $3,021 in Nova Scotia, of approximately $2,785 in the county where Fringeville is situated. Calculated on a per capita basis, income is $569 per annum from all sources, including welfare and government transfer payments; this compares with the average for Canada of $1,983 and, for Nova Scotia, of $1,483.

Debt

77. The great majority of families are financially in debt. There is a tendency to immediate spending of income earned and of not looking to the future. Families are aware that they can get many free services if they are out of work, and this awareness increases reluctance to accept low-paying steady work.

(c) Housing

78. Although the condition of most houses is not good, 93 per cent of the families own their own homes. The majority of the houses, 59 per cent, have four or five rooms. Virtually all houses are heated with wood stoves, which, in some cases, are supplemented by oil stoves. Few houses have inside toilet facilities, or running water. In general, the residents seem to be satisfied with their housing accommodation and point out that, in any event, it is all that they can afford. Relocation would be of little value to Fringeville residents, unless it were accompanied by steady employment and higher income.

(d) Welfare services and agencies

79.

Of the great variety of welfare agencies serving the residents, those favoured the most are the Victorian Order of Nurses, the Salvation Army, the County Relief Officer, and the Children's Aid Society which also handles work of the Department of Public Welfare. Services provided by the Salvation Army are essentially charitable; for instance, supplying clothing, food, and Christmas boxes. The County Relief Officer is of much practical help in obtaining jobs for the men, procuring food or food tickets, and putting people in touch with other agencies, such as, Canada Manpower. The study, which recommends as urgent that a County Welfare Officer be appointed to administer the total welfare program and to coordinate services, concludes with short-term and long-term recommendations.

Special Senate Committee

VI. ETHNIC GROUPS

A. INDIANS

80. The Institute of Public Affairs has not prepared studies about the Nova Scotian Indian. There appears to be a lack of available data, and an urgent need for research. The federal government has long had administrative responsibility for Indians in Canada, and the substantial information in its files presumably could be organized for publication and study.
81. Censuses published by the Indian Affairs Branch, Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, show the Nova Scotia Indian population as 3,746 and 4,099, for 1961 and 1965, respectively. These figures indicate an increase of 9.4 per cent compared to an increase of 13.8 per cent in the Indian population of Canada. In 1965, Nova Scotia had only 2 per cent of the 218,098 total Canadian Indian population.
82. According to the 1961 Census¹, 84.5 per cent of wage-earners on reserves in Nova Scotia had earnings under $3,000 per annum, compared with 58.4 per cent and 46.2 per cent, respectively, of the total Nova Scotian and Canadian wage-earners.
83. Study of a sample group² of 130 Indian households, using $3,000 income as the poverty line, indicates that 63.9 per cent are poor. Of the households with less than 50 per cent of total family income from earnings, 73.8 per cent are below

¹DBS, 1961 Census of Canada.

²A. A. MacDonald, Community Resources and Dimension of Alienation on Indian Reserves, (Antigonish, Nova Scotia: Extension Department, St. Francis Xavier University, May 1967).

the poverty line. Of those households with over 50 per cent of income from earnings, 45.6 per cent are below the $3,000 level. This low level is attributed to two principal causes: a low level of education, and a shortage of job opportunities.

84.

The MacDonald study points out:

"...employment conditions on the Reserves are not adequate to meet the needs of the people. A very low percentage of the householders reported steady employment or very unstable employment.

"It is significant that employment conditions at the time of the survey (Feb.-Mar., 1967) were at a much lower ebb than they appeared to be in the overall picture for 1966. There are two possible reasons for this:

- a) The Indian people depend on seasonal employment to a high degree.
- b) The winter works program which was in force until 1967, provided employment opportunities for many who would otherwise be unemployed...

"The obvious solution to the problem lies in complete integration with the mainstream of society. However, to attempt this would be both chaotic and impossible for two reasons:

- a) In many cases the Indian is not prepared to leave his Reserve because he lacks the necessary education and training.
- b) The law of human justice and the Indian Act both insure that the Indian cannot be forced off his Reserve.

"The solution then must lie in a program of selective training, whereby those Indians who are capable of taking their place in society may be retrained and encouraged to accept the better life available to them.

[Of the householders under 45 years of age, 75.3 per cent would accept jobs away from the Reserve. Comparable figures for householders 45-55 and 55+ were 64 per cent and 37.5 per cent respectively. In total 64 per cent indicated that they would accept jobs away from the Reserve.] For those older people whose opportunities are fewer, and for those who do not wish to leave the Reserve, some sort of employment program should be started on the Reserve, so that they too can maintain an adequate standard of living.

All of the school children should be encouraged to continue their education insofar as they are able, and should be made aware of the opportunities available to them both in trades training, higher education and eventual positions in society."¹

85. The study indicates, also, that "Indian parents place a high value (at least theoretically) on education, even although their children are not achieving it. Consequently, the causes of underachievement must be sought in the social circumstances of the family and Reserve life. One such possible inhibiting circumstance is the advanced age of the parents who have dependent school children. For instance, 29 per cent of the children who are at the grade 1-6 level are dependent on parents who are 55 years of age or over."² It is most important that high priority should be given, in any studies undertaken, to identifying and elucidating reasons for the noted underachievement. Do Indian students themselves lack motivation? Do home conditions prevent proper study? Are they forced to leave school for financial reasons? Do the schools dull their incentives? These are just a few of the questions to which answers should be sought.

¹Ibid., pp. 31-33.

²Ibid., pp. 18a-18b.

Poverty

1 : 99

Table 8
EARNINGS OF WAGE EARNERS, INDIANS ON RESERVES IN NOVA SCOTIA COMPARED WITH NOVA SCOTIA AND CANADA, 1961

	Indians on Reserves		Nova Scotia		Canada
	Number	Per Cent	Number	Per Cent	Number	Per Cent
$ 0 - 999	140	60.0	36,987	18.4	718,268	13.6
$1,000 - 1,999	38	16.3	38,419	19.2	768,350	14.5
$2,000 - 2,999	19	8.2	41,787	20.8	954,201	18.1
$3,000 - 3,999	10	4.3	36,041	18.0	1,034,909	19.6
$4,000 - 5,999	9	3.9	32,130	16.0	1,155,763	21.9
$6,000+	6	2.6	10,746	5.4	469,655	8.8
Not Stated	11	4.7	4,430	2.2	184,036	3.5
Total	233	100.0	200,540	100.0	5,281,182	100.0

Source: D.B.S., 1961 Census of Canada.

Table 9
TOTAL HOUSEHOLD INCOME, INDIANS ON RESERVES^a,
NOVA SCOTIA, 1967

Household Income	Number of Households	Percentage of Total
-$1,000	9	6.9%
$1,000 - 1,999	43	33.1
$2,000 - 2,999	31	23.9
$3,000 - 3,999	29	22.3
$4,000+	18	13.8
Total	130	100.0

^aComplete survey of Sydney, Afton, and Pictou; 30% sample of Eskasoni.

Source: Based on A. A. MacDonald, Community Resources and Dimensions of Alienation on Indian Reserves, (Antigonish, Nova Scotia: St. Francis Xavier University, Extension Department, 1967).

Table 10
EARNED INCOME AS A PERCENTAGE OF TOTAL HOUSEHOLD INCOME, INDIANS ON RESERVES, NOVA SCOTIA, 1967

Household Income	Percentage of Earned Income
	0 - 49%		50 - 100%
	Number	Per Cent	Number	Per Cent
-$1,000	7	8.3	2	4.3
$1,000 - 1,999	35	41.7	8	17.4
$2,000 - 2,999	20	23.8	11	23.9
$3,000 - 3,999	17	20.2	12	26.1
$4,000+	5	6.0	13	28.3
Total	84	100.0	46	100.0

Source: Based on A. A. MacDonald, Community Resources and Dimensions of Alienation on Indian Reserves, (Antigonish, Nova Scotia: St. Francis Xavier University, Extension Department, 1967).

B. BLACKS¹1. Introduction

86. An adequate explanation of poverty must usually be rooted in an analysis of social structural conditions of the larger society beyond the immediate control of the poor. This is especially true when discussing poverty among Nova Scotian Blacks on the threshold of the 1970's in one of the wealthiest societies mankind has seen.² Such an analysis presupposes the collating of a welter of descriptive materials establishing the socio-economic patterns that define and circumscribe poverty relative to the level of societal development.³ Historical trends and patterns have to be isolated and interpreted if we are to understand current socio-economic conditions and suggest effective anti-poverty strategies. On both counts, descriptive materials and historical trends, insufficient work has been done. On less than five fingers one can count the number of adequate descriptive studies dealing with any part of the Nova Scotia Black population. Only in recent years have scholars interested themselves in the historical settlement of Blacks in the Maritime Provinces.⁴ Yet it is relatively easy to ¹This section of the present brief is part of a larger forthcoming publication by Donald Clairmont and Dennis Magill, Africville: The Life and Death of a Black Community.

²Nova Scotia is itself economically disadvantaged, of course, vis-à-vis the broader Canadian society.

³Poverty has always to be considered within specific socio-economic contexts.

⁴There are a number of important exceptions, most significantly the work of C. B. Fergusson, A Documentary Study of the Establishment of the Negroes in Nova Scotia, Publication No. 8. (Halifax, Nova Scotia: Public Archives of Nova Scotia, 1948).

assemble a bibliography of one hundred relevant articles or books. Most of these are worthless, but their existence reflects a superficial "on-again, off-again" interest in the plight of the Black man, as well as the dearth of locally nurtured Black intellectuals. (The "plight" and the "dearth" are intimately intertwined, of course, since the Black man has been kept down educationally.)¹ The tenor of the available literature has a "teeter-totter" rhythm, dealing now with scandalous socio-economic conditions, then with some isolated achievement or concern. This pattern has two important implications: first, very little is actually known about the Black man in Nova Scotia and, secondly, Black people feel they have been "studied" or researched far too much without effective attention being given to their legitimate complaints about neglect and oppression. These implications combine to hinder the solid grounding, in theory and fact, of anti-poverty strategies.

87. There are inadequacies in the following, for much basic information which should be gathered and collated is unavailable. The general picture, past and present, is clear enough: Black people in Nova Scotia are poorer than the average white Nova Scotian and, over the past hundred years, the white Nova Scotian has been poorer than the average Canadian.² It is appropriate in this brief to give particular attention to the Blacks, for throughout their settlement in Nova Scotia they have had to carry a special burden, the burden of the White man's prejudice, discrimination, and oppression; indeed, their poverty is rooted in the structural and historical conditions of Nova Scotian society. Structural conditions existed in Nova Scotia which forced Blacks, from their first settlement, to the bottom level of the social hierarchy. Some of these conditions may be summarized under origins and education.

¹ The educational deprivation of Black people in Nova Scotia will be documented at several points throughout this brief.

² The socio-economic status of Black people throughout Canada requires complex interpretation. It appears that Blacks are well represented (in comparison with other ethnic groups) in the professional occupation category and in the middle-class status category. This pattern reveals not a good opportunity-structure for Blacks in Canada but, rather, the nature of Canada's immigration policy. West Indian Blacks and American-born Blacks, recruited as professional workers, account for these statistics. Canada has not opened its doors much to the poor Blacks from other countries nor have the native-born Blacks been given an equal opportunity with white Canadians.

2. Origins

88. It is impossible to understand the contemporary socio-economic conditions of Black Nova Scotians without realizing that Nova Scotia was at one time a "slave society" and without understanding the conditions of immigration and settlement of Free Blacks in Nova Scotia. One must appreciate, also, the educational deprivation which until recently has been characteristic of Black communities. These factors and their socio-psychological implications have combined to keep the Blacks in poverty, and to make it exceptionally difficult for them to acquire an equal share of society's wealth.

89. Given the lack of agricultural potential in the uneven and rocky terrain of Nova Scotia, slavery failed to develop on a plantation scale. As early as 1750, however, shortly after the founding of Halifax, slavery was practised by the wealthy and, over the next five decades, it was not a rarity in other parts of the province.¹ James Walker estimates that there were about 500 slaves in Nova Scotia at the outbreak of the American Revolution, while slaveholding Loyalist immigrants raised that number to as many as 1,500.¹ As Walker points out, there can be no slavery without a slave society; i.e., a society in which values are such that slavery is at least tolerated. Although popular opinion and the benevolence of the courts were directly responsible for the weeding out of this practice at a relatively early date in Nova Scotia (after 1800, it rapidly became more and more difficult to retain slaves), the system did survive for over half a century. The major undermining factor was not so much a spontaneous public outcry against slavery; rather, it was the obsolescence of slave labour following the immigration of many hundreds of free Loyalist Blacks, whose services could be had for little more than it had cost to house and feed the earlier bondsman. The groundwork for the subordination of the Blacks as a people in Nova Scotia was laid by the early existence of a slave society. Insidious socio-psychological concomitants of this institutionalized oppression have included attitudes of White superiority which remain deeply rooted today² and a form of self-hatred and race-hatred among the Blacks themselves. The latter has been evidenced in ¹James Walker, private interview, August 2, 1969. Walker is a doctoral candidate at Dalhousie University, specializing in Black history. Smith cites a survey made of the Loyalists in 1883-84 which counted 1,232 "servants", and was not a complete count; op.cit., p. 32.

¹T. Watson Smith, "The Slave in Canada", in Collections of the Nova Scotia Historical Society, Vol. X. (Halifax; Nova Scotia: Nova Scotia Printing Company, 1899.)

²See, for example, Jenne M. Tarlo, Racial Antipathy in An Urban Environment, unpublished M.A. thesis, Dalhousie University, Department of Sociology, 1969. See, also, the "White superiority" remarks in the works of early historians such as Beckles Willson, Nova Scotia: A Province That Has Been Passed By, (London: Constable & Co., 1911); and Mrs. William Lawson, History of the Townships of Dartmouth, Preston, and Lawrencetown, Halifax County, Nova Scotia. (Halifax: Morton and Company, 1893). Willson, for example, declares of the Afro-Haligonians of his day, that: "On the whole they form a dirty, good-humored, retrograde feature of the population".

the usual patterns of hair-straightening and colour distinctions within the Black community.¹ There are clear indications of change in the attitudes of Blacks, but a recent study of relocation reports that some Blacks argue that their area is not a slum because "Whites live there too".²

90. Only about ten per cent of the Loyalists who fled north during the American Revolution were Black. Of these, a large minority remained as slaves. Free Blacks were promised equal treatment with their White peers, but the hundred-acre land grants which this promise would have provided, were never received by Black Loyalists. They found themselves settled, instead, on small and barren lots on the periphery of White Loyalist townships or in the remoter sections of the province. An example of this pattern is the settlement of the Blacks in Guysborough County. As Professor Rawlyk has observed, "it was virtually impossible for any man to eke out an existence on from ten to forty acres of perhaps the worst land in Nova Scotia."³ Refugee Blacks appear to have received a better official reception and more food, medicine, and clothing than their Loyalist predecessors, although the land that they received was similarly rocky and barren.⁴

¹See, for example, Donald Clairmont, in collaboration with K. Scott Wood, George Rawlick and Guy Henson, A Socio-Economic Study and Recommendations: Sunnyville, Lincolnville, and Upper Big Tracadie, Guysborough County, Nova Scotia. (Halifax, Nova Scotia: Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University, 1965).

²Clairmont and Magill, op. cit.

³Clairmont, et al., op. cit. Many contemporary observers (circa 1800) thought that the Guysborough Blacks are among the most well-off Blacks in Nova Scotia.

⁴Pearleen Oliver, A Brief History of the Colored Baptists in Nova Scotia (In commemoration of the Centennial Celebrations of the African Baptist Association of Nova Scotia, Inc.) (Halifax: 1953).

91.

To the above noted conditions of the immigration and settlement of the Blacks in Nova Scotia were added prejudice and discrimination which kept the bulk of the Black population at marginal subsistence level. Periods of economic depression in Nova Scotia, whether after the War of 1812 or in 1929, wreaked particular havoc among these vulnerable Black communities.¹ Captain W. Moorsom, a British traveller, observed in 1830:

"Scarcely does a winter pass without the distressed situation of the negroes coming under the consideration and relief of the Legislature. Their potatoe crop fails; their soil is said to be incapable of supporting them; and disease makes fearful ravages. . . the negro settlements continue with numbers gradually diminishing. in summer miserable, and in winter starving. Their origin, their story and their condition, thus contribute to shed an almost romantic halo around them; and the first question put to anyone who has returned from their neighborhood is sure to be - 'How are the poor Blacks?'"²

A contemporary traveller could (allowing for changes in the level of well-being considered as basic poverty, i.e., starvation presumably no longer exists) today make similar statements, especially with respect to the rural non-farm Black communities.³

¹Ibid, p. 45. See also reports of the Earl of Dalhousie and other colonial administrators between 1815 and 1840 concerning starvation in the Black community.

²Captain W. Moorsom, Letters from Nova Scotia, (London: Henry Colburn and Richard Bentley, 1830), pp. 127-8.

³See A. Westell's account ("Shocking Poverty In Nova Scotia," Detroit Free Press, June 1969) of a visit by Minister of National Health and Welfare John Munro to one of the Black communities in Nova Scotia in June 1969.

3. Education

92. During the early decades of the nineteenth century, Blacks were in worse condition educationally than the rest of the Nova Scotian population, but there was not a qualitative difference between Black and poor-White communities. People could not afford schools, and those who did make the attempt were usually able to maintain only poorly trained and underpaid teachers. The government provided but partially effective measures to assist communities in this respect, holding back from a system of free public schools until the Tupper educational reforms of 1864 and 1865. Special grants were made frequently upon petition, and the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel established numerous schools for both Whites and Blacks.¹

93. Many "African Schools" were established at an early date, throughout the province. For instance, in 1790, it was reported that "the Negro school at Tracadie goes on well, the master (Black) teaches 23 black children."² Schooling was segregated, sporadic and irregular, and the substantive content dealt more with "souls" than with the provision of skills which might lead to socio-economic betterment. The de facto segregation maintained by this system was obviously, in these early times, a consequence of the prior fact of geographical segregation. Prejudice and discrimination were additional factors operating in a complex causal fashion such that geographical segregation was maintained. A clear example of this pattern is found with respect to educational policy in the City of Halifax, where residential segregation would have been much less a factor; the following quotation from the Debates of the Legislative Assembly for 1881 point to the existence of legally sanctioned discrimination:

¹W. McFatrige, compiler, "A Documentary Study of Early Educational Policy", Bulletin of the Public Archives of Nova Scotia, (P.A.N.S.) Vol. 1, No. 1 Halifax 1937. Also, C. B. Fergusson, "The Inauguration of the Free School System in Nova Scotia, P.A.N.S. Bulletin No. 21, Halifax 1964. For petitions of residents of Hammonds Plains and Preston for aid in founding schools, see P.A.N.S. Manuscript Vol 422, Documents 22 and 33.

²Proceedings of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts for 1790, (London: F. Brooke, 1790), p. 44.

"A petition of George Davis and others, was presented by Mr. Harrington, and read, setting forth that they are colored citizens and rate-payers of the City of Halifax, that by a minute of the Council of Public Instruction, passed in December, 1876, all colored children were from thenceforth excluded from the Common Schools, and separate schools were established for their use, which are of an inferior grade, and in which they do not receive equal advantages with children attending the Common Schools; for which and other reasons, as detailed in the petition, they pray that such minutes of Council be repealed.-- Referred to the Committee on Education."¹

94.

In 1884, two petitions such as this evoked a round of fierce debate in the Legislative Assembly, which reached the plane of political partisanship. William S. Fielding, who championed the cause of segregation, "recited virtually every argument known to man then and since against mixing the races." Fielding's argument won the vote, but an amendment was passed declaring that "coloured pupils could not be excluded from instruction in the section or ward in which they lived. The government could continue to establish separate schools for both sexes and for colours, although if no Negro school existed, admission to the public school was to be guaranteed."²

¹Robin M. Winks, manuscript "History of the Negro in Canada," Yale University, Chapter 3, p. 36.

²These debates are quoted in Robin M. Winks, "Negro School Segregation in Ontario and Nova Scotia," Dalhousie Review, Vol. L, No. 2, June 1969, pp.183-186.

In 1918, the Education Act was revised to allow

"that the Council of Public Instruction could 'receive the recommendation of any inspector for separate apartments or buildings in any section for the different sexes or different races of pupils, . . . subject to the provision that coloured pupils shall not be excluded from instruction in the public school in the section in which they reside'."¹

This was law in Nova Scotia until 1954.

95.

*During the latter half of the nineteenth century and continuing up to the post World War II era, the educational opportunities of the Black man remained inadequate and inferior. It was during this period that real qualitative differences developed with respect to education of the Whites and Blacks. Negro teachers in the dilapidated segregated schools were rarely properly qualified or paid,² attendance was irregular, and the schools themselves often were open on an intermittent basis. In recent years, there have been substantial improvements: segregated schooling has been almost eliminated, the standard of teaching has improved, governmental agencies are more sympathetic, and a new and progressive militancy has developed among the Blacks in Nova Scotia. The educational background of most Blacks who are out-of-school and in the labour market is such, however, that they find themselves deprived of economic opportunities. Discrimination and prejudice add further to their disadvantage.³ Moreover, while the Black community recognizes the value and importance of education, the socio-psychological consequences of their historical oppression obstruct current educational achievement.¹ Factors other than disadvantage in access to educational facilities are usually responsible for a low educational level in a population. Such additional factors are rooted in this instance in current poverty; the vicious circle of poverty and low education itself can be seen as a function of historical oppression. The recent development in educational opportunities for Nova Scotian Blacks may alter the situation, but change will be slow. To quote Winks:²

¹ Ibid

² Debates of the Legislative Assembly for 1881, p. 16.

³ See, for example, J. R. Oliver, "Final Report on the Problem of Unemployment for the Negro," submitted to Negro Employment Intermin Committee, 1969.

" . . . the present Negro generation in Nova Scotia could not be liberated in any case. The cycle of poverty, ignorance, and unemployment had lasted far too long for anyone but the most idealistic to expect the Nova Scotia Negro to assimilate to Nova Scotian society quickly or easily, or for the Nova Scotian white, however much he might be prepared to concede the Negroes' inherent equality, to think of them as equal in fact as well as in potential. For Negroes were not yet equal in fact and were unlikely to be until the slow curative powers of equal education had made their impact. It was not this generation that had been liberated but the next."

4. Ecological Distribution

Nova Scotia's Black population is dispersed throughout the province, the single point of concentration being the Halifax-Dartmouth area where, within a radius of 20 miles, reside approximately 50 per cent of the total provincial Black population. Our preliminary observations, buttressed by the few data available,³ indicate that differential patterns of socio-economic well-being (and life-styles generally) are not ¹For a detailed description and analysis of these socio-psychological consequences among the Guysborough Blacks see Clairmont, et al., op.cit., Ch. 4.

²Winks, op. cit., Dalhousie Review, p. 191.

³See, for example, G. Brand, Survey of Negro Population of Halifax County: A Report to the Inter-departmental Committee on Human Rights, Province of Nova Scotia, 1964.

coterminous with the Halifax-Dartmouth area/rest-of-the-province division. Some Black communities within the 20-mile radius of Halifax are much more similar, in socio-economic conditions, to the settlements in Guysborough County than they are to the urban neighbourhoods. Also, Blacks in Sydney have a life-style much more like that of Halifax-Dartmouth Blacks than have Blacks elsewhere in Halifax County. A useful typology to delineate patterns of poverty and life-style is the Dominion Bureau of Statistics categorization of urban, urban fringe, rural, and rural fringe. We follow broadly such a categorization in this section, by presenting relevant data for rural non-farm Blacks (rural), a Black urban fringe community, and Halifax City Blacks. We do not possess, nor is there available, adequate data for precise comparisons.

97. According to official census data, the Black population of Nova Scotia increased from 6,212 in 1971 to 11,900 in 1961, an increase of 91 per-cent.¹

Table 11 was calculated to see whether ¹Census data must be interpreted cautiously. For one thing, the figures for total Black population in Nova Scotia have always under-represented the Black population. Most knowledgeable authorities put the 1961 census figures as being about 2,000 under the correct count. Moreover, there are often non-random errors in census data on the Blacks, errors which render comparative analysis dangerous; for example, the 1921 census makes no reference to Blacks in Guysborough Town but all other census counts, before and after this date, indicate that at least 200 Blacks were there. Moreover, the precise wording of the census' ethnicity has varied over the years. Census division officials acknowledge (private correspondence) that 1951 data on Blacks was particularly subject to under-representation because of the way in which the instructions to enumerators were worded. See, also, Daniel G. Hill, Junior, "Negroes in Toronto: A Sociological Study of a Minority Group," unpublished Ph. D. Thesis, Department of Sociology, University of Toronto, 1960, pp. 48-52. Hill discusses additional problems with census data including the classification of West Indians (recorded as English in the 1951 census) and the classification of children of mixed marriages.

Table 11
 PERCENTAGE OF BLACK POPULATION IN HALIFAX-DARTMOUTH, CAPE BRETON COUNTY,
 AND "OTHER" NOVA SCOTIA, AT TEN YEAR INTERVALS, 1871-1961^a

Area	1871	1881	1891	1901	1911	1921	1931	1941	1951	1961
Halifax-Dartmouth	17%	16%	*	15%	15%	17%		13%	*	19%
Cape Breton County	0.8	0.3	*	0.3	5	5	11	10	*	8
"Other Nova Scotia"	82	83	*	84	80	78	80	77	*	73
Base	(6,212)	(7,062)	()	(5,984)	(6,541)	(6,175)	(7,524)	(8,817)	()	(11,900)

*Census data are not available for 1891 and 1951.

Census data on the number of Blacks residing in Dartmouth are not available for 1931.

^aDue to rounding, the percentages by year may not total 100%.

Source: D.B.S., Census of Canada.

the population increase had been accompanied by a change in residency patterns over a 90-year time span (1871-1961). The Table shows the percentage of Black population in three geographical areas: Halifax-Dartmouth, Cape Breton County and "other" Nova Scotia. This particular classification is not the same as the ideal discussed above, but it represents another and alternative categorization differentiating between the commercial-industrial complexes of Halifax-Dartmouth and Sydney, and the rest of Nova Scotia.¹ The Halifax-Dartmouth percentages were calculated because this area has historically represented the major Nova Scotian business, commercial, and industrial complex.² The other similar area is the mining-steel complex of Sydney, North Sydney, Sydney Mines, New Waterford, and Glace Bay, concentrated in less than a 50-mile radius.³ The "other" Nova Scotia is a residual category; it was used because census data for the 90-year time span does not permit more precise classification. Included in this category are Blacks living in three distinct ecological groupings:

¹For the value of such a distinction see, also, Pierre Yves Pepin, Life and Poverty in the Maritimes, ARDA Project No. 15002, March 1968, p. 6.

²In Halifax and Dartmouth the vast majority of Black residents are concentrated in a small number of city blocks. In Halifax, the concentration is on Maynard and Creighton Streets; in Dartmouth, at the extreme end of Crichton Avenue, between the city incinerator and the causeway. See W. P. Oliver, Brief Summary of Nova Scotia Negro Communities, mimeographed paper, March 1964.

³Census data by ethnic group from 1871 to 1961 are not available for these five communities; thus, the percentages in Table 11 are for Cape Breton County. As few Blacks in Cape Breton County live outside a 50-mile radius of these communities, the percentages for the County are a close approximation of the Black population in the steel-coal complex.

- 1) Urban Fringe Communities These seven Black communities are within a 20-mile radius of the Halifax-Dartmouth urban complex: Beechville, 300; Cherrybrook, 700; Preston North, 1,800; Preston East, 1,200; Cobequid Road, 110; Lucasville Road, 200; and Hammonds Plains, 500. Approximately another 130 Blacks lived either in Middle Sackville or along the old Guysborough Road.
- 2) Concentrated Black Population of Over 50 in White Communities¹ Following the typical population concentration of Blacks throughout most of Nova Scotia, the 2,576 Black residents in these 11 communities live in close proximity to one another.
- a) Amherst (Population in 1961: 10,788)
Approximately 300 Blacks are concentrated in the "Sand Hill" section of town.
 - b) Antigonish (Population in 1961: 4,344)
The 80 Black residents are settled on the fringe of the town.
 - c) Bridgetown (Population in 1961: 1,043)
The majority of the 140 Black residents are located outside the town on the Inglewood Road. Others are located in the areas known as "the pasture" and "the tracks".
 - d) Digby (Population in 1961: 2,308)
The 265 Blacks live in a community known as Acadiaville, off the highway at the entrance to the town of Digby.

¹Most of the following population figures were obtained from W. P. Oliver, op. cit. These figures are in essential agreement with those given by G. Brand, op. cit., the only exception being Amherst, where Oliver's count seems excessively high. In this instance we took Brand's count as being the more accurate.

Special Senate Committee

- e) Liverpool (Population in 1961: 3,712)
This community has 71 Black residents.
- f) Middleton (Population in 1961: 1,921)
The 90 Black residents are located in the community on what is called the "bog".
- g) New Glasgow (Population in 1961: 9,782)
The 650 Blacks live in areas known as "the Hill", "the Mountain", and "Parkdale".
- h) Shelburne (Population in 1961: 2,408)
The 166 Blacks are concentrated in the southern end of town in the Bell's Cove area.
- i) Springhill (Population in 1961: 5,836)
The 124 Blacks live principally on three streets.
- j) Truro (Population in 1961: 12,421)
The 500 Black inhabitants are concentrated in what is known as "the Island" and "the Marsh".
- k) Yarmouth (Population in 1961: 8,636)
The 190 Blacks are a "fringe" community concentrated mostly on back streets.
- 3) Rural inhabitants The 1961 census¹ reports that 5,316 or 45 per cent of Nova Scotia's Black residents live in a rural environment. Of these rural Blacks 8 per cent (382) are farm residents and 92 per cent (4,934) are rural non-farm residents. For the entire province of Nova Scotia, the rural non-farm inhabitants have the lowest total family incomes. For the province, in 1961 the percentage distributions of total incomes for rural non-farm families were: 52 per cent under $2,999; 31 per cent $3,000 to $4,999; and 17 per cent over $5,000.¹ Given this finding, it is possible to estimate that in 1961 the 42 per cent of the 11,900 Blacks (reported by D.B.S.) who were rural non-farm residents lived in "poverty pockets" hardly above the substance level. This generalization is supported by the following case study of three Black rural non-farm communities where virtually 100 per cent of the families had total annual incomes under $3,000.

¹ Dominion Bureau of Statistics, Census of Canada, 1961; Vol. I, Part 2, (Ottawa: Queen's Printer, 1962), Table 36.

98. Census publications unfortunately do not supply the data enabling percentage calculations by the above three ecological groupings. The "Other Nova Scotia" category in Table 11 does not show, therefore, whether the Black population has increased or declined in rural areas or in communities with a small concentration of Black residents. The table does indicate that the percentage in "Other Nova Scotia" has declined over the ninety-year span, and probably underestimates the degree of this proportionate decline. Table 11 also indicates that, from 1871 to 1961, there has never been more than 20 per cent of Nova Scotia's Black population living in Halifax-Dartmouth. Our observations and other sources of data (i.e., interviews and isolated studies) suggest that in 1969 the percentage in Halifax-Dartmouth may actually be 25 per cent, the increase from

¹K. Scott Wood, Profile of Poverty in Nova Scotia, (Halifax, Nova Scotia: Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University 1967).

1961 being due to an acceleration of migration out of "Other Nova Scotia"¹ and to a more accurate estimate of the number of Blacks in the metropolitan area. In view of expected rural-urban migration, there has been over the past century, a steady movement of Blacks from "Other Nova Scotia" to Halifax-Dartmouth. The percentage of Blacks in the latter area did not alter noticeably because of: (a) the steady stream of migration of Blacks from Halifax-Dartmouth to the United States and Upper Canada; and (b) the migration of Blacks in "Other Nova Scotia" to the United States and Upper Canada as well as to Halifax-Dartmouth. (Not all of the predictable migration from rural to urban areas has been to the Halifax-Dartmouth area.) Table 12 indicates that in Cape Breton County the population increase started in 1911 and that, from 1921 to 1931, the number of Blacks jumped from 295 to 788. This increase was due to the immigration of Blacks of West Indian origin. On the whole, Table 11 makes clear that now and historically most Nova Scotian Blacks have lived outside the major centres of commerce and industry in Nova Scotia.

99.

We have observed that it would be desirable to discuss socio-economic conditions and life-styles among the Blacks according to ecological pattern. Ideally, such an analysis presupposes data collected at the same point in time of Blacks in urban, urban fringe, and rural non-farm settings. (The number of Blacks classified as farm is quite small, as noted above.) These kinds of data are not yet available, but we do have data about Halifax mid-city Blacks, Blacks in an urban-fringe community, and Blacks in the rural ¹See, for example, Brand, op. cit., page 12; Clairmont, op. cit., Chapter 5.

Table 12

AGE DISTRIBUTION OF MID-CITY BLACKS, THE URBAN FRINGE
COMMUNITY, AND THREE RURAL NON-FARM COMMUNITIES

Age	Halifax Mid-City	Urban Fringe	Rural Non-Farm
0 - 14	45%	52%	58%
15 - 34	28	22	20
35 - 64	22	22	17
65+	3	4	---
Total	100% (1,227)	100% (328)	100% (618)

Sources: Halifax Mid-City, data collected for the Condition of the Negroes of Halifax City, Nova Scotia, Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University, 1965; Urban Fringe, data collected for a survey completed by the Nova Scotia Department of Welfare, 1967; Rural Non-Farm, D. J. Carmichael et al., A Socio-Economic Study and Recommendations for the Development of the Rural Non-Farm Communities of Nova Scotia, Government of Nova Scotia, Halifax, Nova Scotia: Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University, 1965.

Table 13

HOUSEHOLD SIZE AMONG HALIFAX MID-CITY BLACKS, THE URBAN FRINGE COMMUNITY, AND THREE RURAL NON-FARM COMMUNITIES

Size	Halifax Mid-City	Urban Fringe	Rural Non-Farm
1 Person	9%	8%	11%
2 or 3	27	26	17
4 or 5	23	23	12
6 to 9	34	34	38
10 or more	7	9	22
Total	100% (226)	100% (62)	100% (90)

Sources: As listed in Table 12.

non-farm setting of Guysborough County. These data, although they were not collected at the same point in time,¹ are fairly representative of the different ecological types and can be interpreted cautiously to yield pertinent comparisons. Tables 12 to 17 summarize the comparisons.

100. Table 12 indicates the age distribution of Blacks in three different ecological settings. What is most noticeable is the very large proportion of children and older persons in the rural non-farm area; only 37 per cent of the population is between the ages of 15 and 64. Among Halifax mid-city Blacks the comparative figure is 52 per cent and, for Halifax as a whole,² the corresponding figure is about 66 per cent. Such comparisons show the larger dependency ratio among Blacks in rural non-farm and urban-fringe areas. From the point of view of anti-poverty strategies, the implication is that different strategies may be appropriate to the different ecological areas. Jobs, education and an end to racism may not be enough to overcome poverty in rural non-farm areas. Moreover the larger dependency ratio in rural non-farm and urban fringe communities means that there is a greater strain on familial and community resources and, consequently, indicates the necessity of governmental assistance.

¹The Halifax mid-city data were collected in 1959-60, under the auspices of the Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University. Data on the urban fringe community and the rural non-farm area were gathered, respectively, in 1967 and 1964-5. Observations in the field indicate that the patterns discovered in the latter two sets of data accurately depict present conditions. The Halifax mid-city data are ten years old; we think that this gives our comparative analysis a conservative bias, in that differences between mid-city and other ecological types are not as pronounced in our data as they are in fact.

²The Condition of the Negroes of Halifax City, Nova Scotia, (Halifax, Nova Scotia: Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University, 1962) p. 5. For purpose of this brief, the tables of Halifax mid-city Blacks were calculated from the raw data collected in 1959-60.

101.

Table 13 indicates that households tend to be much larger among rural non-farm Blacks than among either Halifax mid-city or urban fringe Blacks. (The latter two have about the same household-size distribution. Here is an instance where the time differential of data is probably blurring a difference; our surmise would be that large households among mid-city Blacks are proportionately less now than in 1959-60.) For the city of Halifax as a whole, household size of from two to five persons is much more common than among mid-city Blacks¹ and, correspondingly, the percentage of households with more than six persons is much less. The larger household size found among Blacks reflects both a higher birth rate and a pronounced tendency for Black households to include, more often, "other" relatives and boarders. Table 14 shows that both these patterns are more likely to be found among rural non-farm Blacks. It reflects a life-style adapted to both poverty and racism.² Large family size is particularly characteristic of urban fringe and rural non-farm Black communities which adds further disadvantages to their condition of poverty. We have to interpret cautiously the data on average family size among mid-city Blacks; our judgment is that the average family size would be smaller now than it was in 1959-60. It should be observed that, while urban fringe and especially rural non-farm Black communities are more likely to have extended family ¹The data for Halifax mid-city Blacks are probably representative (apart from the problem of outmoded data) of Halifax Blacks as a whole. More middle class and well-to-do Blacks live outside the mid-city area, but they were counterbalanced by the Africville Blacks, who were poorer than the mid-city Blacks.

²In Guysborough County, many Black households have "welfare children" who have come from outside the county.

Table 14
GENERAL FAMILY DATA FOR HALIFAX MID-CITY BLACKS, THE URBAN FRINGE
COMMUNITY, AND THREE RURAL NON-FARM COMMUNITIES

	Halifax Mid-City	Urban Fringe	Rural Non-Farm
Total Population Counted	1,227	328	618
Number of Families	248	61	90
Average (mean) Family Size	4.9	5.1	6.6
Number of Families with Female Head	69	7	11
Percentage of Families with Female Head	28%	11%	12%
Percentage in Population with Relation to Family Head of:
Child	52%	87%	67%
Other Relative	6%	7%	16%
Boarder	6%	6%	17%

Sources: As listed in Table 12.

structures, they also tend to have more stable families and fewer families with female heads.

102.

There are several anti-poverty implications of Black family structure and size. One might argue that birth control information should be made available, but it has been observed repeatedly that large families tend to be less common among people with higher socio-economic status and when there are adequate opportunities for socio-economic betterment. Moreover, to argue for birth control carries the implication that people are themselves responsible for their poverty, and that their poverty is due to a personal failing such as ignorance or imprudence. In view of the historical oppression of the Black people in Nova Scotia and the racist character of traditional Nova Scotian society, such an argument is at best naive. Of course, birth control and family planning services should be available and more effectively communicated. More important, however, there should be societal change; that is, change in the distribution of resources, in the structuring of opportunities and in the type of attitudes and behaviour which is tolerated if not legally sanctioned. When changes such as these are carried out, we can expect reductions in family size and in overcrowding due to the incorporation of boarders and other relatives into the household. When discrimination ends and people have financial resources, housing will be available more readily and family planning much easier. It can be deduced from the above discussion of family and household that anti-poverty approaches will differ somewhat by ecological type. In the city, where families tend to be less stable and where there are more female-head households, there will be a need for day-care centres and special tax privileges for the single-parent family.

103. Table 15 presents data on male and female annual income among Blacks in the three ecological settings. The table indicates that only some two per cent of the Blacks in the rural non-farm communities who are in the labour force earn more than $3,000 annually. The extraordinary economic marginality of this population is indicated by the fact that almost 80 per cent earned less than $1,000 in 1964. Over the past four years there have been some economic improvements in the area, but the situation has not radically changed and it is apparent that radical change is necessary. The urban fringe data, collected in 1967, indicate that some 55 per cent of those answering the appropriate question earned less than $3,000 annually. Since we did not ourselves conduct the survey of this urban fringe community, we do not know how to interpret the large percentage of no responses. We do know, however, that several of the females not responding worked intermittently as domestics and that some of the men not responding were unemployed; consequently, it does not appear that the distribution of reported income exaggerates the poverty in the community. The Halifax mid-city income data are untrustworthy on two counts: they are a decade old; there is a large percentage non-response. We believe that adequate up-to-date data would show that mid-city Blacks are better off than Blacks in urban fringe communities but that about 50 per cent earn less than $3,000 annually, and that mid-city Blacks are much poorer than the average Haligonian. Almost twenty years

Table 15
 APPROXIMATE DISTRIBUTION OF ANNUAL INCOME AMONG MALE AND FEMALE HALIFAX MID-CITY
 BLACKS, THE URBAN FRINGE COMMUNITY, AND THREE RURAL NON-FARM COMMUNITIES

Income	Halifax Mid-City		Urban Fringe		Rural Non-Farm
	Male	Female	Male	Female	Male	Female
Under $1,000	19%	58%	6%	33%	76%	86%
$1,000 - $1,999	29	33	3	0	17	7
$2,000 - $2,999	37	8	40	67	4	0
$3,000 - $3,999	13	1	37	0	2	7
$4,000+	2	0	14	0	1	0
Total Responding	100%	100%	100%	100%	100%	100%
No Response	(226)	(118)	(30)	(3)	(92)	(14)
	(60)	(213)	(18)	(12)	(0)	(0)

Sources: As listed in Table 12.

Special Senate Committee

ago, the average Haligonian earned about $2,000 annually. Our observations over the past year, especially with regard to the former Africville population (now residing mostly in the mid-city area of Halifax), provide the basis for our judgment.

104. Occupationally, Blacks in all three ecological areas are concentrated heavily in the low-skilled and poor-paying categories. In the rural non-farm area, most men are involved in loading boats and/or marginal woods-work, while most women work as domestics. In the urban fringe community, the same pattern exists, although on a slightly smaller scale, with more men working in higher-status occupations while the bulk of the male labour force is engaged in unskilled work. In the Halifax mid-city Black population, there was in 1959-60 a larger percentage of both males and females in higher-status employment, although the majority of men worked in semiskilled and unskilled employment, and the majority of women worked as domestics or in comparable low-status jobs. Our impression is that the situation has not radically changed for the mid-city Blacks, although there has been a tendency for a larger number of Blacks to obtain more skilled, clerical, and professional work.¹ Anti-poverty strategies to enhance occupational opportunities for Blacks, such as an end to racism, payment of a living ¹It is an indicator of historical oppression that about the same percentage of mid-city Blacks in 1960 were in unskilled and semiskilled employment as were classified as laborers and unskilled workers in the 1838 census of Halifax Town Blacks. The occupational distribution of Black males in Halifax in 1838 showed approximately 80 per cent as labourers and unskilled workers. See Public Archives, Nova Scotia, Vol. 448, Census for the County of Halifax, 1838.

Table 16
OCCUPATIONAL CLASSIFICATION OF MALE AND FEMALE HALIFAX MID-CITY BLACKS, THE URBAN FRINGE COMMUNITY, AND THREE RURAL NON-FARM COMMUNITIES

	Halifax Mid-City		Urban Fringes		Rural Non-Farm
	Male	Female	Male	Female	Male	Female
	1%	6%	3%	0%	0%	0%
Professional	4	10	6	8	0	0
Clerical	1	52	18	3	1	6
Service	10	1	7	10	0	94
Skilled	38	4	26	12	0	0
Semiskilled	45	26	39	66	5	0
Unskilled	1	1	1	1	93	0
Armed Forces	100%	100%	100%	100%	100%	100%
Total Responding	(255)	(130)	(55)	(14)	(81)	(32)
No response	(31)	(201)	(1)	(3)	(0)	(0)

*In the urban fringe community the 16 unemployed are classified as unskilled; there are 4 housewives not employed; and there are 12 pensioners.

Sources: As listed in Table 12.

wage to people as they are taking the training that they want, and the provision for financial and educational resources conducive to establishing a context favourable to the achievement of occupational aspirations, apply across ecological categories. The anti-poverty approach in the city, however, should specifically include strong efforts to break down what appear to be "closed occupations" in some unions as well as in certain service occupations.

105. Table 17 points out the educational achievement of Blacks who are out of school in the different ecological settings. The pattern, again, is for educational achievement to decline as we go from mid-city to urban fringe to rural non-farm populations. Moreover, the difference between mid-city and the other sets of data is undoubtedly underestimated, for the former data were collected at an earlier point in time. Most noticeable about these data is that there are few Blacks who have received any senior high school training. Other sources have indicated that this lack of high school training is characteristic of Black communities throughout the province.¹ Educational achievement tends to be lower in Nova Scotia than in many other provinces; for example, a recent study prepared for the Atlantic Development Board indicated that only 24 per cent of the boys and 27 per cent of the girls reach Grade XII while, for British Columbia, the corresponding figures are 64 per cent and 62 per cent.² Even within the admittedly poor educational context of Nova Scotia, the Blacks have had poorer opportunities. We have shown this to be the case historically and, even now, school consolidation has not ¹See, for example, the summary analysis of Brand, op. cit., and W. P. Oliver, op. cit.

²Quoted in The 4th Estate, Halifax, Nova Scotia, September 18, 1969.

Table 7
LAST SCHOOL GRADE ACHIEVED BY MALE AND FEMALE HALIFAX MID-CITY BLACKS, THE URBAN FRINGE COMMUNITY, AND THREE RURAL NON-FARM COMMUNITIES

Grade	Halifax Mid-City		Urban Fringe		Rural Non-Farm
	Male	Female	Male	Female	Male	Female
1 - 3	10%	5%	15%	12%	30%	15%
4 - 6	28	26	32	27	56	44
7 - 9	44	50	38	51	13	34
10 - 12	16	18	15	10	1	7
Over Grade 12	2	1	0	0	0	0
	100%	100%	100%	100%	100%	100%
Total Responding	(234)	(294)	(58)	(63)	(117)	(92)

Sources: As listed in Table 12.

been carried far enough to provide Blacks with equal educational resources. It is apparent that, with regard to education, certain anti-poverty strategies which are applicable to the province as a whole (i.e., more money for education and more school consolidation) would also benefit the Blacks. We would argue further, however, that the Blacks and the poor should receive not merely equal, but special educational resources, for among them the obstacles to effective education imposed by their poverty and oppression are greater; thus specially trained teachers, special tutors, and more community involvement are imperative. An in-depth study of educational values and problems in the Guysborough communities indicated that the Blacks placed a very high value on education, but that most youngsters dropped out of school because they did not believe that many opportunities were available to them, because it was difficult to study in overcrowded homes among elders who could not relate to their educational experiences, and because the reward system of the schools left them discouraged and disadvantaged.

5. Rural Non-Farm Blacks

106.

It has been noted above that, for the entire province, the rural non-farm inhabitants have the lowest family incomes. It was also observed that almost all rural Blacks are non-farm. A good example of the poverty and of the problems associated with overcoming poverty is indicated in the case of the three Guysborough communities of Lincolnville, Sunnyville, and Upper Big Tracadie. It is not known how representative these three communities are of the total rural non-farm Black population. Although we believe that extrapolation is justified in the case of description of income, education, and employment patterns, we are uncertain of extrapolation with regard to anti-poverty strategies.

107. Reference has been made to the condition of the Guysborough Blacks. It has been pointed out that, in comparison with city and urban-fringe Blacks, who are themselves a poor group, the Guysborough Blacks have a large dependency ratio, larger household size, bigger families, more complicated household structure, considerably smaller incomes, more unskilled workers and poorer educational achievement. Guysborough County is itself the poorest county in Nova Scotia, with a per capita income of approximately $600 in 1961. (Inverness County, by comparison, had a per capita income of $690 in 1961.) The Guysborough Blacks, with a per capita income of $325, can be considered among the poorest of the poor.¹

108. The Guysborough Blacks are the descendants of Loyalists and their roots in the county go back almost two hundred years. Theirs has always been a difficult battle for survival, a battle in which they received very little assistance from either the government or their White neighbours.² In 1871, most Guysborough Blacks were attempting to eke out an existence on their rocky marginal farms. A large number of women worked as domestics in various White households. A small but significant number of Black males were fishermen or seamen, working out of Guysborough town which in 1871 was a shipping centre and fishing port. At the present time, almost one hundred years later, the Black population of Guysborough County is approximately the same in occupational distribution and in size as it was in 1871. A large number of women are still working as domestics in White households as far away as Antigonish. Most of the men work as labourers, finding employment at Mulgrave some thirty miles distant, loading boats in the spring and summer and supplementing their incomes by selling pulp and Christmas trees from their small woodlots. (Many of these woodlot-owners do not have clear title.) Only slightly more than one-fifth of the labour force worked more than 40 weeks per year. None of the Guysborough Blacks can be considered a farmer, using Dominion Bureau of Statistics criteria, although some do so identify themselves.¹ Of the total labour force population of 149 in the three Black communities, 115 earned less than $1,000 in 1964.

¹The per capita income of $325 was based on data gathered in 1965; the poverty of the Blacks is, comparatively, even greater.

²See Clairmont, et al., op. cit.

109. The Guysborough Blacks are clearly an oppressed people and have been for two hundred years. They are not unaware of their plight. Many have migrated, in search of a better life, to Halifax and to "Upper Canada". Some have narrowed their aspirations and have taken as their reference group the other poor in their communities. Neither of these "solutions" has been adequate (of course, it is a mark against society that such adaptations as lowering basic goals have been made) nor has there been effective collective action oriented to radical change; people have worked together to support schools and churches, but poverty and other concomitants of lack of power have limited cooperative efforts. It has been argued that an individual is poor as long as he feels poor, rejected, or alienated from the economic or the cultural mainstream.² Certainly the Guysborough Blacks are poor by this definition. Comparative analysis found that the Guysborough Blacks live their lives with ¹A "viable" farmer is one who has a gross income (from his farm) of $5,000 or more.

²J. S. Reiner and T. A. Reiner, "Urban Poverty", Journal of the American Institute of Planners, (Washington, D.C.: August 1965).

feelings of distrust, pessimism, anxiety, and resentment, all characteristics of alienation.¹

110. The tendency to look upon poverty as a problem of individual persons has hindered the search for effective anti-poverty strategies. To understand the causes of poverty and to locate sources of change, one must look beyond education and job training to basic structural and cultural factors. These latter would include the historical reality of a racist society which lingers on, and structural economic factors which maintain and perpetuate poverty. In discussing such structural economic conditions, it is important to see the plight of the Guysborough Blacks in the wider context of rural non-farm workers in the Maritimes. It has been noted that one-half the rural wage earners have annual incomes of less than $2,000.² Elsewhere, it has been reported that, "one of the most striking features of the regional economy is the disproportionately large number of people working in marginal or submarginal activities in the Atlantic Provinces."³ These rural wage earners are locked into the countryside and form a residual group caught in the process of economic change taking place generally in the primary industries. They earn enough to maintain themselves, but they have no future and little prospect of improving their socio-economic ¹Clairmont, et al., op. cit. The comparative analysis was between the residents in three Guysborough Black communities and Whites residing in a sample of non-metropolitan communities in Halifax County.

²R. A. Jenness, The Dimensions of Poverty in Canada: Some Preliminary Observations, (Vancouver: University of British Columbia, February 1965) pp. 52-53. Generally, "viable" non-farmers are those whose income level is $3,000 or more.

³R. D. Howland, "Some Regional Aspects of Economic Development in Canada," in Royal Commission on Canada's Economic Prospects (Ottawa: 1957).

well-being; moreover, the services and facilities available to them are clearly inferior and inadequate.

111. We believe that a strong case can be made for the position that rural non-farm workers constitute an exploited class of people.¹ They have, in effect, the burden of subsidizing the fishing, agricultural, and lumbering industries and the primary level of processing. Government subsidizes the large industrial-commercial complexes which gather and process resources, but it gives no subsidy to the poor who for a variety of reasons constitute a captive labour force without which the changing economic activity in the countryside could not take place. Pierre Yves Pepin has observed that "through governmental subsidies the fishing industry is doing well, but can the same be said of the men?"² With respect to the Guysborough Blacks, it appears that an analogous statement would be, "through governmental subsidies (including the leasing of Crown lands) the pulp and paper industries at places like Port Hawkesbury are doing well, but can the same be said of the men?" We have shown that the answer to the latter question is an emphatic "no"; the men are not doing well. Yves Pepin, in commenting on the condition of the small woodlot owner in Nova Scotia, noted that "observers interpret the apathy of the government towards the painful efforts of the small producers as support for the private companies."³

112. Reference has been made several times to the study carried out in 1964 dealing with socio-economic conditions among the Guysborough Blacks. It should be added here that this study also suggested a coherent body of anti-poverty strategies ranging from desegregated schooling, preschool classes, and job-training to the creation of new jobs through negotiations between government and private industry. It was suggested that a community worker be appointed in order to coordinate these programs and to assist in the development of effective collective action. Now, four years later, it is possible to report that some significant progress has been made with respect to most recommendations. But the chief suggestion was not acted upon; namely, to make some change in the structural economic conditions that perpetuate poverty. Negotiations between government and private industry broke down as the latter demanded too much for the little it was prepared to do in order to alter employment conditions. On its side, the government did not press the case, although it well might have since the leasing of Crown land and the conditions of that leasing give government a wedge with which to press for change. The people themselves exerted little pressure on either government or industry, for they lacked information and organization (copies of the report were not made available to them or to the general public). The present situation is not much different than it was prior to the study conducted in 1964. There is still considerable underemployment; there is still very inadequate housing; in short, there is still the basic poverty which vitiates other worthwhile reforms.

¹A different view or interpretation is stated in a "Note on 'an exploited class of people!'" by Guy Henson, see p. 84 ff.

²Pepin, op. cit., p. 203.

³*Ibid.*, p. 206.

113. We believe that the poverty of the rural wage earner in Nova Scotia is often the other side of the coin of economic policy established by government. The marginality of the rural worker is intrinsic to the kinds of economic developments that are taking place.

Pulp people dislike the idea of unionizing woodcutters or effective cooperation among small woodlot owners (action which is often necessary to counter exploitation), arguing that the creation of a strong union in a technologically obsolete activity might well mean no jobs at all and that surely this would be worse than the present marginality. The implication is clear: private industry is saying, in effect, if you want us in the province, you must accept the economic marginality of the small people who, in various ways, are involved in our operation. We believe that further study would show this position to hold true in most areas of primary processing, be they fishing or lumbering. To overcome the poverty induced by such economic arrangements, we must first appreciate the association between the two.

114

Several strategies can be readily advanced to alleviate poverty among the Guysborough Blacks:

- a) direct subsidization of the "marginal" worker who is involved in these operations. If the industry perpetrating the marginality is subsidized in a variety of ways by the government, then why not subsidize the workers who are at present carrying much of the burden? We recognize that there may be some problems associated with effecting such a program. It is fashionable and facile to refer to some form of negative income tax plan. Undoubtedly some such arrangement will have to be worked out. Here, though, our concern is the establishment of the principle.
- b) more land should be made available to the small woodlot owner such as one finds in the Black communities of Guysborough County. As part of this new arrangement, land should be surveyed and titles given to the various households. Since the Guysborough Blacks are so poor and have been oppressed for so long, they should not have to pay for this process nor should they be held responsible for back taxes.

- c) part of the leasing contract the Nova Scotia Pulp Company has with the government concerning use of Crown land specifically refers to the company's obligation in the area of reforestation and maintenance. As the 1965 study recommended, the company should be required to develop an extensive forest management program in Guysborough County, giving permanent work to at least some residents of the area. (The 1965 work estimated thirty full-time jobs could be made available to the most oppressed group—the Blacks.)

115. The foregoing strategies are based on the premise that the Guysborough Blacks want to stay in the area if they could get an equal share in the nation's wealth and if they could have the full opportunities enjoyed by Canadians elsewhere. The 1965 survey of people's views indicates that this premise is valid. The most important fact is, however, that the Guysborough Blacks have been where they are now for 200 years, living without equal opportunities. Some would leave the area if assured of opportunities elsewhere, and perhaps the area will not be able to support all the people residing there now. The important thing is to end the racism and exploitation here and elsewhere, and to end it now.

116. Additional anti-poverty strategies can be found in the 1965 report. There are, however, two further points we should like to make here. In the 1965 report it was suggested that a housing program be undertaken in the area in order that the people obtain necessary space and modern facilities. Such a program would have to be financed largely from governmental coffers. Many additional benefits would flow from such a program. Some may object to the kind of governmental financing that would be necessary to achieve this new housing but such action would be an important symbol of good-will to the Black community and can readily be justified in terms of compensation for the special oppression and exploitation to which the Black man in Guysborough County has been subjected. Finally, we think one of the best anti-poverty strategies is to help foster organization and collective action among the poor themselves so that they can gather relevant information, apply appropriate political pressure, and communicate more effectively their own wants, needs, and definitions of the situation. For the Black man in Guysborough County and in Nova Scotia generally, this is especially important in view of the prejudice and discrimination that still persists. If such organization had existed, and if the 1965 report had been made available to the people, we feel that conditions in Guysborough County would now be substantially better than they were in 1964.

6. Conclusion

117. Blacks, like their fellow White Nova Scotians, have been migrating to "Upper Canada" in increasingly large numbers since the end of World War II. Migration, though, does not solve the basic poverty problem; the Black migrants have a hard time making progress in places like Toronto,¹ and most persons (particularly older persons and those with familial responsibilities) perceive the risks entailed by migration to be too great, given their lack of marketable skills. The fight against poverty must be fought, therefore, in Nova Scotia. It is clear that the resolution of Black poverty is often part of the larger problem of Nova Scotian poverty; this is especially true, for example, in the case of the poverty of Springhill Blacks or of those in Five Mile Plains (where a gypsum plant closed down several years ago). We have observed that the problems of the Guysborough Blacks are illustrative of the larger problem of the rural non-farm workers. It is clear, then that socio-economic conditions of the Blacks are correlated with those of the particular areas in which they reside.

¹Hill, op. cit., pp. 246-253.

118. Yet Black poverty is more severe than White poverty in Nova Scotia. Historical precedents indicate that the Blacks' share of an area's wealth is by no means assured. The additional factor here is of course White racism. This racism is still a reality as is evidenced by Ku Klux Klan-like threats made recently against a former Africville resident who moved into a White suburb¹ and by the barbershop practices in many Nova Scotian towns. Blacks in Nova Scotia who live in integrated areas appear to be less poor than those living in segregated communities,² but this is due to both the dearth of resources and services in these isolated segregated communities and the absence of effective Black organization in Nova Scotia. If this racism and poverty are to be successfully confronted, a progressive militancy and an effective province-wide Black organization representing Black people and exerting pressure for radical change seem imperative. The recent federal grant to the Black United Front seems to be a positive step in the right direction. In fact, such action may lead to effective strategies against poverty generally with the Black United Front representing a vanguard, a new mechanism in the fight against poverty, based on the premise that poverty in societies such as our own is to a high degree a function of political processes and differential power.

¹"Women Fined For KKK-Type Threat", Halifax Mail-Star, February 20, 1966.

²Brand, op. cit.

119. Housing is an important aspect of Black poverty, that should be mentioned. Throughout most of the province, the housing condition of Blacks is deplorable. Housing tends to be substandard, and sewerage and water inadequate. Three factors account for this condition, the original patterns of settlement, whereby Blacks were settled in isolated areas or on the fringe of White communities; White racism, which has limited housing opportunities for Blacks and often has prevented their obtaining services which their White neighbours received (A classic case of this is the neglect evident in the treatment of Africville by the City of Halifax.); low incomes and poor employment opportunities. Clearly this is one area of Black poverty where immediate and extensive governmental assistance is necessary. Cooperative housing programs at Beechville and North Preston appear to be the direction that governmental assistance should follow, although the commitment will have to be greater than at present if the very poor in these and other communities are to obtain decent housing. As a sign of good-will and as compensation or reparation for past neglect and oppression, surely decent, safe, and sanitary housing should be provided, even if the government has to foot most of the bill.

NOTE on "an exploited class of people" See p.78 ff.

120. While I subscribe in general to the preceding valuable outline of the situation of the Black people in Nova Scotia, I do not subscribe to the interpretation, stated on page 78 and in the following several pages, that rural workers (the terms "rural non-farm workers", "small woodlot owners," "small producers", "woodcutters", and "the men" are used in the text) "constitute an exploited class of people." Here the paper deals with that group of the general population of which the rural Black people form a part, but not with Black people themselves.

121. In this brief, such words as "exploit" are used in their accepted sense. In that sense, "exploit" means "utilize (person, etc.) for one's own ends" (OED). The meaning and implication of "exploit" in the text are clear (even though the word may be deemed to have other connotations in certain technical literature).
122. I support the following propositions:
- (1) that industrialization under present economic development policies may provide a substantial number of jobs but, nevertheless, leave out large numbers of the rural poor who, as the present brief emphasizes, are not able to benefit from economic growth.
 - (2) that historically a pool of unemployed or under-employed workers has created opportunities for exploitation, and that cases of exploitation, recent and current, undoubtedly exist.
123. My objection to the generalization "that rural non-farm workers constitute an exploited class of people". and to certain supporting statements, is that it misinterprets the situation and gets in the way of the clear assessment of the problem which is required for devising effective remedial programs. In general, rural workers, both farm and non-farm, have become a stranded group of people, stranded by the collapse of subsistence agriculture

(associated with forestry and fishing) and by other historical forces in a region of lagging growth or decline.

124. The problem is, actually, how to create an upward spiral out of a general condition of marginality against which people (having low wages or incomes), companies (having low profitability), and governments (having low tax revenues for public services) have all been contending.

125. In the preceding section, a presumption appears to exist that exploitation is equated with the marginality of rural workers. The statement that governments "give no subsidy to the poor" (the "poor" evidently meaning here the identified groups in the rural labour force) does not accord with current and historical facts. For many years, governments have been subsidizing rural workers, farm and non-farm, through policies of the Departments of Agriculture, Fisheries, Highways, Public Welfare, Education, Manpower, Public Works (breakwaters, wharves, etc.), among others. In fact, a frequent criticism is that governments have been subsidizing uneconomic marginal producers and workers as well as companies, in unsound ways, and thus have been tending to perpetuate conditions of marginality, rather than bringing about the rationalization of primary industries in such ways that productivity, competitiveness, wages and profitability will be brought up to current Canadian standards.

126. The statement that certain subsidized industries (that is, companies) are "doing well" is questionable. Given a condition of relatively low profitability or marginality in these industries, a governmental subsidy tends to support the whole operation, including wages and prices for raw materials.

127. In lagging areas such as the Atlantic Provinces, the people displaced by mechanization or stranded by collapse of subsistence living in the primary industries have not been adequately absorbed by industrialization and urban growth centres, regional or distant. Mechanization necessary for survival of primary-industry operations, usually in larger units, has exacerbated the problems of people dependent upon those industries as a result of historical land-settlement patterns. At the same time, industrialization and urbanization have worked to render obsolete the skills of the stranded people and to leave them less mobile and trapped in outmoded settlement patterns. It may be argued that such subsidies as cited above, and the subsidy approach or the subsidy state of mind, have failed to lift the rural poor out of poverty and even have left marginal producers sinking into poverty. It may be said, also, that the poor do not know how to utilize, or cannot utilize subsidies or services available to them. "Exploitation" is inadequate in providing either a key to understanding the complex forces underlying the present situation or, even more important, a key to the kinds of personal self-help, group mutual aid, and public action likely to bring about improvement.

128. The implications of certain statements on page 79 and of the statement that "the marginality of the rural worker is intrinsic to the kinds of economic development which are taking place (p. 79) is that conscious or unconscious efforts of government and of industry combine to perpetuate present low-income conditions for purposes of current economic development policy. The fact is that, for thirty years at least, governments have promoted efforts of woodlot owners to organize for cooperative marketing and currently are doing so. The pulp and paper companies have to face the fact that woodlot owners may, and very possibly soon will, organize effectively for cooperative marketing. The great majority (in fact, practically all) of the new industries entering Nova Scotia with governmental assistance are unionized. A major fishing company has recently recognized voluntarily a local of the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway Transport and General Workers that represents some 600 fishermen on its vessels. While a minimum wage (especially a low one) may be a weak instrument of economic development, the fact is that the minimum wage levels in Nova Scotia are closer to the average wage levels in this province than is the case in most, if not all other provinces.

129.

In further refutation of the statement that "the poverty of the rural wage earner in Nova Scotia is often the other side of the coin of the economic policy established by the government," an interesting fact is that the present writer was asked last winter to present views (predictably advocating unionization of farm labour and warning against an "attempt to make a depressed condition of agriculture viable by trying to get along with low-paid, untrained, unproductive, and exploited farm labour") at meetings on "Farm Labour - Ways to Improve the Situation" which were attended by larger-farm operators and held under government auspices at the Nova Scotia Agricultural College. A more substantial fact is that for many years governments have given grants to universities of this region to enable them to assist rural workers to organize themselves into producer and consumer cooperatives.

130. The present writer has believed and advocated for many years that the more working people organize into unions and cooperatives, the healthier democratic societies will be. He is unable to accept, however, the contention that business and governmental institutions combine in seeking to maintain in Nova Scotia a pool of poor rural workers as a device of economic development policy. What, indeed, would they gain in doing so? The brief recognizes the validity of Galbraith's argument that poor people cannot and do not participate in economic growth and benefit from it. Of what use to existing or new industries is a pool of chronic rural poor? Can modern or modernizing industry rely upon primitive and uncertain sources of raw materials and labour? The answer to both questions is negative.

131. What, then, can be the motivation of government and of industry, especially in the light of the drain upon the economy of public services needed by all citizens and especially the poor, in maintaining an "exploited class" of poor rural workers? (The fact that governments may carry out programs required by political expediency cannot be construed as evidence of conscious or unconscious efforts of government and large industry in combination to maintain "an exploited class of people.")

132. No suggestion has been made, although it well might be made, that the enterprise system and the existing mode of society do not produce satisfactory results for people. Given acceptance of the existing social form (perhaps acceptance in the light of alternatives), the question is, can it evolve and be made to work better and, if so, how? In the light of this approach, "subsidies," incentives, or grants (compensatory or other) to industries or companies can be evaluated detachedly and critically.

133.

The statement that subsidized large industries (companies) "are doing well" will find ready acceptance, even though the balance sheets of the public companies in this category may not encourage investors to buy shares in such companies. The fact is that when a company makes an investment in a subsidized or grant-aided operation, usually it walks a kind of economic tightrope; and the government making a subsidy or grant walks an economic-political tightrope. While thorough documentation is lacking, the common facts of the industrial development experience in the Atlantic Provinces indicate that some such subsidized or grant-aided operations fail, some barely survive, some have moderate financial success, and some become quite profitable. It is in the nature of industrial development aided by governments that, in a given negotiation, a government is subject to censure if the operation turns out to be a failure ~~and~~ public money is lost (to say nothing of setbacks to individuals and communities), or if the operation is highly profitable and taxpayers' money is then added to the profits. Such risks run by governments, as distinct from risks undertaken by companies, are inherent in the process of publicly-assisted industrial development, often carried on under circumstances of severe social pressure bordering on desperation in slow-growth areas, and in competition with other governments, in slow-growth as well as fast-growth areas.

134.

Such problems as these, as well as the historical processes which have left people economically and socially stranded, are not recognized in the rationale of the conclusion that rural poor or marginal workers "constitute an exploited class of people."

35. The Institute group's brief as a whole supports a two-pronged attack on poverty, through creation of economic opportunities for people and through enabling poor people to take advantage of opportunities (together with supplementary welfare programs for the handicapped or specially disadvantaged). Such a two-pronged attack will be rendered ineffective, if compensatory or other grants for industrial development are viewed as subsidies by governments to industries under some combination or system whose net effect, conscious or unconscious, is to cause rural workers "to constitute an exploited class of people." Various industrial development efforts of governments are subject to strong criticism, but on other grounds.
136. Granted that hindsight is easy, it is becoming increasingly apparent that a highly sophisticated level of policy, knowledge, and method on the part of governments in negotiating with industry is necessary, both to make industrial incentive programs work well in slow-growth areas and to enable the public to understand and accept such policies in application over time. Suitable disclosure of information, appropriately timed early in the operation or as it proceeds, and with necessary adaptations for non-public as well as public companies, is necessary if the taxpayer is to be satisfied that his money is being well and properly used, and if he is to have the trust necessary for long-term application of such policies. Likewise, he may well feel that if the government to which he pays taxes is going to take risks of this kind, then the government, by means of some equity reservation or otherwise, should share in the gains; unless he can be convinced that his government, and he as an individual, are going to get adequate return through corporation and other taxes and various benefits to the economy. To the extent that past and current subsidization or grant-aiding policies for industry in slow-growth areas are not well developed, well applied, well understood and effective, it is understandable that the poor themselves and others concerned with problems of the poor will contrast "subsidies for industry" with "subsidies for the poor." Particularly as a span of years is needed for effective results from policies necessarily gradual in application, these considerations can be of critical importance. - Guy Henson 137.

Special Senate Committee

VII. FINDINGS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

Poverty in Nova Scotia needs to be viewed in a perspective of modernization and growth. The standard of living, although it remains behind the national average, is rising steadily and in line with the Canadian experience. Despite well-recognized problems of adjustment, and overdependence upon defence expenditure, various sectors of the Nova Scotian economy include examples of successful competitive enterprise; for instance, the growth being experienced in the Halifax-Dartmouth Metropolitan area, which is being shared in varying degrees by certain other urban centres. Both the federal and provincial governments are making important efforts to modernize the economy and induce growth. It is not enough, however, to assume that growth and modernization in Nova Scotia will take care of the residual population in the primary industries (coal-steel, farming, fishing, forestry), or will eradicate the persistent pockets of urban, urban-fringe, and ethnic poverty. Some of Nova Scotia's poor may be recent entrants to the poverty category, but others have been there for generations.

138.

The several studies to which reference has been made in this brief indicate the following basic causes of poverty: (1) a relatively low selection of job opportunities for unskilled workers, associated with a general lack of local economic activity; (2) a lack of basic education and technical training; (3) a lack of mobility; (4) a lack of sufficient public services to help people in need; (5) a feeling of alienation and discrimination (whether the poor be Black or White) resulting in lack of motivation, feelings of hopelessness and, in many cases, inability to take advantage of work opportunities when they are present.

A. EDUCATION

139. Virtually all studies of poverty draw attention to the low level of education among the poor. Obstacles to attainment of higher education grow disproportionately with poverty. According to the 1961 census, over 64 per cent of all low income non-farm families in Nova Scotia had heads with an elementary education or less. The results of the Nulife Study show that in Halifax City over 61 per cent of the low income group have, at most, an elementary education. In contrast, only 12.5 per cent of the comparison group in the Nulife Study in Halifax have an elementary education or less.
140. It is obvious that limited education and poverty interact to perpetuate each other and that earning power is restricted by limited education. If the poor could increase their educational level, they would stand a good chance of increasing their income and of lifting themselves out of poverty. The Nulife Study reports, that over 50 per cent of the low-income group state that their reasons for leaving school is financial. Less than 17 per cent of the comparison group indicate that they left school for financial reasons. Over 90 per cent of the low-income group started their first permanent job before the age of 21. This was true for less than 40 per cent of the comparison group. It appears clear that the low-income population have a limited education because they are forced to leave school early and seek employment; yet, it is precisely their lack of education that perpetuates their low-income condition.

141

It would further appear from the Nulife Study and from other studies, that lack of interest in education is not the problem with the low-income population. According to the Nulife Study, in all places surveyed, including Halifax, a higher percentage of the low income group express interest in acquiring education for a different type of job than does the comparison group. A larger percentage of the low-income group than of the comparison group feel, however, that it would not be possible for them to get additional training; this is one of many indications in the Nulife Study of the kind of alienation experienced by the low-income population.

142.

Free elementary and secondary education is of little value to the poor, if they cannot avail themselves of it. Although it "costs" the poor nothing to attend school or to participate in training programs, the low income family needs the money which would be foregone if its children remained at school. It appears important that an alternate source of income be provided to compensate for the income that would have been earned had the children left school.

143.

The recent expansion of the comprehensive school system in Nova Scotia and the establishment of regional vocational schools do not necessarily assure a better education to substantial numbers of the poor and should not be deemed sufficient to supplant for additional remedies, such as income supplements.

144.

The Nulife Study shows that the children of low-income families tend to be older for their school grade than do the children of comparison group families, which suggests that children from low-income families advance through school at a slower rate than do children of the comparison group. Required are the provision of pre-school and headstart programs; community study and recreation centres to overcome, in part, the lack of private study facilities; and tutorial services at the Grade VI to VII level, where most of the dropouts occur.

145. There is a disproportionate accumulation of difficulties to be overcome by the poor seeking higher education. This is a most urgent problem given a pattern of economic development that places, as it does in Nova Scotia, a high premium on educated employees. If the problem is not overcome, post secondary learning institutions, in effect, perpetuate the status quo.

146. Of Canadian wage-earner: families with less than $3,000 income, only 12 per cent of children 19-24 years old were attending school (college or university); this contrasts with 50 per cent for those families earning $7,000 or more. The percentage of population 15-19 years of age attending school in Nova Scotia, in 1961, was 57.3 per cent; Canada, 58.5 per cent. The percentage of persons 20-24 years of age attending school in Nova Scotia was 5.9 per cent; for Canada, 8.0 per cent. The Nulife Study showed that only 1.7 per cent of the children of low-income families were in college, compared to 10.6 per cent of the children of the comparison group. It is clear that children from poverty families are seriously disadvantaged at higher levels of schooling. The Nulife Study indicates that the disparity between low and high income children begins after one year of high school and, thereafter, worsens rapidly.

B HOUSING¹

147. Housing is a critical variable when dealing with poverty, particularly rural poverty. Many of the poor in the rural farm and non-farm areas of the province own their own houses. These houses have little market value, but they are of considerable value to the people living in them when they consider alternative sources of housing. Housing becomes a major, if not the major, obstacle to the relocation of families into settings where income potential could be considerably improved. In addition, the fact that many of these people are locked into the countryside thwarts a rational system of rural land use. A first step in the solution of the problem is to conduct land-use inventories of the kind mentioned earlier in this brief. Beyond this, and taking into account the dual benefits of improving the earned-income potential of family units and of improving land use, effective programs should be developed to move people who want to relocate.

148. In Halifax, in contrast to the rural situation, the majority of the low-income families live in rented or leased accommodation. According to the Nulife Study, 91.0 per cent of the low-income population rent or lease shelter, in contrast to the comparison group of which only 42.9 per cent rent or lease. The Nulife Study suggests that, if a low-income family does not own its own house, the likelihood of purchasing one is slim. While 28.6 per cent of the comparison group are buying the dwelling in which they live, only 1.7 per cent of the low-income are purchasing their present shelter.

1 This part of the brief incorporates findings of the Nulife Study conducted in 1967 by the Canadian Welfare Council. The study sampled 543 households in low-income areas of Halifax, and 48 households in a middle-income comparison area. The low-income sample was split evenly between an area of predominantly public housing and another area without public housing.

149.

Public housing may not be considered ideal, but the Nulife Study concluded that, in Halifax, public housing does contribute to the alleviation of poverty. Of people living in the survey areas that are predominantly public housing, 82.5 per cent believe that their present housing is better than their previous housing. In contrast, the same view is held by only 59.2 per cent of the comparison group, and 49.1 per cent of the low-income group not living in public housing areas. It is notable that nearly twice as many of the people living in public housing, compared with low-income people not living in public housing, cited "public housing" as an "ideal 150.

The Nulife Study suggests that economic freedom (measured as ability to choose how income may be spent) is greater for people who are supplied adequate housing, such as that provided by public housing. While 48.5 per cent of the low-income families living in non-public housing areas indicate that they would spend additional income on housing, only 19.3 per cent of the people living in public housing would spend additional income on housing. Of people living in public housing, 28.6 per cent would spend additional income on food, and 15.6 per cent would spend it on clothing. Of low-income families not in public housing, 16.1 per cent would spend additional income on food, and 9.9 per cent would spend it on clothing. Among the families not in public housing, nearly 75 per cent of additional income would be spent on food, shelter, and clothing; among those in public housing, less than 63.5 per cent would be spent on these necessities.

151.

Despite the financial improvements which public housing appears to bring to the low-income population, the Nulife Study indicates that people in public housing tend to agree less often with a number of positive observations about themselves (e.g., "I am doing things that make full use of my abilities."), than do low-income families in non-public housing. When asked how the future looks for the family, 10.4 per cent of the people in public housing answered "very good", as compared with 22.8 per cent of people not living in public housing.

152. The findings reported above suggests at least two important points about housing and poverty. First, the provision of housing clearly upgrades the shelter of the people living in poverty and, at the same time, it increases the portion of income that is discretionary, (that is, the income which can be allocated to items other than food, shelter, and clothing). Secondly, there seems to be an unfavourable impact on the attitudes of people living in public housing.

153. Adequate housing for the low-income population is most important, and every effort should be made to improve the quality of housing available to the poor. It would appear, also, that a different approach to the problem is necessary if we are to negate the unfavourable effects that public housing appears to have on the attitudes of those living in it.

154. Cooperative housing projects of the type financed by federal-provincial funds remain largely beyond the means of people who are the most in need of such help. Needed is a special housing program related to exceptionally long-term low-interest mortgages enabling interested welfare families to become eventual homeowners; public money otherwise paid in rentals could be used to retire mortgages and effect ownership. This kind of program could be extended to people, not dependent upon public welfare, who have special problems (perhaps the prospect of becoming welfare recipients) when their homes are demolished as part of urban renewal; frequently, money derived from expropriation settlement although representing "fair market value," is insufficient to provide other adequate accommodation.

C. TRANSPORTATION

155. Lack of adequate low-cost transportation influences directly the economic and social situation of low-income groups; yet, as the more prosperous community relies increasingly on private modes of transportation, the "economic" need for public transportation declines. Without adequate transportation, however, groups caught in the "poverty trap" will become even more deeply ensnared; growth of economic opportunities has become predominantly urban-oriented, and travel to work over considerable distances is an increasing necessity. The dependence of low-income groups on public transportation can be readily demonstrated. (Figure 3) Only 26 per cent use private cars, compared to 78 per cent in the comparison group.

156. Lack of adequate transportation provides a physical barrier to the possibility of drawing the poor into the mainstream of economic life and gives rise to a variety of disadvantages:

(a) The range of work opportunities for the poor are limited, possibly to a neighbourhood district.

(b) The range of leisure activities is limited.

(c) The poor are susceptible to local monopolies for work and for purchases of supplies.

(d) The poor may be forced to purchase cars, which can incur onerous indebtedness and subtract from other necessities; e.g. housing maintenance.

FIGURE 3

USUAL TRANSPORTATION, HALIFAX, NOVA SCOTIA, 1967

Source: Nulife Study, Canadian Welfare Council, 1967.

(e) The dependents of the poor are isolated from educational opportunities, particularly at higher levels and are deprived of leisure activities which might broaden personal outlook.

(f) The lack of adequate transportation can promote the growth of urban ghettos as the poor minimize transportation costs by either using the only available public transportation, (i.e., city transit) or walking to central points. At the same time, the more prosperous people locate outside the city and commute by car.

D. EMPLOYMENT

157. It is clear that many of the causes of poverty in Nova Scotia are interrelated, and the fundamental association between meagre education, unemployment, and limited income is well established. The challenge is to equip Nova Scotians with marketable skills and to provide year-round markets for those skills. A source of new employment for displaced labour is within the secondary manufacturing and service industries. Experience in the United States, however, indicates that, "on the whole people have not left the industrial sector to find work in the service sector . . . the industrial employed are not taking jobs in the service industries to any considerable degree, and the services should not be seen as a source of employment for unemployed labour from industry."¹

¹Manpower Problems in the Service Sector, (Paris: Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development, 1967), p. 35.

E. RETRAINING AND RELOCATION

158.

Further attention needs to be given to the problems of retraining and relocation. Even when they are aware that technological change will benefit society as a whole, workers tend to fear that change will create serious personal problems for themselves. There exist the fears of loss or reduction in income, of change to a job inferior in status, of removal to a new employer and unfamiliar work associates, of establishing in a strange community, and of other uncertainties. These fears are reflected, in turn, in protective labour union policies which tend to restrict change.

159.

Efforts to retrain men and women for work with other, or new employers have proved largely ineffectual. "Workers rarely, if ever, show much willingness to bear any portion of the cost of such retraining whether in the form of lost earnings or tuition fees. Even where companies provide such opportunities without cost to their employees, workers seldom take advantage of these programmes Workers are willing to retrain for a specific job with their own firm and often beg for the privilege. Some workers have shown a willingness to undertake retraining once unemployed but even here the drop-out rate is quite high. Retraining programmes that focus on developing academic or general use technical skills rather than specific skills geared to a specific job appear to be the least successful. Yet it is precisely such general training that receives the blessing of most of our self-proclaimed authorities on manpower policy To get workers to make the effort, a specific job opportunity must be shown and the training closely related to success of retraining in the case of in-plant job transfer."¹ Programs have tended to assume that relocation and retraining are effective means of combatting poverty, but acquired skills are not necessarily an economic advantage, unless they are linked with a commitment to provide new job opportunities.

160. The fact that many workers move "back home" at the earliest opportunity, or revert, even at personal economic disadvantage, to former occupations, suggests need for further examination of the fundamental effectiveness of these programs. It might be profitable to examine the experience of World War II veterans who entered the armed services from relatively "closed" communities. Did lengthy exposure to a totally different environment lead to substantial change in postwar living patterns for them and their children, as compared with the patterns of men who had remained at home either because they were disabled or unfit by reason of age? A study of this kind might indicate whether substantially long change of environment can accomplish what a short period of rehabilitation training either fails to accomplish at all, or effects only temporarily. Further, it could identify some of the constituents of changed environment, that might be used productively to combat unemployment and poverty.

F. TECHNOLOGICAL CHANGES

161. Agreements about technological change, worked out by labour and management under prevailing economic pressures in Nova Scotia, reflect in part the concern of both labour and management with the skills that will make industry in Nova Scotia more productive and competitive. Special measures are clearly required when change involves, either within an industry or within a given enterprise, as much as a 25 per cent reduction in the labour force. Special measures may well exceed the resources of a given industry or company and require government intervention and assistance; in recent years there have been basic structural changes in the economy of Nova Scotia (notably, in the coal and steel industries) with which labour unions cannot be expected to cope. A report adopted by the Nova Scotia Joint Labour-Management Study Conference describes an intelligent and practical approach to the pre-planning and implementation of technological change, with special reference to increasing productivity at minimum social and economic cost to individual workers. Union representations and greater management awareness have led to an increase in the number of collective agreements requiring that technological change be approached along the lines indicated in the report.¹

¹ Kruger, Arthur: Human Adjustment to Industrial Conversion (Draft study prepared for Task Force on Labour Relations, Privy Council Office, Ottawa, Canada, April 1968) pp. 69-71.

G. GUARANTEED ANNUAL INCOME

162. If insufficient income is the root cause of poverty, the obvious way to eradicate poverty is to ensure everyone a "sufficient" income. Already, private and public measures have been taken to increase economic and industrial growth and, thereby, to increase the number and variety of employment opportunities. At the same time, enormous sums of money have been spent on various training and retraining programs. In addition, special assistance for persons wholly or partially unemployable by reason of physical or mental handicap has become available and can be expected to increase.

¹Automation and Worker Displacement (Part I: The Impact of Change Within A Company; Part II: The Impact of Change Within A Community) adopted by the Nova Scotia Joint Labour-Management Study Conference (Halifax, Canada: Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University, 1966)

163. The great majority of the poor, however, are employed persons. In 1961, three of every five heads of poor families were in the labour force. In Nova Scotia, a percentage of the labour force is unemployed, but how many of the employed are poor? The prevailing minimum wage scale, introduced in August 1969, is $1.25 an hour for male workers and $1.00 an hour for female workers in six zones of the province; elsewhere in the province, the wage is $1.05 an hour for male workers and 90 cents for female workers. Many minimum-wage workers find it possible to support themselves and their families in other than poverty circumstances. How unacceptable to them must sound the common appeals for wage restraint as a hedge against inflation!

164. Whether everyone is to be provided a guaranteed income is a matter for political decision. A related problem is determination of the level of income that should be maintained as a matter of public policy. A budget study and cost-benefit study are required, in order to avoid the discriminatory effects of a uniform guaranteed income; for income related to poverty is influenced by many factors, an important one being place of residence. Needed is an acceptable rationale for adoption of a universal guaranteed-income program, for moral and other objections will continue to be heard from people who are unaware of evidence that the majority of poor families helped to maintain reasonable standards of comfort, strive for greater economic self-sufficiency, rather than fall irresponsibly into further dependence upon others.¹ We submit that a program of guaranteed annual income be tried experimentally with a defined population group; for instance, with persons in need of a minimum income who, for reasons of physical or mental handicap, old age, family or social reasons, have not been related successfully to an existent program of training or rehabilitation. An important component of the recommended experimental program would be a continuing effort to relate persons to programs which would make them eventually self-supporting. In short, specific objectives of a pilot program would be aimed at chronic welfare groups and at potentially viable units.

165. It is alleged that a percentage of the poor are unwilling to work. The plight of this group, which has received relatively little of the study and probing accorded the unemployed in general, merits further attention. What factors condition their attitude? Why do they lack motivation? What is the source of their dispiritedness? In many instances, alcoholism is a complicating factor. The incidence of alcoholism is distributed evenly throughout the general population, irrespective of socio-economic category, and 80 per cent of alcoholics are gainfully employed; nevertheless, alcoholism (or drinking beyond ones means) induces poverty by its high direct costs and by disorientation of the excessive drinker from his livelihood.¹ The poverty victim who lacks personal motivation presents problems in behavioural psychology which have been recognized, so far, only in dim outline. In many instances, the children of persons lacking formal training suffer a lack of motivation to achieve beyond the parental level. Much additional research is needed to devise methods of bringing under-vocationally trained adults into meaningful and personally rewarding training programs and work situations.

¹ "Lingering beliefs that the poor generally lack motivation are being undermined by a growing range of studies and evidence to the contrary. On the basis of careful investigations, it would appear that most of the poor are ready to seize appropriate job opportunities when these are available." Economic Council of Canada, Sixth Annual Review (Ottawa, Queen's Printer, 1969) p. iii.

H. ORGANIZED AND UNORGANIZED LABOUR

166.

The average size of the Nova Scotia labour force for 1968 was 254,000; union membership in December 1968 totalled 60,000. Thus, approximately a quarter of Nova Scotia's labour force belong to a labour union. This situation presents organized labour with a challenge to bring unorganized workers to the level of the organized. In order that collective bargaining can embrace larger sectors of employee and employer groups and be extended into new problem areas, both management and labour need to organize into larger units. This step would tend to reduce piece-meal contracts and wide diversity in benefits received.²

I. CREDIT UNIONS AND COOPERATIVES

167.

Special attention should be given to the present and potential role of credit unions and cooperatives in contributing to relief of poverty in Nova Scotia. This ¹Report of the Alcoholism Research Foundation.

Halifax, Nova Scotia: Queen's Printer, 1961.

²The Swedish experience in collective bargaining is impressive. It has been a subject of recent study by labour and management in Nova Scotia, and has useful implications for their mutual benefit.

province has a long-established cooperative and credit union movement concerned traditionally not only with money supply and the production and consumption of goods and services but, as well, with fundamental development of people. The deprivation of the poor encompasses social functions far beyond those of simple consumption of goods and services, and the transformation of people and their attitudes remains essential to the eradication of poverty. Under-participation by the poor may relate to a wide range of economic educational, social, political, and cultural activities. The poor's inability to attain a meaningful role in society's organized processes of production is but one aspect of their alienation.

J. PROGRAMS OF SOCIAL EXPERIMENT

168. Canada's annual poverty bill can be reckoned in billions when account is taken of invisible productive losses reflected in lower consumer demand and other losses in the private and public sectors. In addition is the direct burden of welfare payments and administration. Total social welfare expenditures (after elimination of intergovernmental transfers) of all levels of government for the fiscal year ending nearest December 31, 1966, amounted to $2,641 million, 14.1 per cent of total consolidated government expenditure. The federal government accounted for $2,096 million, and provincial and municipal governments for $545 million. In this context, the development of a well-conceived, multi-million dollar investment in trial welfare policies and systems, in order to test the best ways of enabling people to emerge from poverty, would be sound economic reasoning. Surely the state of political sophistication among the public as well as the politicians, and the level of administrative and scientific competence, have advanced in Canada to the point where test programs of this kind can be established relatively quickly, in order to provide a basis, now lacking, for needed new welfare approaches and policies. The alternative is to continue with public decision-making based often on poorly informed argument, arising from various interest groups using popular half-truths and stereotypes developed from subjective impressions largely unrelated to objective understanding of the poor.

169. The present, expensive, welfare-assistance programs cannot be abandoned, at least until they can be replaced by something more effective. There is a forceful argument to substitute some kind of guaranteed annual income (mentioned elsewhere in this brief), lacking the stigma of charity and with positive incentives to move the alienated or "locked-in" poor into the mainstream of modern economic and social life. This brief does not undertake to delineate the optional form which a program of that kind should take. We submit, however, that there is need for immediate programs of social experiment, funded nationally, to test the validity and predict the effectiveness of various new or improved system of welfare being advocated now by competent academic, professional, and political sources. The NewStart program in Canada, and anti-poverty programs encouraged by the Ford Foundation in the United States, may serve as instructive administrative models. We submit that in selected localities across Canada, special boards (composed of representatives of the poor, organized labour, business, social scientists, professional and volunteer welfare personnel, local government, and public administrators) be entrusted to administer test funds through programs designed to attack poverty at its roots. In practice, these programs could be implemented in conjunction with existent programs of retraining, relocation, and educational enrichment.

170. To recommend further study and analysis may be regarded as a tactic of delay; if a problem is studied often enough and long enough, it is sometimes alleged, issues will blur, sense of urgency weaken, and inaction ensue. It is clear, however, that continuous and intensive study of conditions underlying poverty in Nova Scotia is essential to maintaining a dynamic approach to the problem of poverty. Poverty is not a static condition, and study is necessary to reveal more about the factors which increase or diminish the severity of its impact and how those factors can be marshalled to eradicate poverty. Seemingly worthwhile efforts in the past have been too often sporadic and uncoordinated.

171. In short, the usual arguments of lack of time and money do not hold. Any great private or public project (for instance, Churchill Falls, and flights to the moon) require months and years of planning and experimentation through model-testing and other means. Effort no less massive is required to create a serious and effective program to bring poor people into the mainstream of society and to eliminate the roots of their poverty.

K. THE TOTAL SITUATION

172. It is not easy to dissociate the poverty problem in Nova Scotia from the province's total economic situation, and causes and effects of poverty interact in a way that makes short-term uncoordinated measures bound to be ineffective. Related to problems of poverty in Nova Scotia are the much broader problems of comprehensive national and provincial economic policy.

Further attention to the Report of the Royal Commission on Taxation (The Carter Commission) 1966, and its recommendations is needed, possibly with a view to maximizing the economic growth rate by encouraging additional resources for capital investment, and further appraisal of the national protectionist policy. Economic growth is necessary but, by itself, cannot be expected to solve the poverty problem; however, if people are to be brought out of poverty, surely the total economic situation must be sound. There are parts of Canada where pockets of poverty can be dealt with by direct anti-poverty measures, without altering the whole economy, but in Nova Scotia poverty is part of a wider context of regional economic deficiency.

173.

We would endorse and urge, with special reference to Nova Scotia, application of the following considerations recommended in the Fifth Annual Review (1968) of the Economic Council of Canada (pp.131-133):

- "(1) The maintenance of high employment and strong and stable economic growth is crucial
- "(2) No effort should be spared to generate a widespread sense of public commitment to and involvement in the elimination of poverty. . . .
- "(3) Apart from general employment and growth policies, anti-poverty policies should have a strong orientation towards people. . . .
- "(4) Anti-poverty policies should also be strongly oriented towards poor people
- "(5) The achievement of a correct blend of income-maintenance policies and other anti-poverty policies that seek rather to improve people's capacity to participate more effectively in Canadian economic life is extremely important. . . .

"(6) In fighting poverty, great emphasis should be placed on economic use of available funds and skills, and on the maximum development and employment of modern techniques of policy evaluation. . . ."

174

Canada has a grievous problem of poverty, all the more reprehensible because the nation is young and wealthy. Some countries have virtually eliminated poverty, and so can we. A rigorous, comprehensive, and intelligent systems approach, employing test programs as suggested above, can in a few years, pave the way to unequivocally productive public policy and private action. A ~~systems~~ approach is a realistic and sensible alternative to the vast, hastily conceived, and improvised experimentation which eager public opinion has impelled federal and provincial governments to adopt. A preliminary requirement, in providing for genuinely concerted approaches to the solution of poverty problems, is the comprehensive identification, examination, and re-evaluation of programs, in order to identify gaps and effect improved coordination.

175.

Scientific and technological research programs are an accepted responsibility of the federal government. The support for such programs which has increased significantly during the last decade, has been both intramural and extramural in a variety of fields: agriculture, fisheries, forestry and medical research, as well as the wide range of activities of the National Research Council. Identifiable expenditures in these areas totalled, in 1967-68, about $317,500,000. An additional amount of approximately $80,000,000 was expended on research and development activities associated with the Department of National Defence.

176

In contrast, the money available from the federal treasury for support of research in the social sciences is modest. An attempt is not made in this brief to identify the components of federal expenditures in support of research which may relate to the problem of poverty, since there are difficulties of classification. For 1967-68, however, the Treasury Board lists expenditures of $24,100,000 as "Social Science Research", although no portion of the $20,400,000 Canada Council budget classified under "Culture and Recreation" is included under this heading.

177. In view of the fact that charges against the federal budget directly related to problems of poverty, in the form of welfare and other transfer payments, amount to some $800,000,000, it is reasonable to contend that increased research into the economic, social, medical, and psychological, as well as political aspects of poverty should be a matter of high national priority.¹

178. The real cost of poverty is not merely the public money siphoned to the poor but, also, the much more substantial economic loss of the potentially productive portion of the poverty community. In many instances, the democratic process in Canada has not been supported by will or know-how, or both, sufficient to enable people to rise from the morass of their poverty. We must anticipate that if great gains are to be made in eradicating poverty in Canada, the present social unrest will increase. This is part of the process of getting things done. But if we have the will, the know-how can be found.

179. Galbraith reminds us:

"There must be no doubt that the means of rescuing the victims of chronic poverty or their children—investment to conserve and to develop resources, assistance in relocation of workers, assistance to new industries, vastly improved education, training and re-training, medical and mental care, youth employment, counselling, urban recreational facilities, housing, slum abatement, and the assurance of full civic equality—will require public effort and public funds. Poverty can be made to disappear. It won't be accomplished simply by stepping up the growth rate any more than it will be accomplished by incantation or ritualistic washing of the feet. Growth is only for those who can take advantage of it."¹

¹Brief submitted by the Treasury Board, February 6, 1969, reported in Proceedings of the Special Committee on Science Policy of the Senate of Canada, (Ottawa: Queen's Printer, 1969), pp. 3715-3796.

¹Galbraith, op. cit., p. ii.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Studies and Reports

Abramson, Jane. Barriers to Population Mobility: Four Economically Lagging Areas in the Atlantic Provinces and Quebec. Ottawa-Saskatoon: Canadian Centre for Community Studies, June 1968.

Acadia University Institute. Report on a Preliminary Study of Rural Conditions in Hants County, Nova Scotia. Wolfville, Nova Scotia: 1957.

This report is a survey of the economic base of Hants County with major focus on agriculture. Recommendations for improvements and coordination of existing programs are made.

Anderson, Grace M. Town Lake Road: Urban Fringe Poverty in Nova Scotia. Halifax, Nova Scotia: Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University, 1967.

Town Lake Road is a depressed community on the fringe of Liverpool, Nova Scotia. The study, undertaken to provide information about this type of community and its problems reveals the services lacking in the area and what knowledge the people actually have of the organizations that exist to help them. The study gives a picture of a type of multiproblem family area in an older settled community, and is relevant to other such communities which appear to have no welfare problems.

Atlantic Development Board. Profiles of Education in the Atlantic Provinces. Background Study No. 5. Ottawa: Queen's Printer, 1969.

Atlantic Provinces Economic Council. Productivity, the Use of Human Resources, and the Income Gap. Fredericton, New Brunswick: July 1967.

"Relatively low productivity and under-utilization of human resources results in a personal income gap between the Atlantic Provinces and Canada as a whole. This pamphlet outlines the nature, magnitude and persistence of the gap and the reasons for it." *III

-----, Wage Rate Differentials, Atlantic Provinces and Ontario. Fredericton, New Brunswick: 1962.

Buckley, Helen and Eva Tihanyi. Canadian Policies for Rural Adjustment: A Study of the Economic Impact of ARDA, PFRA and MMRA. Economic Council of Canada Special Study No. 7. Ottawa: Queen's Printer, October 1967.

This study examines "how effectively federal programs under the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act (PFRA), the Maritime Marshland Rehabilitation Act (MMRA), and the Agricultural and Rural Development Act (ARDA) have contributed, or appear likely to contribute in the future, to the growth of rural incomes and to the reduction of interregional income disparities in Canada." p. 1.

Cairncross, A. K. Economic Development and the Atlantic Provinces. Fredericton, New Brunswick: Atlantic Provinces Research Board, February 1961.

Caldwell, George. Inverness County - Part 2 of Rural Need in Canada, 1965: A Case Report on the Problems of Families in Four Provinces. Canadian Welfare Council for ARDA. Ottawa: 1965.

This study is Part Two of a five-part study prepared by the Canadian Welfare Council for ARDA. It is the completed study of Inverness County, Nova Scotia and appears in part in the Preliminary Report of Rural Poverty in Four Selected Areas. Seventy-five families were interviewed for the study to provide a definition of poverty, sources of income, orientation to change and group relationships.

Campbell, Douglas F. Cape Breton County Welfare Services Study, 1966-67. Antigonish, Nova Scotia: St. Francis Xavier University, Extension Department, 1967.

Canada. Department of Citizenship and Immigration. Survey of the Contemporary Indians of Canada: Economic, Political and Educational Needs and Policies, Part 1, October 1966. Ottawa: Queen's Printer, 1967.

"This study was concerned with the adequate fulfilment of the proper and just aspirations of the Indians of Canada to material well being, to health and to the knowledge that they live in equality and in dignity within the greater Canadian society." *II

Canada. Department of Forestry and Rural Development. Area Rehabilitation and Development Act. Partners in Progress. Ottawa: Queen's Printer, 1966.

This publication gives a general account of what has been achieved through ARDA legislation under the first General Agreement which ended March 31, 1965. Several typical projects chosen from each province are discussed.

Canada. Department of Labour, Economics and Research Branch. Employment and Manpower Utilization in Nova Scotia, 1950 to 1960: A Joint Study Prepared by the Federal Department of Labour and the Nova Scotia Department of Labour. Ottawa: July 1964.

This study is mainly concerned with analysis of labour supply and demand. Attention is also paid to the characteristics of the population from which the labour force is drawn and the provincial economy as a whole for the decade 1950-1960.

Canadian Welfare Council. National Urban Low-Income Family Evaluation: Research Manual. Ottawa: 1967.

"In 1967, the Canadian Welfare Council undertook a longitudinal study of low-income families in five major centres: Vancouver, Winnipeg, Toronto, Montreal, and Halifax. This manual contains a summary of the original proposal and all the instruments used in carrying out the study. The project was designed to study systematically the members of our society defined as poor, in order to collect knowledge about their attitudes, beliefs, aspirations and life patterns; to determine the correlation between health and income, housing and income and health and housing; and to establish the meaning that they ascribe to social structures such as government agencies, welfare departments, and programs such as that of the manpower department. The answers obtained were to aid in policy decisions." *III

A Preliminary Report of Rural Poverty in Four Selected Areas. ARDA. Ottawa: 1965.

This report provides case studies of rural poor families in order to illustrate the meaning of poverty for those who live in it. The areas were chosen by ARDA by indices of disadvantaged areas on characteristics such as income, education, infant mortality and living conditions. The Inverness Region in Nova Scotia was chosen to represent the Maritimes.

Chernick, S. Interregional Disparities in Income. Economic Council of Canada, Staff Study No. 14. Ottawa: Queen's Printer, 1966.

Coblentz, H. S. Halifax Regional Housing Survey, 1960-1963. Halifax: 1963.

This is a detailed report on the conditions of housing in the study area and recommendations made for low-cost housing units and relocation of the lower income groups. It suggests some studies that could be undertaken, particularly to solve the social problems in relocation of families into public housing.

Connor, Desmond M. Selective Migration and Residence and Their Implications for the Development of Some Rural Atlantic Communities. Antigonish, Nova Scotia: St. Francis Xavier University, in progress.

"This study is intended as a long-range, four-phase study of the nature and impact of selective migration and residence, begun in 1961. Most of the theoretical and much of the empirical work has been completed. The author hopes to complete the data collection by the summer of 1967. The following have so far resulted from Dr. Connor's research on the subject:

- 1) Towards a Theory of Selective Migration and Residence, an unpublished Ph.D. dissertation, Cornell University, 1963;
- 2) A Theory of Selective Migration and Residence, a paper to the Canadian Political Science Association annual meeting, 1964;
- 3) Selective Migration and Residence - A Theory with Implications for Rural Resource Development, a paper to the Rural Sociological Society annual meeting, 1964.

- 4) "Selective Migration and Residence - A Theory with Implications for Practitioners", International Migration (Geneva), Vol. II, No. 2, 1964.

The author is a sociologist and agricultural economist at St. Francis Xavier University." *

Connor, Desmond and Dennis Magill. The Role of Education in Rural Development, Musquodoboit Valley. ARDA Research Project No. 3053. Ottawa: Queen's Printer, December 1965.

This is a study to investigate the existing levels of formal education and occupational skills in the Musquodoboit Rural Development Committee Area and the reasons for the substantial number of school dropouts from Grade VI onwards despite academic ability.

Connor, John. Musquodoboit River Valley Study: Socio-Economic Survey, 1964. Wolfville, Nova Scotia: Acadia University Institute, 1964.

This is a socio-economic report estimating the general resource base of the Musquodoboit Valley area and indicating possible areas for detailed study.

The Valley's population is dependent mainly on agriculture for their living and therefore are also dependent on the Musquodoboit River which tends to flood their lands. ARDA has stepped into the area to give aid within its program, and an engineering study of the river has been initiated as well as this socio-economic study to identify the resource base of the area.

Connor, John and M. V. Marshall. Three-Five Mile Plains Study: Socio-Economic Indicators. Wolfville, Nova Scotia: Acadia University Institute, 1965.

This study was commissioned by the Family and Children's Services of Hants County, in order to measure the effects of their Demonstration Project. The project is one of intensive social services intended to stimulate self-help for improvement of community conditions. The survey seeks to establish base-line values which could be compared with levels of attainment in significant sections after the project has been completed. Of the 171 households in the area, 147 or 85% responded to the survey.

Connor, John, M. V. Marshall, G. T. Rimmington, and B. A. Robinson. Yarmouth County Study. Wolfville, Nova Scotia: Acadia University Institute, September 1965.

This paper is a socio-economic assessment of Yarmouth County to establish a base on which planning for the future can be founded. It was prepared, at the request of the Yarmouth County Resources Development Council, to indicate the most pressing needs of the county and the most promising sectors for development or rehabilitation.

Cooper, Wm. M. A Proposed Program for the Nova Scotia Association for the Advancement of Colored People. Halifax, Nova Scotia: 1954.

This report, an analysis of the needs of the Negro in Nova Scotia, suggests that a remedial program be developed within the framework of existing Negro organizations in the various Negro communities.

Corporation of the City of Halifax. A Redevelopment Study of Halifax, Nova Scotia. Prepared by Gordon Stephenson. Halifax, Nova Scotia: 1957.

A Redevelopment Study of Halifax, Nova Scotia, Supplementary Volume. Prepared under the auspices of the Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University. Halifax, Nova Scotia: 1957.

In 1955 an Advisory Committee to the City Council presented to the Slum Clearance and Housing Committee a survey of a 56-block area fringing the city centre of old residential Halifax. The 1957 study is a result of redevelopment recommendations and incorporates material from the previous report into its wider terms of reference. This study includes a historical review of the city as a whole and of the study area in particular, and presents redevelopment proposals.

Foerstal, H. et al. Strait of Canso Regional Development Plan. Nova Scotia Department of Municipal Affairs. Halifax, Nova Scotia: February 1968.

"A comprehensive long range plan for future development at the Strait, one of Nova Scotia's most rapidly developing industrial areas. Projects future employment and population together with land use, housing, community facilities and environmental needs. Proposes a development strategy for adoption by 6 municipal governments to co-ordinate community development and ensure a quality environment to complement economic development action." (Quoted from CPD Projects), Halifax: Nova Scotia Department of Municipal Affairs, Community Planning Division, May 1969.

George, Roy E. Technological Redundancy in a Small Isolated Society. Montreal: McGill University, Industrial Relations Centre, 1969.

A case study of Union-management-government cooperation to deal with redundancy among stevedores in North Sydney, N. S. This study incorporates a report by Horace D. Beach, The ILA-CNR Counselling Programme for North Sydney Stevedores, as well as a summary, "Adaptation to Technological Change" by R. K. M. Crook and "A Study of Effective Manpower Relocation," by L. Leonard et al.

Harvey, Andrew S. The Economic Base of Digby County, Nova Scotia. Halifax, Nova Scotia: Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University, 1965.

The primary purpose of this study is to identify the basic sources of income and employment in Digby County.

_____. Pictou County Housing Capability. A report prepared for the Pictou County Urban Renewal Study. Halifax, Nova Scotia: Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University, September 1965.

The objective of the study is to determine in broad terms, on the basis of census data, the housing requirements of the people of Pictou County and to give some indication of their ability to purchase housing.

_____. Human Resources in North Eastern Nova Scotia. Halifax, Nova Scotia: Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University, 1968.

This study stresses the need of understanding the human resources in order to gain the maximum level of utilization as well as overall growth. Investment in human resources through education, training, health services and relocation is as important as investment in physical resources.

Hedlin, Menzies & Associates Limited. Poverty in Canada. Winnipeg, Manitoba: Manitoba Pool Elevators, 1965.

This report to the Canadian Agricultural Economics Society deals with the significance of poverty, the recognition of rural poverty, and the attack on poverty. It relates to Canada with some references to the Atlantic Provinces.

Hillis, G. B. Class and Culture in the Development of a Rural Area. Wolfville, Nova Scotia: Acadia University Institute, 1960.

This study, a Master of Arts thesis in psychology at Acadia University, describes the Gaspereau Valley and South Mountain area of Nova Scotia, contrasting the two along social class lines in terms of history, occupations, land ownership, habits, marriage and family life, and employment. Class distinctions and class sentiments are seen as having a causal relationship in the development of two disparate mountain and valley cultures. This study was based on 673 interviews; there is no tabulation of results nor presentation of data.

Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University. Automation and Worker Displacement: Part I The Impact of Change Within a Company; Part II - The Impact of Change Within a Community. Halifax, Nova Scotia: 1966.

Part II "is the second phase of a study initiated by the Nova Scotia Joint Labour-Management Study Committee. It is directly concerned with those problems of automation and worker displacement which cannot be handled internally by labour and management within an individual company. On the community level, problems of worker displacement through automation may often become merged, in terms of resolution, with more general problems of unemployment and potential future unemployment. Consequently the recommendations set forth suggest and require a frame of reference which is designed to cope with a broad range of activities." (p. 21).

The Condition of the Negroes of Halifax City, Nova Scotia. Halifax, Nova Scotia: 1962.

Information in this study was gathered by questionnaire survey of the prominent Negro areas of the city. This method, and consultations with Negro leaders, estimates the Halifax Negro population at 50 per cent above the 1951 census. The condition of the mid-city and Africville Negroes were compared as to housing, education, occupation, size of families, and average age.

A Socio-Economic Study and Recommendations: Sunnyville, Lincolnville, and Upper Big Tracadie, Guysborough County, Nova Scotia. Halifax, Nova Scotia: 1965.

This study proposes alternatives for government assistance. Entry to the social system of the area is suggested through the economic base, forestry. At present the majority of the jobs are part time. Building up the economic base will provide more jobs and better incomes. Subsidization is suggested for two particular problems, housing and education.

Kitchen, H. W. A Preliminary Study of Demographic and Socio-Economic Factors in the Atlantic Provinces and Their Relationships to Measures of Educational Output. Ottawa: Atlantic Development Board, November 6, 1967.

"The educational patterns of retention, completion and retardation are linked importantly to the social and economic patterns of the Atlantic Provinces." (From Summary)) The study stresses the consideration of the culture, values and social structure of an area when plans for intervention and possible disruption of that structure are being formulated; e.g., relocation of families. Financial assistance to an educational program is not sufficient.

Levitt, Kari. Population Movements in the Atlantic Provinces. Fredericton, New Brunswick: Atlantic Provinces Economic Council, November 1960.

"Commissioned by the Atlantic Provinces Research Board, table of Contents includes 'Historical Trends of Migration from the Atlantic Provinces,' 'The Age Distribution of Migrants,' 'Cultural Differentials Among Migrants,' 'Migration and Educational and Educational Attainment,' 'The Shift from Rural to Urban Areas,' and 'Net Migration from the Counties of the Atlantic Provinces.' A methodological note and bibliography are included." *

MacDonald, A. A. Community Resources and Dimensions of Alienation and Indian Reserves (Preliminary Report). Antigonish, Nova Scotia: St. Francis Xavier University, Extension Department, May 1967.

This study is a descriptive presentation of data collected from the seven Micmac Indian Reserves of Eastern Nova Scotia. "The primary objective of the study was to obtain the relationship between alienation from the economic, political and leadership aspects of the community and such socio-economic variables as level of income and living, aspirations for level of income and living, and expectation for government support. . . . The secondary objective was to obtain a description of the human and the institutional resource situation on the Reserves." (p. 1)

MacDonald, A. A., A. D. MacLean and W. B. Clare. Eastern Counties Co-operative Housing Survey. Antigonish, Nova Scotia: St. Francis Xavier University, Extension Department, June 1965.

"This is a study of cooperative housing in the seven Eastern counties of Nova Scotia, to determine its value in meeting housing requirements for low-income groups." *I

MacDonald, A. A. and W. B. Clare. Rural South Inverness Resource Survey. ARDA Research 22002. Antigonish, Nova Scotia: St. Francis Xavier University, Extension Department, March 1966.

"The report evaluates the region in terms of a resource model constituted by four broad categories: natural, physical, human, and institutional." *I

_____. A Survey of Human Resources and Their Rural Environment. ARDA Research 32012. Antigonish, Nova Scotia: St. Francis Xavier University, Extension Department, 1966.

Three Reports:

Report 1: North Inverness Resource Survey,
September 1966.

Report 2: Guysborough Shore Resource Survey,
December 1966.

Report 3: Socio-Economic Comparison Between an Offshore Fishing Community and Inshore Fishing Community . To be completed January 31, 1967.

These reports evaluate each region in terms of a resource model consisting of four broad resource categories: natural, physical, human, and institutional. *I

Maclean, Donald F. and Thomas M. Jones. Feasibility Study of Centres for Residential Adult Education in the Maritime Provinces. Halifax, Nova Scotia: Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University, 1965.

This study establishes the feasibility of creating centres for residential adult education in the Maritime Provinces; defines residential adult education and states advantages; indicates uses, including various types of retraining programs; and presents recommendations.

Majury, Ernst. An Abridgement of the Report of a Survey of Child Welfare Services in Nova Scotia and Recommendations. Halifax, Nova Scotia: Department of Public Welfare, October 1964.

"This survey report suggests joint services and partnership between the municipality and the children's aid societies in policy and finance. It sees the Province in a major role of responsibility and in leadership for recruitment in the social work field. Recommendations are intended to span a period for the next fifteen to twenty years." *

Nova Scotia, Department of Municipal Affairs. Municipality of Shelburne Housing Study. Halifax, Nova Scotia: October 1967.

This study is the result of a housing shortage in Shelburne municipality caused by industrial development. Accommodations were needed for various income groups, and the Community Planning Division of the Nova Scotia Department of Municipal Affairs were requested to investigate the feasibility of developing, through provincial and federal housing legislation, serviced lots and housing units.

Oliver, W. P. The Advancement of Negroes in Nova Scotia. Halifax, Nova Scotia: Nova Scotia Department of Education, Adult Division, 1949.

This paper evaluates the factors relating to the Nova Scotia Department of Education program of adult education among Negroes, and suggests supplements to the existing programs in the twelve Negro communities.

_____. Nova Scotia Negro Communities. Halifax, Nova Scotia: Nova Scotia Department of Education, Adult Division, March 1964.

This is a nine-page statement about the Negro communities in Nova Scotia under the following headings: (1) location, (2) population, (3) social resources, (4) educational facilities, (5) present employment status and opportunities, and (6) trends.

Pepin, Pierre-Yves. Life and Poverty in the Maritimes. ARDA Research Project 15002. Ottawa: 1968.

This is a study of five Maritime counties, including Inverness and Digby/Yarmouth in Nova Scotia, chosen as the most typical of the depressed areas in the Maritime Provinces. The people's way of life and adaptation to their economic structure were studied by interview. The study undertook to evaluate the ideas of comfort and poverty in typical counties in the Maritimes, to define depressed areas, and to discover the common factors in the depressed areas surveyed.

Renouf, Harold. The Financial Situation of Certain Depressed Municipalities: Westville, Dominion, New Waterford. Halifax, Nova Scotia: Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University, 1964.

This study provides information for dealing with certain municipalities depressed by loss of revenue or lack of revenue from industrial assessment. Findings show that financial problems of these towns are due not to extravagance or mismanagement, but to the absence of a tax base sufficient to provide the necessary services.

Rimington, Gerald T. The Resources of the Shubenacadie - Stewiacke Area of Nova Scotia. Wolfville, Nova Scotia: Acadia University Institute, October, 1966.

This socio-economic survey includes areas within two municipalities, Shubenacadie and Stewiacke, Nova Scotia. A household survey of six sample communities established living standards and income. The study presents a basis for future development plans.

Schafer, Paul and Robert Comeau. Economic Survey of the Kejimikujik Park Area in Nova Scotia. Ottawa: Department of Northern Affairs and Natural Resources, 1964.

This study was completed for the Canadian Department of Northern Affairs and Natural Resources, after a decision to establish a National Park in the Kejimikujik Lake area. It studies the economic base of the area and the economic implications of changes that might be caused by a park.

Shand, Gwendolyn V. Adult Education Among the Negroes of Nova Scotia. Reprinted from Journal of Education, Nova Scotia Department of Education, Halifax, Nova Scotia: Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University, 1961.

This study discusses the progress, since 1946, of adult education among Negroes in Nova Scotia. The aid programs existing in the communities of New Road, East Preston and Hammon Plains have progressed to the point where the communities are now able to appoint their own leaders to solve their own problems instead of relying completely upon the Province. The study indicates that the majority of the Negro population is unaware of services available to them.

Walinsky, L. J. Evaluation of Economic Research Relating to the Atlantic Region. Fredericton, New Brunswick: Atlantic Provinces Research Board, June 1967.

The basis of this report is examination of economic research relating to the Atlantic Provinces for 1956-1966. Agreement and disagreement in these works were indicated as well as areas of further economic research.

Wood, K. Scott. Profile of Poverty in Nova Scotia. Halifax, Nova Scotia: Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University, 1965.

This study analyses poverty according to an ARDA definition using income levels. Using the ARDA guidelines, the poverty group was divided along the following lines; urban, rural non-farm, and rural farm families; size of family; broken homes; male or female family head; age, education and occupation of family head; and geographical location.

Wood, K. Scott and Harold Verge. The Problems of Certain Cape Breton Communities. Halifax, Nova Scotia: Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University, 1966.

This is a sequel to the study by Harold Renouf of the financial problems of New Waterford, Dominion and Westville, Nova Scotia. It deals with the economic and social aspects of Dominion and New Waterford and adjustments necessary with the decline of such key industries as coal mining and steel.

Conference Papers and Briefs

Anselm, Sister M. Rehabilitation, Halifax, Nova Scotia. Nova Scotia Department of Public Health and Welfare, 1965.

This paper discusses the factors to be considered in applying social measures to the needs of specific persons, families and communities.

Atlantic Development Board. The Problem of Declining Communities. Ottawa: 1965.

This paper was prepared by Bernard Sufrin for the Federal-Provincial Conference on Poverty and Opportunity, December 7-10, 1965.

_____. Regional Economic Planning. Ottawa: 1965.

This is a brief prepared for the Federal-Provincial Conference on Poverty and Opportunity. It discusses the conflicts of regional planning with federal planning and suggests coordination of government and private agencies.

Black Man in Nova Scotia. Teach-In Report, January 24-25, 1969, Chairman: Gordon Earle. St. Francis Xavier University, Antigonish, Nova Scotia, 1969.

The reported Teach-In was sponsored by the X-Project, a group of 100 students at St. Francis Xavier University, engaged in social action with local minority groups. The purpose of the Teach-In was to provide a platform for Black people to discuss their problems and to inform students of a pressing social problem in Nova Scotia. The speakers were: Dr. W. P. Oliver; "Rocky" Jones; Henry Bourgeois, Director of the Halifax Neighbourhood Centre; Donald Oliver, Halifax lawyer; Joseph Drummond, President, N.S.A.A.C.P.; and Leonard O'Neil, member of Guysborough A.R.D.A. Committee.

Boone, Terrance. Semi-Annual Report of Community Development on Indian Reserves, Antigonish, Nova Scotia: St. Francis Xavier University, Extension Department, September 30, 1965.

Canada Department of National Health and Welfare. Employability of the Individual: 1. Health, paper for the Federal-Provincial Conference on Poverty and Opportunity, Ottawa: December 7-10, 1965.

This paper examines the role of local, provincial and federal health programs in relation to the development and maintenance of employability in low-income families. Mention is made of the total range of health services including hospital care, medical care, and rehabilitative care, with emphasis on their accessibility to deprived elements of the population. Included also is a review of the relationship between poverty and disease, and of health expenditures and utilization of services by low-income groups.

• Financing of Personal Health Care for Recipients of Public Assistance in Nova Scotia. 1956-57 to 1963-64. Memorandum, Ottawa: June 1965.

• A Program for the Elimination of Poverty in the Atlantic Provinces, a brief by the Ministers of Welfare for the Atlantic Provinces, August 1969.

This brief is a discussion of the depressed condition in the Atlantic Provinces. The tax base does not support the programs and services necessary to keep the people off welfare. The brief suggests a revision of the tax-sharing agreement because present arrangement does not help enough, considering the depressed state of the Atlantic Region.

Canada, Privy Council. Special Planning Secretariat. Meeting Poverty. Papers from the Federal-Provincial Conference on Poverty and Opportunity, December 1965. Ottawa: 1966.

1. One Attack on Poverty - Family Planning Department
2. The Dimensions of Poverty in Canada - R. A. Jenness.
3. Regional Economic Planning - Atlantic Development Board
4. Profile of Poverty in Canada: Summary - Special Planning Secretariat.

These selected papers are part of a series of 16 papers on poverty in Canada issued by the Special

Special Senate Committee

Planning Secretariat to encourage better understanding of poverty in Canada and of measures to eliminate it.

_____ . Profile of Poverty in Canada. Ottawa: November 1965.

This is a series of papers prepared for the Federal-Provincial Conference on Poverty and Opportunity, December 7-10, 1965, by members of the Special Planning Secretariat. Subjects covered: - Employment; Education; Aged; Family Size; Disability; Health; Housing; Attitudes; Community Factors.

Dymond, W. R. "Our Changing Labour Force - Canada and the Atlantic Provinces", Dalhousie Labour Institute for the Atlantic Provinces, May 27-31, 1963. Halifax, Nova Scotia: Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University, 1963.

This paper examines the pattern of economic, technological and social changes on manpower requirements, and the causes and consequences of unemployment.*

Halifax Welfare Council. Brief Submitted to the Nova Scotia Minimum Wage Board by the Mayor's Special Committee. Halifax, Nova Scotia: November 1964.

Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University, "Human Rights Projects and Activities," Human Rights Conference, December 9, 1965, Halifax: 1966.

This paper is a compilation of comments received from 21 reporting organizations engaged in activities concerned with Human Rights in Nova Scotia.

_____ . Maritime Conference on Residential Adult Education, Halifax, Nova Scotia: 1966.

The Conference stressed the need of establishing adult education centres in order to improve employability, to help the culturally deprived, and to meet the adult education need, of the respective areas in which the centres are situated.

Jenness, R. A. The Dimensions of Poverty in Canada: Some Preliminary Observations. Vancouver: University of British Columbia, February 1965.

"Poverty is a relative concept, it has persons, environmental and time dimensions." The writer posits for alternative methods of identifying the low-income groups (a) Lorenz curves and proportionate earnings (b) budgetary studies. (c) ratios of expenditure to income and (d) institutional criteria. He finds that regardless of the techniques employed the minimum income need for a family of four in an urban environment is $2,600-$3,400; for 2 adults, $2,000 to $3,000; and for a single person about $1,500 to $1,800; and applying the American ratio, farm families would require 80 percent of the urban level. Major statistical difficulties, e.g., problems of aggregation, definitional problems and gaps in data and secular change over time are discussed.

Lang, R. E. "The State of Community Planning in Nova Scotia," Nova Scotia Community Planning Conference, Halifax, Nova Scotia: Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University, 1965.

This paper discusses the need for community planning, the necessity of training planners, and the importance of establishing Regional Planning Commissions in co-ordinating development agencies.

Lang, R. E. and H. Foerstaal. Housing and Poverty in Nova Scotia. Nova Scotia Department of Public Health and Welfare, Halifax, Nova Scotia: 1965.

This paper examines the dimensions of poverty in Nova Scotia and analyzes poverty in terms of the physical and social environment, with particular reference to housing. Existing programs are outlined and new solutions are advanced as part of a larger anti-poverty campaign.

Miller, G. P. "Public Housing in Nova Scotia," Nova Scotia Community Planning Conference. Halifax, Nova Scotia: Institute of Public Affairs, Dalhousie University, 1966.

This paper discusses the process preparatory to undertaking a public housing project. There are four categories of housing consumer, according to income group; public housing is needed for the two groups below the $3,000 level. Housing improvements are seen as one means of breaking the poverty cycle by providing an improved environment for family life.

Nova Scotia Association for the Advancement of Coloured People, Action Against Poverty. Halifax, Nova Scotia: Nova Scotia Department of Public Health and Welfare, 1965.

This action program comprises four basic projects in which, it is suggested, participants should be involved from the planning stage; an education centre, a counselling centre, a youth program, and a training program.

Nova Scotia, Department of Public Welfare, "Years of Activity, Days of Leisure," the proceedings of the Nova Scotia Conference on Aging, Halifax, Nova Scotia: March 12-15, 1967.

This statement indicates that the aging are not a homogeneous group and that, therefore, programs (whether for housing, leisure-time activities, or other needs) should be sensitive to differences. There are dangers inherent in isolation and segregation of the aging, who should be encouraged to participate in programs designed for their benefit.

Papers prepared for the Federal-Provincial Conference on Poverty and Opportunity, Ottawa, December 7-10, 1965. Halifax, Nova Scotia: 1965.

This is a collection of papers gathered by the Department for the Conference on Poverty:

1. K. Scott Wood - Profile of Poverty in Nova Scotia.
2. Sister M. Anselm - Rehabilitation.
3. R. E. Lang and H. Foerstal - Housing and Poverty in Nova Scotia.
4. NSAACP - Action Against Poverty.
5. Department of Labour and Department of Education - Services.
6. Department of Trade and Industry - Services.

Weeks, Dr. E. P. Submission to the Senate Committee on Poverty.
Ottawa: Atlantic Development Board, 1969.

Periodicals

Baetz, Reuben C. "The Causes of Poverty," Canadian Labour.
Vol. 14, No. 7-8, July-August, 1969, pp. 18-19, 33-34.

This article presents excerpts from an address given by the author, Executive Director of the Canadian Welfare Council, to the 1969 Education Conference of the Ontario Federation of Labour, held in Niagara Falls, February 15-16, 1969. Before ours will be a "just society", the author suggests, poverty must be alleviated and its causes identified. Mr. Baetz identifies six causes: life cycle poverty, depressed area poverty, long term dependency, inner city poverty and the "culture" of poverty.

Bernard, M. "For Negroes in Halifax: Black Power vs Ping Pong," Maclean's. 57:49, 51-2, January 1967.

Canada, Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Annual Report, 1965-66. Ottawa: Queen's Printer, 1966.

_____. Indian Affairs: Facts and Figures, Ottawa: Queen's Printer: February 1966 and September 1967.

Clark, A. "Blackman et al.," Maclean's, 76: 18, 55-8, Toronto: April 20, 1963.

Connor, Desmond M. "Rural Anti-Poverty Policy for the Future," Canadian Journal of Agricultural Economics, Vol. XVI, No. 3, 1968, pp. 51-60.

This article outlines ten elements in a more effective rural anti-poverty policy for Canada. Focus is on an approach with channels for rapid and self-correcting feedback so that policies and programs may be modified to meet functional needs. An appendix lists the 160 policy suggestions obtained at the Canadian Agricultural Economics Society annual meeting, June 25, 1968.

_____. "Training for the Poverty War," Canadian Welfare, 43:3, May-June 1967, pp. 20-24.

The author outlines and evaluates the method employed in training social development officers to handle a program of community development in rural Nova Scotia communities.

Cram, J. S. "Our Forgotten Citizens: Blueprint for a Better Deal," Family Herald, No. 13, Toronto, July 18, 1968, pp.28-29.

The article discusses the Indian situation in terms of health, education, employment, housing, and the conditions under which Indians still suffer. The program of the Indian-Eskimo Association is outlined and its recommendations for complete change of the machinery for dealing with native peoples in Canada.

Crane, David. "Study Shows Atlantic Area Students' Failure Drop-out Rate Highest," The Globe and Mail, Toronto, August 28, 1969.

This article discusses the content of a recently released ADB study on education. It alleged a deplorable condition in all aspects of education in the Atlantic Provinces, and observes that "education problems in the Atlantic Provinces are rooted in the way of life."

Davis, Morris. "Results of Personality Tests Given to Negroes in the Northern and Southern United States and in Halifax, Canada," Phylon: Atlanta University Review of Race and Culture, 1965.

This article is a repeat of B. Karon's The Negro Personality, showing similarity between Canadian and northern United States Negro scores on the T.A.T. and their dissimilarity to scores of southern United States Negroes. The article indicates also, the similarities of scores of Halifax respondents across classes and their differences, on denial of aggression from response patterns in either the northern or southern United States."

The author, formerly of Dalhousie University, Halifax, Nova Scotia, is a political scientist at Tulane University, New Orleans.

Dexter, Susan. "Black Ghetto that Fears Integration," Maclean's, 78:16, 36-8, Toronto, July 24, 1965.

This is a report of what happened in Africville in the three years since Alan Borovoy, an Ontario lawyer, attempted to organize civil rights activity in Halifax.

Doyle, R. V. "Facing Community Poverty: The Halifax Neighbourhood Centre," Canadian Welfare Magazine, 43:30-3, September - October 1967.

This is a report on the Halifax Neighbourhood Centre Project, begun in 1965, which aims to assist neighbourhood residents in the overcoming of social inequalities.

Doyle, Robert V. "The Poor in Canadian Cities," The Bulletin of Catholic Charities Council of Canada, 2, July 1967, pp. 10-14.

The associate director of the Halifax Welfare Council presents a thumbnail sketch of poverty, under the headings: the pattern of poverty; what does it mean to be really poor; family pattern of the poor; the learning environment of the poor; and the problem of change.*

Economic Council of Canada, Annual Reviews, Ottawa: Queen's Printer.

Second Annual Review, 1965 - Chapter 5 - Regional Growth and Disparities.

Third Annual Review, 1966 - Chapter 7 - Economic Expansion and Regional Development.

Fifth Annual Review, 1968 - Chapter 7 - Regional Aspects of Federal Economic Policies.

Sixth Annual Review, 1968 - Chapter 8 - Trends and Regional Differences in Education.

Fraser, Sylvia. "The Slow and Welcome Death of Africville," Star Weekly, Toronto, January 1, 1966, pp. 2-8.

Halifax Neighbourhood Centre: Second Year Report, November 1967 to October 1968.

The report contains evaluations of programs started by the Centre in the past two years:

- Canada Manpower Centre
- Day Care Centre
- Adult Education
- Housing
- Housekeeping Classes
- National Film Board
- Clergy
- Uniacke Community Association
- Maritime School of Social Work
- Youth Programme
- Legal Aid
- Medical Services

Hinds, Barbara. "Black Power: Has Halifax Found the Answer?" Atlantic Advocate, 59: Fredericton, N. B. January 1969, pp. 9-15.

This article is an account of events before and during a Human Rights Conference held in Halifax, Nova Scotia, on December 6 and 7, 1968.

Laidlaw, A. F. "We need a New Concept of Housing," The Maritime Co-Operator, Vol. 33, Antigonish, Nova Scotia, March 1, 1965.

Leighton, Alexander H. "Poverty and Social Change," Scientific American, Vol. 212, May 1965, pp. 21-7.

This is a sociological study of the Digby, Nova Scotia, area which establishes a high correlation between the conditions of life in a depressed rural community and the prevalence of psychiatric disorders. The study encompasses a ten-year period (1952-1962); changes in "socio-cultural integration/disintegration" were recorded.

Oliver, W. P. "The Negro in Nova Scotia," Journal of Education, December 1949.

This paper is a historical description of the Negro settlement in Nova Scotia and its development from silence to demand for recognition as a part of society and the right to better education, housing, and employment.

Parks, Arthur & F. R. Drummie. "The Atlantic Provinces Research Board," Canadian Public Administration, VIII: 1, March 1965, pp. 1-7.

The A.P.R.B. was given two responsibilities: a) to coordinate economic research conducted by the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council, by universities in the Atlantic region, and by other bodies; b) to initiate research projects which "in the opinion of the Board and with approval of the provincial governments should be carried out and are not undertaken elsewhere."

Paton, A.I. "The Regional Approach in Pictou County, Nova Scotia," Community Planning Review, 17:1, Spring 1967, pp.12-15.

This study outlines events which lead to the adoption of a plan for regional development by six independent municipalities and the establishment of Pictou County Regional Urban Renewal Agency to direct it."*II

Poetschke, L. E. "Regional Planning for Depressed Rural Areas: the Canadian Experience," Canadian Journal of Agricultural Economics, Vol. 16: No. 1.

Rawlyk, G. A. "The Guysborough Negroes - A Study in Isolation," The Dalhousie Review, Dalhousie University, Halifax, Nova Scotia, Spring 1968.

Stabler, Edna. "Would You Change the Lives of These People," Maclean's, Toronto, May 12, 1956.

This article describes a Negro community, New Road, Halifax County, Nova Scotia, where the author found untrue many of the reported stories about the community.

Stewart, Walter. "Can Union Save the Maritimes?" Maclean's, Toronto, August 1969, pp. 21-26.

The author depicts the life of three Maritimers; a farmer, a fisherman, and a coal miner; and from their stories of subsistence builds an argument for Maritime Union.

Van Steen, M. "Nova Scotia: Model in Race Relations," Saturday Night. Toronto, Vol. 12, 1959.

Winks, Robin W. "Negroes in the Maritimes," The Dalhousie Review, Dalhousie University, Halifax, Nova Scotia, 1968.

Theses

Beaton, Sarah M. "Effects of Relocation". Thesis, Maritime School of Social Work, Halifax, Nova Scotia, 1969.

This study investigates the feelings of ten families who were relocated from Africville between 1964 and 1966. The relocation involved approximately 80 families and was based on the welfare model. The study did not attempt to find answers, but rather to raise questions concerning whether the method of relocation was considered successful by the relocatees.

- Brookbank, C. R. "Afro-Canadian Communities in Halifax, Nova Scotia". Thesis, University of Toronto, Toronto, July 1949.

This thesis comprises a preliminary sociological survey of Nova Scotia in general and Halifax County in particular. It includes references to geographical and cultural factors; social organization; attitudes, values and behaviour; and social change.

- Campbell, Carol. "Economic Implications of Mothers' Allowance, in the Family Where the Father is Disabled". Thesis, Maritime School of Social Work, Halifax, Nova Scotia, 1958.

This thesis is presented primarily by statistical analysis supplemented by case illustrations. The manner in which these families meet basic needs of food, clothing, and shelter are considered, as well as family debts, and the provision made for extras. The Mothers' Allowance is examined along with the various pensions and other salaries which constitute the total family income of the eighty cases studied.

- Conlogue, Mary B. "Socio-Economic Status and Emotional Disturbances in Children". Thesis, Maritime School of Social Work, Halifax, Nova Scotia, 1963.

This study found a high correlation between material deprivation and acting-out aggressive behaviour.

- Dolin, Martin M. "The Halifax Slum". Thesis, Maritime School of Social Work, Halifax, Nova Scotia, 1968.

This study concerns itself with a comparative typology of Halifax slum dwellers in contrast with the residents of public housing and with a middle-class control group.

- Frew, Catherine. "The Health of Colored Families in Halifax". Thesis, Maritime School of Social Work, Halifax, Nova Scotia, 1959.

This thesis is a statistical analysis, with case illustrations, of the health and diet of the colored people against a background of culture, income, and living conditions. The findings indicate that the health of the colored group studied varies little from that of the general Canadian population but is influenced by social and economic factors of income and living conditions.

- Gorligh, Paul B. "Employment or Public Assistance for Families Headed by Women". Thesis, Maritime School of Social Work, Halifax, Nova Scotia, 1956.

- Johnston, Michael K. "A Study of Municipal Welfare and Its Contributions to the Phenomenon of Generation to Generation Dependency on Such Assistance". Thesis, Maritime School of Social Work, Halifax, Nova Scotia, 1968.

This study investigates the influence of municipal welfare, as it is applied in Nova Scotia, on the mobility trends of people receiving assistance. The findings establish that welfare dependency is transmitted from generation to generation.

MacDougall, Bernard. "A Study of the Influence of Urban Relocation on Displaced Residents, with Particular Respect to the Africville Relocation". Thesis, Maritime School of Social Work, Halifax, Nova Scotia, 1969.

This study examines the changes which occur in people's lives as a result of urban relocation.

MacLennon, Phyllis Melvina. "A Study of the Coloured Community". Thesis, Maritime School of Social Work, Halifax, Nova Scotia, 1959.

This thesis is a case study analysis, with statistical illustrations, of the attitudes of the people toward their neighbourhood and neighbours. Education, family disorganization, and employment are considered against a background of culture and present living conditions.

Matthews, George H. "Employment of the Colored Man in Halifax". Thesis, Maritime School of Social Work, Halifax, Nova Scotia, 1959.

This thesis is a study of colored men over the age of 16 and not attending public school, with reference to educational level, types of employment, unemployment, and employment aspirations.

Prevatt, Dianne. "Self Initiation in Public Housing". Thesis, Maritime School of Social Work, Halifax, Nova Scotia, 1969.

This thesis investigates whether there is a change in the attitudes or basic orientations of slum residents when they are moved into public housing; or whether the slum attitudes are perpetuated in public housing. It was found that since the physical conditions are only part of an interrelated culture of the slum, the change in physical surroundings was inadequate to change attitudes.

Quigg, Richard Alan. "Social Services in Public Housing". Thesis, Maritime School of Social Work, Halifax, Nova Scotia, 1969.

This thesis examines two questions: What social services should be offered directly to public housing residents? Who is responsible for providing these social services in Halifax, Nova Scotia?

Reichwein, Baldwin Peter. "A Study of a Municipal Welfare Population." Thesis, Maritime School of Social Work, Halifax, Nova Scotia, 1969.

Russell, Christeen A. "Child Welfare Problems in the Colored Community". Thesis, Maritime School of Social Work, Halifax, Nova Scotia, 1961.

This thesis focuses on selected child-welfare problems. The hypothesis is that colored residents of Halifax City have the same range of child welfare problems as have the white residents, but that they tend to limit their use of child caring agencies to requesting concrete services when their attempts to find a solution with friends and relatives fail.

Ross, Jean B. "Negroes of Halifax". Thesis, Maritime School of Social Work, Halifax, Nova Scotia, 1959.

Sheridan, Marion. "Housing as a Factor in the Life of the Colored Family". Thesis, Maritime School of Social Work, Halifax, Nova Scotia, 1959.

The writer evaluated the housing conditions in relation to the type and quality of housing, composition of households, economic aspects, and pathology within the family life.

Sutherland, Betty-Ann. "A Study of the Relationship Between Relocation from Physically Inadequate Housing Conditions to Public Housing and Social Behaviour Patterns." Thesis, Maritime School of Social Work, Halifax, Nova Scotia, 1968.

This study found insignificant the difference in school conduct between a group of children living in public housing and a group recently relocated from substandard housing to public housing. A higher proportion of the group originally in public housing passed in school and had a better attendance record.

Thompson, Dianne E. "The Pre-School for the Culturally Deprived Child". Thesis, Maritime School of Social Work, Halifax, Nova Scotia, 1967.

This study investigates the advantages of a pre-school enrichment program for culturally deprived children, as measured by performance on intelligence tests. Results show that children who attended the pre-school had an average increase in I.Q. of 11.0 points and that children not attending had a mean loss of .4 points following their first year in public school.

Thompson, Ruth Irene. "A Study of the Relationship between Poverty and Chronic Illness." Thesis, Maritime School of Social Work, Halifax, Nova Scotia, 1966.

This thesis investigates the relationship between poverty and chronic illness in terms of the stress factors in poverty which may cause, perpetuate, and aggravate chronic illness. It was found that there is a significant relationship between poverty and chronic illness: 46.9% of chronically ill patients are in the poverty group as compared with 8.2% of the acutely ill patients. It was impossible to tell, however, whether the patients were ill because they were poor, or poor because they were ill.

Tyszko, Sister Lydia. "Family Life and Family Stability of Negro Families in Halifax". Thesis, Maritime School of Social Work, Halifax, Nova Scotia, 1959.

The focus of this thesis is upon family interrelationships. The hypothesis is that there are racial attitudes and pressures which affect family life and influence family stability of the Negro families living on Maynard and Creighton Streets, Halifax, Nova Scotia.

Williams, Eugene Edward. "Nova Scotia Association for the Advancement of Colored People". Thesis, Maritime School of Social Work, Halifax, Nova Scotia, 1969.

This study is an historical review of the Association from its inception in 1945 to the present. Specific attention is given to the Association's role in education.

Yeadon, Marjorie. "Stress of Adolescence in a Colored Community". Thesis, Maritime School of Social Work, Halifax, Nova Scotia, 1959.

This thesis focuses on the symptoms of stress as seen in the behaviour of ninety adolescents in social, recreational, and educational areas, with reference to family structure, socio-economic conditions of the family, participation in clubs and groups of church and neighbourhood, participation in academic and social life of school. It was found that racial discrimination and cultural pressures increase the stress of adolescence.

Books and Other

Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. The Way of the Indian. Ottawa: 1961.

This booklet contains the edited transcript of thirteen half-hour documentary programs on the Indians of Canada. Program participants were sociologists, journalists, public officials and Indian representatives from across the country. Chief Charles Francis, a Micmac from Eskasoni, represented Nova Scotia.

Canadian Welfare Council. Poverty: An Annotated Bibliography and References, by Freda L. Paltiel. Ottawa, 1966.

_____. Poverty: Supplement I, by Agnes Woodward. Ottawa, March 1967.

_____. Poverty: Supplement II, by Agnes Woodward. Ottawa, October 1967.

_____. Poverty: Supplement III, by Agnes Woodward. Ottawa, April 1968.

Graham, John F. Fiscal Adjustment and Economic Development: A Case Study of Nova Scotia. Toronto: University of Toronto Press, 1963.

This book sets forth general principles of provincial-municipal fiscal adjustment and applies them to Nova Scotia's economic development problems.

Nova Scotia. Department of Public Health and Welfare. Nova Scotia Welfare Services.

This is a directory of welfare services, agencies, societies, and organizations in Nova Scotia. It discusses, also, the development of various welfare programs and provides comparative growth statistics.

Schlesinger, Benjamin. Poverty in Canada and the United States: Overview and Annotated Bibliography. Toronto: University of Toronto Press, 1966.

APPENDIX "B"

Brief to the Special Senate Committee on Poverty Prepared by the 11-A Class, Sydney Academy, and Submitted by:

William Neil MacKenzie,
11-A History Teacher;
Greg O'Neill,
Student Chairman.

11-A Brief

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Main Brief	1.192
Appendix Section	1.198
Dissent Section	1.203
Recommendations	1.207

INTRODUCTION

Forty-one people, all with different ideas working on a brief is indeed a very difficult proposition. The task is made all the harder because no one involved has had any experiences with Senate hearings.

If all forty-one of us were to submit a brief individually each one would be different. This paper will attempt to fuse together the important principles of what the class has submitted.

Cape Breton—the island of scenic wonder, the picturesque Cabot Trail and the restored Fortress of Louisbourg, oozing with Canadian history, ready to feed the imagination. Cape Breton is all this and more.

Although the tourist industry is important, it is seasonal and of minor importance. The tangerine orange dust rising from the steel city of Sydney rivals the beauty of the autumn foliage—in quantity.

The only unpleasantness the leaves create is the chore of raking your yard, which is easily replaced by the joy they bring.

The ore dust erodes the paint jobs of automobiles and reddens the housewife's sparkling wash hung on the line to dry. Although it adds to the beauty of the sunset it is not worth the inconvenience it causes.

As in all cities the disparity from the obvious rich and the obvious poor is quite evident. Why does the poor child, playing while his alcoholic mother or father sleeps off his drunken stupor, have little or no other choice but to remain in the same niche in life carved out by his parents or grandparents?

Why does the child drop out of school at the age of sixteen with little or no education? Why does he end up the same as his parents? Why doesn't he do something about it?

It is easy for us, from our comfortable position of the "haves" in the middle class to criticize the lack of personal ambition in the "have-nots". But if we were in the same position what would our reaction be? How would we conduct ourselves? Would we continue on in the same road of life?

And what about the not so poor? The families that are struggling along on a bare subsistence level. To us if they have the status symbols of our day, the television, the car etc., they might not seem poor. But do we know what they are doing without to obtain the items that allow them to identify with the middle class.

But material poverty is not the only type. Cultural poverty does not respect classes. It is found in the low, middle and upper classes. In the upper or middle strata of society it is spiritual poverty that often makes us complacent about the lower portion and lackadaisical in acting.

All Canadians should be developed spiritually. A great portion of their life is wasted if they do not develop their aesthetic values.

It is the responsibility of the middle class to see the lot of these people improved. The path may be strewn with thorns and stoned with no clear destination in sight but it is one that must be travelled. We must help these people.

Poverty is almost impossible to define. The definition depends whether you speak of material or cultural poverty, spiritual or physical poverty.

However, we believe that poverty is the cause and reason why an individual is poor. This contains a large scope of ideas. Is a person poor because of a lack of adequate education or no place to use his skills?

Can people function and live in substandard housing conditions? What is the government doing to help the aged, the ill, and the widowed? Are their programs really efficient and as effective as they must be?

Are the existing labour laws to the workers to their advantage or disadvantage?

Certainly all these questions must be answered—not in theory but in practice. If getting ahead in the world is the creed of the North American of today, our poor in Canada are not exempt from this desire. They must be helped to advance.

In this brief we are trying to delve into the problems of the poor and to offer recommendations for a solution.

Remember! The youth of today are concerned, if not why would we attempt such a large undertaking in such a short period of time. We play a major role in the country today and we are the adults of tomorrow.

The eleven-A class would like to acknowledge the various government agencies who have forwarded information concerning this brief. We feel also that the individuals who took time out to talk to us should be thanked for their kindness.

There were, however, several agencies who either sent no information or sent it too late to be useful.

resources are unquestionably the most precious."

It is our belief that through education much of Canada's unutilized human resources can become a productive element of our society. As it exists today, our system of education consists mainly of primary, secondary and high schooling with a divergence at this point for either university or technical training. The basic structure is sound, but the fabric does not suit the climate or temperament of youth today.

The present school structure is shouldered by teachers. Teachers are perhaps the most important profession in our society, since it is their responsibility to discover and utilize the human resources which run the country. In poorer families, the teachers are not assisted in these duties by parents, who have enough troubles of their own. They may even be detrimental by instilling backward notions into the children. Unfortunately many teachers are not capable of doing so. As a student, who has been taught by more than twenty different ones, I feel that there is a serious shortage of responsible teachers.

At the present time, there are teachers within the system with Normal College education. Here are people, themselves only two or three years out of high school, running our learning institutions.¹ Such young, uneducated persons with narrow outlooks on life are harmful rather than useful to the school system.

A child from a poor family is absorbing by osmosis the unhealthy environment in which he lives. His world is a restricted one. It is essential that as a child his outlook is broadened by tours, games, and understanding teachers in whom the student can confide.²

Invariably the Normal School teachers are left waiting for children in primary school who suffer in the end. But how can they be expected to perform these essential tasks?

For the most part, the situation degenerates in secondary school. At this point, the work load at school increases considerably. During adolescence the students require understanding from their teachers, especially if they do not receive this at home. In poorer families, there is aggravation due to lack of space where a person can concentrate and work.

POVERTY

By:

Jamie Allen	Ruth MacDonald
Stan Ardelli	Kathy MacKillop
Jeff Burchill	Blair MacKinnon
Judy Canning	Fred MacLeod
Cheryl Conrad	Dave MacNeill
Bonnie Creaser	Allan MacPhee
Richard Crooks	Gary MacPherson
Beverly Davis	Wayne MacVicar
Arlene Dubinsky	Colin Mathieson
Anne Marie Gardiner	Nanci Monroe
Tish Graham	David Nagy
Greg Hart	Lynn O'Brian
Richard Haysom	Greg O'Neill
Marguerite Hearn	Christine Penny
Shirley Henderson	Debby Reid
Dave Johnston	Liamus Roach
Tony Kolanko	Leonard Siller
George Lohnes	Marie Smith
Faith MacDonald	Sheila Spencer
Marie MacDonald	Avil Watson
Patsy MacDonald

I. EDUCATION

"A country depleted of its natural resources soon becomes a wilderness, a waste. But of all a nation's resources, its human

¹ See Appendix A:1

² See Appendix A:2

High school level learning has the greatest influence on a young adult. The atmosphere at school is one of vitality, but is this vitality being channelled in the right direction? In many cases I think not. The impersonality of teachers, including many who teach me, alienates students from their work. For fifteen or so years teachers are the link between a student and the outside world, yet these teachers introduce a world straight from textbooks. Thus the student faces life alone and ends in frustration.³

But where does all this lead? Firstly, Normal College education should not be considered adequate. Every teacher must have at least a B.A. or B.Sc., with a minor in Psychology. This background is essential for anyone working with people. A teacher cannot help a student when he cannot understand the student. Guidance and the teaching of self-discipline is most important in the younger grades, when a person learns easiest. This is the time to guide young ones who are often abused because of shabby clothing and lack of school equipment. Under a proper atmosphere these children will turn to a teacher for help and the teacher will be able to be of assistance. In this way the fight against poverty is taken up actively by members of society other than social workers.

Another point is that teachers should be emotionally sound.^{4, 5, 6} The teacher must be tested and his or her background investigated before being allowed to handicap children for the rest of their lives.

Once there are teachers who fit these qualifications, children from poor families can be taught to think and be aware of the world around them. It might seem self-evident that a high school graduate knows how to think, but very few are able. By thinking, I mean the faculty of analysing almost any situation presented and coming to conclusions independent of others. Once a decision is made, it must be open to attack and defended against any criticism. Arnold Toynbee's theory of challenge and response applies to more than the fall of the Hellenist world. Without a challenge the mind stagnates. A child from a poor family is faced with problems about life, family, housing, employment, and if he has never been taught to think, intelligence on his part will not help.

Besides classes to make a student aware of life today, a teacher should present challenges which vary according to the ability and needs of the class. In this way a student of high school age can cope with the problems he faces.

As the students enter into their junior and senior high school years, it is essential that specialized guidance be implemented into the school fabric. The counselling operation in a number of schools in our area is extremely antiquated, because the students are compelled to seek the guidance officer.

For those adolescents who are able to discuss their future rationally at home this is not a serious handicap. But what of the child from a poor family where all time and energy is devoted to either making ends meet or the parents are unwilling to cooperate?⁷ He may not understand how very important his decision will be or realize his own potentialities and the numerous fields in which they could be exploited.

Throughout his life he has probably absorbed only the narrow-minded views of his environment. If he has never experienced anything beyond these closed walls, how can the youth be expected to even know what to ask the guidance officer? Before one can inquire one must have a wide scope from which to select discussions.⁸ Without proper counselling the child will often choose incorrectly his course of studies, leading to confusion, boredom or failure.⁹

Lack of qualified guidance is a serious matter, for it may be detrimental to the person's future. Many must depend on the advice they so receive.

It is adamant that guidance counsellors have an M.A. and at the very least a minor in psychology.¹⁰ Once the guidance officers become effective, guidance classes must absolutely must be introduced.

The guidance sessions would have to divert from the humdrum routine of daily classroom and act as a stimulus for the students.¹¹ The subjects of discussion would cover a widely varied area.¹² The youth of today must be given the chance to exploit their potentials.

³ See Appendix A:3

^{4, 5, 6} See Appendix A:4, 5, 6

⁷ See Appendix A:7

⁸ See Appendix A:8

⁹ See Appendix A:9

¹⁰ See Appendix A:10

¹¹ See Appendix A:11

¹² See Appendix A:12

Many are willing and able but have not the opportunity or facilities with which and in which to acquire knowledge.

By the time a student has reached the secondary level under proper guidance, he knows whether he is suitable, to aim towards university or trade school.

The pupil of average or greater intelligence will likely choose an academic career. In this case, he must take high school and university education. Poor families cannot afford the texts necessary. Furthermore there is the stigma of shabby clothes and no money for social activities. Often the student will leave school at sixteen, due not to preference but to the fact that the family could use the few dollars he would make if he obtained a job.

The Student Loan Programme, although being a very great aid, is insufficient and too restricted. An expanded student loan programme would prove to be an invaluable aid in educating the poor.

The greatest problem with student loans is that they are solely for people who wish to go to college. To get through high school is often a great problem for poor people because as we have stated their family wants them to get a job after they are sixteen and leave school. Such loans should be made available to poor people who are unable to continue their high school studies because of economic pressures at home. These expansion programmes should be extended at the university level.

For those whose abilities do not lie in university fields, there are or should be vocational trade and technical schools. Trade and vocational schools are already located in our province but are unfortunately over-crowded. Therefore we feel there should be more of these retraining centres for our unemployed, low-income or so called "poor people."¹³

But to have these institutions is not enough. It has been proven in the United States, that the unemployed who are training, need more attention to their social and financial problems than average pupils. There is a lack of both teachers and guidance counselors at these centres.¹⁴

Due to this overcrowding there is often a lowering of skill in the different trades.¹⁵ This leads to difficulty once they have completed their course. If more of the schools were built and the standard of training raised, industry might be willing to invest in this area; thus a larger percentage of the qualified labour would remain in the area.

For those who do not wish to take day training and retraining there are night classes. There are courses in academic and technical studies¹⁶ but there are no classes offered on food values, credit cards, finance companies and interest rates in Cape Breton. As a result, what little money and personal belongings the people have is being unwisely spent or taken away from them.

The time has come for greater cooperation between the Federal and Provincial governments in the field of education. Education costs are spiraling across the country. This situation is placing the so-called "have not" provinces (the Atlantic provinces, Quebec) at a great disadvantage. It is rapidly becoming almost impossible for them to provide modern educational programs for their residents. As a result the people will suffer and are suffering at the present time.

Most school systems follow basically an academic program at least up to the start of high school. No opportunity is given to those students whose interests lean more towards trade schools. Thus, a great deal of time is wasted and these students become disinterested in the ordinary type of education. Eventually, they will probably drop out of school and having no trade likely enter the ranks of the unemployed.

If this problem is to be solved on a national level there must be a complete review of Canada's overall educational system. A basic standard must be set for the nation as a whole with a common curriculum for the country's school system. The provinces and the Federal Government must take on education as its responsibility.

Thus, in the long run more money would be available for the improved facilities which are greatly needed. Not only could the regular schools be updated, but trade and vocational schools would also benefit. A greater number of these schools are a necessity. Thus a student who would normally end up as a dropout could receive training in the skilled trade of his choice. Therefore, instead of being a liability he would be an asset to the nation.

¹³ See Appendix A:13

¹⁴ See Appendix A:14

¹⁵ See Appendix A:15

¹⁶ See Appendix A:16

However, the courses provided by the trade and vocational establishments must meet the standard that industry requires of the job applicant.

A new academic curriculum would improve the chances of the student attending school to adopt an interest in his studies and a better opportunity to eventually go into university. Special attention should be given to the student from a poor family or troubled in his studies. An improved set of studies with different programmes would enable such a student not intending to go to university to obtain an education.

Thus, greater cooperation between the Federal and Provincial governments is essential if the ranks of the unskilled are to be reduced.

"We are not saying that Education will completely eliminate all forms of poverty, but we do believe that it will help many improve their lot; thus, the number of poor people will decrease."

II. LACK OF JOBS

The problem of lack of jobs is a very serious matter in Cape Breton. You do not have to look far to see an unemployed steel worker and a coal miner. When there is a lack of jobs young and old alike move to greener pastures in everlasting hope to find jobs. With time and money maybe some day your relatives, friends and even enemies might not have to move from their native home, CAPE BRETON. Maybe some day Cape Breton will not be referred to as a declining area but as one of Canada's most important industrial areas known world round.

See Appendix B

III. HOUSING

In the past two decades in the Atlantic Region, as in the remainder of Canada, there has been an improvement in housing conditions. However, in degree, the rate of improvement in the Atlantic Provinces has lagged behind improvement in other areas of the country. Relevant circumstances of low income, level of academic opportunity, demographic trends and geography have inhibited the achievement of a standard comparable with national averages.

The home is the place where people in general fulfill the basic domestic and personal functions of family life. Physical and mental health, working efficiency, emotional security and social status are all likely to be influenced by housing conditions. Suitable accommodations are vital to the family of today but some families cannot afford this necessity. Because of this we have to come to recognize that the existence in the community of such disadvantaged persons or families involves a tremendous social and financial cost as well as a threat to the well-being of the entire community. These people with their dreary apathetic lives, their ill health, the poor prospects of their children for education and economic opportunity, their anti-social behaviour, the delinquency of their children, the marital conflict and the alcoholism cause us concern.

At the national level, housing is important not only because it affects health and welfare and is closely related to such political principles as "equal opportunity" and "minimum standards" but also because it is a vital factor in employment (construction) directly or indirectly, so therefore is important to the national economy.

The rate of population increase is about 400,000 persons per annum and because of this we need to build at least 125,000 dwellings per annum in our cities and towns. It is because of this rate that many large numbers of our fellow Canadians are plagued with the problem of housing. For those who have visited my home city, Sydney, they should have seen, if not realized, the conditions in which some people are forced to live. There is certainly no reason for any of us to be complacent or satisfied with what we find in some cities. We cannot go on indefinitely improving the average standard of housing conditions (90 per cent of entire housing output has been provided for middle and upper class society) and seriously try to do something worthwhile for the large number of people, who are forced to put up with accommodation that in some instances, at least, offends even the most rudimentary sense of human dignity.

The purposed solutions below help and bring hope for low-income groups, for elderly persons, for those who have to bring up their children in slums or near slums and for university students. One of the most important solutions to solve the housing problem is more low-rental housing which is reported to be working quite well. More housing cooperatives and public housing. The Federal and Provincial governments should have more joint housing projects. No matter which methods the government choose to eliminate the housing crisis, they should keep in mind that the quicker they are in solving it the sooner a better and healthy Canadian society is formed.

See Appendix C

IV. GOVERNMENT FAILURES

In the following section are the ways the Government tries to help the people who are unable to live without financial help from the Government. In most cases of the payments of Government Welfare, we, the Eleven-A's of Sydney Academy, feel that the Government should improve by granting more money which will be used by the people who really need it.

The following section deals with the Canadian approach to welfare and the American approach. In some cases the American approach seems and is better. Canada is a young and beautiful country filled with people who need welfare and are receiving welfare and they need much more than what they are getting. Steps should be taken to improve this serious problem and maybe even whip it out of the hearts of all Canadians connected with it. This is a great goal but with time and especially MONEY it can be accomplished so not only the people who earn a comfortable sum of money yearly but also poor people today will live happily without the worry of losing their furniture, etc. Every Canadian should band together and accomplish this goal.

See Appendix D

V. PROBLEMS IN LABOUR LAWS

At this time in history unskilled labourers are in the same battle that labour as a whole was in fifty years ago. That is, they have not the right to collective bargaining or as it is popularly (or unpopularly) known as "Unionism."

Part time workers are not covered by the Minimum Wage Act or The Workman's Compensation Act. This means: (1) Uneducated people who usually get these unskilled jobs end up just as poor as if they got unemployment for doing nothing. (2) They receive no compensation if they injure themselves while on the job. They do not qualify for unemployment insurance if they have not been employed for six months. (3) A worker has to wait three months before he receives the minimum wage. A manager of a business can therefore hire and fire on a three month basis.

The Nova Scotian Minimum Wage Act paves the road to regional disparity because it differentiates between minimum wages being paid in designated area.

Organizing unions in areas of unskilled labour is virtually impossible for two reasons: (1) When a strike could be called, management holds the threat of calling in scab labour. (2) Management of a unionized institution would fight bitterly to oppose it.

An example of number two would be when the local steel workers' union tried to organize an aluminum products installers company. The management simply said that his workers were salesmen and not aluminum workers. The judge upheld the claim and unionism went down to defeat.

"Unionism is the cause of inflation" was a popular catch phrase and still is among some people. What people failed to see is that without unions, workers would still make about fifty cents to one dollar an hour.² If part-time workers and unskilled labourers could become unionized, a great part of poverty would be alleviated.

GUARANTEED ANNUAL INCOME

(1) If people receive more money because they are poor, to substantiate their incomes, then conceivably in pockets of poverty, prices would rise accordingly.

(2) To alleviate this possibility a "prices control board" could be set up. To accompany this, higher taxation of the upper twenty-five percent of the income bracket would be mandatory to help finance the extra cost.

(3) It is a step in the right direction because it stops payment of welfare in forms of baby bonuses to people who do not need the money and it also eliminates the bureaucratic welfare system which presently exists.

¹ This also applies to handicapped, domestic and menial servants.

² Approximately the present part-time wage scale.

"The statement that at least one Canadian in every five suffers from poverty does not appear to be a wild exaggeration."—Fifth Annual Report to the Economic Council of Canada.

The first step should be to establish co-ops where four employed families subsidize one unemployed family. The head of the unemployed family could be educated and retrained thus making him suitable for the labour market. The four families who are subsidizing this one family have a personal interest in what this one person is doing and would give him incentives.

To make money more plentiful for the five families, the four families who subsidize the fifth, will work under conditions where they elect management and can get more benefits through increased pressure which can be exerted on the management.

This system will give five instead of four people buying power, thereby giving increased benefits to farmers and other producers.

APPENDIX A

1. A new teacher had in her Grade Five Class a mathematically inclined student. She had never been taught new mathematics with which the class was accustomed. Her mistakes in class bored him so much that he began to work ahead on his own during school hours. The teacher reprimanded the boy and forbade him to work ahead. Her excuse was that he must be getting assistance at home, for how could he do math she did not understand. In this way the teacher displayed her ignorance to a young class and lost their respect by doing so.

2. In some primary grades in Toronto, the students are taken to places of interest. One Grade Two Class visited the zoo and a maple syrup farm. This was an exciting experience about which the youngsters are still talking. I have never been on a tour which included all the members of my class.

3. Of the twenty teachers who have taught me, only two have in some way succeeded in introducing outside stimulation. Most were over the age of fifty-five, and used 1930 school methods. Certain teachers were so oppressive that in one case two girls in my grade took nervous breakdowns. A less domineering teacher could not cope with 1960 youth (she was over sixty) and took a nervous breakdown herself.

4. One teacher taught me after she had been to a mental hospital for treatment. Her attitude had a disturbing effect on many students and developed introversion in many pupils, myself included.

5. The first time I "thought" was in Grade Ten, when I was confronted with term papers and projects. By doing research I became aware of methods of procedure. Class questioning during another project was an important lesson in quick-thinking and self-confidence.

6. The Sydney school system is definitely lacking in facilities for tours and outings. One project which our class planned last year—an outing to Louisbourg—was handicapped by red tape in all quarters. In the end we did not go.

7. In one particular family of ten, the father was employed, receiving a fair income. However, the mother spent the money unwisely, continually buying liquor and attending bingo. The children were found stealing food from garbage cans. In such an environment, the children are unable to communicate intelligently with their parents.

8. Having been to the guidance office myself, I realize how ridiculous and futile such a meeting can be. I wished to drop a science course so as to continue on with a language course begun in Grade Ten. The guidance officer did not see why a person would want four languages, but said it was up to me. He was only concerned with fixing schedules for students wanting to alter subjects and so forth. Although I shall be able to cope and decide with help at home, many students from poor families, who just can't communicate, are at a very great disadvantage.

9. In some cases students in junior high have been advised by teachers to enter a General Course, which is a useless pursuit for most in this day and age. A boy had graduated with his Grade Twelve General and once out in the world found an extremely narrow channel of opportunity for work. He has now returned to the Grade Eleven and Academic Course. When he decided or rather was advised to go into the General course, he apparently did not know where it would leave him. Many think they can go on to University and Technical Colleges. Too many think this way. If it is at all possible one should enter an academic course, for the jobs still in existence, requiring a General diploma are very scarce. What of tomorrow?

10. A guidance officer must be aware of the working of the mind and how people act and react to different situations. He must be a very broad-minded individual and associated with the generation in which he works. Understanding and complete dedication are adamant. To insure that such individuals are hired a very thorough study must be made of their background, particularly in association with people.

11. The counsellor would have to present and explain the topic to be discussed. But he must not drill. Such a class is conducted for the benefit of the students. Therefore, they must be allowed to question statements, inquire further into the subject and give opinions. This would definitely not be a grading or examinations course.

12. Naturally types of jobs in the working world and their requirements should be dealt with. There should also be a type of Family Course in Living. Those students who have known nothing but squalor, may inherit the attitudes of their environment.

There is a family of twelve whose father doesn't work only because he does not want to labour. Whenever a job is obtained for him he finds an excuse to remain idle. Every week the Salvation Army provides food etc. for this family. Now are the children supposed to realize that they should strive for an education in order to some day support themselves?

A course such as the one mentioned above would entail teaching the basics of money—management, household care, and consumer values. The students must begin to think of these problems, for one day they will be faced with these situations.

13. Both Point Edward Trade School and Nova Scotia Institute of Technology have lengthy waiting lists. It took much too long for the technical school to be built. Cape Breton needed it long ago. When it was built, it was poorly situated. Its location is a barrier for students from rural areas of the island, who cannot afford the bus fare.

14. At Point Edward Trade School there are up to twenty-five pupils per teacher.

In the way of guidance, there is also a shortage. This lack is mirrored through the poor discipline. Once, when a speaker was at Point Edward, he was shown disrespect from students, who sat with their feet on their desks, smoking cigarettes.

It is essential that highly-qualified staff is employed at trade schools, where persons from poor families can receive attention.

15. (a) Point Edward graduates are not well qualified for most modern industry. Many trainees go to Toronto only to find their skills insufficient to enable them to obtain jobs.

A diploma from the Nova Scotia Institute of Technology has a very high rating but is limited in attendance by the higher entrance qualifications.

(a) A training program in the United States is an example of what a successful program must consist:

A program by Lockheed Aircraft Corporation in Georgia screened and rejected twenty-five percent of the applicants because they had less than Grade Five education. Ninety-eight men started; seventy completed the course and forty-three men were hired. The main reason for dropouts was poor attendance and lack of interest. The workers during training were exposed to real working conditions.

(Another similar company in California (one hundred eleven started; one hundred eight completed it) put the trainees on company payroll with starting rates for their particular trade.)

The trainees were hired at various companies, not necessarily at Lockheed. According to some employers, these men were their best trained and most productive workers. This compliment is due to the fact that the trainees knew for what they were being trained and were actually overtrained. The method used by the instructors was to show the trainees how to do something by much repetition.

Over fifty percent of the instructors' time was spent on the trainees' personal problems.

A main reason for the success of the program was due to the fact that the trainees had a job waiting for them. Enormous amounts of time put on the trainees' family life enabled them to study well. There were no more than six pupils per trainer.

16. Adult Education Classes are held at Sydney Academy, Xavier College, Vocational High School, Point Edward, Maritime Tel. & Tel., Banks and SYSCO.

A Cape Breton plan in adult education has been carried out during the last five years proving to be very successful. Coal miners with...

LACK OF JOBS

In discussing the problem of lack of jobs we must examine three aspects:

1. The extent of lack of jobs in Cape Breton.
2. The reasons why this is so, and
3. Solutions to solve it on a long-time basis.

The topic of poverty as caused by a lack of jobs is of particular importance to everyone since a great portion of the adult poor in Canada have income earning potential. As a result there is a high economic cost to our society by having failed to discover effective policies and programs to cope with the problem. Most people will agree that higher production is the creed of North America. Therefore the fact that such a large number of poor are in the labour force definitely shows our economy is not producing as much as it should or could.

As students, we are mainly dealing with the problem of poverty in our area of Cape Breton. A good proportion of us, having lived here most of our lives, having been born here, have first-hand knowledge of the severe unemployment problem. Many of us have known about and seen unemployment in our own families and relatives or in neighbours. Through the years in the Sydney area we have seen families time after time being forced to live on benefits of unemployment due to closures or lay-offs in our local industries (shown in the example of the Steel Plant).

APPENDIX B:1

Unemployment is almost accepted as a way of life in Cape Breton for we are constantly aware of it every minute of our lives. Poverty reports, newspapers, radio, and television constantly refer to us as one of the declining areas of Canada.

It should be well understood there is definitely a very serious problem here and before we can even attempt to solve it we must see reasons that have caused and are still causing the problem. The two broad or main reasons of unemployment in the Cape Breton area are: 1. poor education (lack of skill) 2. not enough jobs available. The education factor, a huge problem itself, has been discussed so we will continue to concentrate on the jobs which are lacking.

APPENDIX B:2

In Cape Breton, even a person who has skills which are useful can find no place to use them. In a local example of this can be pointed out rather vividly. Only eighty-one percent of one of the recent graduating classes of Sydney's Business College are working. Of this number fifteen percent are working in non-related jobs, which shows clearly that they could not find places which wanted their skill. The percentage that do not get work are the very ones who leave Cape Breton for greener pastures. Likewise it is the same with a high number of skilled people who are forced to emigrate to other places, draining the area of valuable skilled workers. This only aggravates our economic situation by reducing our local output and really creating more unemployment for those who cannot leave the area. It almost seems that Cape Breton is only an educating school of thousands of emigrants (Brain Drain).

This emigration only discourages industries who see no potential in an area where many skilled workers are leaving. The strange fact is that there is definitely no lack of brains in the area but still we do not improve. From our experiences as students, we know of many people who sincerely want to stay in Cape Breton but are forced by reality to pack their bags and leave. (Whenever a person does go to college in Cape Breton or on the mainland of Nova Scotia, it is customary to ask where he is going to live after his education is completed; not if he is leaving!)

There is no clear cut reason why a lack of jobs exists in Cape Breton. For one, many of our present industries are old ones (Steel Plant & Coal Mines) that have not kept up with modern changes. These industries did not require a great number of skills years ago that exist today. They do not require the high skills that Cape Bretoners have to offer and so people must leave.

APPENDIX B:3

In our area when we do get new industries that are modern, many of the people hired are brought from away because there is no one left here to fit the industries' particular qualifications.

Seasonal employment in fishing, lumbering and construction work greatly adds to our problem. In other words the proper skilled force is not available in Cape Breton when it is needed if it is needed at all.

The solution to the whole dismal situation sounds simple but it is very difficult to get any action to carry it out. Education, one of the major solutions, has been discussed.

The industries can be encouraged to come to Cape Breton if they know there is a great potential here. Likewise, if students in colleges and technical schools, etc. know there will be definitely good opportunities.

APPENDIX C

A definite plan should be taken up by the government to bring a diversified program of industries so that Cape Breton will not be dependent on the success of one or two main industries (e.g. the Sysco situation). A commission should be set up to study the potential of a certain industry and its value as a long time solution in the Cape Breton area. If it is decided that the industry will be feasible, a program of the jobs to be offered by the industry should be made known to Cape Bretoners. In this way people will train for a job that they will be certain to obtain and the industry will be sure of getting its labour force.

In this way greater expansion will occur and fewer and fewer people will have to leave the area. The government must fully realize that only long-term plans will alleviate the ever-lasting problem of unemployment. (Not like Louisbourg plan).

There is nothing peculiar about the Cape Breton area for it has supplies of minerals and an expected superport to promote industry.

If government and the people work together in close alliance, the problem can be successfully solved.

APPENDIX D:1

The Welfare Department in Canada covers the following areas: FOSTER WIDOWS (including wives whose husbands have deserted and unemployed widowers), DISABILITY, OLD AGE PENSIONS, UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE and FAMILY ALLOWANCES.

In the Provincial Welfare Department the officials grant $25 a month for the care of the first foster child and $20 a month for each child after the first one. Everyone knows $25 a month for a child is not much, so the Government should improve this section of the law.

In the Widow's Department the set amount each family receives is far from being fair. The maximum a widow can receive per month is $175. A family of a widow and two children receive $175 a month while a family of a widow and ten children have to live on the same amount. That is far from being fair! This is one way the Government is causing hardship and maybe POVERTY. Another fault in this system is when a widow's child becomes eighteen her and her child's benefits stop. The benefits will still stop when the child is eighteen even if he should still have six months left of school.

In the United States widows' children receive benefits until they are finished school or college if they attend full-time and are not or have no intention of getting married while attending school. The United States has more money but it also has more people, more problems and more world projects. Their system is better than the Canadian one.

A report by the student must be made out to the U.S. Social Security telling his intentions of returning to school full-time the following year.

Widows in the United States receive much more than the Canadian widows. Their payments are based on their late husbands' yearly salary. A chart to show the different payments is provided in Appendix D:2.

In Canada if a woman's husband left an insurance she cannot claim any money until the amount of the insurance is down to $2500. She could bring it down to the required amount by putting $1500 per child away to be untouched for educational purposes. She has to wait two to three months for her first check. She can get financial help from Municipal Assistance, but the amount is very low, until her first payment arrives. Why couldn't she receive her benefits right away? This is another fault of the Government.

The Disability payments in the United States like the Widows' Allowance are based on salary if the person has worked (see Appendix D:2). Payments may start in the month the person had become disabled. If the person remains disabled until he is sixty-five the disability pension changes to retirement at the same rate.

In Canada the maximum payment for a disabled person is $88 a month. The United States minimum payment is $55 which shows the maximum is higher than Canada's. In both countries proof must be shown that the person is really unable to work.

Canadian Old Age Pension is granted to anyone who is sixty-five and it does not matter if the old person has ten thousand dollars or one cent. This is not right. A person who is well-off should not receive this pension. That money not sent to these people should be sent to people who are old and are in much greater need of it. The payment is $75 a month or supplements can be added to $109-$120.

In the United States the retired worker receives money in accordance to the amount he earned when he was younger yearly. In some cases the amount is lower than the Canadian one but it is a bit more sound proof. (Appendix D:2).

Unemployment Insurance is one of the major things in Canada that a great amount of people take advantage of. Some work the required amount of time and then get fired and apply for unemployment insurance. The government should check on these people. The money that is not there for other government Welfare Branches is given to these people who just live to get the unemployment checks while others must but should not, suffer.

In the United States unemployment is a major problem. People go to the States and have no intention of working while the other people's taxes rise sky-high.

In the field of Family Allowances, improvements should certainly be made. Well-to-do families are receiving checks which are far from needed. Their checks should be cut off and then divided among families-in-need decided by the Economic Council of Canada. The well-off families who lost their checks could have their taxes lowered by half the amount they lost.

Youth Allowances should not stop when the teenager reaches eighteen if he has passed every year and has a couple of months of school left after he is eighteen.

RECOMMENDATIONS

1. The Government should make laws to suit everyone. The way it is now, one law is for all types of people with all different types of problems.

2. Make improvements so there is more money for the welfare offices.

3. The Government should educate the people on problems of welfare, housing and especially POVERTY.

4. Welfare officers should be picked or even elected very carefully and in earnest.

5. The Government should take aims to watch for people who take advantage of government payments.

WELFARE is a very important topic in Canada. People who need welfare should be made to not to feel ashamed that they are receiving welfare from the government for welfare is certainly a PRIVILEGE and a right of being a Canadian citizen. Welfare should be certainly improved but who are really desperate could not live without it. As a Canadian citizen a person should not misuse it for they are not the ones who are going to suffer but the people who count the days until their next cheque is due. Maybe with time everyone will be happy and not hungry going to bed in this wonderful country of ours, CANADA.

APPENDIX D:2

EXAMPLES OF MONTHLY CASH PAYMENTS IN THE UNITED STATES

Average yearly earnings	$899 or less	$1,800	$3,000	$4,200	$5,400	$6,600	$7,800
	$	$	$	$	$	$	$
Retired worker (65 or older).....	55.00	88.40	115.00	140.40	165.00	189.90	218.00
Disabled worker (65 under).....	27.50	44.20	57.50	70.20	82.50	95.00	174.40
Wife 65 or older.....	44.00	70.80	92.00	112.40	132.00	152.00	174.40
Retired worker at 65.....	20.70	33.20	43.20	52.70	61.90	71.30	78.80
Wife at 62, no child.....	55.00	73.00	94.90	115.90	136.20	156.70	179.90
Widow at 62 or older.....	47.70	63.30	82.30	100.50	118.10	135.90	156.00
Disabled widow at 50, no children.....	33.40	44.30	57.60	70.30	82.70	95.10	109.20
Wife under 65, one child.....	27.50	44.20	57.40	146.40	165.00	190.00	214.00
Widow under 62 and one child.....	82.50	132.60	172.60	210.60	247.60	285.00	327.00
Widow under 62 and two children.....	82.50	132.60	202.40	280.80	354.40	395.00	434.40
One child of retired or disabled worker....	27.50	44.50	57.50	70.20	82.50	95.00	109.00
One surviving child.....	55.00	66.30	86.30	105.30	123.80	142.50	163.50
Maximum family payment.....	82.50	132.60	202.40	280.80	354.40	395.60	434.40

These rates were raised when President Johnson was in and will increase again in April 1970.

Material Completing the 11-A Brief
to
The Special Senate Committee on
Poverty

Containing:

- (A) Dissenting Opinions from the Main Brief
- (B) Master List of Recommendations for Action

Submitted by:

William Neil MacKenzie
Greg O'Neill

SUBMISSION OF DISSENT

In the reading of the brief already submitted to the Senate Committee there has been a serious omission, one covering the work of an entire committee. This omission dealt with a form of poverty resulting from the improper management of money. The following is a report of the findings and solutions of this committee.

It must be realized that until the class was presented with this project we knew very little about existing conditions or programs concerning poverty. In order to provide adequate solutions one must first determine the causes of poverty.

Poverty results from not using available money to the best advantage.

Managing money is important because:

- A) It lets you know where your money is going.

B) It gives you an idea of things you can and cannot afford.

C) It allows you to know how much money you have for extras.

There are many factors contributing to money mismanagement.

A) Ignorance: Sometimes there are families who try to make the most of their income but lack the knowledge to manage their money.

B) Family disputes: If parents do not get along spitefulness and greed may result in the overspending of money.

C) Bad habits: One member of the family may be an alcoholic or a compulsive gambler.

D) Medical reasons: Medical fees result in the strain on a budget which can lead to the neglect of basic needs.

E) Middle Class Morals: The fact that people are considered poor is because they cannot meet the needs of society. We are living in a middle class society and it is the middle class who sets the values. And what are these values—a TV, a fancy car, transistor radios? It is fine for us to say no, but in our society don't these form an important role? Therefore we must not condemn them for wanting these so-called necessities. Morally and psychologically they need such things. Since the middle class sets the standards shouldn't some of the responsibility of its consequences lie on their shoulders.

Not necessarily financially but morally at least.

As important as the causes are, the solutions and recommendations are more important. Solutions can be called short or long termed.

LONG TERMED

A) Education: This has already been dealt with but there are serious omissions. It does not provide for the implication of a family planning program in the schools which would make the adults of tomorrow aware of the importance of proper money management.

B) A Committee should be set up to examine the part played by finance and loan companies in their treatment and aggravation of poverty.

C) On the Municipal Level centers are necessary to provide adequate recreational activities for the underprivileged youth!!!!

SHORT TERMED

A) Publicity: Many programs which are available to remedy money mismanagement the people are just not aware of. Either because they cannot see their need or are not willing to take initiative. An extensive publicity campaign to reach both those to be aided and those who want to help must be set up. It should make people more aware of what is being done for the poor and of what they can do to help. To condemn a person because he has little education or because he has ten children does more harm than good. What is needed is AFFIRMATIVE ACTION!!!!

B) More Publication of the work done by various organizations set up to help those people such as alcoholics and gamblers.

C) A complete review of Medical Services Insurances. It is not adequate!!!!

In conclusion we cannot stress firmly enough the need for the participation of the poor in providing solutions. It is their problem and they have definite views of what they need done. They are smarter than we think and can provide workable solutions.

WE MUST HELP THEM TO HELP THEMSELVES!!!!

Submitted by:

Debbie Reid

Judy Canning

Marie Smith
Tish Graham
Tony Kolonko
Anne Marie Gardner

DISSENTING OPINION

It is recommended that in this brief too many unrealistic problems have been placed unnecessarily on the "shoulders" of the government, that this should be altered in the direction, that the PEOPLE themselves learn how to cope with their own problems.

The opinion that one decides upon after reading through the brief is that money grows on trees, and that the government has a forest of these extraordinary trees. What people fail to realize is that these "trees" are frantically being chopped down by the people, who have acquired the impression that they are entitled to do so. Did the B.N.A. act or did it not, produce this? Surely it most certainly did.

How about turning the tide?

In other words let the government play off the people. How do they do this? Let us look at these suggestions.

First of all, the government has to do this. No other group can do it, no one but the government can commence this with the best result.

Give the people pride.

Give the people culture.

If the government could seed this, then once established the people would make it their own duty. What happens? "The tide turns!"

Example 1. The "Cape Breton" Indian

Let the government give pride to the Indian. Put posters and signs up saying the Indian is a craftsman, fisherman and hunter. Give him his tools and what happens, once again the Indian has his pride. He now begins to pave his own roads. Government assistance to this fellow drops, till he completely lives for himself. His pride is in "full bloom". He can even now go to a doctor, pay his bill and give pride both to himself, and the doctor who hasn't been in this situation for years.

Example 2. All steel workers in Sydney, are beginning to see a light for a golden future. Give them pride by posters in public places, saying, "SYDNEY IS STEEL".

For every human in Canada there is a pride of some sort in his soul, dig it out and USE it.

Once the people take more interest in their own lives, then such things as Education can be improved. The people would be in a situation where school would now mean something.

What use is it when the economy is at a serious level to build trading schools, etc., as suggested in the brief, when the pride, moral and culture of the people remains at the present moment? None, it is of no value to anyone, just a wasted drain on the economy of a new nation.

If their attitudes were different, as I have expressed, much more would be achieved.

Many more people shoving their weight for a new life would naturally booster the economy of the country, THEN and only then, will other measures be of any use to us Canadians.

Let's have a national booster campaign.

Richard Hayson.

DISSENTING OPINION

Concerning the Indians we believe that the following facts should be brought to light.

Life expectancy of a Canadian Indian is only 34 years. This is due to the unhealthy environment in which they live.

46 percent of Indian families earn less than $1,000 a year. This is because of complacency brought about by federal money that is poured into the people.

50 percent of Indian children fail to reach grade seven; 61 percent—grade eight; 91 percent—grade twelve; only 150 Indians are in universities in Canada. The reason for this is that the children are not forced to study by parents and because of this, work becomes hard, so they drop out of school.

Indians are entitled to:

- (A) Family and Youth Allowances
- (B) Old Age Security Pension
- (C) Guaranteed Income Supplement

If they contributed they are entitled to:

- (1) Unemployment Insurance
- (2) Veterans Pension Plan

Also eligible for: (1) Certain provincial and territorial welfare allowances (as for blind, disabled, aged, child welfare in Nova Scotia, British Columbia, Ontario and Manitoba).

Other help given (if consent of tribe is given):

- (1) Local Assistance
- (2) Institutional Care for Adults
- (3) Child Care

- (4) Community and Home Improvements
- (5) Recreation Programs
- (6) Relocation for employment, vocational training and housing
- (7) Leadership Training

To gain all this, they must stay on reserves.

Submitted by:

Sheila Spencer
Nancy Munroe

DISSENTING OPINION (GOVERNMENT FAILURES)

I don't agree with the way the Unemployment Insurance section is written because the strength of the report is not strong enough to get the idea across. It has no reasonable solutions or remedies. It should be written as I first submitted it as follows.

Unemployment insurance, a benefit given to those out of work and needing financial assistance, is a government program very much abused by many people. The ones abusing the program find that the government pays them a fair amount of money but enough to live on. Therefore why should they work all year around when they can work for a few months (or as long as required by the Unemployment Insurance Office) quit their job and go on unemployment insurance? This is happening all over the nation. In Cape Breton alone there are cases where men may work through the summer and then stay off work as long as they possibly can. With unemployment insurance an idle man with low income (when he is working) can live almost as good as if he did work.

REMEDY:

In each electoral district a committee should be set up to study each individual who applies for unemployment insurance. By questioning each one who applies, the lazy unemployed can be detected and forced to go back to work. This will save the government millions of dollars; money that could be used to provide the people who cannot possibly work with more financial assistance through old age pensions, welfare for the blind and sick, etc.

In the section on "Lack of Jobs" some solutions were given but nothing was mentioned about where the money is coming from. In the following a recommendation for having money available for this purpose is expressed.

By the early 1970's the present External Aid Program is expected to give one percent of the national income to foreign aid. This would amount to six hundred million dollars. At least half of this could be used in Canada to help the one-fifth of the population that is under the poverty level. With this money, industry could be introduced in poverty areas where unemployment and low income people could work permanently. These industries just have to be light industries. Those who have physical handicaps, etc. could thereby be given more money through the three hundred million saved.

In the section on housing nothing was mentioned about the eleven percent Federal Tax and the seven percent Provincial Tax on lumber. This tax should be cut out for how can a low income family build a house with a seventeen cent tax on the dollar for the lumber.

Richard Crooks

DISSENTING OPINION (LABOUR LAWS)

I would recommend that, in the section of Labour Laws, Guaranteed Annual Income should not be regarded as a good thing for poor people because it does not provide enough incentive for the people. I think that there should be more stress on the co-ops. It should be shown that it does not use the government's money as the Guaranteed Income. Guaranteed Annual Income requires an increase in taxes while the co-ops could provide for a decrease in taxes. Also, the prices control board should be used in connection with the co-ops and not the Guaranteed Annual Income.

Wayne MacVicar

REASONS FOR DISSENTION

"Although the tourist industry is important, it is seasonal and of minor imp."

Besides the contradiction contained within the sentence itself, I don't agree with the implication of tourism being a minor industry. It is a major source of income in Cape Breton during the summer months and the realization of this will only serve to further its development. Obviously, it is seasonal since we live in the same temperate belt as most of North America but this is so, only because no attempt has been made to attract winter vacationers. Steps taken in the direction of promoting a longer tourist season would, thus, create many new jobs. For example, the Keltic Lodge depends too much on college students to make up its staff. Whereas, if other employees were utilized and new ones brought in, the Lodge could remain open the desirable two months longer.

"For fifteen years or so teachers are the link between a student and the outside world, yet these teachers introduce a world straight from textbooks. Thus, the student faces life alone and ends in frustration."

Presuming that this statement is taken literally (which, to me, leads to misinterpretation), I'd conclude that all teachers were narrowminded bigots who didn't know any better than to teach directly from textbooks and that the students textbooks were his only communication with the outside world. This was very possibly true a hundred years ago, but today, seems to be a radical and aphathetic viewpoint.

In regard with page four, too much is concerned with the campaign against the sanity of our teacher and the role a guidance counsellor should play in the school. This latter point is slightly irrelevant and avoids the issue as to where the counsellor fits in with the under-privileged child. I think it is up to the counsellor to treat each problem as it is presented, regardless of social class. If the problem deals with poverty directly, then fine, but he can't take it upon himself to cater particularly to a poor student's needs, thereby neglecting the rest of the student body. An increase in counselling staff is a suggested solution.

Tish Graham

DISSENTING OPINION

Section on Education

We, the undersigned, members of the Education Committee for the Senate brief on Poverty wish to dissociate ourselves with some, if not all, of the views given in the name of this Committee on the grounds that they do not represent a true summation of the facts gathered and prepared by the Subcommittee on Education.

Colin Mathieson	Jeff Burchill
Avril Watson	Gary MacPherson
Stanley Ardelli	George Lohnes

What we disagree with is that the factual information to substantiate the conclusions was not included and those which were included were not realistic.

The definition of poverty was severely lacking in detail—it made little sense at all.

Because of the editorial like quality of the Education Brief, the desired recommendations did not come across well. Rhetorical questions were asked and situations presented but no solutions were clearly given.

Additional Material: Appendix A-16—Education

A Cape Breton plan in adult education begun three years ago is proving to be very successful. Selected coal miners are sent to college with all university fees paid.

In a certain case known to the Committee on Education a man who had been working in the mines for fifteen years had a grade twelve education. While he was at college his family of nine children was paid a substantial living allowance. During the summer a job was given to this man and the job does not always force him to return to the mines.

If any of the men on this program who begin the course are unable to complete it, their jobs at the mines are still waiting for them. This year only twelve men are taking part in the plan.

RECOMMENDATION TO SENATE COMMITTEE ON POVERTY

1. It is recommended that a family training program be incorporated into the curriculum by cooperation between federal and provincial governments.
2. It is recommended that a Royal Commission or Senate Committee be set up to investigate finance and loan companies.
3. It is recommended that youth centres be set up in municipalities by federal government.
4. A Royal Commission or Senate Committee be set up to investigate Medical Services Insurance.
5. It is recommended that through greater stimulation by Federal Government, the provinces will come together with a unified education policy concerning curriculum. This would bring lower grade schools up to par and make available more money to launch programs to aid in the education of the poor.
6. It is recommended that cultural centres be set up with federal and provincial aid. It is unfair that the lower classes are unable to afford the cultural needs of our society. Art, reading, music appreciation, singing and dancing are not luxuries but are necessities. They are something that should be inherent in all children's upbringing.
7. In the regard to Indians we recommend:

- (a) The Government should send more help and social workers to the Indians.
- (b) The Indians should be encouraged to be proud of their ancestry and given a better view of life.
- (c) Give them the drive to gain more education. Educate the adults.
- (d) Make them work for what they get. If they get money for nothing they will not try to earn more money.
- (e) Educate the other Canadians to make them see the Indians' problem. Make them realize that the Indians are no different from anyone else.

8. It is one of our recommendations that the teaching profession be made up of highly qualified men and women who are able to understand and communicate with the student.

9. We recommend that more qualified guidance counsellors are required in the junior and senior high school level. These counsellors must be able to advise students on careers they are interested in and help them select the most favourable. The present guidance officers are overworked and therefore cannot perform their duties as they should.

10. It is recommended that the one teacher-one class system now being used in many lower grades should be abolished. A number of different teachers will expose the children to various ideas and views thereby stimulating interest in school.

11. It is recommended that information centres should be set up in each community. These centres can supply the information required by adults and young people who have dropped out of school as to the various programs available for the upgrading of their education.

12. It is recommended that each local school system should have qualified social workers on its staff. The social workers can help those students who are under some strain due to problems at home or in other areas.

13. It is recommended that a greater number of federal and provincial grants should be made to high schools, colleges, and universities' scholarship funds. Those students who have attained a high academic standard should be rewarded with scholarships of an amount which would release his financial burden.

14. It is recommended that proper stimulations at the appropriate ages so that their intelligence will be unimpaired. If children are deprived of sufficient physical and intellectual challenges in the first fifteen years of life the brain dulls and becomes sterile. An excellent example of this is in orphanages.

15. It is recommended that the age at which a student can leave school should be raised from sixteen to at least eighteen. The government does not believe that teenagers are responsible enough to drive a motor vehicle at sixteen but are they responsible enough to make the important decisions of their lives and leave school because the usual poor student finds it a drag, anyway. A program that provides money for students who wish to continue their education would support this proposition.

16. It is recommended that an expanded Student Loan Programme would help educate the poor. More money is needed to loan to college students who can get no financial support at home. Also student loans should be made available to high school students so that they can be supported if their family is unwilling or unable to do so while the student completes his education.

17. It is recommended that the Education Act of Nova Scotia be amended so that children under the age of sixteen should not be allowed to work during school hours.

18. It is recommended that more technical schools, trade schools, and vocational schools be established. Assistance should be provided for those attending especially the family man. The courses provided must meet the standards required by industry for that particular skill.

19. It is recommended that a program should be carried out to make people aware of existing government services. This could be done by radio, television and newspaper ads as well as by the distribution of literature in the mail or by other means.

20. It is recommended that an increased number of adult night classes be set up so that one may upgrade his or her academic education.

21. It is recommended that teachers be highly qualified in their profession. They must be able to communicate with the student and aid those who are less fortunate than others. Teaching should be regarded as a dedicated profession by the teacher, not a mere job.

22. It is recommended that an alcoholic referral centre be established in each area where assistance and treatment can be given to the chronic alcoholic.

23. It is recommended that pollution control be placed on industry as well as private concerns so that the overall appearance of industrial areas may be improved, thus providing a more favourable situation for those living in the area.

24. It is recommended that people should earn their "Welfare Cheques". People who cannot find work should be employed by the government for at least a long as necessary to earn their "Welfare Cheques". By adopting this policy the government would not be giving out money with nothing in return and the poor person's morale will be boosted since he is now working. Also, since this is no longer charity, pride will not be affected.

25. In regard to housing, it is recommended that:

(a) Besides more low-rental housing, cooperatives and public housing, more student housing should be made available at universities.

(b) The government should provide low interest loans for the repairs and modernization of existing homes.

(c) The Government should drop existing sales taxes on building materials.

(d) There should be lower interest rates on mortgages for families with low incomes.

26. It is recommended that a provincial commission be set up that is closely allied with trade and technical schools. It should be made up of:

(a) One section which brings a diversified program of industries to the Cape Breton area. This section of the commission will see if there is a long-term potential for that particular industry.

(b) The second section of the commission sees to it that enough men are trained in the particular fields needed by the industry. In this way the men being trained have definite proof of a job waiting for them when they are finished training.

(c) The provincial commission which would be financed by the Federal Government should be made up of at least some Cape Bretoners who know the local situation best.

(d) There should be absolutely no rich tycoons on the commission who are only interested in seeing what riches they themselves will derive from the new industries.

27. It is recommended that the industries brought in should be federally financed (no private industries). Once the industry is established complete union management should take over thereby enabling most of the profits to be turned to the employees (not to the employers as is the case in so many Cape Breton industries).

28. It is recommended that nation-wide publicity be made of the potentials of Cape Breton. The potentials can be heightened if it is known that a highly skilled force is available in Cape Breton. This publicity should be the concern of the Federal Government for it is their job to develop all parts of Canada.

29. It is recommended that the Minimum Wage Act be amended to include handicapped, casual and domestic workers. The same applies for Workmen's Compensation.

30. It is recommended that Manpower should not hire people on to a strike ridden institution.

31. It is recommended that co-ops as described in brief should be set up.

Second Session—Twenty-eighth Parliament

1969

THE SENATE OF CANADA
PROCEEDINGS
OF THE
SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE
ON
POVERTY

The Honourable DAVID A. CROLL, Chairman

No. 2

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 4th, 1969

WITNESSES:

Halifax Tenants' Protective Association: Canon F. M. French, Co-Chairman.

Halifax Neighbourhood Centre: Leslie Cuning, Executive Director.

Mr. David Critchley, Social Worker with the Maritime School of Social Work.

Extension Department, St. Francis Xavier University, Antigonish, Nova Scotia: Rev. G. E. Topshee, Director; and Rev. W. E. Roach, Assistant Director.

APPENDICES:

A.—Joint Brief submitted by the Halifax Tenants' Protective Association and the Halifax Neighbourhood Centre.

B.—Brief submitted by David Critchley.

C.—Brief submitted by St. Francis Xavier University Extension Department.

MEMBERS OF THE
SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE ON POVERTY

The Honourable David A. Croll, Chairman

The Honourable Senators:

Bélisle	Fergusson	Lefrançois
Carter	Fournier (Madawaska-	MacDonald (Queens)
Connolly (Halifax North)	Restigouche,	McGrand
Croll	Deputy Chairman)	Pearson
Eudes	Hastings	Quart
Everett	Inman	Roebuck
		Sparrow

(18 Members)

(Quorum 6)

Patrick J. Savoie,
Clerk of the Committee.

ORDERS OF REFERENCE

Extract from the Minutes of Proceedings of the Senate of Tuesday, October 28, 1969.

"The Honourable Senator Croll, moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Roebuck:

That a Special Committee of the Senate be appointed to investigate and report upon all aspects of poverty in Canada, whether urban; rural, regional or otherwise, to define and elucidate the problem of poverty in Canada, and to recommend appropriate action to ensure the establishment of a more effective structure of remedial measures;

That the Committee have power to engage the services of such counsel, staff and technical advisors as may be necessary for the purpose of the inquiry;

That the Committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses and to report from time to time;

That the Committee be authorized to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the Committee, to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate, and to adjourn from place to place;

That the evidence taken on the subject during the preceding session be referred to the Committee; and

That the Committee be composed of the Honourable Senators Bélisle, Carter, Cook, Croll, Eudes, Everett, Fergusson, Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche), Hastings, Inman, Lefrançois, McGrand, Pearson, Quart, Roebuck and Sparrow.

After debate,

In amendment, the Honourable Senator McDonald moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Burchill, that the motion be not now adopted, but that it be amended by striking out paragraph 4 thereof and substituting therefor the following:—

"That the Committee be authorized to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the Committee, to adjourn from place to place, and notwithstanding Rule 76 (4), to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate."

After debate, and—

The question being put on the motion in amendment, it was—
Resolved in the affirmative.

The question being put on the motion of the Honourable Senator Croll, seconded by the Honourable Senator Roebuck, as amended, it was—

Resolved in the affirmative.

Extract from the Minutes of Proceedings of the Senate of Wednesday, October 29, 1969.

"With leave of the Senate,

The Honourable Senator McDonald moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Smith:

That the names of the Honourable Senators Connolly (Halifax North) and MacDonald (Queens) be added to the list of Senators serving on the Special Committee of the Senate appointed to investigate and report all aspects of poverty in Canada; and

That the name of the Honourable Senator Nichol be removed from the list of Senators serving on the said Special Committee.

The question being put on the motion, it was—
Resolved in the affirmative.

ROBERT FORTIER,
Clerk of the Senate.

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS

Dalhousie University Auditorium,
Halifax, Nova Scotia.

Tuesday, November 4th, 1969.
(2)

Pursuant to adjournment and notice the Special Senate Committee on Poverty met this day at 9.15 a.m.

Present: The Honourable Senators Croll (Chairman), Belisle, Connolly (Halifax North), Cook, Eudes, Fergusson, Hastings, Inman, McGrand, Pearson and Sparrow. (11)

In attendance: Frederick J. Joyce, Director.

The following witnesses were introduced and heard:

HALIFAX TENANTS' PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION:

Canon F. M. French, Co-Chairman.

HALIFAX NEIGHBOURHOOD CENTRE:

Leslie Cuning, Executive Director.

The presentation opened with a brief statement by Canon French, a video-tape submission, followed by remarks by Mr. Cuning. Canon French then introduced an unscheduled speaker from the Public Housing Tenants of New Waterford, Glace Bay and Sydney, Nova Scotia, namely,

Miss Sheila Gardner, assisted by Mr. Angus MacDonald.

At the conclusion of Miss Gardner's statement, the Committee resumed its questioning of the Halifax Tenants' Protective Association and Halifax Neighbourhood Centre.

The Chairman then invited the public to participate in the question period.

At the conclusion of the questioning, the Chairman thanked the two participating Associations.

The following witness was then introduced and heard:

David Critchley,
Social Worker with the Maritime School of Social Work.

At the conclusion of Mr. Critchley's presentation, the Chairman thanked him for his most informative submission.

At twelve noon, the Committee adjourned until two o'clock in the afternoon.

At two o'clock in the afternoon the Committee resumed its hearings.

The following witnesses were introduced and heard:

EXTENSION DEPARTMENT, ST. FRANCIS XAVIER UNIVERSITY, Antigonish, Nova Scotia:

Rev. G. E. Topshee, Director; and

Rev. W. E. Roach, Assistant Director.

In Attendance:

Dr. A. A. MacDonald, in charge of the Antigonish Office; and Miss Elizabeth Tower, Community Development Worker with the Micmac Indians.

(Biographical information respecting the above witnesses follows these Minutes.)

At the conclusion of the questioning, the Chairman thanked the representatives of the Extension Department of St. Francis Xavier University.

The joint brief submitted by the Halifax Tenants' Protective Association and the Halifax Neighbourhood Centre, together with the briefs received from David Critchley and St. Francis Xavier University Extension Department, are printed as Appendices A, B and C, respectively, to these Proceedings.

The following briefs were received too late for presentation but were duly acknowledged by the Chairman:

Messrs. Leo MacKay for the Nova Scotia Federation of Labour; Robert O'Haley for the Mainland Branch, Nova Scotia of Social Workers; and Leonard Smith.

At four o'clock in the afternoon, the Committee adjourned until Wednesday, November 5th, 1969, at 9.30 a.m.

ATTEST:

Patrick J. Savoie,
Clerk of the Committee.

BIOGRAPHIES RESPECTING EXTENSION DEPARTMENT, ST. FRANCIS XAVIER UNIVERSITY,
ANTIGONISH, NOVA SCOTIA

Topshee, Rev. G. E.: Director, Extension Department. He has twenty years' experience in extension work in Nova Scotia and has also worked with poor people in Southern Africa and on several Caribbean Islands.

Roach, Rev. W. M.: Associate Director, Extension Department, Sydney. He has his M.A. in Sociology from Boston College, and has ten years' experience with programs of the Extension Department in Nova Scotia.

THE SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE ON POVERTY

EVIDENCE

Halifax, Nova Scotia,
November 4, 1969.

The Special Senate Committee on Poverty met this day at 9.30 a.m.

Senator David A. Croll (Chairman) in the Chair.

The Chairman: I will call the meeting to order. This is a meeting of the Special Senate Committee on Poverty. We have a statement and video tape presentation being made on behalf of the Halifax Neighbourhood Centre and the Halifax Tenants Protective Association, with the support of the Nova Scotia Human Rights Commission, and I will call on Canon F. M. French to open the meeting.

Canon F. M. French (St. Mark's Parish, Co-Chairman of the Halifax Tenants Protective Association): This is a two-part statement, and the first part I will make, and I am Canon F. M. French, Co-Chairman of the Tenants Protective Association, and a statement will be made at the conclusion of the video tape film, and Mr. Leslie Cuning, Executive Director of the Halifax Neighbourhood Centre.

What you are about to see is, perhaps, self-explanatory. However, we of the Neighbourhood Centre and the Tenants Protective Association feel we must provide at least a brief prologue to enable you to appreciate it fully.

It is an unusual kind of presentation, and we think that it is essential that you know how it came about.

When it became known that the Senate Committee would be coming to Halifax to hold public meetings it was agreed by many concerned individuals that some kind of presentation should be made by the groups involved directly with people suffering from conditions of poverty.

At the time, we were concerned about the nature of the presentation. We felt that it was essential to give a voice to those who know poverty as it really is: the poor themselves. However, the poor do not write briefs. The people do not appreciate formality. Its colourful trappings are not part of their own daily existence. Still, formality was a requirement laid down by your Committee.

Consequently it was suggested that a film, depicting explicitly the conditions of poverty, providing a medium for the expression of the views of people living in those conditions, should be produced for showing at these hearings.

Accordingly, representatives of Halifax's poverty community met with members of our organizations, social workers, and other professionals, to discuss the preparations of such a film.

It is perhaps important to underline the fact that this discussion included those who work closely with people in poverty and some of the poor themselves.

That was, to say the least, an extraordinary meeting. One might have expected that the film proposal would have been adopted readily—that the idea of giving poor people a voice in all of this would have been embraced unanimously. But such was far from the case. Instead of unanimous approval, the meeting was characterized by a sense of anger and frustration—a mounting feeling of helplessness perhaps best summed up by the words of one of the participants: "How dare we, or anyone else, use people in this way," he asked. "It's inhuman—cruel to say the least. People around here—the poor—they've bled enough. They've been asked what it's like to be poor over and over again. So now we are going to ask them to open up their wounds and bleed some more, this time before some cameras, just because some senators from Ottawa don't know about poverty in Canada."

That, members of the Senate Committee, was our initial discussion of the film proposal. It was painful. It was agony. We were torn—in fact, we were shredded—between a feeling on the one hand of what's the use, and on the other hand that we must keep trying.

Finally, it was suggested and generally agreed that although we could not ask people to bleed once again for the sake of yet another er presentation to yet another investigation of poverty, the senators should at least have been listening to and observing the anguish of that meeting. And that, members of the Senate Committee on Poverty is what you will witness today through the medium of video tape. The frustration and growing bitterness of many people who have been battling with poverty with no promise of an end in sight.

Our purpose in appearing before you today is neither to define what poverty is nor offer a slickly-prepared presentation of proposed cures. Most of these must surely be well known to you all by now.

Through this film presentation we are endeavouring to communicate to you something of the feeling and perspective—the human perspective—of poverty.

What you are about to see is in no way contrived. This is not acting. You are asked, by way of video tape, to listen in on, to see, and, hopefully, experience some of the deeply-rooted feelings of the poor and the people who work most closely with them.

The film is not sympathetic to Committee investigations in general, or this Committee in particular. In the past this area has been researched, investigated, dissected, with no tangible results. We appear before this Committee today with some doubt in our minds about the power of this Committee and the Senate to which it is responsible to effect necessary change. It is our most fervent wish that our doubts will be proved unfounded.

The Chairman: Thank you.

(Video tape presentation shown to Committee.)

The Chairman: Mr. Leslie Cuning, Executive Director of the Halifax Neighbourhood Centre, will now speak to us.

Mr. Leslie Cuning (Executive Director, Halifax Neighbourhood Centre): Mr. Chairman and honourable senators, the senators were invited to come to the Neighbourhood Centre this afternoon at four o'clock, and I was informed last night that they would not be able to fit this into their schedule. Canon French and myself respectfully submit that they reconsider this as we have a number of questions to ask of the senators.

The Senate Committee has been, and will be, presented with innumerable pages of well-documented and substantial evidence. Instead of presenting you with another statement of recommendations we wish to communicate to you the frustrations of the poor. In the film which you just saw we are not attacking the Senate Committee as much as the political arrangements which use the Committee as an excuse for action. The Committee was set up to conduct investigations and to recommend legislation; not to create it. This form of political activity is totally inadequate to meet the needs of the poor.

In the short period of time since April your Committee has received a number of excellent briefs. You have had some time to consider the recommendations presented to you. You are aware of the extent of conditions which define poverty. You are aware that the government had access to untold numbers of documents concerning poverty, housing, taxation, and income. Hopefully, you will become aware that this problem cannot be solved by continued investigations. The poor cannot, or will not, wait another generation for the government to move. Your Committee will not table its report for one and one-half years, and who knows how much time will elapse before parts of the report are tabled in the House.

If the Committee members are sincere in recommending appropriate action we submit that the Senate Committee, realizing the extent and seriousness of poverty in Canada, recommend to the House that on the basis of information already received and available to this Committee and the government legislation be enacted immediately.

If you are unwilling to move now this Committee might as well dissolve itself.

Canon French: We have deliberately shortened up our second part as we have a request to make. There are two people who left at twelve o'clock midnight and drove all the way here from Cape Breton; we are asking that they be given a few minutes. Miss Sheila Gardner and Mr. Angus MacDonald.

The Chairman: Proceed.

Miss Sheila Gardner (Spokesman for the public housing tenants in New Waterford, Glace Bay, and Sydney, Nova Scotia): Mr. Angus MacDonald and I have been working and trying to organize, and trying to get information on the low-income housing program, and the brief is not simply documented because we couldn't get documents, and I think if you listen to it it is very short and will explain for itself the problems that the tenants in low-income housing in industrial cities face.

We are speaking for all the tenants in the Waterford public housing, and we have been meeting with the tenants in the Glace Bay public housing, and we have received the endorsement of the brief of the tenants in Sydney public housing. The only other group of public housing not represented in the brief are the people in their houses for less than a month. We have come directly to you to express our views on public housing as tenants in a poverty area. We have been in the homes for almost a year and have been having a wide variety of difficulties (some small, some very serious) ever since.

Because of the local housing conditions most of us have no choice but to come into public housing but have no choice to accept all the condition of entry.

We have a difficult time in analyzing our complaints and documenting them, as few facts are available to tenants. We are admitted on a point system; our houses are open to inspection at any time. We are charged rent by a rent scale we are still not sure of. All of this information we are working toward obtaining, but it is hard and frustrating dealing with our local authority on an equal basis. They must feel threatened by our constant complaints, and we are confronted with a wall of inaction and disinterest. So we are saying to you what we can now, since it is urgent that some changes be made in the present housing program.

First of all, on the construction of houses. Doors have blown off because they were not put on in such a way that the wind grabs them out of your hand. Bathroom sinks have fallen off at a surprising rate. Their pipes are outdated, unreplaceable, and break easily. Most of the windows leak water when it rains, so we couldn't put up a decent curtain if we had them. The walls are by no means soundproof. Our laundry lines don't hold a family wash, and we are not allowed to put up our own lines.

Fences are only wire and don't stand up to maintaining the element of privacy that they were put there for. Flat paint covers the upstairs, and it is impossible to keep clean (as the lease says we must keep clean), but we are not allowed to get proper paint.

Our floor tiles are peeling and they cannot be replaced. We report our complaints to the manager and he has recorded them. The authority tells us that they have very little money for repairs. When repairs can be done one must wait until the part-time repair man can come.

We depend totally for understanding on the manager, who comes by once a month for the rent. Once we report complaints they are out of our hands and out of our control. And they continue.

Each family unit costs $20,000 to build; the materials are cheap; the construction very poor. Some of us found empty wine bottles in the floor vents and basement when we moved in. The construction company was contracted by tender. We had no say in this and should not suffer for it. We have no say in who we deal with. We have no official recourse. Nor do we have the choice to leave. There are simply no other houses available.

We suggest therefore that the government habit of calling tenders has in our case backfired and that in future local construction companies with standard replaceable materials and known reputation be united to construct local projects.

The second point has to do with rent. As you may know, the low-income housing is based on the ability to pay by the low-income families. You are taking food out of your children's mouths and clothes off their backs to pay the rent. This is so in the case of miners, who pay from $82 to $106 a month, based on around 25 per cent of their office pay. But their office pay is not what they take home. They will take home about $63 a week for $85 office pay. The percentage paid out for rent is much higher than the established 25.2 per cent of the money they touch.

Miners feel rent should be based on take-home pay to make it realistic. As it is, they have to work extra shifts in the mine to pay the rent. Soon the mines will be on a 40-hour week and no extra shifts will be possible. What then?

That is not all. Whether we pay high rent or low rent, whether we just get by or fall back in rent, we still are trapped in public housing. The rent eats up any hope of saving, of moving, of making a down-payment on a home of our own. And public housing was supposed to be a leaping-off point, a headstart program; not to trap people financially in buildings, which after one year have proved poor.

And on top of the rent we pay extra for heat and light.

There's also the human aspect of the rent. When someone knows your rent they know your income. The authority can check up any time they want. They can challenge how we spend our money. 25.2 per cent may be realistic for some people at some times, but for large families at school openings, at winter-time, at Christmas, it becomes a real hardship. The rent scale does help low-income families to get good housing at a low rate, but it does not help any of us to get ahead, or to get out, so someone else can be "helped."

We call for a complete change in the rent scale with the following suggestions:

(a) no part-time earnings be counted against the renter or overtime pay be counted against the rent;

(b) the rent be scaled to net income at a reasonable percentage up to $60 and no higher;

(c) more realistic consideration be given to size of family and individual needs.

The social aspects. We have no privacy—neither our income, our actions, our house-keeping. We are on public display and are stuck there. The hardships do not always unite us, as we have no official voice anyway. We are tenants with a federal landlord who does as he sees fit. We have no representation on the Authority, no vote as to its composition. We have no part in planning or problem-solving. Yet we must answer to their questions and obey their orders and wait.

In conclusion, we quote the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation "Urban Renewal and Public Housing":

It is therefore important that rental in public housing be kept at the highest level consistent with the ability of tenants to pay, having regard to the other elements of living previously mentioned. Food, clothing, and miscellaneous necessary expenditures. In this way the subsidies will be kept at a satisfactory level, they will not give advantage to public housing tenants which are out of line with other available to the rest of the public.

The rentals are not at a level consistent with the abilities of the tenants to pay, having regard to the factors mentioned previously.

We have big, warm houses, and lots of others haven't. But the disadvantages seem to outweigh this one advantage. We have no privacy, no choice of location, no way out, no dignity in, and no voice.

They tell us, "If you don't like it, leave." Some of us would almost prefer the shacks we came from. But we are not allowed to live in shacks any more, and all the houses are occupied.

Thank you very much.

The Chairman: First of all, I would like to thank you on behalf of the Committee for this very fine presentation. It's a very logical and very clear and meaningful—and, secondly, you can rest assured that the minute the minutes are ready they will be before the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and they of course will be most interested in what you have to say. Thank you very much.

Miss Gardner: Thank you.

The Chairman: I would like to make it very clear regarding what Mr. Cunning said; that he had arranged a meeting for us this afternoon. We made arrangements for our own meeting before we reached here, and we made arrangements for meetings this afternoon, and our time is occupied fully.

Are there any questions?

Mrs. Beattie: Are we going to have answers to our questions, sir?

The Chairman: I think you will.

Mr. Leslie Cunning: Mr. Chairman, the point of our presentation was to have questions answered.

The Chairman: Well, if you have questions, go ahead.

From the floor: Mrs. Beattie. My question, sir, regards various things. The rental structure in housing does not give people the chance to get ahead. Our tax system does not give people a chance to get ahead. I tried working six days a week for five months to get ahead with a total net income of $18 a week. Is this Committee going to put forward a submission that a working couple be permitted to deduct the expense of housekeepers, et cetera, from income tax in the same manner that a businessman can deduct expensive dinners? We want to get ahead. We don't want welfare, but we want to get up the ladder, and we don't want to be poor all of our lives. What is the Committee going to do to help us in that respect?

The Chairman: Well, I am glad you asked the question. I haven't had a chance to say anything up here for a while. In connection with the tax structure, we have had many presentations made to us recommending that the people who earned less than $5,000 a year pay a disproportionate portion of the taxes, both direct and indirect, and when I spoke in the Senate on it, and these members were all present, I brought that forcibly to their attention that was quite unfair.

Now, I think that the White Paper which will be filed on Friday will carry much of the Carter Commission Report, which recommended that there be some relief given in that respect. I don't know what it contains, but I gather that that would be one of the approaches that will be made to try and lessen the burden on those people—and I take it those figures are correct—below the $5,000 level. That is all I can say to you because that's all I know at the moment.

Now, in connection with the matter of housekeepers; the matter arose when a woman, a single woman, divorced, deserted with a family, had to go out and work and makes an application and says, "I have to have a housekeeper and I want a deduction."

A man under similar circumstances hires a housekeeper and does get a deduction. A girl doesn't get a deduction, or didn't get a deduction, but she does now. It came to our attention, and we brought it to the attention of the Income Tax Department, and immediately the matter was corrected, because it was quite clearly unfair. How this applies to a couple, I don't quite know. If they are both working, that is something new as far as the regulations are concerned, and I can't tell you what their view will be on that, but we have dealt with some of these matters as we have gone along.

Mrs. Beattie: Well, I don't know how familiar you are with the cost of living in Halifax, but for a couple with children to live it's necessary to take additional income.

The Chairman: Yes.

Mrs. Beattie: If you want to exist on the minimum wage that we have here you can barely exist, but this does not include clothing; it does not include the husband and wife going to the occasional movie, or something like that, because the incomes do not allow it. I think if a couple is prepared to work—if they are prepared to work, say, six or seven days a week in order to support themselves and their families—they are not drawing welfare, they are not drawing public assistance; our government should do something to give them the incentive to try to get ahead; not take the incentive from them.

The Chairman: Madam, you make a case. It's a very good question, and one of the reasons we are here, despite the fact that people would like to see the occasional movie, the Senate Committee in November decided that Halifax wasn't like Florida; that is, we are not down here for a holiday. We know the purpose of our visit. We came here to find such things as you have raised and the other people have said, and one of the greatest submissions that has been made to this Committee in all the time we were sitting—and we have been sitting over a period of some time—was made here by the first submission by the staff members and associates of the Institute of Public Affairs of Dalhousie University. We thank you very much.

Mr. Murray Warrington: I am going to take another swipe at your federal participation.

The Chairman: Please speak up.

Mr. Warrington: The subsidized housing leaves a lot to be desired. The first thing, it's run like a warden runs a penitentiary. The only crime that the inmates have committed in public housing is that they have no homes of their own. In penitentiaries the people have committed crimes and they have been penalized. In public housing if the people—like the lady has just said—have the desire to work, up goes the rent; some of them to over $200 a month.

Mr. Chairman, have you got any public housing anywhere that's worth $200 a month? When there was a vacancy on the Housing Commission, which is represented by the federal, the provincial, and the civic governments, we asked to put a tenants association member on there and they put nobody on there.

Another thing is, I will go a step farther—the federal government is the biggest participating monetary partner in urban renewal and in re-development. You have supplied 75 cents out of every dollar which have bought up the properties and housing which existed in these areas which a lot of people were on low income, and these people were kicked out of their homes and forced into public housing. Should this be?

When you people, as the biggest money contributor to these schemes, should have laid down some ground rules and you didn't lay down any. What answer have you got to that?

The people who own their own homes and now are forced to live in this so-called crack-cracker boxes they call public housing; they leave a lot to be desired.

The Chairman: Well, Mr. Warrington, the federal government is a great contributor to public housing and urban renewal, but they do not control it. You know as well as I do it's controlled at the local level or municipal or provincial. Not that I am shifting, but those are the facts of life. There isn't very much that we can do with respect to urban renewal; we haven't really got into that problem, so...

Mr. Warrington: Well, I am afraid that that is not quite true, because you hold all the money and without this 75 cents out of every dollar to contribute to urban renewal programs, the provincial governments and the civic governments could not do urban renewal and then the people would not lose their homes and be forced into sub-standard housing, which they do not want.

The Chairman: All right. Let it go at that. We disagree.

Mr. Cunning: Mr. Chairman, may I make a comment on Mr. Warrington's suggestion? Submissions have been made to the housing authority in this city and the statements that have come from there is that they do not have discretionary powers in these matters. They exist somewhere, but as far as we are concerned we can't get the information where the power is. We can't get the information as to who has the discretionary powers.

Mr. Warrington: The federal government.

Mr. Cunning: The proposals were just released for the City of Halifax last week, and there were some conditions associated with the building of public housing, and there was an extension ratio which was 8 per cent return to CMHC and there was concern about maintaining the trees and concern about obtaining the maximum feasible and economic rents from these people in public housing. Nowhere does it mention the conditions under which the people live.

The Chairman: Are there any questions for these two witnesses?

Mrs. Carrie Best: Mr. Chairman, did I understand you to say that decisions re public housing is made on the local level although the government does provide 75 cents on the dollar, or 75 per cent?

The Chairman: That's right. I said that.

Mrs. Best: Is that true?

The Chairman: That's right.

Mrs. Best: Does not the government have any control over those at local level who would take advantage of poor people?

The Chairman: No. They leave it to them, and we merely contribute. The local people—the local government—

Mrs. Best: Mr. Chairman, I am not going to mention names, but I am going to tell you of a case where I happen to know that in a certain area where the local government systematically for five years planned the removal of a certain section of the community both white and black for the sole purpose of taking their lands from them for industrial purposes. Does the government—have they no recourse to that at all? They did it by giving them phony tax bills—five years, maybe ten years, tax statements making it impossible for them to redeem their properties; then they published their properties even though they already owned them.

The town has come along and taken them by certificate of purchase five years before. They gave them a ten-year tax certificate for the sole purpose of making an industrial area. It is stopped—and it is now in a stagnant stage because we are prepared to fight it. And when I say "fight" I mean that.

Now, does the government not have any control over those people? They have an urban renewal report and all those who are involved in it were also involved in the complete destruction of this section of hard-working, respectable people, both black and white.

Now, my question is—and I am planning to ask the Nova Scotia Human Rights Commission to give me an answer to this—I want to know if the government is going to say something about local politicians, local crooks, who do this to poor people. That is my question.

The Chairman: Madam, I have listened to what you have to say, and when you talk about local politicians and you talk about local crooks, and I don't think that was very becoming, but the answer to that is, that the federal government has no authority. It's a local matter at the provincial, or municipal-provincial level. We have no authority to deal with such matters as you raise here this morning.

Now, I think we should ask some questions here. Tell me, I believe one of you spoke of the minimum wage. What is the minimum wage in Halifax?

Mr. Warrington: It's on the sixth page.

Canon French: The minimum wage varies from region to region in Nova Scotia. As a matter of fact, the comment I would make on that is, it's too low, and the fact of the matter is—there's no sense beating around the bush about wages or anything else; they're too low. The wages and incomes are too low for our people, and they just cannot survive. This is one of the main problems and one of the urgent problems, and, frankly, I don't know what the exact minimum wages are—as I said, it varies—but in respect to the situation regarding wages, all I can say is that they are much too low.

Unfortunately, in most cases, two people in the family have to work, and this is one of the things that we wanted to bring before the attention of this Committee, and the people of Canada. As Mrs. Best has said, what we are looking for is action. We are going and we are determined to have people's organizations across this land who are going to press upon the authorities the urgency of the situation, and action is the only answer.

The Chairman: Well, let's discuss action for a moment and see who fixes the minimum wages in the Province of Nova Scotia.

Canon French: The provincial government.

The Chairman: Would you be surprised if I told you it was a dollar and a quarter?

Canon French: We know that it is an irrelevant fact. We know it's too damn low. The poor people are being asked to survive on starvation wages, and this is a fact. The actual figures are just totally irrelevant at this point; and the fact still remains that they are too low. The incomes which people are expected to struggle on are too low. The one question we want to know is, how much longer are we going to have to continue this way? Buddy Daye said in the original film, "When are we going to get at the causes of this situation?"

I just want to say that a program on television the other evening, programs which were on almost back to back, one involving Prime Minister Trudeau and one involving a past prime minister. One politician was saying that 40 years ago one of our main problems was poverty, and the present prime minister was commenting on the fact that the situation has not improved in that time. We are still investigating poverty; commissions after commissions; we are being X-rayed and gouged and investigated with all sorts of ameliorating financial arrangements getting at the causes of our problems. That, sir, is what we want to talk about, and not have a discussion on the minimum wages.

The Chairman: Well, Canon French, I think you will be interested in knowing that one of the items before the Senate Committee on Poverty at different times has been a very deliberate and hard attack on minimum wages which we consider to be poverty wages.

I will give you a quote from the fellow who was sitting in the chair—and he was speaking of organized labour and unorganized labour. He said, "They marched in the picket line to avoid the poverty line." I think that tells the story.

Now, you have your views on the minimum wages, but you must realize that we under federal authority cannot deal with it at all. It's a local matter purely. What representations have been made to the appropriate authorities and what results, if any; when were the representations made? We are very much interested in that, and that is what I meant to ask you.

Canon French: Well, I have given you the answer, and I don't intend to get into a hassle over the minimum wages. The fact is that all across the board between four and five million Canadians are living below the poverty level in wages and income. This is the issue, and this is the issue we want to have stated.

Our main purpose here, and in presenting this film, was to give you an idea of what the poor people are up against. We don't care what the technical problems are, but the point is—and, quite frankly, that there is between four and five million Canadians living at the poverty level, and frankly we work with these people and they want to know what is going to be done.

I don't intend to be drawn into discussion over the minimum wages.

The Chairman: Go ahead.

Mr. Robert Petterson: In your concern about minimum wages—you should also be concerned with those who aren't even covered by minimum wages, which are the majority of women; waitresses, and most of the people in the service industries. These people aren't even covered by minimum wages.

The Chairman: You are quite right in what you are saying, and that is quite true. We discussed this yesterday.

Mr. Petterson: But the concern shouldn't be just to the minimum wages. There are far more people who aren't even covered by the minimum wage.

The Chairman: But the concern is that the minimum wage is too low, and we have given a great deal of attention to that, and there are exemptions that almost make it meaningless. We are aware of that and we have dealt with it on other occasions.

Mr. David Mackie: Senators, regarding your remarks—

The Chairman: Alderman Mackie?

Mr. Mackie: That is correct, sir. In light of the remarks that you have made here today, would it be possible for your Committee to advise the proper provincial and civic authorities that they are completely responsible and have the control over public housing and also advise CMHC that it is a matter of—under control of provincial and civic authorities?

The Chairman: Well, you are an alderman; what is your view?

Mr. Mackie: My opinion was, until you spoke, sir, it was 75% was controlled by the federal government.

The Chairman: Right; that's your view.

Mr. Mackie: That is what we were told by the officials of CMHC.

Miss Maudie Golden: My name is Maudie Golden, and I am a social worker and I deal fairly regularly with poor people, and I think on two occasions before you have mentioned that we don't have the authority to do this, we don't have the authority to do that. What I know is that the people who come into my office, they don't care whether it's the provincial government that gives them the wrong end of the stick or whether it's the civic government, or whether it's the federal government.

They just know that somebody is telling them that they have to live on $70 a month. They have to live on $200 a month with six kids. You are saying you don't have the authority, and my question to you is, what can and will you do about this?

The Chairman: We will let you know in due course after we consider your brief. For your own information—and I heard you on the video tape; you were quite outspoken (which you had a perfect right to do)—but we are aware of what is going on, fully aware, but you must realize that the Senate Committee in the last five or six years has been the most productive on behalf of the poor people in this country. Far more than any other body, and far more good than any other group over a period of years.

A voice from the Floor: Where are the results?

The Chairman: Where are the results? I will tell you. I will tell you what the results are.

We were the first people who brought in a recommendation for the guaranteed income for the old people, resulting now in them receiving $105 a month. We were the people who raised the matter of truth in lending in order to make sure that you knew what you were paying in the way of interest if you paid it on your own.

We were the people who raised the question of the food costs and had investigations across the country on that matter. We were the people who raised the question of use of land, and as a result of that we now have ARDA.

We were the people who raised the question of manpower. This resulted in the formation of the Department of Manpower. We were the people who raised the matter of consumers. This resulted in the formation of the Department of Consumer Affairs. Every one of those has benefited the people of Canada, and I neglected to tell you that after 100 years we were the people who wrote the new divorce laws, if that has any impression on you.

Canon French: Meanwhile the poverty situation continues to get worse.

The Chairman: There is no one who makes any defence for poverty. I have known poverty longer than any of the rest of you for a long, long time, but take my word for it, that when you say that poverty is becoming worse in this country, you are not up to the minute on the thing.

We gave the figures yesterday that the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, with whose figures we have to live, indicated that there was a drop from about 3% over the period in the last two years. This was in regard to those considered on the poverty line, whatever that may be, so that generally the condition is improving somewhat, although we still have three-and-a-half-million people below the poverty line.

If we thought it was being cured, we wouldn't be here. This is not an easy task that we are undertaking.

Senator Connolly: Mr. Chairman, there is no point to be served in us being engaged in acrimonious debate—either the members of this Committee or the people of the audience. I think that all fair-minded people would agree that the members of this Committee are human beings with all the sympathy and compassion that they have and with just as much knowledge that they have, and with just as many desires as they project for the better lot of their fellow human beings.

If we can go along with that reasoning, which I believe is a reasonable one, I think we will make much better progress than we have been making.

The Chairman: Thank you, Senator Connolly.

Are there any questions from the senators?

Senator Hastings: I would like to put this on the record for continuity. In the last paragraph of the brief they say: "They are beginning to demand a voice in the decisions which affect them and if they are ignored they will be forced to take direct action."

Would you tell me, sir, quite frankly what you mean by "direct action"?

Mr. Cunning: I think in other parts of the brief I state that the opportunity for achieving entrance into the political system is limited. People who are poor—they lack the organization, they lack the education, they lack the leadership with which they can articulate, and I pointed out also that there is a growing consensus among political observers that politics involve the aggregate but they don't involve individuals.

We are pointing out that thus far the action has been totally inadequate and we are saying now that you have to take direct action. If you don't take steps to curb this poverty then the action we will take will be disastrous.

Senator Hastings: What is the action?

Mr. Cunning: Rent strikes. Rent strikes as advocated by the mayor last night. Consumer products, public housing, co-operatives; people could establish their own co-operatives. This type of thing.

Mr. Warrington: Mr. Chairman, perhaps you might be able to answer this question, or maybe you can't. You say that the federal government has nothing to do in the control of subsidized housing. Well, would you please answer one question, as to why the chief magistrate of this city has said that he made

(and I think this is on record in council minutes)—that he made representations to a federal government agency, which is CMHC, to change their structure rate for rents, and they would have nothing to do with it.

They wouldn't change it at all, and this is the chief magistrate of the city, and he said that they can't change them; that the CMHC with the federal government's representative must change them.

I would also like to ask another question which you might answer, if you could. I have heard by way of the grapevine that they have built already in the United States concentration camps for the poor people who are bucking the government and the power structures for their rights. By way of secrecy would they be starting to build them here in Canada?

The Chairman: Are there any other questions?

Reverend Fred Tassenari: What I hear so far is that poverty is being restricted to money and goods. We listened to a brief from the young lady from Cape Breton in which they do have a warm house and they have a warm home, but they have the poverty appearance.

Do you intend to get involved in the poverty of spirit?

The Chairman: By all means. The brief that follows is involved with poverty of the spirit.

I will now call on Mr. David Critchley to present a brief to us. Mr. Critchley is a social worker connected with the Maritime School of Social Work.

Mr. David Critchley: Thank you, Senator Croll, and members of the Special Senate Committee on Poverty. Just by way of a brief summary on a few of the comments I made in my brief, and also to mention a number of the members of the Faculty of Students who have endorsed this brief and ten members of the faculty and 16 students.

In my brief I am noting that although we have in some respects seeing an improvement as far as poverty in Canada is concerned in terms of such things as some increases in welfare payments, I would think probably better health care and health welfare is more readily available for more Canadians and Canadian children. Canadian children and poor children are staying in school longer and education is more readily available to them.

In terms as we as Canadians, the poor are just as relatively poor as they were ten, twenty or thirty years ago.

I think you could probably make a good case for saying that in these things they are poorer today. Certainly in my experience with poor people, I have found a mounting sense of despair and a mounting sense of hopelessness as the gap between them and the rest of us continues to grow, so that while they may be getting better health care and their diets may be somewhat improved, the gap between the have and have-nots I submit today is a greater gap, and in effect contributes to this sense of disparity and hopelessness, some of which I think is in the room today; although I submit there are probably very few really poor people in the room today.

In my brief I am to introduce a new dimension in this question of poverty, and it was a new dimension that was suggested by the last person that spoke in the presentation before mine. I am suggesting that we have to think in terms not merely of deprivation in such areas as food, and such areas as housing; there is no question that there is certainly a deprivation in these areas, but I would like to suggest that we need to give more attention as to what is happening in all Canadians in psychic or spiritual terms.

I am suggesting in my brief that in this sense I think that if the real facts were known, we would find that there really is a considerable amount of psychic deprivation in Canada that affects us all; the haves and the have-nots.

By suggesting psychic deprivation in my brief, I am suggesting the dimension of self-esteem, self-confidence. What do human beings think of themselves as a person? In these areas such studies as we do have would suggest that we Canadians, and we North Americans, are poor. Some of us—and not just the ones confined to the ranks of the poor—are suffering considerable psychic deprivation. Loss of faith in ourselves and others is—and I go into this in a little more detail in the brief—I am suggesting, one criteria that we need to look at because it seems to me that poverty so far has been something that the haves are concerned about as a problem affecting others. I think if we introduce this other dimension, but not just poverty of the body but the poverty of the mind and spirit, then I think we will find that we are all involved in the challenge by this kind of poverty.

I am suggesting in my brief that some of the symptoms of this kind of deprivation are to be found in the French-English, Catholic-Protestant, Black-white, young person-old person, student administration conflict that is increasingly coming to the fore in our society. This phenomenon that has been described as alienation, I submit, is no more merely something that one speculates about. I think we see alienation between people on all sides, and this certainly affects all of us, and it's not just confined to the poor.

Incidentally, I think one of the reasons that the poor are so seldom at poverty hearings and so seldom make presentations is not because the groups such as the Senate Committee lack the desire to hear from the poor, but I think it is as a result of what happened because of the poverty.

Poverty does not make for self-confidence. It does not make for self-esteem. The representatives of the poor who speak for the poor are really quite unusual. They are not representatives of the poor. The self-confidence that they must have just to stand up and talk is not had by most poor people.

A concern that I haven't dealt with in the brief, but as a result of some of the feeling here this morning and some of the feelings we have in Canada today, I would like to—would be this. I would see an increasing disillusionment with the democratic process. When we say "democratic process" I think we forget that really the democratic process is just another way of saying "human values," and I see increasing disillusionment with human values; with the human way of relating to other human beings with human caring solutions.

If I could give a brief illustration. In a class that I taught a year ago in social work and social change, with only two or three exceptions, there was little in the way of subscription by the student social workers to the irrational means of the rational discussions, presentations, parliamentary approach to solving the problems.

The basic feeling of that class was that if you want real change in an area, the only way to get it is to use force or the threat of force and violence.

I would like to submit to you (I don't know what the situation is in regards to the poor) but certainly with regards to many people in Canada today I would like to submit that this really is our commitment. We have very little respect for parliamentary process, for committee process, for the discussion process, and that there is an increasing commitment to and allegiance to the belief that the only way that people will move is when they are under the pressure of fear or violence.

I think that—and I have found this dilemma in my brief—and I submit it in some sincerity and with some hope, and I had to decide whether I would present a brief that came out of despair or to present a brief that came out of hope. I chose the hope.

However, I would say that I do think that this is one of the challenges of the day. People have to decide on what assumption they are going to move, whether they are going to move on the assumption that we humans are only respectful of force and violence and fear and that humanitarian motivation is idealistic and inappropriate or we can move on the assumption that we humans are still human, and that one of the reasons we are taking such a long time significantly to come to grips with such a question as poverty is that we really don't know the true costs, the true human costs, of poverty.

I am submitting to you in my brief that this is indeed one of our difficulties; that we tend to measure poverty in material terms. We tend to measure poverty in terms of whether housing is or is not better; whether people are eating better; whether fewer or more people are unemployed. And these are significant criteria.

I would like to suggest to you that those who have really seen the true cost of poverty will know that the true cost is not the people that you have seen starving to death, but the true cost is the living death—the living death of the spirit that so many people in this country are subjected to, and so many people I submit to you really live their entire lives without ever having lived at all. Their obituary really should have started or been written several years after birth. I have seen a lot of this kind of poverty, and I submit to you that when you have really seen that, when you have really experienced this in human terms, when that woman who, in the way she approaches her children and approaches her husband, and so on, who is so upsetting to us and our families, when you really know this person as a human being I submit to you that the old standards, that the old worries that we have with regard to the poor really have to go out the window.

I hope this is true. If it is not true, then I submit to you that the people who are putting bombs in mailboxes, the people who fire brands and asking questions afterwards are probably more in tune with the Canadian future than we who are still committed to the idea that humans can still be humans.

I am suggesting in my brief by way of concrete presentation that, one, that we need in Canada what I am describing as a psychic inventory. I would call it a spiritual inventory. And yet when I use this term I think that many people believe that I am speaking for a church, or that I am speaking for organized religion.

What I mean is, is an inventory of what is happening to us as human beings in this country. Some people have said that this really is a most idealistic and unrealistic proposal. I would like to suggest to you that it is not an unrealistic proposal. It is not an idealistic proposal.

Day in and day out we are taking such inventories of individual humans—children and adults—right across this country, and although we may be very suspicious of things like intelligence tests and so on and so forth, there are some personality inventories that we can take that are reliable that can tell you or me what our psychic health is.

I submit to you that the sooner that we take such a psychic inventory of all of us Canadians and find out how we are as humans, the sooner we will perhaps get the kind of feeling, human motivation, and I think this is a requirement to deal specifically with this question of poverty, and of any other kind of problem involving human beings that we have in this country.

I have some comments on the guaranteed annual income. I am trying to be specific here, but it seems to me that what you call a guaranteed annual income, or negative taxation, or whatever you want to call it, we should not get tied up with this terminology. We should not too easily let guaranteed annual income fall from our lips.

I am suggesting to you that whatever we do with regards to the poor, the need to ask ourselves, "Are we willing to guarantee them the means to participate in our society, whether or not they work for a living or whether or not their beliefs, ideas, morals, agree or disagree with ours?"

Therefore, what I am suggesting is a challenge, that in this day and age a Canadian who does not have in his home—he may not want it—but a Canadian who does not have in his home a television set, who does not have a radio, and a Canadian who does not have a car, that he can drive and repair and fill with gas, a Canadian who does not or cannot have an annual vacation, a Canadian who does not have access to reading material (both reading material in a public library but reading material which he can buy) through a daily newspaper, a Canadian who does not have these things—who cannot, for example, afford to go to a movie or to go to the Winnipeg Ballet, which was in town—that Canadian is a poor Canadian.

That Canadian cannot participate in Canadian life, and I am suggesting to you that whether we call it a guaranteed annual income or not, the true challenge to us today is whether or not we are willing to guarantee such means to participate in Canadian society to all Canadians irrespective of whether they are working or do not work. That to me is the real challenge, and unfortunately in my experience the answer from most people has been definitely not. I am recommending that such a version of the guaranteed annual income be the only appropriate version that we consider. Any other version I would see as only being a more effective way of a delivery system.

All we would be doing is re-organizing our way of delivering money to the poor, probably make it more efficient, less costly, but we will still be using the same standards, and therefore we will still worry about whether the person plays bingo, or whether the person throws money away, whether or not he has a car, whether or not he has a television set, and as long as we continue on those standards we will not do anything about poverty.

I am pessimistic in this in that I don't believe that society can guarantee a guaranteed annual income. I would suspect that in the years ahead there is a good chance we will be instead faced with the challenge of educating millions of Canadians not to work. We would be educating them to occupy themselves creatively, and satisfying themselves apart from the world of work.

Some people are suggesting that the hippies today are in some respect a symptom of the future. I have another recommendation in the brief, and I am suggesting that because I think that most of us will not accept such a version of the guaranteed annual income and some of us I think are quite concerned that this would indeed not be helpful to people; that it would be demoralizing to a person. And I am suggesting that we take a limited step in this direction and that we set up research projects that will on a selected basis guarantee some of the poor the means to participate in society as I suggested, whether or not they work; and that on this limited basis of perhaps a five-year period we find what happens to a person when in effect you guarantee him a television set, a car, and the means to participate in society. Does it demoralize him?

Coming to an end here...

The Chairman: I don't mean to interrupt you, but tell us what you think.

Mr. Critchley: I personally don't think it will. I have a section here that is to me a significant recommendation, but it's more partly related to this business of having some slight despair as to just what we would do. I have a section on school and teachers, and it would seem to me that here is a place where we should pay far more attention than we do. There are so many bits and pieces of evidence now available that indicates that some of the terrible things that happen to human beings happen in schools.

In this whole area of self-esteem and self-development, that many, many, many thousands of our young people are having experiences in school that in effect are destroying them as human beings. Now, "destroying" is a big thing; but definitely demoralizing them, and definitely resulting in their leaving schools less human than when they went in. If we really wanted to do something about this state of affairs and every other area, the poor suffer more in this area than anyone else, but we all suffer from it.

If we wanted to do something it would appear that we can now virtually guarantee that every child in this country will have adults called teachers in daily contact with them who have been trained to help that child become more rather than less. This is something that in this day and age we should—we just don't seem to be aware of. We are still saying that teachers are born and not made, and not realizing that we can immediately if we want right across this country guarantee, virtually guarantee, that the poor and other Canadians, while they're in school will be in association with adult models who will help them to become more, as I say, rather than less than what they are, and therefore I have a recommendation in the brief to this effect.

Finally, I am suggesting that Canada initiated by the federal government—set up a research and training institute in human relations. The name really is immaterial, but I just wanted to get the word "human" in there.

I think that there is a terrible lack between what we know about the human being in our society and what we do with regards to him. There is all kinds of time and money being put into research in this area by social scientists of all kinds, and for the most part this kind of information is not available to most of us.

I think if we have a research and training institution in human relations we could have a national resource that would begin on a systematic basis to compile what we know and what we are finding out about the human being in our society. Such a body I am suggesting—one of the first steps you could take would be to take a psychic inventory of Canadians so that we would have laid out in front of us what our psychic or spiritual health is.

I have talked longer than I intended, but that in essence is a summary of what I have to say in my brief.

The Chairman: Thank you.

Senator McGrand?

Senator McGrand: You made a statement that I am most interested in, when you said that there were experiences in school that help to destroy the children, and I would agree with you very much on that. This comes at a time when never in our history have we spent so much money in the building of schools and school buildings.

Now, would you just go ahead and explain what you meant by these experiences in school that destroy the children?

Mr. Critchley: I think for a variety of reasons; some of them because of crowded classrooms, some of them because of the demands of an educational system that are geared more to a retaining and memorizing of facts or information than the feeding back of it in the form of examinations—unfortunately, sometimes—and I am afraid all too often—because of inadequate teachers. Teachers who in effect cannot form with the child an effective helping human relationship.

Because of these variety of reasons that for many, many children school is a very frightening, demoralizing experience. There is a lot of experimental documentation just in the guidance end. If parents were not so afraid of retaliation and retribution from the schools—and this by the way, anybody who has worked with parents; I am not just talking now of the poor—this is one of their big fears.

If they were not so afraid and told of the terrible costs and the kind of thing that happened to their children during the course of the school day—unfortunately, very often at the hands of the teachers.

In my brief I am suggesting that we can make a choice between school buildings and teacher training that, for goodness' sake, if we do have to make that choice, let's put our money on the training of teachers and let's put it on getting effective, good teachers.

I don't know if that was a specific enough answer...

Senator McGrand: Would you include in this destroying of children the placing of emphasis on the wrong subjects in schools; certain subjects are over-emphasized and there are subjects that should be of interest in the development of a child that are neglected?

Mr. Critchley: Now, this would be an area that I am just—that I just don't feel I have the time to really answer, but if you want me to tell you what research has found to be the three most significant characteristics of a teacher, I can tell you that.

I can also tell you that we can train teachers to develop these, but the upsetting thing is that we so seldom do.

The Chairman: What do you mean by "dimensions"?

Mr. Critchley: Well, dimension—and here it is quite a problem because we use different names, but dimension in teacher genuineness. A person coming through as a self-congruent, non-defensive, non-up-on-a-pedestal human being, and by this we don't mean a person who let's the class run away with him. This kind of genuine, open, available human person. That is one characteristic.

Another is just the characteristic of entity. The ability to feel with and to understand the feeling of another person. I submit that many of the things that go on in the classroom would never go on if this ability were more developed. So often what happens to a child no one knows about this because people, when they are hurt, seldom scream out. These are two of their characteristics.

The third, and probably the most obvious one, is just the characteristic known as love or warmth. This would communicate the feeling "I care about you." "I care about you irrespective of the clothes you are wearing or the rings you are wearing," and so on, and so forth.

These qualities—I am not sure whether we are born with them, but the fact of the matter is, we can all develop them to a much greater degree, but the trouble is, most of us don't have the time.

Senator Fergusson: Mr. Chairman, my question is very much the same. Mr. Critchley seems to think that this is something we can do and do quite quickly in our schools to see that the right kinds of teachers are there.

Wouldn't it take a long time to provide teachers such as you suggest? Wouldn't they have to train, and then we would have to screen them, and wouldn't this take quite a long period of time before we could supply those kind of teachers in the schools?

Mr. Critchley: I would say no because what I would start with would be starting with the way things are. Not looking at the problem of teachers' shortage; just looking at the teachers that we have at this time.

In the experiences that I have had and what I know of other training programs, just starting with the teachers that we have we could significantly improve the quality of what they are delivering in schools. I start with the assumption that no teacher really goes into teaching wanting to be an ineffective teacher or wanting to harm children, so I am assuming that they are good teachers. It's just that they don't have the opportunity or means to deliver those things.

Senator Fergusson: Well, how would you change them; would you begin training in the schools or teacher training colleges?

Mr. Critchley: Yes. In training in the schools, in training in the teachers' colleges. Some teacher training programs have reached the point where they are stressing these personal characteristics, but unfortunately many of them, though, do not guarantee the delivery. They in effect say, "What are the personal characteristics of a teacher that make for effective teaching?" He will pass if he can remember but that is not good enough. We have to guarantee that that person can deliver those in his own way.

By the way, this is something not with respect to teachers; this is something that we have done in the training of people to staff mental hospitals. They have, for example, taken the attendants that have perhaps Grade 11 or Grade 12 education, and these are people who have been moved in to hospitals and called upon to pick up, clean up, and scrub up, and some of the undesirable things that professionals don't do. They have taken these people and in the space of 100 hours trained them to be able to be therapeutically effective with seriously-disturbed mental patients.

Now, I suggest, or submit to you, that if that can be done with Grade 11 or Grade 12 education with mental patients, then could we really do in our schools and training centres?

The Chairman: Senator Connolly?

Senator Connolly: Mr. Chairman, first of all may I express my personal thanks to the witness for his wonderful and excellent brief. Obviously, he has put a great deal of time and attention into it, and applied all of the knowledge and experience to the practical application to social problems. You, sir, have done all this in support of a guaranteed annual income, but you concede in your brief that even a guaranteed annual income will not eradicate poverty. I accept that because it is my own view, but our reasons for accepting that are different. I am wondering whether you are prepared to ameliorate the conditions that you attribute to this problem.

You say, for example, that this will be so because it will be the product of the same old ways applicable to the poor who suffer, but I think—I agree because unfortunately far too many humans do not know how to handle money.

I would ask you for your comment on that after I put another question to you.

The hypothetical point at which this guaranteed annual income should start. I say "hypothetical" because no one knows where it should be with a certainty.

Would you agree that it probably would not remain at that level, and, if not, how would you differentiate? Would it go up with the increase of the cost of living; would it go down with the decrease of the cost of living; or what would happen with that annual income?

Mr. Critchley: The honest answer is that I don't know what would happen, and that is why I pay more attention not to money, but to the material means to participate in society so that what I would be in effect advocating, no matter whether its money or no matter how it's done, that when we say, "Why are we going to guarantee to all Canadians"—let's fact it, we already have a guaranteed annual income called welfare, but the thing is, it's tied in to such things as scope, and some of the departments argue about whether or not scope should be part of the basis for determining the income that you will guarantee to this welfare client.

What I would be suggesting is that other things, such as cars, would be the criteria that you would base your income on, or measure on, and that in effect you would be guaranteeing the means to participate in society.

How it's done through a guaranteed annual income, I don't really know. We, for example, do in our public library system guarantee that Canadians who have the desire to read can read. This usually applies to those, and for the price of a ten-cent library card. I think it would be interesting to know if we are living in effect to guarantee television sets on the same basis.

We have public parks and public camping grounds, and in that respect we are guaranteeing to all Canadians, if they have a means to get there, the means of enjoying the out-of-doors. If they don't have a car and the transportation to get there, of course they won't, so that is why I am talking more in straight material terms rather than income terms. I would think that if you did deliver income as a means to participate...

Senator Connolly: Would they have a bank balance besides a car?

Mr. Critchley: Well, I think you might find that—you see, I am more interested in the means to participate. Some people would not want this. They might well say, "This income I would use in other ways." They might not want a television set.

What I am suggesting here; that they be given the means to participate and these are some criteria of participation in our society. It might be that someone would choose to do without the car, do without the television set, do without the radio and as such might be far better off than myself.

I think that I have the right to make those decisions and everybody should have the right. I think everybody should also have the right to misuse their income. You see, I have that right already.

The Chairman: We use it; don't worry about that.

Senator Connolly: Well, then, you do believe, to paraphrase the language of a best-seller, that the poor will always be with us?

Mr. Critchley: No, I don't. I hope not.

Senator Connolly: Well, you said so. You say so in your brief. To use the word "relative," it's true, but it will always be here, you say. You say it will always be here because of our attitudes. You say this on page 4 in the second-last paragraph.

You say "the poor will still be with us."

Mr. Critchley: Well, if you just take the beginning of the sentence:

I submit that if the guaranteed annual income is a product of the present ethic of our society we will find that after it has been instituted the poor will still be with us, as relatively poor as always and as numerous as ever.

I believe that if we really do care what happens to the people...

Senator Connolly: I will forgive you because your brief is generally so good.

The Chairman: Well, actually, we are not disagreeing here.

Senator Pearson: The question of the guaranteed income and the figures that have been given roughly as to what is considered as guaranteed annual income.

The question that I would pose—and I can't find an answer to it myself, and I am just wondering if you can give an answer to it.

When you get this guaranteed income, what is to prevent the local authority in taking a bigger tax bite out of the thing to fill in their coffers, because there is all sorts of services that they have to give, and they can't find the money for it. This guaranteed income comes in from the federal government, and what is to stop them from stepping in and saying, "Well, your taxes are going to be so-and-so." Have you any idea of what will prevent this?

Mr. Critchley: No. I think this is where I am quite idealistic. I believe that if we knew what was happening to us in the human terms, that we would in our decision-making into human priorities rather than what I feel of the present priorities—and I mean there are very seldom human priorities; so that would be one of the hopes that I would have.

I think it's really a challenge to our country today: are we going to put the emphasis on human terms or some kind of monetary terms?

The Chairman: Senator Inman?

Senator Inman: Mr. Chairman, I was interested in the witness saying that he—everybody should have certain rights to squander their income.

Now, if there was a guaranteed income would you feel that they have a right to squander this income and then be left in the poverty condition and have to be helped again?

Mr. Critchley: I would say yes, because I really do feel that if we make our decision on the kind of basis that I am suggesting that one fact would emerge; that is, that most people are not anti-social. Most people who squander are anti-social. They don't care about their fellow man. Usually they don't care about themselves, when it comes right down to it. And I think there are many, many statistics that support this fact.

So I think if we instituted measures that in effect would increase self-esteem and self-congruance, and our society itself, we would find a lot of these people with irresponsible behaviour going down as we increase our measures to improve ourselves in this whole psychic health area.

This, actually, is not idealistic. Those who work with the poor have seen them become self-determining and self-supporting and self-responsible and social. Those who in the beginning weren't, have found without exception that there is a direct correlation between how they behave and how they feel about themselves.

If you have low self-esteem chances are that you will be anti-social; that you will not be able to function effectively in society. Here again, I think that we have to pay attention to this area, and this is why really it's a crime that so many of our programs are mass programs. They deliver mass services. What many of the poor need is a human relationship with a human being who communicates "care". Those poor who have had that (and I am afraid that actually our record is very poor), just because you guarantee them a social worker it doesn't mean that the social worker can deliver the dimension or guarantee delivery of that dimension.

When it is present you do find a total function of the way she gets on with her husband, or wife, or children, and so on. It is his responsibility as a breadwinner (if he is a breadwinner), his responsibility to his employer. By all these measures or functions these will tend to go up in direct proportion to the increase that he has in his self-esteem.

It seems to me—and this is where I think we can get—if we think it's just a matter of handing out money (I don't think it is), that is important. We also have to guarantee what is happening to the person in human terms, and the human development something that we have to recognize

The Chairman: Senator McGrand?

Senator McGrand: You mentioned that reading material and recreational facilities, and that all these things were essential in the building of a well-oriented human being. Has Halifax the adequate library system to do this, and what percentage of the poor attend library services?

Going back to the establishment of human values, who is the person or people who can decide what human values are, because each teacher, member of a school board, and the head of each family, have different ideas of what human values are?

Now, only a dictator could lay down the rules and say, "This is a human value that has to be discarded." How would you proceed? What are human values?

Mr. Critchley: With regards to the libraries, I don't know. I don't know what the situation is in Halifax. There are libraries, but the extent of their use by poor people I don't know.

If they are like many public libraries across the country, they are quite judgmental in their reading material. They make the decision between "This is trash, therefore we won't have it," "This is good quality, so we will have it."

I suggest that this is probably quite logical to many public pressures, but this business of human values, if you are talking one's religious beliefs, and so on, then I would think this is something that a person has to work out themselves.

We do have the unanimity about human values, and it would not require any enforcement on the part of the dictator.

The other thing is, that if you translate this into just straight terms of what we know—we know, for example, that if you take a teacher who has his ability to come through as a genuine person and an understanding person and a caring person—if you take that teacher and put him in a classroom (either it's a classroom of difficult children or just an ordinary classroom) that that teacher will have fewer behaviour problems, less absenteeism, and this means a better academic performance on the part of their students; whether the students have behaviour problems or are average, ordinary children.

I think this is a fact, as I know it is a fact, then to me that really is the challenge. I don't think this would require forcing people to believe or act in a way that is hostile to the value system of this country.

I think most of us would believe that it is important to have a caring relationship between a teacher and a child. I think most of us would believe that the teacher should be susceptible. He should be open. In effect, what we are saying is that the child should be exposed to a good model of a human being. This is where the real education takes place. If he is exposed to a bad model, an insensitive model, a model that makes fun of others at the expense of the individual, then this is the education that is taking place, and I think we have all kinds of adults who day in and day out indicate in the way they get on with others that they have been exposed to bad models.

The Chairman: I think Senator Connolly asked you the question a few minutes ago about the changes in the poverty line, and I think you said you weren't quite aware of that. I think Senator Connolly asked you whether you were aware of the fact that over a period of time we had changed the poverty line and money values. I think you said you didn't know about it.

Mr. Critchley: No, no.

The Chairman: Well, do you remember what it was?

Mr. Critchley: Well, you go on with your question.

The Chairman: Well, my question would be the answer. Well, my point is that there have been changes in the poverty line over a period of years. Is that correct?

Mr. Critchley: Right.

The Chairman: I think the Economic Council has pointed out that. Do you agree with that?

Mr. Critchley: You give me the figures.

The Chairman: Well, I will give you both figures. The one in 1961 was 15, 25, 3,000, and 36/42. That is what it was in '61. Now it is 18, 3,000, 36, 42, and 48. That is what they say the poverty line is now. We adopted it because—these are common figures between the Dominion Bureau of Statistics and ourselves. They identify it a little more than other people. Would you agree with that?

Mr. Critchley: I don't find it particularly useful as a standard because I think it tends to make this whole business of poverty an income question, and I think the fact of the matter is that you have some people, some families, that are living on $4,000 in this country who are for a variety of reasons able to participate in society, and you have some others who are earning five, six, seven thousand dollars, and who are not.

The Chairman: Well, do you have any suggestions as to how we could possibly change that?

Mr. Critchley: Not really, because the only things that I have are the things that apply to me as an earner in society, and I know that in the university for example you pay attention to expected annual increase in the cost of living, so you tend to expect that for each passing year your income will go up, only to take into account the increase in the cost of living.

I would think this same dimension should be applied to the regular dimensions for the poor that you have to pay attention to the fact that you do have increases in cost of living.

Now, people would say, "What would you do in the year when the university comes to you and points out that there is going to be a drop in the cost of living; what would your response be?"

Fortunately, I have never been in that situation, but—this is to me moving into a dimension that is certainly not my expertise.

The Chairman: I know that you have been 20 years as a social worker, so I hoped you would fall back on that experience. You did speak about a guaranteed annual income, and you said it would be nice for a man if he could have a telephone, a car, and to have a home, and a great number of things. You laid down the basis for a guaranteed income. Let's examine that for a moment.

The definition of income or the old-age security—there is a supplement and the incentive and the cost-of-living bonuses have all been incorporated in that; is that correct?

Mr. Critchley: Yes.

The Chairman: If you have a car and a house, and a telephone; you have two television sets, and you have perhaps a thousand dollars in bonds, or something like that, and still come within the confines of a general guaranteed annual income on the basis of income?

Mr. Critchley: You say you can?

The Chairman: You can. Can you or can't you? I am talking about income. A man who is getting old-age security on the basis of income—$105; is that right?

Mr. Critchley: Yes.

The Chairman: He has a house and he has the income out of the house and he has a television set, and a telephone, a car; he may have a thousand dollars in bonds in the bank at six or seven or eight per cent and still get his guaranteed old-age security, can't he?

Mr. Critchley: Yes.

The Chairman: Well, isn't that what we are talking about when we talked about a guaranteed annual income?

Mr. Critchley: I thought you were trying to get me somewhere where I didn't want to go. You are saying that the guaranteed annual income or old-age security is available to all Canadians?

The Chairman: I didn't say that. You were talking about making a study on a limited basis. I know what you are talking about.

Haven't we got it now on a limited basis?

Mr. Critchley: Yes.

The Chairman: And it works?

Mr. Critchley: Yes. You are saying that most senior citizens, their income is $105 a month?

The Chairman: They must have up to that. Ordinarily they get their $75 a month for the old-age security plus a bonus, but if they had no other income they can get up to $30, which makes it a hundred and five. That's what I am talking about.

I am saying that that is a guaranteed income, and he has all the things that you have talked about—am I correct?

Mr. Critchley: Yes.

The Chairman: Then you and I agree then that at the present time, for a limited group, we have a guaranteed annual income that is quite satisfactory to meet all their requirements?

Mr. Critchley: That is where I am having trouble.

The Chairman: Well, where are you having your trouble?

Mr. Critchley: Well, I have a hard time seeing how a person has an income of $105...

The Chairman: No, no. I didn't talk about the spartan aspects of it. I am talking of principle to you. The amount is another matter entirely. You have some views on the amount, and some solutions.

This Committee is not supporting that amount and we are not here for that purpose. I am talking about principle, and from your experience as a social worker, and from your experience as a professor and lecturer, I am asking you if there is anything you can add to the principle of the present guaranteed income that we have in force in Canada.

Mr. Critchley: The only thing would be a different base.

The Chairman: I am talking about principle, and principle doesn't involve the amount of money. Principle doesn't involve money. Money is another matter. But the principle that we invoke in that particular instance, is that satisfactory?

Mr. Critchley: That principle is satisfactory.

The Chairman: That's what we are talking about.

Now, what you are saying, in effect, is that—and you are not alone—is now that at 65 years of age it should be extended to other people, to other persons; you are saying that, aren't you?

Mr. Critchley: Yes. I am also saying that even though in principle if we guarantee persons of a certain age in this country to $70-odd a month, and if they don't have other means of income we give them more, but even though that in principle would seem to support the principle of the guaranteed annual income, I think it also in principle, because of the amount that we give, reflects our rejection of the principle of guaranteeing the means to participate, because poor people who, in effect, are living on $105 a month, are not participating in society.

The only thing they really can depend on is that they will be so crippled and infirm that $105 a month will be enough.

The Chairman: Or else the amount will be raised.

Mr. Critchley: Well, in principle, yes. I am afraid, without the principle of participation, you will not even be guaranteeing this to our senior citizens.

The Chairman: You are talking about a means of carrying it out, and I am talking about the principle involved in adopting it. We agreed that a child should go to school up to certain years. The principle.

Some get something out of school and others get nothing out of school. What I am getting at is the principle, and the principle you agree with?

Mr. Critchley: Yes. You see it as merely a means to extend the principle?

The Chairman: Yes. That is what I said to you. What I thought, or what I had in mind was (and I said this on other occasions) that we extend it immediately to the blind and the disadvantaged, crippled and maimed, and those people. They are out of the labour market, and that might as well be the first step, perhaps.

Mr. Critchley: Well, this is where it is just a matter of opinion.

Senator Hastings: Mr. Chairman, if we extended it to the aged, the maimed, and the blind and the handicapped, and the head of the family, would that be part of the pilot project which you refer to in your brief? Do you think we could gain enough knowledge out of that?

Mr. Critchley: Well, this is effect is assuming that—this is sort of a gradual, step-by-step approach.

Senator Hastings: Well, you mentioned in your evidence that we should undertake a pilot project?

Mr. Critchley: I personally would feel that would not in effect be dealing with my suggestion because I think the fact is that we are willing right now if somebody is blind, or lame, or infirmed, who is obviously unable to participate, that this is where our humanity does come through, and people will, if they know about it, people will try to make life more tolerable for these people.

They will not, for example, say this person who has lost both legs through no fault of his own does not have a television set, so I personally do not feel that this would really test us to extend it to such disadvantaged people.

The other thing I think perhaps just as important is that I really think that we are now living on borrowed time. Without knowing it, society has already suggested the gradual, step-by-step approach to deal with our problems. Because the poor do not rise up I think we tend to get a false feeling of security, and I suggest to you that this is not really the place to be worried about it.

The rejection of the values of society, I don't think they are taking place in the ranks of the poor. I think they are taking place in the ranks of the haves on the university campuses. Poor people generally don't get to university. Those who do have been through a history of new progress. We are the ones that are becoming more and more disillusioned about this as a legitimate approach to the problems of the poor.

The poor in our country do not make the radicals and the revolutionists, and the people who put bombs in mailboxes. They perhaps are maybe used and whipped up, but the haves are the ones I am most concerned about. The people who do earn a living, who are not on welfare rolls, from my experience, they are moving more and more to a commitment to totalitarian means of problem-solving.

I think if we just confine ourselves to what is happening to the poor and the complications of the poor—I think the awful thing about poverty is that it knocks out all of your feelings of self-work and self-confidence.

The Chairman: You said that putting it on a gradual basis would not help, but if were accelerated, would that help?

Mr. Critchley: The people who say, "Now, listen, David, I don't want anybody to live in these conditions. I don't want this to happen. But also I don't want to reckon with my charity either." To those people I would say, "All right, here is a program involving one hundred, one hundred and fifty, or two hundred people, and you guarantee the means of participation." You see some hard facts about what happens to people when they have the means to participate in society.

The Chairman: Well, of course, we know there is such a project taking place in the United States in Trenton, New Jersey. There is a project in America in Trenton, New Jersey, with 1,000 poor people and working with other families they are given a certain amount of money a month and they have been studying them very carefully at the University of Wisconsin at a cost of four million dollars—and they have been studying and our people have been following their studies, and the amazing thing that has come back to us so far are that the poor people don't change when they get more money. They don't blow it, and that is what we have been looking for.

A certain fellow has an income of $7,000 a year, and the fact that you give him an extra $500, he merely goes out and buys another piece of furniture and that type of thing.

Mr. Critchley: He would be the same as the rest of us.

The Chairman: Yes. Let me ask you one more question. You have been a social worker for 20 years; you have a long line of experience. We have in our country what I consider—and I am sure my colleagues share with me—the best social welfare figures that you could find in almost any western country in the world. We are spending totally, municipally, provincially and federally, six billion dollars a year. Why has our welfare system failed to the extent that we have now nearly a million people on welfare?

Mr. Critchley: Well, I can only speak from my experience, and it's been my experience that one of the biggest challenges that I have had in any job that I have held has been the challenge that comes from the layman on the board of directors or the minister or the deputy minister.

I have found that—and this is why I have so much conviction about this business of what kind of participation are we guaranteeing—that I have been asked to implement policies; whether it's disturbed children, whether it's delinquent parents who don't have money—and I have been asked to implement policies that in effect wanted me to guarantee to my board of directors, "yes, I will guarantee responsibility for this," but I do not make it too easy for them, and a lot of my time, if I am the director of an agency, is spent with my board of directors, and their attitudes. Their attitude towards the dispossessed that I have been working with.

In regards to the disturbed children, one of the policies was that for years we would go down to the Salvation Army and go to the board of directors and ask for secondhand toys.

The Chairman: Just exactly what are you saying?

Mr. Critchley: I am saying that the welfare system has not really done anything at all about poverty. The welfare system has just been reflecting the same old attitudes, and every time we re-arrange this we re-arrange—the attitudes are left untouched.

There again, I don't see revision or re-arrangement as our challenge.

The Chairman: What attitude?

Mr. Critchley: Well, the attitude that becomes the prevailing attitude in our society. It is a suspicious attitude, and the attitude that in effect seems to be based on the assumption that people have more devil in them than perhaps they do good.

If you don't watch out, if you don't check everything about them, they will take advantage of you. This attitude becomes a self-fulfilling prophesy.

The Chairman: Self-fulfilling by whom?

Mr. Critchley: For example, if I had this attitude, too—were to say to you, "Senator Croll, I am going to watch you," in effect what I am communicating to you is that I don't care for you, I am suspicious of you, and I am rejecting you. You get right back to these values. And if I communicate rejection to you, and that is the kind of response I am going to get from you, so that in effect our welfare system day in and day out are communicating rejection. Rejection does not help people to grow. Rejection makes for anger, for hurt, for cheating, for theft, and so on.

And I submit that if you really talk to the poor, this is what they have concluded. To beat you I have to use your standards, and if you have a group of four women in Winnipeg talking about the welfare department in these terms—"You know why you didn't get that allowance the last time; because you wore that jacket with the fur around the collar."

"Well, I bought it at the Junior B shop. I got it for two-fifty."

"Don't wear it. Get your worst, worst clothes. If you haven't got any real worst clothes, put a tear in them, burn them with your cigarette, so you can get as bad-looking as possible."

Or you get the other woman I was talking to, and she casually informed me that she had signed up for not only a deep freeze but for a freezer plan. Now, this had been in spite of years and years of being hounded by these companies, so I said to her, "Mrs. So-and-So, how come?"

She said, "Well, what the hell can I lose?"

The Chairman: Well, that really isn't what I wanted. You know that the welfare system in this country started approximately in '29 with the Depression. There was a philosophy behind it, and surely they taught that in school, didn't they?

Mr. Critchley: Yes.

The Chairman: There was a certain philosophy behind it. It was the dole philosophy, wasn't it? Where did we go wrong from there? Where did we go wrong along the way?

Mr. Critchley: Well, I prefer you answer it because we didn't change, really.

The Chairman: Well, I agree with you but I wanted your views.

Mr. Critchley: Well, that's my views. We have not changed.

Essentially, from my point of view we have not changed. We have instituted all kinds of measures and we have divided people into categories—we have categories for the blind, and so on and so forth, but essentially the same dole principle applies.

The Chairman: Any questions?

Mrs. Beattie: Mr. Chairman, I have a question dealing with what he has to say.

The Chairman: Not you, madam; you had your chance before.

Mrs. Beattie: Am I to be denied a chance to speak?

The Chairman: You have already spoken.

Mrs. Beattie: Not on this gentleman's brief.

The Chairman: There is a statement I have to make. You have already spoken—

Earlier in the day.

Mrs. Beattie: I have as much right to speak, sir, as you have. I have been sitting here for an hour and a half to listen to this gentleman speak. He is a very learned gentleman, granted, but he made one statement that I would like to bring to your attention. You all have ignored that the poor may not have the self-confidence or the ability to speak in public. I would like to mention to you that I am poor. I may not be on welfare but I am poor. But I have something else besides self-confidence; I have the desire to get ahead, and there is a hell of a lot of us in Halifax getting that desire.

There is a lot of desire at the Halifax Neighbourhood Centre. We are being taught how to get ahead, which branch of the government we should contact, when to speak our piece, and if there were enough Halifax Neighbourhood Centres put across this country, then we may get the people of Canada getting what they want, which is a good life, good home, and good education for their children.

You can't get this by talking on and on and on. You've got to get out to see the people and meet the people, and find out what they want. You have to find out what their hopes are and what their dreams are, and then come back and discuss it in a scholarly manner.

The Chairman: Earlier in the day the question of public housing came up, housing controls. I have had this researched since I spoke, and under Section 35(a) municipal-provincial and federal partnership was initiated by the city under provincial and federal—enter into a joint agreement which is 75% federal, 25% provincial-municipal. All policies, locations, rent and designs are made by the three partners. However, rents are tied in with the federal scale. The city manages the building, upkeep, and tenant relocation, or under Section 35(c) the federal government gives 90% of loans to the province, controls policy and management.

Another way, the federal, provincial, municipality governments work on a fifty-fifty basis and split capital and operational costs. I think I said that in Halifax only 35(a) from the National Housing Act is in operation. The other two sections are not in operation and consequently the city manages the building but the decisions are threefold decisions and the rents are fixed by the federal government, because the other two have not been invoked. I wanted to correct that on the record because I indicated the federal government did not have that power. I knew that under Section 35 power was away from the federal government but it has not been put in force.

Thank you very much, Mr. Critchley, for a very excellent presentation.

Mr. Murray Warrington (Representing the Nova Scotia Tenants Association): Mr. Chairman, I have a question.

In your debate with Mr. Critchley you mentioned telephones, TV's, and so on, to poor people. With all respect to this Commission, I presume that you have every one of these things that you mentioned.

The Chairman: I didn't say that.

Mr. Warrington: Is this too much for the poor man to ask for?

The Chairman: I said, if you had listened to me—you would have heard me say that a man is entitled to a telephone, he could have two television sets, he could have a car and he could have a home and a thousand dollars in bonds, and he can still draw old-age security at 65 years of age. That's what I said.

Mr. Warrington: How does he get these things if the three levels of government don't defend him?

The Chairman: He gets a cheque from only one part of the government.

Mr. Warrington: He sure as hell won't get a cheque to enable him to buy those things.

The Chairman: This meeting is concluded.

The meeting adjourned.

Upon resuming at 2 p.m.

The Chairman: Order. With us this afternoon presenting the brief from the St. Francis Xavier Extension Department we have the Director, Father G. E. Topshee, who will be introducing those who are accompanying him.

Father Topshee (Director, St. Francis Xavier Extension Department): Senator Croll and Honourable Senators, ladies and gentlemen. With me I have Father Roach who is in charge of the City office of the St. Francis Extension Department, and Dr. Alex MacDonald, the Antigonish office. Miss Elizabeth Tower, who is a community development worker working with the Micmac Indians on several reservations.

Our Extension Department has been involved in field work with the people of the towns and villages of the Maritimes, and this started about half a century ago, shortly after World War I, and some of our staff people at Antigonish made sorties out to work with people on self-help programmes and we have been at it ever since.

At present we have 27 field workers working with people engaged in forestry, fishing, farming and also working in the coal mines, and some people in the services and industry people.

Now, to give you a summary of our brief, we say in this brief Poverty is not exclusively an economic problem but a comprehensive human problem. The one true solution is that of improving the quality of the person.

Solutions are found in various methods of giving people opportunity to develop their capacities and this includes particularly capacities, not only as individuals, but also capacities of groups of people.

Government welfare and other forms of government housing are mandatory but at the same time individuals must be persuaded to participate substantially in their own salvation and thereby develop self-reliance and self-respect in keeping with the dignity of the human person.

We define poverty as a physical and mental state of ineffectiveness in the social and economic environment of the family or individual.

With regard to the nature of the problem in this area, rational disparity affecting all of Atlantic Canada is further aggravated in Eastern Nova Scotia with the cut backs in the coal mining industry and re-organization of steel making.

In addition in the coastal communities change from inshore fishing operations to heavily capitalized deep sea industry has, in many cases, created economic decline.

Our contention is that, in the main, the solution to this problem, the problem of poverty, will be found in properly conceived and implemented educational programmes. Little headway can be made until we define the basic elements in poverty, that is the inability of the individual to perform effectively in his environment.

Before people can make an effective contribution to society they must be trained and conditioned educationally. It is on the educational front that we shall achieve ultimate victory over poverty.

Now, this educational front actually is a number of fronts and we shall consider here three of them. (1) Academic education. (2) Technical and vocational training and retraining and (3) The whole range of non-working studies and activities under the heading of adult or continuing education.

All of these must exert a greater effort in the total educational uplifting of the Atlantic region.

Historically the incidence of student drop-outs in elementary and secondary schools was high on the list of factors contributing to regional poverty, but in recent years there has been a significant improvement in this area and those responsible for making the school curriculum attractive should be thanked for this.

The trades training programme, to say the least, is inadequate. I believe Father Roach has some constructive criticism to voice on this trades training programme.

The need for highly qualified professional counsellors is paramount in the elementary, secondary and post-secondary institutions. Individual leaders plus educational and promotional agencies are needed to contact the poor and involve them in group action and other projects which would develop the capacity of the individual and the capacity of the group.

Much has been done in Nova Scotia in the field of self-help co-operative housing by the Nova Scotia Housing Commission and the Extension Department of our university, but much more could be done.

The value of this type of programme in developing the individual person is described in Appendix A of our brief.

Out-migration is certainly necessary in any war on poverty. More urbanization must come. This is inevitable.

Out-migration, by itself, does not remedy the situation. If people are to be moved they must be equipped, be trained and capable of taking an effective part in their new environment. Uneducated and unskilled people will not benefit themselves by moving from place to place and they will be a liability to society wherever they are.

On this whole question of adjustment of resources, adjustment of human resources and the natural resources, Dr. MacDonald will speak on that.

With regard to the older age groups on pension, those who are on pension—and the ages have been substantially reduced in recent years—in our coal mining community with the phasing out and so on of the coal mining industries, pensions are now being paid to men in their fifties.

In the fishing, farming and forest industries with the rationalization of these industries, probably a similar pension plan will be implemented.

People 50 to 60 years old must not be cast aside as unemployable.

We would recommend the undertaking of a wide range of experimental programmes for the involvement of older people, and particularly of those placed on the pension rolls by technological changes and by rationalization of primary industries.

Local communities, groups and institutions working with government should be encouraged to develop new programmes and projects to attract and hold the attention of older members of society.

In this field, as in others, employment of competent programme directors and trained counsellors is imperative.

Now, Senator, what time do we have remaining? Whom would you like to hear?

I would like to call on Father Roach for comments on the trades training and then Dr. MacDonald.

Father Roach: Senator Croll, Honourable Senators, I would like to speak mainly in the field of education.

I think that generally speaking the poor people in North America (this is not peculiar to Nova Scotia or the Atlantic region)—their way of life is poor, their whole way of life. It is not a lack of money only but they are not able to effectively participate in society.

They are outsiders, or they are what Michael Harrington refers to as "other Americans."

Although legally they may be classed as Canadians or Americans, if they are in the United States, effectively they are outside the main stream.

We have made our society such that it is a scientific world, a technological world, a highly advantaged society and in order to participate in it, you have to be skilled.

The question with most of the poor people is that they cannot effectively compete in their environment.

Poverty is a self-perpetuating thing. It goes on from parent to children and there is a cycle. Poor parents cannot give to their children what they need in order to give them mental capacity and find their place.

Now, it seems that people who are poor and who need education the most receive the least. They have the poor schools. Generally speaking they have the poorest teachers and the poorest facilities in every way. The best facilities and the teachers are usually located in the best communities, in the high-class residential areas—not that we should deny these people—but those that need it the most receive it the least.

I think it is generally recognized now scientifically that most of the poor children, the poor kids, are in no way prepared to enter our school system so that in order to do much effectively with poverty, this way of life has to be changed.

It is not just simply giving people a certain amount of money but you have to rebuild people and this would become, I think, very important for perhaps as much as half of the population in Atlantic Canada. They have to be re-made.

If we take them from Cape Breton or Nova Scotia or Prince Edward Island and place them in Toronto, unless we do something with them first, they are going to be the slum dwellers of Toronto and the last stage is worse than the first stage.

Actually, we have the ability to overcome poverty in Canada or the United States if we ever acquired the will to do so. We can apply the will, for example, to carry on a war and we can amass technological brain power, the organization and back it up with financial forces to carry out that particular job and certainly with technological people and specialists working in Canada and the United States, if we ever came to a point where we decided to do something about poverty, it could be accomplished in a matter of a number of years.

I will take a moment to give one example. Down in Cape Breton where we have the phasing out of the coal industry, a number of us advocated with some of the DEFCO officials that there be an effective educational programme. There is a sort of re-training programme now carried on by government but if we honestly looked into it we would find it is nothing more than a glorified welfare programme, and really not an educational programme. A good idea but not carried out properly.

DEFCO stated that they were willing to pay the actual miners for college education if there were any coal miners capable and willing. So we started last year on just a test programme with 11 men, 35 to 40 years of age, who more or less could qualify for college entrance.

But in the long run DEFCO is saving money by paying these people to go to school because it is less than the cost of what it would take to keep them in the actual mines and they are succeeding.

This year we have 15 ordinary coal miners who have been taken into educational institutions and up to this point are getting along very well, and to the taxpayer and to the government the cost is less.

Not only is it less now, but in three or four years these actual miners can find their place, whether it is in Nova Scotia or British Columbia, they can effectively participate in our society. They have the equipment, the mental capacity to be a useful person in society.

Now, this is done on a very minor basis as a test programme, but it is working, and if we were to permit our universities to look after the educational programmes, the experimental programmes, where they would be mainly educational programmes and not welfare programmes, I think that there are thousands of men and women in the Atlantic region and elsewhere in Canada who could be rehabilitated.

Now, there was a perfect example of this after World War 2, both in Canada and in the United States where veterans came home after several years in the war. Some of them had grade 9, grade 10. They threw them in high school, of this type anyway, and there was a crash programme put on all across Canada to prepare these people, to rehabilitate them.

It was an educational programme and it was extremely successful, and I think if the government were to investigate that now, it was a tremendous investment in people to enable them to effectively find their place.

They went on to university. They succeeded. They were useful, productive Canadians.

The most important thing that must be done with many of our poor people, certainly in the Atlantic region, is that we have to take them and we have to invest in them, maybe for five, six or seven years, to enable them to effectively find their place.

I think one of the things that perhaps has been brought out in other meetings is that we must remember that we pay twice for poverty. Poverty costs the nation in two ways, and this costs an awful lot of money.

We pay for the social diseases that it produces, family break-up, delinquency, crime, separation and family life of all descriptions.

The rate of social problems in the poor people is away out of proportion to the general population, and secondly we pay for poverty because these people (and it is unmistakable) are not producing anything, and that poverty and the elimination of it should be considered as an investment and not as a cost; but as long as governments and as long as we, as taxpayers, consider education as a cost and not as an investment, we will never ever do very much with poverty.

So, there has to be, if we are going to do anything with poverty, first of all a desire and will and an admission that we really are going to do something about it. It is going to take money; it is also going to take brain power and technological and scientific investigation and study. But in the Atlantic region the whole problem will be primarily one of re-educating the masses of the Maritimes.

Senator Connolly: Do you think, Father, that the concentration has to be largely on youth?

Father Roach: No.

The Chairman: Just a minute, Senator Connolly. The three of them will speak first and then the questions.

Dr. Alex MacDonald (Rural Sociology): Senator Croll, Honourable Senators, ladies and gentlemen. My concern is with the industrial resources and of our rural areas which constitute a large part of the poverty problem in Nova Scotia.

Theoretically we do, as professionals, distinguish between structural poverty, which is a poverty which can be defined in terms of lack of job skills, lack of occupational opportunities, lack of money, lack of housing and the environment situational thing.

We designate another type of poverty which we call cultural poverty. Really it is structural poverty compounded with or by cultural poverty, and this cultural poverty is a poverty of psychology or psychology, psychological poverty where the motivational values in the individual have broken down.

I believe in our rural areas we have both types of poverty. The problem is that as of the present we have a number of general programmes which do not make a distinction between these two types of poverty.

Now, for the areas where you have structural poverty, it is a problem as far as the programmes are concerned of implementing opportunity structure. That is, programmes which will allow people to upgrade their skills, to get employment, to take advantage of these opportunities and also along with that community development or social animation process which will create an awareness of these programmes, an interest in them and use of them.

The problem of cultural poverty requires, I think, a different programme to some extent, and I think this is where we are falling down. We need opportunity programmes or opportunity structures, the availability of employment, upgrading skills, training for jobs and that type of thing.

But along with that we have to come up with some type of programme which would be something similar to a social therapy programme, not just "Let us be kind now in the conventional community development or social animation programme."

Now, the characteristics of this social therapy programme should be first that a team approach be adopted to specific cultural poverty areas. That is the professionals that are involved trying to help or working in this area should work on a series of cases.

At present there is a number of agents working on a parallel basis doing different jobs on an uncoordinated basis.

The second characteristic of this problem would be that the approach has to be intensive with the individual, with the family and probably with small therapy groups.

At present we have a large number of agencies, both public and private, working on a parallel uncoordinated basis. It is the kind of work you would call a shot-gun approach to the programme. It is like throwing a handful of crumbs into a chicken group and what happens is that the strongest and most agile get the crumbs and the weakest eventually quit trying.

Now, as of now we have a lot of good programmes, at least in theory, in operation. We have a lot of dedicated personnel in the field who are doing their best to help in the poverty area.

Now, for the most part, they are going nowhere and we are involved in that same process because we are involved in a community development process with one ethnic group in Nova Scotia.

We have worked with primary producers in forestry and a number of other areas, but where it comes down to basic poverty I do not think we are solving the problem or going very far very fast.

We are developing some leadership but I do not think that is going to be the answer.

Now, what I am trying to emphasize here is that we have to delineate the aspects or the dimensions of poverty and that programmes must be changed to these dimensions.

We just cannot define one aspect of poverty and say "This is going to be our general programme." What I am asking for here is in the areas where there is a special problem of cultural poverty, even now, with the professionals in the field, if their efforts were coordinated, if their efforts were exerted on an intensive basis with the individual and family and probably small therapy groups, along with financial resources, then I think we would begin to solve the problem.

But as long as we are relying on general, diffuse, uncoordinated programmes, we are not going to solve the problem at all in our cultural poverty communities, and we have very many of them in Nova Scotia. I think we have more of them than we realize.

The Chairman: Thank you.

Senator Connolly: I started to ask Father Roach whether it was his view that the great effort should be concentrated on youth. Is there any suggestion that there should be even a partial writeoff of the older generations?

Father Roach: I don't think so, for this reason. Poverty is a way of life, the cycles of poverty. There should be heavy concentration on the young, but you cannot ignore the adults in the process.

I think this poor picture is a vertical mosaic, but I may be wrong. But some of it does stand out. It is not my idea.

You see, if you put a poor kid from a poor home compared with a good kid from a good home into our school system, the kid from the good home has to learn to swim through school but he goes down river. The kid from the poor home has to learn to swim but he has to learn to swim up-river. Everything in his upbringing; his home, his way of life, is against the school system. So it is not possible to educate the poor in our traditional way.

We have to come up with a kind of neighbourhood type of education. If the kid does not realize that education is important, if there are no values in it, he is not going to get to the school.

This is working now tremendously, our drop-outs. We know it. We have proved it. It takes more than a school to give a person education. It is a sense of values, and you cannot get this in a poor home, so you would have to attack the home along with the young person.

Headstart programmes and continuous start, if there is such a thing—but certainly making use of the tremendous number of university people we have today, put them into work on the community basis with the adults as well as the young people.

Quite often, in order to help young people, you have to first get to his parents.

Senator Connolly: Is there an active pride in many poor homes, Father?

Father Roach: No. It is not pride. Many of these poor people we tend to say are no good, but this is completely wrong. There is a complete frustration. They are told on the one hand what it is to be an average Canadian. They have no means; mental, physical, financial or any other to do what they should be doing in order to be a first-class Canadian. They are frustrated on every turn because everything in their way of life is different from what an average Canadian is supposed to be; so you have to attack the whole programme.

This is where a guaranteed annual income along with a rebuilding programme, not by itself but along with better housing, better communities, better teaching, will help.

Let us take our best teachers, our best professionals and put them where they are needed most, with the poor people; but we do the reverse now. We take our best and we put them where they are needed the least (not that they don't need it).

If we were to switch that for a while and take our best professionals and our best counsellors—we have all kinds of men, 35 to 40, in the Atlantic region that do not know where they are going and there is nobody willing to tell them what they can possibly do. They do not know where they are in the educational field. They cannot find out, and yet these skills are available.

Therefore, we have to work on the adults as well as the children. We may lose a number of adults but I think we will gain something more than we realize.

Senator Hastings: Father Roach, just carrying on your discussion with respect to the youth. We heard yesterday the various reasons for the drop-out, and the students seemed to think that the greatest percentage of drop-outs was to help keep up the economic homes as wage-earners, to look after the home. That is my first question. Do you agree or not?

Father Roach: I completely disagree with that. You will find out in the better homes in any community in North America that the rate of drop-outs is much lower. You will find out I think, generally speaking, that with drop-outs it is their whole way of life. They have poor homes, they have poor clothing, they have poor parents. Everything is poor about them.

Senator Hastings: So, that is his first rejection from society, and then you have drop-outs. By that experience in school he has been rejected from society, and we have lost him, have we?

Father Roach: Right.

Senator Hastings: Now, do you have any views with respect to showing our interest in that boy or that girl by giving him a will to go on, by providing him with an allowance to stay in school and get marks?

Father Roach: No. I think the basic personality is pretty well formed by the time a kid is 7 or 8 years of age, and if in that personality here is a place for education, a kid might be able to succeed, but if there is no place, no value, it is very difficult then to do anything with him.

Senator Hastings: You have to get him younger?

Father Roach: Yes. I think with any kid there are two natural leaders: the parents. Now those parents may be no good, but still they are leaders to the kid, and if we are going to get to those kids through their parents or through some substitute like Headstart programmes, which are really trying to do what should be done in a good home, if we do not do it that way, I think we are going to lose most of the young.

Senator Hastings: Just one other question. You said you had 11 men last year. You started with 11 men last year?

Father Roach: That is right.

Senator Hastings: And 15 more this year?

Father Roach: The programme improved this year. What we did (and I think this is one of the dangers with government)—they made a mistake last year but this year the error was corrected. They allowed the educational institute to make the decision to determine who are the people who were qualified and could possibly go along and in this way there were 15 out of 20 applications approved by the technical institute and by the university, and have been taken in, and it looks as if now we may have 100 per cent success with these 15 people.

Now, these are coal miners. I have one particular fellow that I have in my class who is about 42 years of age, and has worked in the coal mines for over 20 years. He is keeping pace with the other students in my class and doing very well in other courses. This man is 42 years old and it might take say five years, but it isn't costing the government any more to keep that fellow in university—it is costing less in fact—than it would in keeping him in a home. So this is an investment.

Senator McGrand: Mr. Chairman, when I read the brief I was a little disappointed that they had not put more emphasis on rural problems, but I understand that Dr. MacDonald is very much involved in rural problems and particularly the one in which I am interested.

You made mention on page 4 of the inability of the individual to perform effectively in his environment and then in another place on page 8 you say "The rural poor, when he gets into the city, is completely lost."

Now, if Nova Scotia is to rebuild its economic structure it must do it from its natural resources. Coal, fishing and lumber have been the basic elements in Nova Scotian economy.

We realize that coal has a very poor future; that fisheries, while they have increased in wealth employ probably less people and will employ less people than they do.

That leaves the forest land and what can proper development of your forest resources offer to the future of Nova Scotia?

I understand a large pulp company is eager to buy up small lots of woodlands of 50 acres and 100 acres wherever someone wants to get them off their hands. This may be good for the pulp company. It gets the benefit of the annual growth, but it is not too good for the little people of Nova Scotia.

Fifty per cent of the farmers and 80 per cent of the rural non-farm workers are classed as poor.

Now, how can you get this forest land into the hands of the little people who really need it if they are going to survive in the rural economy? That is the question I would like you to answer.

Dr. MacDonald: Well, I think as a general statement as far as the forestry industry of Nova Scotia is concerned, and probably New Brunswick, the problem is that at present the forest industry, no matter how we can organize it, will not support the number of people who are dependant on it at present.

In Nova Scotia the average wood lot is a little over 100 acres and that is not all productive wood land. The yield on that is about one-eighth of a cord to one-sixth of a cord per acre.

What a man gets for a cord of pulp runs in the vicinity of $13 to $15 a cord. He can do about 1.5 cords a day so he is not going to make a fortune in that type of thing, and if he does, there is little doubt he is going to be exhausted in no time.

The programme that we have engaged in over the last two years was a programme to try to make the wood land owners aware of the problems of production, especially the investment factors, land, capital, entrepreneurship and also to organize them as a group, so that when they do produce they could sell at reasonable prices.

Now, to get to the question without getting into too much detail, as a result of our work with them we helped them through the assistance of the government and the Federation of Agriculture to set up the Nova Scotia Wood-owners Association. I think it is fairly generally agreed that there must be a massive re-organization of pulp woodland in Nova Scotia and also in New Brunswick and that should not just be simply passing it over to the pulp companies as we have done in the past.

I do not say that they should not have large sections of land as a resource, but to pass the complete control of all our forest land over to them, I think, is kind of ridiculous.

How do we get it into the hands of the small producer? Outside of the Christmas tree producer, I do not think we can plan to get small producers in the pulp wood industry and logging industry any more. The way we can get the forest resource into the hands of the native people—there are two ways—is to provide land adjustment programmes which will involve capital grants and cheap credit so that the native or interested forest owner can expand their holdings, and secondly we have to get around, I think, to the Swedish concept of municipal forests or a Commission-owned forest control by public bodies if just for the only reason we do not want the total forest resources under the control of one or two, three or four companies.

These Commission-owned forests or municipally owned forests would at least be controlled by the people indirectly through their government. They would provide the necessary management resource to keep that woodland productive, the conservation needs and also it would provide work for rural residents, so the two ways would be: need of expansion and the formation of municipally or publicly owned forest land.

As I say, outside of the Christmas tree industry, I do not see much future except as a hobby for the small 100 or 200 acre wood lots.

Senator McGrand: Well, that doesn't answer my question. I refer to these people who are called farm workers temporarily, although sometimes they work for farmers in the harvest season and they work in the pulp woods and they work on the highways and there are times they do not work at all because there is no work.

Now, these are the people that if they were to possess a small wood lot, they could, in times when they are not doing anything else, work on their wood lot—maybe in order to improve it.

This is the person that I have in mind. You do not expect this fellow to own a 200 or 500 acre wood lot but there are quite a number of them who could own a 100 or 50 acre wood lot.

Now, I think you mentioned that a wood lot in Nova Scotia produces what? Did you say one-quarter to a sixth of a cord?

Dr. MacDonald: One-eighth to one-sixth of a cord.

Senator McGrand: All right. That is pretty good. That is an unimproved lot, but I could show you an improved lot in New Brunswick that produces a cord an acre.

Dr. MacDonald: I know the Department of Mines and Forests—I shouldn't say the Department of Mines and Forests—but this is the argument that many forest professionals use that this is an ideal situation. An acre of land can produce under optimum conditions a cord of wood, but an acre of land in the average across Nova Scotia will not unless there is a vast amount of funds invested in conservation and management and I doubt that in many cases a return would warrant that investment.

Senator McGrand: I can show you an improved woodlot that produces a cord per acre and all around, for miles, are the unimproved wood lots that produce one-sixth or one-eighth of a cord.

Dr. MacDonald: Yes, I would agree with that.

Senator McGrand: This is what I have in mind. If you are going to do something for the temporary workers, these rural poor, the non-farm poor, who are workers, that this perhaps is a little bit of something that they could possess of their own and keep them from coming into the city and living on the fringes. This is what I have in mind.

They have done it in Sweden and Norway.

Dr. MacDonald: Yes. I think they are having some difficulties in Sweden though.

Father Topshee: I would just like to say a word to that, Senator McGrand. In the second appendix of our brief we have suggested that human resources be adjusted to the natural resources in all our rural areas and it is our contention that we have to take village by village and put in a concentrated effort to find out just what we have there in the way of manpower. Who should remain there—who has the greatest potential in the village or forestry or some other local industry and who should be upgraded in terms of trading and who should be pensioned off.

For example, I was called into a fishing village not long ago where they were clamouring for a second lobster season and there was about 75 men at the meeting and there were probably another 50 who were not at the meeting making an average of about $2,000 a year mainly on lobster; and I talked to Dr. Wilder of the Biological Research Station in St. Andrews and he came to a subsequent meeting.

To shorten the story, the landings over the last 30 years has remained relatively the same. The prices have gone up but the number of people employed had gone away up and income has come down and the real answer there is not a second lobster season because the Biological Research Station has proven that they are catching 70 per cent of the marketable lobster now in the one season they have and if they had a second lobster season in the fall they would only catch what they would ordinarily catch the next spring and it would be much more hazardous to them at the time they wanted it.

There was a lot of discussion and a lot of clamouring on their part looking for a second lobster season. The real answer I feel is to study the human resources and to cut down on the number of people engaged in the fishing area and try to provide a good livelihood for the ones who should be fishing and try to provide a good livelihood for some others in some other—preferably—industry in the area, if it is possible. If not, they have to move on.

Senator McGrand: I was going to ask because I have heard so much about this about the pulp mill at Fort Tucker. I understand the people who are selling pulp wood to the mill there are getting less for it than they did in the days when they sold it to the Mersey Pulp and Paper due to certain standards of technique that the company maintains, an eight foot stick instead of a four and that sort of thing.

Now, is that true that in the Cape Breton area along the Strati of Canso that this pulp has not contributed to the economy as much as it should have relatively? Is there any truth in that?

Mr. MacDonald: I was going to say it is very difficult to answer a question as to whether or not it contributed as much as it should. I think there is some truth that they are getting less. Probably if you would go back to 1952 where the price for pulp wood was quite high—that was an unusually high period—that was during the Korean War—the price might be lower. I cannot recall the statistics on that.

One of the things as far as the pulp mill at Fort Tucker is concerned, as opposed to Mersey, the Nova Scotia Pulp is taking a much lower grade of material. It is buying pulp wood on an eight foot basis instead of on a cord basis. In an eight foot cord there is less wood than in the four. There are a number of factors that I don't think we can go into now.

While I am not saying that the wood lot owners are getting enough for their pulp wood, at the same time I think there are a lot of factors that are involved including the quality, the volume of your cord and that kind of thing.

Senator Fergusson: I quite agree with you on your statement of the needs for training of the older people but the first thing is that you must have something on which to build a basic and that is why I would like to know is whether you agree that there should be a guaranteed income so as to keep the family together?

The Chairman: Father Roach, I understood you to endorse the idea that there should be a guaranteed income?

Father Roach: A guaranteed annual wage by itself is not going to answer the problem, I don't think. A guaranteed annual wage or a guaranteed income along with a rebuilding program will, I think, make it possible for many of the poor to find a way of participating in society and certainly we might be able to salvage a large percentage of the young children; but it has to be a guaranteed income along with other things. Education, better housing, better community, better schools but by itself—We have had a guaranteed income for Indians for years and years (I have worked with Indians) and it has not succeeded. We made them completely dependent. We did not help them. We hurt them and now they are in an awful mess and we should have been building Indians to be first class Canadians. They are about fifth class.

I do not mean this in the sense of criticizing them but they find, as I say, they are not equipped to take their place in Canadian society; yet the government has given them considerable sums of money over the past 100 years so it is not just money—but money along with helping these people to help themselves.

They have to be involved and they have to learn, no matter what age, whether it is 50 or 30 or three years of age. We have to teach the people how to help themselves and not treat them as little kids continuously.

Senator Pearson: I agree with you. I was just going to say that in your work you are dealing with rural areas, are you not?

Father Roach: No. Certainly work with both. Where I work it is mainly industrial.

Senator Pearson: But in the rural areas in your extension work for the older people, what arrangements can you make for instructions of the older people in families to get the order people up to the same standard of knowledge that the young children are getting at the schools, so that they will be able to talk to each other or communicate to each other.

Father Roach: I do not think that you can really start working with older people. I think you have to do something with them. Now, I will try. If we start with people in general and take by the time they reach retirement and they have been educated in some way then they can continue but the problem is now, let us take a fisherman, for example, at 55 or a coal miner at 55 who has no education. He has worked all his life in the pits or out at sea. Now, he has no education. He hasn't any hobbies. He has no money. He cannot do the things that the middle class type of person will do after retirement.

Senator Pearson: On the other hand, a person of 55 generally has a grown up family and they are not interested any more in educational facilities.

Father Roach: No.

Senator Pearson: So if we take a younger chap of 35 or 40 that you should have on training.

Father Roach: Oh, the older ones as well but this is a brand new problem, retirement by 55 and this is something brand new within the past couple of years. Nobody is working on it really but I think we should.

Down in Sydney now I know that our University has put many, many different types of courses in. We call them non-credits, a general type of course and invited the general public and the response in the past two years has been tremendous. The number of people who will come out—they are not writing examinations but we are giving them courses designed for them, and the number of adults who are willing and interested in education is far beyond the number that we realized.

All we have to do in an educational institution is to start to look at the people out in the community and get away from the ivory tower and realize that there are people out in the community and take the University to them and experiment and you will be surprised at the number of men and women who on their own are willing to come and participate, if we give them the chance.

Senator Pearson: How many workers have you got out in the fields now?

Father Topshee: 27.

Father Roach: We have about 27 out working in different aspects now.

Senator Pearson: That is in the rural areas?

Father Roach: In the rural and urban.

Senator Belisle: Father Roach, you mentioned awhile ago that we should be doing the reverse of what we are doing now in education, that we should be giving them the best, the best teachers, the best professors...

Father Roach: Yes.

Senator Belisle: The best counsellors. How would you go about doing that? Would you subsidize the salaries in order to attract these teachers to these communities?

Father Roach: To a certain extent that would be necessary, some added incentive for the teacher but I think if you checked it across Canada with the University students, they are more interested now in people than they are in anything else. The emphasis is on social sciences in the University and we have had all kinds of calls from student nurses and one thing and another who will sacrifice a couple of years to go into a foreign country. You organize the program we can get the students to do it.

I think if we ever decided to do the same thing at home, there are enough dedicated university students right now who would be willing to participate but there is no program now, or even if some particular teacher who is interested wanted to go down to a Negro community or an Indian community he or she would be working with the poorest facilities. There is no real encouragement to do this.

We have not accepted this. I think in the United States it has been proved that the Negro in the United States gets the poorest of everything, including education, and he will never be able to break that cycle until the reverse is undertaken.

If you happen to live in an United States community in a residential area, middle class, you can be pretty sure that the school building will have the latest facilities and the teachers are going to be the highest quality of teacher. They are going to have the best counsellors in many cases when maybe they don't even need counsellors. Their parents may do it themselves.

As you move into the poor certainly of the Atlantic region and I think the outposts of Newfoundland would be the best example; yet the Economic Council of Canada in its latest report (and that report was given for the Atlantic Development) say they connect directly the low level of productivity with low wages and with low levels of education and all studies across North America have indicated that there is a very direct and close indication between low levels of education and low productivity, low income, poverty.

If you really want to attack poverty you have to get at education and in the present system we are not doing it.

Senator Belisle: Tell me: we have a shortage of teachers and professors. The university to which I belong is in Sudbury and we have approximately 600 teachers and professors and counsellors and 360 of them are from outside the country.

Father Roach: Nova Scotia will educate all the teachers you need out there, sir. The same thing with Dalhousie and Acadia. They have a fairly good reputation as far as educating young men and women to become teachers and most of them are recruited on campus by people from Western Canada or especially Western Canada.

There are all kinds of people walking the streets unemployed or poor people. If we ever turn our resources, human and financial, we can come up with all kinds of teachers and education may be the best employment, the best industry in Canada if we ever looked at it that way.

Senator Belisle: I agree with you, but unless you subsidize...

Father Roach: I would say "invest."

Senator Belisle: Who would invest, the community or the Province? I know education is a provincial matter.

Father Roach: In the Atlantic region especially—and it might apply to all of Canada—if it is a not Federal funds, we would never get very far. The Atlantic provinces just have not got that type of financial resource.

The Chairman: There are some nice open-end education facilities now where they are getting dollar for dollar. It must cost the Federal government a great deal of money because they are all matching it.

Father Roach: The Federal government should be investing. It wouldn't cost them anything. The Federal Government has paid a high price now for poverty, a very high price for poverty.

I am not asking the government to pay anything for it. Change their methods and they will save money.

Senator Belisle: I am all for it. I think we should explore this. This is a very important point.

Father Roach: For example, the greatest market that we could pick up in North America is just in some way to find a method of permitting $25 million or $30 million to be applied to buy what we produce, much greater than any international market we could capture.

We have got 25 to 30 million poor people in these two countries, just barely existing. We have the two wealthiest countries in the history of the world. This is an absolute contradiction and it is a disgrace. And this is not money. We, as a group, have never ever decided that we wanted to do anything about poverty, not really.

Senator Fergusson: Mr. Chairman, I have two small questions that I do not think will take very long to ask of Father Topshee.

One is in connection with page 5 of the brief, section 16, in which it says "With the phasing out of old industries and industrial techniques and the arrival of new ones, the programme presently adopted by the Provincial Department of Education, and financed by the Federal Department of Manpower is, in our view, inadequate."

And you got on to say "It is clear that retraining facilities must be available in order that our work force keep abreast of changing labour needs."

You also say "Pilot projects operated by educational institutions for adult students should be initiated."

Would you elaborate a little bit on the fact that the present programmes are inadequate and just what sort of programmes would you envisage as being the subject of pilot projects?

Father Topshee: I will take the first crack at that question, Senator Fergusson.

At present we have in the City area at Point Edward, there are 1200 or 1400 there involved in upgrading and trade training.

There are about 300 trade training stations and the rest are in upgrading. Then in the surrounding areas we have upgrading classes in Narrows River, Shanty Town, Waterford, North City, Sydney and Glace Bay; in all probably around 1700 or 1800.

Then there is the question of training for what? Many of them receive a trade and they go out and then several months later they are back receiving another trade, and the great majority never get beyond the upgrading. They do not get to the trade.

We were discussing, before we wrote this brief, the idea of putting on a crash programme similar to the programme that was conducted by the government after World War 2. And at this point I will pass on to Father Roach.

Father Roach: On the first part of the question, retraining, I think it is difficult to knock this programme because there are a number of aspects that are very important.

First of all it puts a large amount of money into the area. These people are paid allowances and it does employ quite a few people. This is good, but the principle of trying to retrain people is good, but I think the programme is actually a glorified welfare programme; a good idea not being used properly.

What we need is a more effective educational programme and allow the educational institutions now in existence to carry them out.

For example, you take 1,000 men and you put them in some kind of retraining programme. The main objective is to build each class of 20 students because they go by appointment.

Well, you have got 17 men lined up for barbering but they cannot start the class until they get 20, so they go out and find three more people and put them in, train them for what?

Actually a good idea, but it must be run properly, and it is difficult to knock it because it does have a tremendous economic impact in places like Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island. The whole idea is good and the method is not. I think our universities and our qualified educators, given room to experiment, would come up with much better results at no greater cost.

Senator Fergusson: Thank you very much. Mr. Chairman, I do have just one more question. I do not think it will take very long.

I have always had the greatest admiration for the work that the St. Francis Xavier Extension Department are doing, and I certainly would not question any of their decisions but on page 4 of the brief you say "It is equally obvious that the enormous extension of welfare policy with its concomitant injection of massive public funds which we have seen over the past quarter-century, has had little significant impact on the condition of the low income groups in this part of Canada."

As I say, I would not put my ideas forward for consideration contrary to yours because you have had so much experience, but do you really believe the present programs of Old-Age Security and Family Allowances have had little significant impact on the condition of the low-income people in Canada? I would like to know your opinion from your studies.

I would like to go on a little bit further because I know of the great improvement that has taken place in the situation particularly of many old people after they received the Old-Age Security. I am not speaking from ignorance, really, because for a number of years I administered the Family Allowance and the Old-Age Security in the Province of New Brunswick, and it was my business to find out about things like this. We investigated many, and I was under the impression that it had quite an impact especially with the old-age group when you realize the situation in which they were before Old-Age Security came into effect and how very much better off they were, especially now that we have the Guaranteed Income Supplement.

Father Topshee: Yes, senator, I would agree with you if you look at individual cases and good has been done by these welfare measures, and the impact it has had on families as such. They would be much worse off if we had not had them, but in the overall picture the way we are thinking here—perhaps this is not expressed precisely—but in the overall picture the Atlantic Region has not improved comparatively speaking. We still have here around 70% of the national average for income, and we still have had 100,000 people move out in a five-year period. Our youngest and most ambitious people have moved out, and these were the conditions that we referred to.

The significant impact we would like to have is that of making the economy viable to take up a large percentage of our youth and to give them a good living here. Some of them will move, certainly. That is their choice and let them move, but why should so many (100,000 in a five-year period) move? That is really disgraceful.

So I agree with what you are saying, senator, that we would be much worse off without the Old-Age Pension and Children's Allowances and subsidies.

Senator Inman: Mr. Chairman, I have just forgotten whether it was Father Topshee or Father Roach who mentioned about the lobster fishermen getting $2,000 for the season.

That would not be the whole income for the year?

Father Topshee: That is about all these men are doing, senator; lobster and some salmon.

Senator Inman: I understand there are fishermen, I know, that have to qualify for that by setting so many lobster traps and to fish for a certain number of weeks.

Father Topshee: Yes.

Senator Inman: And then after the lobster season, do they not do any other fishing?

Father Topshee: Not in this particular case. I quizzed him on that. I asked, "How many of you were working in the fish plant?" which is about 25 miles away. There were only three in the group worked there. I then asked them about other fishing. They said some years they make a little money on salmon, but most of them...

Senator Inman: I am glad they get Fishermen's Insurance. I know it is a help.

Father Topshee: Yes. It is certainly a help but in this case, too, there is a possibility for something else in that area. There are some areas of Irish moss not far from them. Some of them could develop a factory there. This is what we mean by making intensive study in each community.

Senator Inman: That would also prolong the time when they would draw Fishermen's Insurance?

Father Topshee: That is right, senator.

Senator McGrand: Then this good life that you are looking for in Nova Scotia must come from the development of your natural resources; is that right?

Father Topshee: Yes.

Father Roach: I think the main resources we have—you didn't mention when you talked about natural resources, Halifax Harbour, the Strait of Canso, and with the international trade that is going on today mainly connected with shipping that will be, I don't know, perhaps our best resource.

But I think we recognize generally speaking in the Extension Department that there are going to be large standards in the Atlantic Region as well as in the rest of North America. We cannot have people in every little community as much as would like to have them there. Centralization and urbanization is a major factor facing poverty in the Atlantic Region. We just cannot throw these people out of small areas and put them into urban areas. You have to do something with them to make them find a place.

We have tremendous experience in the number of poor people that we have sent to Toronto and where they left. There is just a shuttle service back and forth between the Maritime Provinces and Ontario and the people who cannot make it; but certainly within the Maritimes we are going to have huge growth centres. Halifax-Dartmouth would be one. Saint John, New Brunswick, we are going to build perhaps our greatest industries in connection with our shipping.

Senator McGrand: On the deep water ports, do you feel the ships are going to be so big they will not use the St. Lawrence?

Father Roach: Yes. Containerization and huge oil tankers.

Senator McGrand: You consider that as part of your natural resources?

Father Roach: Oh, definitely. Our main natural resource.

Mr. MacDonald: I wanted to come back to your social insurance for fishermen. Many people feel that this is a very dysfunctional type of policy in the fishing industry. It adds about $300 to $400 a year to the inshore fishermen's income. I doubt that the average income for inshore fishermen is even $2,000.

One of the effects it has is that a fisherman will quit fishing as soon as he has enough stamps to get unemployment insurance.

Secondly, because of it, though not totally, probably, they will not go into any other employment because they have this unemployment insurance coming in at a particular time of the year. It has become very dysfunctional for the offshore fishermen. There are probably many other implications of this social—it is really a social welfare scheme. It is not insurance at all.

It is good. I would not want to take it away from them but it should be looked at and re-examined very carefully.

The Chairman: Father Roach, you used the term "cultural poverty." What did you really mean by that?

Dr. MacDonald: I used that term. I think I used "cultural poverty"—poverty that comes from, or that you define in terms of the motiuations of individuals, the amount of basic knowledge he has.

For instance, you could get these people involved in groups, and I think this is where much of the group development approach or process has fallen down. You assume that there is a certain level of motivation and education to improve your situation and a certain amount of hope, but this cultural poverty is characterized, I think, by a sense of hopelessness, a sense of despair, a sense of apathy, and that pretty well describes it.

To assume that it is just sufficient to sit this group of people down in a group and say, "Now, we will do a survey on them," and ask, "What is the problem? You tell us and we will solve it."

They do not even know what the problem is. They have gone below that level of knowledge where they can define "What is the problem?" and have gone below the level of intelligence where they even care about getting ahead. They are content to stay here in complete dependence on welfare policies. You find that not only among the ethnic groups but among many of the non-ethnic groups in Nova Scotia now; especially in the fishing villages and that is why I am commenting about the insurance for fishermen.

The Chairman: We have now got to the point where you describe the state of condition you were faced with constantly. What do we do? Whatever do we make to get them out of that particular state you described of cultural poverty, all of its own? How do you reach them? You say they don't know the elementary things they ought to know, how do you reach them?

Dr. MacDonald: I think the only way that we can see that you can reach them is, as I have mentioned before, the team approach—the intensive approach. The team approach that will hit some elementary things such as financial objectives, household management, care of children, the problem of alcohol, the problem of dissension within the family unit.

We have people working in the field on these problem areas. They are so extensively deployed it is a one shot per year affair. They go in at the very last moment when somebody is going to get killed or thrown in jail or something. But, what I am advocating is that this team approach be used with families, that it involve professionals who are competent in each problem area, that the professionals work on a series basis or programme basis and that they just do not go in when they are ready but go in when the people need them and when the programme is there and then follow up.

All these people, or many of them have to move through this environment to probably an urban environment. There has to be a follow up. I know this is a programme which implies an awful lot of expense and professional personnel but I do not see any other way around it.

The Chairman: Well, Father Roach, I think you said this. You believed education to income. You just put a pin in the balloon, as far as I am concerned, because I was brought up in this country to believe that these poor people in Canada came out of the Province of Nova Scotia.

Father Roach: No. There was a direct connection today, you see. I think all studies have proven that a person's first job in North American society is a very good indicator where that person is going to be when he is 50 or 60 years of age.

The problem with our type of society is that it is different for young people even more than it was for my parents and grandparents. Society today is arranged in such a way that it requires an educated or technical type of person to fit into it and if you cannot fit into it, you cannot earn an income. You just can't get it. The type of job that would be in North America that is geared to people without education are rapidly disappearing and the type of jobs coming on the market are in the professional, clerical and technical fields and all the studies indicate this.

So what happens here is that you have a demand in the occupational world up here and the poverty people are down here. They can never meet the demand. We have to somehow move them up. There are enough jobs, I think, in North America, good jobs for every person if we can master it.

There is a direct connection in North America today with education and income. If you have an education you have the ability to earn a good income.

The Chairman: Father, that is not the question. Everybody agrees with that and we could not agree more. The point I made was that this province had the education more than any other.

Father Roach: This province...

The Chairman: I have been listening to Senator Connolly.

Father Roach: We exaggerate. There was a bit of a myth there. I am not trying to hit Senator Connolly.

The Chairman: I was only fooling.

Father Roach: The United States level of education is higher than Canada. In Canada we have a general average and the Atlantic Region is lower than the Canadian average. The educational level in Nova Scotia is lower than the Canadian average. The Canadian average is lower than the American average. Yet we compete in a North American continent.

Now, it is true we do educate quite a few Nova Scotians and some of them become outstanding persons but there are many more who are not educated. I think statistics also have proven that if you take the average education of a number of people who migrated from Nova Scotia, it is higher than the Canadian average but what does that do for the people who are left behind now?

The Chairman: Well, they will pick up on their education. I see what you mean now. I have another question which anyone can answer.

With our social welfare measures that we have in this country—and they are extensive and I am not going to enumerate them now. They cost us $6 billion a year. We started in 1929 to build up a welfare system. This is now 40 years later. What is wrong? Why have we got almost one million people on welfare in this country right now? What is wrong?

Father Roach: I think we neglected to consider people and the dignity of a person to try to develop a person. I don't think giving Indians money will ever solve the Indian problem but some day we have to wake up to the fact that we have to teach Indians to become first class Canadians and the same with any group of poor people. Giving money by itself is not going to solve the problem.

The Chairman: But Father we have been accused of not giving money in the early days and the following days. We were the most tight-handed and parsimonious and the poor were complaining constantly they were not getting as they ought to. Even today you hear that complaint so that is not quite the answer.

Father Roach: It is only part of the answer.

The Chairman: I think Mr. MacDonald wants to discuss this matter.

Mr. MacDonald: I think in North America and Canada especially that the welfare system became a kind of middle class escape mechanism for refusing to conform to the economic order from which these welfare people are dropouts and I do not agree at all under our present economic system we can have the best of training and the best of education and that there are enough jobs for everybody who is unemployed at present under our present economic structure.

There are, I think, some other measures that have to be taken in terms of adjustment of what kind of labour force and who is going to be in the labour force. I think we will have to seriously start looking at our economic structure in terms of who determines where investment capital is going? Is it going to be centralized in a few key areas? To a degree that is happening now in Nova Scotia. There is planning of growth centres; and before now it was to determine maximum output for minimum input. That is the way capital went in Toronto and Central Canada and other areas which yielded more profit. That was the end of investment and the end of jobs, so welfare became an excuse for not facing the issue, I think, and I still think this.

The Chairman: But, doctor, in the matter of incidents there are far more people below the poverty line in Toronto than there are in Nova Scotia, one hundred per cent in absolute figures, and it is spread all over the country. So, there is no use in picking out any particular place. It has been a failure, which has been a total failure across the country, in British Columbia and everywhere.

Where did we go wrong, philosophically, economically and culturally? Where did we go wrong and continue to go wrong with all these measures? That is one of the questions we have got to answer.

Mr. MacDonald: I am not competent to answer specifically where we went wrong. I think probably if you would study the problem of poverty in larger cities much of it is created by the influx of people from areas where industry did not go to the rural areas.

Our cultural system is causing a lot of it and the commercialization of agriculture has gone to such an extreme now its only function is to produce food at the cheapest possible rate and it is not considered as a mechanism of employment or providing a distribution of employment for labour.

We have to decide: is it going to be purely a productive mechanism or is it going to be a social mechanism which will keep people involved in our society?

The way it is going now with collective farming and that, the whole thing will be done by machines.

The Chairman: Did you wish to say something Father Topshee.

Father Topshee: Very briefly, Mr. Chairman, without having done any research on the matter, I would ask where is the money going, the Children's Allowance and Pensions and so on? The cost of living is going up and it is given to them with one hand and taken away with another hand. Higher costs of groceries, rents and finance charges does not improve the situation of the family. That is my answer briefly, Senator.

The Chairman: Well, will you also answer another question. Assuming for the moment that we introduce a guaranteed income across Canada, should it be on a regional basis or a universal basis or what basis will we use now?

Father Topshee: I think it would have to be on the income basis.

The Chairman: I am assuming X number of dollars as an income from the Guaranteed Annual Income. Do we do it on a universal basis so the man in Newfoundland gets the same as the man in Toronto or do we do it on a regional basis or do we do it on some other basis?

Dr. MacDonald: Universal.

Father Topshee: I will agree, I think, it should be universal. As you mentioned yourself a little while ago there are poor people in Toronto. There are poor people right across the country.

Anyone else?

Father Roach: I would say it would have to be on a universal basis although I would like to see some other Federal legislation on a regional basis because they make us operate down here in the Atlantic Regions with ties that are geared to curb inflation and we are operating in anything but an inflationary economy and our whole housing problem is caused by Ottawa legislation.

The Chairman: This is very interesting because these are poor people's opinions we are asking for.

Dr. MacDonald: I am afraid of the guaranteed income—not in principle—but as Father

Roach said, if it is implemented now what is it going to mean?

All it will mean for us is that there will be more in Nova Scotia on a guaranteed income than in, let us say, central Canada. There are some problems which I would like to see before the guaranteed income. The first is a redistribution of the industrial facilities in the country or the building up in the Maritimes of its industrial structure; the re-organization of our rural industrial structure and then take the guaranteed income in to pick up the slack.

I don't think that the guaranteed income should be used to cover the sores of what our economic system is producing because what we are going to have relatively speaking then with the guaranteed income is very poor people relative to the people who are working in centralized industries with a very high rate of productivity.

The Chairman: Dr. MacDonald, the time is running out for us but your plan is the more forward looking one. We have got to come up with some answers in the very immediate future. I think I should make it clear to the three of you who are dedicated and understand this problem. What we think and what we are discussing is not a guaranteed income in isolation. What we are thinking of is the guaranteed income plus services. For the moment we try to think of the guaranteed income coming from the Federal Government and services coming from the Provincial Government and perhaps some of it from the Canada Assistance Act.

Now, have you got an opinion on something like that?

Father Roach: One of the problems you have, for example, is in housing, which is a serious problem. One of the main problems in housing in the Atlantic Provinces is that we are operating under Federal legislation and the whole system of housing legislation is geared to a completely different type of economy, than what we have and it makes us unable to participate in this housing programme. You can find that in other fields as well.

I suppose it is natural that the Government is more concerned about the large provinces such as Ontario but it imposes the same type of legislation needed in Ontario on the Atlantic Provinces and it makes a bad situation worse.

The Chairman: Father, I was told by an expert last night—and Senator Pearson and other Senators were there that it was not a shortage of mortgage money but that your builder here is building 20 houses while the same builder in Ontario will build 100. That is the local man.

Father Roach: I would not accept that. That maybe the fact. We have taxed housing out of the reach of the Maritimes. Down in the Maritimes, in Nova Scotia, right now the ordinary man making $5,000 a year has to pay 19 per cent sales tax to buy materials. He borrows that money to pay the sales tax and he has to pay about 10 per cent mortgage on it. We have taxed housing out of the reach of most Maritimers.

Sure, we have the 11 per cent sales tax...

The Chairman: You have got that all over the country.

Father Roach: But we can't afford it.

The Chairman: Yes, but it is not that these people cannot sell more houses. That is all they want to build. That was made very clear.

Father Roach: Yes. They can sell houses for $25,000 or $30,000 but we haven't got the people in the Maritimes who can buy that kind of house. We need houses for $10,000, for $8,000, for $12,000 and that is the only kind of house that perhaps 60 or 70 per cent of our people can afford.

If you come on the market with $25,000 homes you cannot produce very many of them. There is not enough people around that can afford that type of housing.

The Chairman: Are there any more questions from any of the Senators? We have got some able and willing witnesses here. We should not pass them up.

By the way, Father Roach, you said something a moment ago that interested me. You talked about a man who was in some type of work and had worked all his life and you said he had no education. Well, in a sense you are now talking about education in the formal sense, but surely I have found that the native shrewdness one picks up along the way indicates some of these people are well educated in many ways.

Father Roach: Yes. A perfect example that is in the housing programme where we work with selfhelp housing. We can take the native talents that most people in the Maritimes have and use them if we have legislation and the Government to support that kind of operation.

Most of the people in poor housing can be helped if we can use that but a coal miner who spends most of his life in the coalmine with no formal education cannot be taken out of a coalmine situation and placed in Toronto. The techniques that he acquires over the 30 years in the coalmines cannot be used very effectively in a city like Toronto.

Father Topshee: Senators, the Department of Education of Nova Scotia has recognized what you have just stated in that they gave the equivalent of a grade 10 certificate or a grade 11 certificate out.

The Chairman: Well, gentlemen, may I just say that most of us have heard a great deal about you for many years and, speaking on behalf of the Committee, we are not the least bit disappointed. We expected a great deal from you today and we got a great deal.

You have had a social outlook here that I have always thought was very advanced. It was imaginative. It is purposeful. It has been realistic and more than that you stuck with it when the going was very rough and it has been rough for a long long time.

Now, on behalf of the Committee, I want to thank you. We appreciate very much your coming. The evidence you gave was very very good.

We have got about five or six or seven minutes left before we take our next appointment. Would you field some questions from the floor.

Are there any questions from the floor.

Mr. Johnson: My name is Greg Johnson. I would like to direct this question at Father Roach. This is concerning the Indians. He said a while ago that Indians have had a guaranteed income from the Department of Indian Affairs. I wouldn't want anybody to go away from this meeting feeling that this is so. This is absolutely untrue and Father Roach, this just doesn't work.

Another point that Father Roach brought up—he was saying they have poured a lot of money into the Indian people and Indian Reservations and this doesn't work. They need something else. They need to be taught. You say we need to teach them how to become first class Canadians.

Well, as far as the Indians are concerned, I would like to say that we have seen how the first class Canadian treat their friends. We have seen how the first class Canadian treats his poor and who gave you the authority to decide for us that we want to become first class Canadians?

The Chairman: The next question.

A voice from the floor: Answer the question.

Father Roach: I work with the Indians. I know the situation he is talking about. There has been large sums of money spent on Indians but I say it was spent in the wrong way. I know this gets very personal but if you totalled up what an Indian family receives in housing, in medicine, in clothing, in food, in all forms of welfare in any one given year I am pretty darn sure that it will be higher than what anybody is considering for that basic guaranteed income if it ever does come; but it was handled in the right way.

The money was given to them and the Government made the Indians helpless in the process. When you build houses for them, when you give them food, when you give them clothing, when you give them medicine, when you give them hospitalization, that is all given. I don't care what you call it but it is money that has been spent and it is spent and it did not help the Indians very much.

Mr. Johnson: But in effect this is not guaranteed income, which is what you implied.

Father Roach: I do not care what you call it.

The Chairman: Are there any other questions.

Mr. Philmore: Yes, right here.

The Chairman: Go ahead.

Mr. Philmore: I will be very brief. I just wanted to say I have been here for a half an hour or so and I have not heard any great attention being paid to one facet of welfare with which I think perhaps Father Roach will agree.

Something like two-thirds of the people on welfare—something like two-thirds of the poor are children. I would hate the Senators to go away from here thinking that this is an adult problem, a problem that can be easily solved with adults. We might even say "forget about the adults" and work on the children so we shut off the flood of poor at the beginning of the thing.

Father Roach, I would like a comment on that from you, sir, if you would not mind.

Father Roach: No. Our belief is that it has to be a total project where you involve—it is true perhaps as you say in proportion there are many more young people—but it has to be a total community, neighbourhood type of approach where you work on housing, on education, on motivation, on even the very little basic things in the beginning and certainly hope you are going to save the vast majority of the children but it has to be a total approach.

The Chairman: Is there anyone else with a question.

A voice from the floor: Would Mr Philmore suggest that the Government work with the children and forget the old people...

The Chairman: Wait a minute, now. Gentlemen the questions are asked here. Are there any questions from the audience.

A voice from the floor: I will direct it to you.

The Chairman: Go ahead.

A voice from the floor: Would the last speaker suggest that the Government forget about the parents of these children who have contributed to the riches of the few of this country and just work on the children so that they can have them brainwashed?

The Chairman: No, I did not understand him to say that. I understood him to say that perhaps we could put more emphasis on the children.

A voice from the floor: He said "forget about the adults."

The Chairman: Are there any other questions? If there are no other questions I have already thanked you but for the record I want to acknowledge on behalf of the Committee there is a brief from Mr. Leonard Smith, one from the Nova Scotia Federation of Labour, by representative Mr. Leo Mackay and one from the Mainland Branch, Nova Scotia School of Social Workers by Mr. Robert Cahill and these will be turned over to the Committee.

Thank you. The meeting is adjourned.

The meeting adjourned.

APPENDIX "A"

A STATEMENT AND VIDEO TAPE
PRESENTATION TO THE SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON POVERTY OF THE SENATE OF CANADA

November 1969

Submitted by The Halifax Neighbourhood Center and Halifax Tenants Protective Association with the support of the Nova Scotia Human Rights Commission.

Those Presenting

Mr. Leslie Cunning—BA University of Calgary—MA University of Calgary, Dec. 1969—Political Science Degree; Appointed Executive-Director of Halifax Neighbourhood Project October, 1969.

Canon F. M. French, St. Mark's Parish and Co-Chairman, Tenants Protective Association.

PART 1

Ladies and Gentlemen:

What you are about to see is, perhaps, self-explanatory. However, we of the Neighbourhood Centre and the Tenants Protective Association feel we must provide at least a brief prologue in order to enable you to appreciate it fully.

It is an unusual kind of presentation and we think that it is essential that you know how it came about.

When it became known that the Senate Committee would be coming to Halifax, to hold public hearings, it was agreed by many concerned individuals that some kind of presentation should be made by the groups involved directly with people suffering from conditions of poverty.

At the time, we were concerned about the nature of the presentation. We felt that it was essential to give a voice to those who know poverty as it really is—the poor themselves. However, the poor do not write briefs. The people do not appreciate formality. Its colorful trappings are not part of their own daily existence.

Still, formality was a requirement laid down by your Committee.

Consequently, it was suggested that a film, depicting explicitly the conditions of poverty, providing a medium for the expression of the views of people living in those conditions, should be produced for showing at these hearings.

Accordingly representatives of Halifax's poverty community met with members of our organizations, social workers and other professionals to discuss the preparations of just such a film. It is perhaps important to underline the fact that this discussion included those who work closely with people in poverty, and some of the poor themselves.

That was, to say the least, an extraordinary meeting. One might have expected that the film proposal would have been adopted readily—that the idea of giving poor people a voice in all of this would have been embraced unanimously. But such was far from the case. Instead of unanimous approval, the meeting was characterized by a sense of anger and frustration—a mounting feeling of helplessness perhaps best summed up by the words of one of the participants: "How dare we or anyone else use people in this way," he asked. "It's inhuman—cruel to say the least. People around here—the poor—they've bled enough. They've been asked what it's like to be poor over and over again. So now we're going to ask them to open up their wounds and bleed some more, this time before some cameras, just because some senators from Ottawa don't know about poverty in Canada."

That, members of the Senate Committee, was our initial discussion of the film proposal. It was painful. It was agony. We were torn—in fact, we were shredded—between a feeling on the one hand of what's-the-use and on the other hand that we must keep trying.

Finally, it was suggested and generally agreed that, although we could not ask people to bleed once again for the sake of yet another presentation to yet another investigation of poverty, the senators should at least have been listening to and observing the anguish of that meeting. And that, members of the Senate Committee on Poverty is what you will witness today through the medium of videotape... the frustration and growing bitterness of many people who have been battling with poverty with no promise of an end in sight.

Our purpose in appearing before you today is neither to define what poverty is nor offer a slickly prepared presentation of proposed cures. Most of these must surely be well known to you all by now.

Through this film presentation we are endeavoring to communicate to you something of the feeling and perspective—the human perspective—of poverty.

What you are about to see is in no way contrived. This is not acting. You are asked by way of videotape, to listen in on, to see and hopefully experience some of the deeply-rooted feelings of the poor and the people who work most closely with them.

The film is not sympathetic to committee investigations in general this committee in particular. In the past, this area has been researched, investigated, dissected with no tangible results. We appear before this committee today with some doubt in our minds about the power of this committee and the Senate, to which it is responsible, to effect necessary change. It is our most fervent wish that our doubts will be proved unfounded.

PART 2

The Senate Committee has been and will be presented with innumerable pages of well documented and substantiated evidence. Instead of presenting you with another statement of recommendations we wish to communicate to you the frustration of the poor. Although information is a necessary prerequisite for legislation we wish to communicate to you the need for action.

In the film which you will see we are not attacking the Senate Committee as much as the political arrangements which use the Committee as an excuse for action. The Committee was set up to conduct investigations not create legislation. This form of political activity is totally inadequate to meet the needs of the poor.

Participation of the Poor—Dr. McQueen, Director of the Economic Council of Canada stated before you on April 22, 1969 that "the poor, for various reasons which are no fault of their own, tend to be inarticulate." They lack the organization, leadership, and confidence to effectively articulate their needs and propose legislation but they do not lack the desire to substantially alter the conditions of poverty which surround them.

There is a growing consensus amongst political observers that existing forms of political representation are inadequate channels through which individuals can convey complaints and influence decision-making processes. In particular, the poor tend to be the least acquainted with these processes. Political decisions are conducted in an atmosphere which is remote from the personal experiences of the poor.

Politics is conducted at an aggregate level. Conflicts within the society concern less the individual than the aggregates to which he belongs. The translation of these conflicts to the political area is accomplished through group activity but a general lack of organization on the part of the poor precludes effective influence on their part. Simply stated, the poor have fewer means available to them for achieving entrance into the political system with the result that sizeable proportions of the population are barred from effective political activity. In this situation the poor are the recipients of community policy and it is difficult for them to answer back except through direct action.

With respect to the company of Young Canadians brief submitted to you on May 8, 1969, we recommend that: Funds be allocated to communities directly for social and cultural development, and that these funds be controlled by that part of the community for whom the development is necessary. This encouragement of community action, far from being a waste of funds, will give the poor an impetus to organize.

IMMEDIATE ACTION

It is the contention of many individuals in Halifax that the Government of Canada has access to sufficient information to begin implementation of the recommendations of the task force on housing and urban development. It is our contention that further delay will not only be detrimental to present conditions, but disastrous. The report should be adopted in full.

The Carter Commission on Taxation, discussed in the brief of the Economic Council, should be implemented fully and not in sections as is presently being done.

GUARANTEED ANNUAL INCOME

A number of briefs have strongly recommended establishment of a guaranteed annual income. It is a necessary instrument to effect fulfillment of basic economic needs. The majority of Canada's poor are presently unaffected by substantial welfare payments and these are the individuals who require assistance.

CONCLUSION

If some action is not forthcoming immediately the poor and the unorganized will no longer be content to remain recipients. They are beginning to demand a voice in the decisions which effect them and if they are ignored they will be forced to take direct action.

APPENDIX "B"

Brief to the Special Senate Committee on Poverty

presented by

David Critchley, social worker

The poor are relatively better off

1.1 For most of the twenty years I have been a social worker, most of the people I have worked with have been poor; and I take heart from the fact that a higher percentage of Canadians are eating better, receiving better health care, and are more adequately clothed than they were when I began working as a social worker in a slum area in Toronto in 1949.

1.2 By these standards—and they are important ones—the Canadian poor are better off. But after a society has guaranteed the right to the minimum means to survival—in other words, the means to keep body together—poverty then becomes relative. For example, relative to those of us who are 'have' Canadians, there would appear to be just as many 'havenot' Canadians as twenty years ago; and they are just as cut off from the mainstream of life as they've always been. Indeed, I am among those who believe that the conspicuous consumption that many of us enjoy and that daily advertises itself on our television screens and in our supermarkets and department stores has widened the gap between the haves and havenots of Canada, and has increased the sense of despair, failure, and inadequacy of the poor.

Psychic deprivation

1.3 This brings me to the basic idea contained in my Brief and on which most of my observations and recommendations are based, namely, that the challenge of poverty is not just that of guaranteeing the survival and growth of the body: a society that is fit for humans must also assure the survival and growth of the spirit.

1.4 It is my contention that we have reached the point where we can and are willing to guarantee that nearly all Canadians will have the right to physical life and growth (even though the poor are more prone to physically stunted and handicapped growth and shorter life); but I think that our record with regard to spiritual or psychic survival and growth is, if anything, worse than it was twenty years ago. Certainly, using one fairly reliable measure of psychic survival and growth—self esteem and self congruence—my experience suggests that the Canadian poor have lower self esteem than they did twenty years ago. In the midst of the plenty that is so visible, the sense of despair and failure of the poor should be greater than it was in the days before television when the contrasts were not as evident and the standard of living was not as high as it is today.

All Canadians suffering from psychic poverty

1.5 I am suggesting then that, after the right to survival of the body has been guaranteed by a society, the challenge to the society is that it add to its criteria of success the degree to which it guarantees and promotes psychic or spiritual survival and development. It is my contention that by this standard Canada has not only failed the poor, but has increasingly become a place where human values and relations are being debased and replaced by economic values and consumer relations with the resultant demoralization and dehumanization of all Canadians.

1.6 I want to stress that I am saying that in terms of psychic measures of man I think our failure in Canada has been almost universal and is not confined to the poor, though as always the poor suffer more. Further, I am saying that in this respect the poor are not a separate problem to be studied and dealt with in isolation (as we so often do). The poor are a product and symptom of a society that, if it has not failed, is failing in its ability to promote the survival and growth of the spirit.

1.7 I know that assertion and declamation do not make a statement true, especially in a day and age that is suspicious of any phenomenon that cannot be quantified, measured, footnoted, and filed. Therefore, let me say that there is mounting research as well as experiential documentation that we Canadians suffer from psychic deprivation and poverty that ranges from gross to relatively benign, but which few are immune from. Economic means can perhaps make more bearable or can help a person avoid confronting his psychic deprivation, but just because a person dies from unknown causes does not in any way alter the fact of death.

Self esteem and self congruence as measures of psychic health

1.8 I mentioned earlier there is mounting documentation of the existence and increase of this malaise of the spirit. I have not had the time or the resources to compile a bibliography of the considerable evidence that supports this claim, although I have supplied a few references at the end of this Brief. However, the fact is that there are measures of self esteem and self congruence (some of which we are using at the Maritime School of Social Work of Dalhousie University), and I believe they are reliable indices of an individual's psychic health. If we were to use such measures to determine the psychic wealth or poverty of Canadians (and I have a recommendation to this effect later in the Brief), I think we would find our society is in serious trouble. I am sure it would also be found that a low self esteem and self congruence quotient is not confined to the poor.

1.9 It is true that a recent study of poor black children in Halifax did indicate that by the age of four the black children considered themselves inferior to white Haligonians. Also, other studies have shown that low self esteem is not only a major handicap of the poor but that there appears to be a correlation between self esteem and one's ability to obtain and meet the demands of employment. However, my experience with the relatively privileged students who come to the Maritime School of Social Work, as well as my experience with many other relatively privileged student and non-student Canadians, has convinced me that black or poor Canadians are far from the only ones suffering from serious psychic distortion and stultification. And I might add that one of the main challenges in the training of social workers is that of helping the student to improve his self esteem and self congruence because it has been found that there is a direct relation between self esteem and self congruence and one's effectiveness in helping others. Incidentally, it may be of interest to note that this finding applies to other helping professions such as teaching, psychology, and psychiatry; and there is also reason for believing that the findings are applicable to business relations.

Ethical and value judgements of Canadian society hostile to psychic health

1.10 Even if one grants that we Canadians suffer as a whole from varying degrees of psychic malnutrition, there is still the major question of cause. Without meaning to imply there is not a casual relation between psychic and economic poverty (because there obviously is), I believe that the basic challenge and cause is to be found in the ethics and values of Canadian society, particularly those which we practice as distinct from those which we preach. I submit there is a fundamental causal relation between psychic poverty in Canada and the ethical and value judgements and beliefs that govern our human relations in Canada and that determine and govern our expectations of our selves and each other, whether rich or poor.

2.1 I think the evidence supports the view that essentially, and in spite of many acts of charity and humanity that indicate what we are capable of, we Canadians in our human relations between adult and adult and adult and child are punitive, dogmatic, suspicious, moralistic, judgemental, paternalistic, perfectionistic, and arbitrary in our expectations of our selves and each other. Furthermore, there is significant documentation that such attitudes are damaging to self esteem and self congruence and the ability to enter into satisfying growth producing human relations.

Relation between our values and attitudes and the problem of poverty.

2.2 Before closing my submission with my recommendations, may I give an illustration of what effect our values and attitudes have in terms of the Canadian poor.

2.3 It would appear that within a few years we Canadians will have some form of the guaranteed annual income. I submit that if the guaranteed annual income is a product of the present ethic of our society we will find that after it has been instituted the poor will still be with us, as relatively poor as always and as numerous as ever. And this will be so because the guaranteed annual income and any other programs we develop will be the product of the same old ways we think about the poor and each other.

2.4 Because of our fear that someone will take advantage of us, that someone will choose idleness rather than work, that we'll subsidize private enterprise or undermine unions, and a host of other fears and suspicions that are indicative of how low our self esteem and congruence is, we'll insist that the guaranteed annual income be less than the minimum wage, and that no one who is on welfare be as well off as anyone who is not on welfare. In other words, we'll continue to do what we do now: we will unconditionally guarantee Canadians the right to life, but we will be conditional about the right to participate in and enjoy life. Our participatory democracy will be limited to those who have the means to participate. And by perpetuating this state of affairs we'll not only contribute to and maintain economic deprivation and the relative gap between have and havenot, but we will contribute to and increase the spiritual and psychic deprivation of all Canadians.

2.5 That we Canadians are suffering from alienation from our selves and each other is, I believe, to be found in the introverted and almost suicidal disaffection and desperation of many of the young, and the spirit of anger, hostility, arbitrariness, and insensitivity that increasingly marks and mars the relations between young and old, between youth, between adults, between French and English speaking Canadian, between black and white, and between have and havenot.

2.6 In short and in summary, then, I submit that whether or not we will be able to deal adequately with economic poverty and deprivation will depend in large measure on our willingness and ability to confront and deal with our psychic and spiritual poverty and deprivation. We have every bit as much reason to fear death from psychic contamination and pollution as we do from contamination and pollution of the air and other natural resources.

Recommendations

2.7 My recommendations, which grow out of the foregoing, follow.

2.8 Recommendation A—GUARANTEED ANNUAL INCOME. Though they have many weaknesses, our present poverty programs and measures guarantee that most Canadians have the right to physical survival. If this is all the guaranteed annual income guarantees, then its only advantage will be that it will probably prove to be a more effective delivery system than our present welfare programs.

2.9 I therefore recommend that a guaranteed annual income should guarantee the right and the means to participate in Canadian society and should not be conditional on whether or not one works for a living, nor should it include any other condition. Specifically (and in terms of present standards of living) a guaranteed annual income should provide the means for every Canadian to feed, clothe, house, and educate himself; to drive a car; to own a television and radio; attend movies and other cultural presentations; have an annual vacation; and generally to participate in the mainstream of Canadian life. This recommendation does not assume that there will not be income differences, but rather that a minimum income will be guaranteed all Canadians that will make possible their participation in the benefits of Canadian society.

2.10 It will perhaps be noted that in the above recommendation I have not included as a basic right the right to work. I have considerable doubt that our society or any technologically advanced society can guarantee this right, nor do I believe that there is any real evidence to support the widespread belief that work is a necessary condition for self-fulfilment. Furthermore, it is by no means certain that a technologically advanced society requires for its maintenance and development that all of its members work.

3.1 Recommendation B—RESEARCH PROJECT ON GUARANTEED ANNUAL INCOME. Because I believe that the version of a guaranteed annual income as recommended in Recommendation A is hostile to the attitudes and values which presently govern our society and therefore will not be accepted; and also because I believe many Canadians would not support such a proposal for fear that it would not contribute to self esteem, would be detrimental to society because it would encourage idleness, and would be detrimental to the economy, I recommend that research projects be sponsored by the Federal Government, Provincial Governments, and Foundations to determine the effects of a guaranteed annual income as recommended in Recommendation A on a random sample of the Canadian poor for a five year period. Such research projects would be particularly interested in what psychic effects such an income had on the participants and what effects it had on their work behaviour.

3.2 I might add that this recommendation would appear to be within the terms of reference of the Federal-Provincial Newstart programs.

3.3 It might also be of interest to note that when I made this suggestion on the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation's national television program VIEWPOINT several years ago I received more supportive mail and phone calls than I have for any other radio or television talk. Indeed many Canadians inquired where they could send their contributions for such a project and several community groups actually voted funds for such a purpose.

3.4 Recommendation C—TEACHERS AND THE DEVELOPMENT OF SELF ESTEEM. If we cannot or will not guarantee that all Canadians have the means to participate meaningfully in society, and since in our work oriented society the inability to participate in society appears to be a serious blow to psychic growth, it becomes even more imperative that we at least guarantee all Canadian children—and especially the poor—experiences that contribute to their self congruence and self esteem.

3.5 Our schools could be a major force for this purpose if they were staffed by teachers who were able to contribute to the self realization and self congruence of their students. Unfortunately, there is all too much evidence that for many, many school children, rich and poor, that school is a psychically damaging experience and contributes to juvenile and adult maladjustment.

3.6 As long as we continue to believe that good teachers are born and not made, this situation will continue. Fortunately, however, the fact of the matter is that if we desire it there is absolutely no reason why our society cannot in a relatively short time significantly improve the competence of those teachers who are presently teaching and ensure that future teachers will be the major force for personal growth that they should be.

3.7 Support for this statement comes from research studies that have found that effective teachers have certain human relations skills or attributes; that these skills or attributes can be measured; and that these skills or attributes can be significantly developed and improved in training programs of one hundred hours.

3.8 On the basis of the foregoing, I would recommend that (i) priority should be given by Provincial Departments of Education to improving the competence of present and future teachers and (ii) if a choice has to be made between educational plants (including mechanical teaching aids) and teacher training and teacher salaries, that precedence should be given to the training and salaries.

3.9 I might add that Provincial Departments of Education, teacher training colleges, and local School Boards for the most part appear not to be aware of some of the encouraging information and research that is available on the subject of teacher effectiveness. Steps could be taken to remedy this immediately. It is not good enough to emphasize teacher training. It is also essential that the training be effective.

3.10 Further support for the importance of the school is to be found in those studies that indicate that the school years are the years during which work habits and attitudes are developed and that also suggest there is a direct relation between work habits and attitudes and self esteem.

4.1 Recommendation D—LEISURE TIME SERVICES AND PERSONNEL. My remarks concerning the crucial and major contribution that teachers can make toward the personal development of children are also applicable to the staff of leisure time services. Unfortunately, our society generally assigns a low priority to such services and to the staffing of them and therefore their potential is severely limited. The community centre movement has never really taken hold in Canada with the result that many communities—have and have not—have inadequate leisure time services.

4.2 If schools could come to accept the major influence that they have on the psychic development of children and if our society is prepared to guarantee that children have teachers who are capable of fostering such development, we perhaps would be more prepared to make the school the centre of cultural and leisure time as well as educational activities. This is usually referred to as the "lighted school house" approach and I think it has much to recommend it.

4.3 I recommend that municipal and provincial recreation and education authorities work, communicate, and plan together more than they do at present in most localities with a view to preventing unnecessary duplication of buildings and programs. It may well be that recreation and education boards would benefit from official interrelationships, but certainly they should work more closely together than they do at present.

4.4 Recommendation E—RESEARCH AND TRAINING INSTITUTES IN HUMAN RELATIONS. There is a vast amount of writing and research that has been done in the area of human growth and development, including research into the causes and effects of poverty. Yet Canada has no resource to undertake such research and, just as important, to disseminate its findings and demonstrate the possible applications of such research in homes, schools, industry, churches, and other institutions of our society. This is probably one of the major reasons there is such a gap between what we know and what we do as far as human relations is concerned. If the human sciences were as financially able and as enthusiastic to spread their insights and findings as is business and industry to gain acceptance for its products, Canada would undoubtedly be a better place for all Canadians, rich and poor.

4.5 The Vanier Institute on the Family is perhaps a step in this direction, but it is limited in its resources and conception. I recommend that the Government of Canada sponsor a Canadian Research and Training Institute in Human Relations as a pilot project, with the hope that such institutes would develop throughout the country under public, voluntary, or joint auspices.

4.6 If the Canadian Government were to implement this recommendation, to my knowledge Canada would become the first country to commit itself in such a tangible way to determining and furthering its progress in terms of the self realization and human relations of its citizens. It would seem to me that this lovely land of ours is a very appropriate place to initiate such a venture and such an adventure. Incidentally, on the basis of the reaction that I have had to this proposal from other sources, I believe it would receive significant and enthusiastic support.

4.7 Recommendation F—A NATIONAL STUDY OF SELF ESTEEM AND SELF CONGRUENCE. One of the first projects of a Research and Training Institute in Human Relations might well be a study to determine the self esteem and self congruence of Canadians—a sort of national personality test. It would be my prediction that we would be dismayed by the findings, especially with regard to the twenty or more percent of Canadians who are officially listed as poor. However, I think we would also be sobered by the psychic cost to the non-poor of our present way of life. Be that as it may, it would at least give us an indication of the challenge facing us. It would also determine what correlations exist between economic poverty and psychic poverty and might make us less inclined to be so glib and self-righteous when we speak of the poor.

4.8 Irrespective of the auspices, I believe there is urgent need for such a national psychic or spiritual inventory and would recommend it for serious consideration by Governments and Foundations and any others with the means to undertake or sponsor it;

Conclusion

4.9 It will perhaps have been noted that, although I am a social worker, I have devoted little if any attention in this Brief to welfare services and ways in which they might be improved. One reason is that I believe that others have and will be doing this in their presentations to the Committee. However, I have also not done so because it has been my experience in the four Canadian provinces in which I have lived and worked that most welfare services are able to do little more than alleviate the effects of poverty, while in many cases they by their attitudes and practices maintain or perpetuate poverty. There is much heartache and perhaps some heartbreak among many social workers over many of the policies and practices that we Canadians ask them to implement; and often we have been put in the position of having to act as paid mercenaries against the poor or quit. I am pleased to know that some of us have on occasion quit. Unfortunately however, we have thus far not found the unity or means to express the indignation that many of us feel, and this is in itself demoralizing.

4.10 I trust that the Special Senate Committee on Poverty will give us all reason to hope that some significant steps will be taken to rid ourselves of the terrible, soul-destroying scourge that poverty is and to make Canada a place where all can grow and flower, irrespective of income.

Submitted in some despair but with hope by, David Critchley, 44 Tangmere Crescent, Halifax, N.S.

October 26, 1969

Some References

5.1 BECKER, ERNEST. The Structure of Evil, An Essay on the Unification of the Science of Man. (New York: George Braziller, Inc., 1968)

5.2 DICKENSON, W. A. and TRUAX C. B. Group Counselling with College Under-achievers. (Arkansas Rehabilitation Research and Training Center, University of Arkansas Fayetteville, Arkansas)

5.3 FRIEDMAN, MAURICE. To Deny our Nothingness, (New York: Delaconte Press, 1967)

5.4 GLENN, VERNON. The Schools' Contribution to Mental Health, Discussion Papers VOLUME II, No. 9 (Arkansas Rehabilitation Research and Training Center, University of Arkansas, Fayetteville, Arkansas)

5.5 HENRY, JULES. Culture Against Man (Toronto: Random House, 1963)

5.6 HERZBERG, F. Work and the Nature of Man. (Cleveland: The World Publishing Company, 1966)

5.7 NEFF, WALTER S. Work and Human Behavior. (New York: Atherton Press, 1968)

5.8 TRUAX, C. B. and CARKHUFF, R. R. Toward Effective Counselling and Psychotherapy. (Chicago: Aldine Publishing Company, 1967)

5.9 SHOSTRAM, EVERETT L. Man the Manipulator. (Toronto: Bantam Books, 1968)
David Crichtley—Biological Information Education:

B. A., Mount Allison University (1947).
M. S. W., University of Toronto School of Social Work (1949).

Positions Held:

1. Community Secretary—Broadview YMCA in Toronto (1949-51).
2. Youth Organizer—Bermuda Social Welfare Board (1951-53).
3. Community Secretary—High Park YMCA in Toronto (1953-54).
4. Department Supervisor—University Settlement in Toronto (1954-57).
5. Associated Executive Director—Edmonton Welfare Council (1957-63).
6. Executive Director—Children's Home of Winnipeg (1963-67)
7. Associate Professor—Maritime School of Social Work, Dalhousie University (1967—).

Publications:

"You're Never Too Young" (YWCA Journal; May, 1959).

"Unemployment: First Item on the Agenda" (Canadian Welfare; January, 1961).

"Mothers Who Stay At Home" (Canadian Welfare; March, 1961).

"The Strange Tale of Adanacnac" (Canadian Welfare; November, 1961).

"To Fee or Not to Fee" (Canadian Welfare; July, 1962).

"Planning—Part or Parcel" (Canadian Welfare; May-June, 1963).

"No Place for Youth" (Canadian Welfare; January-February, 1966).

"The Disturbed Child and the Disturbed Professional" (Canadian Welfare; November-December 1967).

Also free lance radio and television work for such CBC programs as: Soundings, Trans-Canada Matinee, Viewpoint, Preview Commentary, Points West. While in Winnipeg, developed the idea for and was co-host of the weekly CBC television program "All in the Family".

Organized a Family Information Centre in a shopping plaza in Winnipeg where shoppers obtained information and consultation about personal and family concerns.

Memberships:

Canadian Association of Social Workers; Nova Scotia Association of Social Workers; Canadian Authors Association; Association of Canadian Television and Radio Artists.

Vital Statistics:

Age: 44 (July 22, 1925); married; 4 children; Canadian citizen.

APPENDIX "C"

BRIEF

to the

SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE ON
POVERTY

Submitted by

EXTENSION DEPARTMENT, ST. FRANCIS
XAVIER UNIVERSITYAntigonish, Nova Scotia
(Phone, area code 902, 867-2208)November
1969*Preamble*

1. The problem of poverty is one in which St. Francis Xavier University has been deeply involved in a direct and practical way, for a half-century. Its Extension Department whose adult education program today extends to more than eighty countries throughout the world, had its beginnings in the University's decision to attack the extreme poverty in Eastern Nova Scotia in the depressed period following World War One. In the intervening years, it has acquired enormous experience in the application of "self-help" techniques to improve living conditions of people in the low-income levels.

2. This experience has been condensed into what might be called, informally, the University's philosophy on poverty and its cure. Broadly speaking, it advances the premise that poverty is not an exclusively economic problem, that it is a condition of many facets, and that it can be approached successfully only if it is viewed as a comprehensive human problem, where improvement will be measured not in the narrow, statistical terms of economic indices, but in the creation of better men and women. Life for people in organized society is nothing other than the realization of human possibilities. There are five of these possibilities: the physical, economic, social, cultural and spiritual. It does not take much thought to realize that among these possibilities, the economic, while not the highest in order of dignity, is basic to all others. An individual should not be expected to pull himself up by his own bootstraps. Obviously, the economic factor is an overriding one and perhaps we should start with a discussion of the guaranteed annual wage, but this has been covered in many presentations to your Committee.

3. This University's adult education program, which is directed primarily to community development, emphatically educates people to do as much for themselves as is humanly possible. In today's increasingly complex environment, beyond doubt, government help is mandatory, and at times, must be massive. But the "welfare" concept ought to be subordinate to the principle that genuine improvement in living conditions is possible only when individuals have acquired the self-reliance and self-respect that comes from having participated substantially in their own salvation.

What Is Poverty

4. The experience of the St. Francis Xavier Extension Department leads us to believe that poverty cannot be measured in strictly economic or fiscal terms. The poverty line is frequently described in terms of annual cash income, but it is clear that some families can live orderly, comfortable and hopeful lives on an income that would leave other families in a condition of hopeless poverty.

5. As one of the extension fieldworkers has put it:

"Although economic hardship is the outstanding visible feature of poverty, it is not poverty in the total sense. Economic hardship, of course, can lead to poverty if it is long enduring, severe or too obvious compared with affluent surroundings, but total poverty is the admission of ineffectiveness in the social and economic environment of a family.

"A family in poverty has great difficulty in pursuing resourceful employment and is most likely wasteful with what income is available. As Alan Fry says, 'Poverty characteristics would include: Irregular living patterns, poor management of personal and family resources, abuse of liquor, frequent resort to violence to settle disputes, unacceptable levels of housekeeping and cleanliness, inability to perform according to a regular routine to accommodate regular employment, and disregard for the maintenance of physical facilities such as housing, furnishings and clothing.'

"The depth of one's poverty may be determined by" the prevalence and number of these characteristics and others like them."

6. We submit the above is a fair description of what might well be called the "poverty syndrome". It is family situations of this kind that must be eliminated.

The Nature of the Problem

7. The experience of St. Francis Xavier University in the realm of poverty is largely confined to the area of Eastern Nova Scotia. Here the impact of the regional disparity affecting all parts of Atlantic Canada has been aggravated by significant industrial and technological changes. These include sweeping cutbacks in the coal-mining industry, labor-trimming reorganization in steel-making, technological and market changes which have drastically altered the character as well as the quantity of the labor force engaged in fishing, woodland operations and farming.

8. Additionally, there has been a shift in the economic centre of gravity to such new industrial growth centres as the Strait of Canso. This has introduced problems of community reorganization and personnel placement.

9. Income levels in the Eastern Nova Scotia area are significantly lower than elsewhere in Canada. The rate of capital investment is far from brisk and where substantial capital has been injected by private enterprise, the increase in employment has not always been commensurate. In other cases new industries have been of a type employing mostly women and young people rather than heads of families. In the coastal communities the change from the relatively primitive inshore fishing operations to a heavily capitalized, large-scale deep-sea industry has, in many cases, created economic decline.

Educational Programs

10. Most observers will agree, we think, that the resources of this country, material and technological, are so great that no social or economic problem is beyond our capacity to solve, providing we have the will to solve it. It is a mistake to assume, however, that money alone can solve the problem of poverty. After all, the poverty we see in Atlantic Canada has grown side by side with the growth of the affluence of the nation as a whole. It is equally obvious that the enormous extension of welfare policy with its concomitant injection of massive public funds which we have seen over the past quarter-century, has had little significant impact on the condition of low-income groups in this part of Canada.

11. We conclude from this that little headway can be made until we tackle the basic element of our poverty: the inability of the individual to perform effectively in his environment. We are concerned here not with abstract "economic levels" or "geographical pockets of poverty", we are concerned with individual human beings—men, women and children.

12. There can be no hope of these people making any effective contribution to society, and thereby to their own advancement, until and unless they are trained and conditioned educationally. We are convinced that it is on the educational front that we shall achieve the ultimate victory over poverty.

13. The educational front, in fact, is actually a number of fronts: the regular formal and academic training of young people, technical and vocational training and retraining, and a whole range of non-academic studies and activities falling loosely under the heading of adult or continuing education. All three areas must become much more deeply concerned than they have ever been in the total educational uplifting of the Atlantic region.

14. Government assistance will be required on a large scale, notably financial; but wherever possible, local institutions and agencies should be employed to carry out the indicated programs.

15. There is obviously an urgent need for improvement in the elementary and secondary levels of formal education. It has been established beyond doubt that there is a very real relationship between the number of years of formal education and an individual's later earning power. Historically, the high incidence of student "drop-outs" in the Atlantic area was high on the list of factors contributing to regional poverty. In recent years there has been a drastic decrease in such casualties. This trend will have a profound effect on the economic and social climate of the region.

16. In the field of technical and vocational education we are seeing an increased emphasis on the need for retraining. With the phasing out of old industries and industrial techniques, and the arrival of new ones, the program presently conducted by the provincial Department of Education and financed by the federal Department of Manpower is, in our view, inadequate. It is clear that retraining facilities on a vast scale must be available to enable our work force to keep abreast of changing labor needs. Pilot projects operated by educational institutions with adult students on full-time basis should be initiated.

17. Counselling is a necessary part of this educative process, and the need for highly qualified professional counsellors is paramount. Such people must have training and experience needed to direct individuals to the appropriate institution for the training they need and, later, to direct them into the industrial or technical field where their contribution will find adequate recognition. An attempt should be made to have counselling for adults on a community basis with professional counsellors involved, preferably on the community level and not attached to government offices.

18. Adult education programs, which are primarily of a non-academic nature and generally directed either to the uplifting of the cultural and social status of individuals or to programs of community development and group action, call for the same high degree of professional leadership. The provision of this leadership is frequently beyond the means of local institutions without additional financial help from government sources.

19. One example of this third area is housing. "Members (of the Task Force on Housing) have noted that co-op housing has been most effective when promoted by university extension departments or other agencies able to provide specialized counselling and assistance to those involved. They would suggest that financial assistance be made available to appropriate agencies to hire such specialists to work with co-op housing groups." (Page 37, Report of Hellyer Task Force.)

Housing

20. Housing is not only one of the most vital factors in the measurement of poverty levels; in itself it contributes heavily, for better or worse, to the moral and social conditions of the families affected. It has been the experience of St. Francis Xavier University's Extension Department that housing programs, if properly conceived, directed and executed, can play a major role in lifting people out of the poverty syndrome.

21. For the past thirty years, the Extension Department has been involved in the direction of self-help cooperative housing projects which have resulted in the construction of more than three thousand privately-owned homes for low-income families in Nova Scotia.

22. The cooperative self-help housing technique is not well known. Briefly, it calls for the organization of a group of individuals who jointly plan, finance and construct a number of houses simultaneously, purchasing building materials in bulk and pooling their individual skills and labor. Self-help housing not only provides decent shelter at minimum cost, but it affords the participants a newly-gained sense of accomplishment and self-respect which invariably leads them to seek still higher goals.

23. At the present time, government policy seeks to meet the housing needs of people in the low-income bracket through the provision of what is called public housing, or low-rental housing. This customarily takes the form of row housing, town housing or other multiple-unit housing, heavily subsidized from public funds, and made available to the tenants at rents commensurate with the tenant's income.

24. Admittedly some public housing is necessary but it is the view of the Extension Department of St. Francis Xavier University that the self-help, or cooperative, approach to housing should receive increased attention on the part of government. Self-help programs can provide good homes, individually owned, for only a fraction—less than one-third—of the cost to the taxpayer of a low-rental public housing unit.

25. Additionally, the self-help housing program is a very real antidote to what has been called the "poverty syndrome", since it tends to accomplish what ought to be the goal of all sound welfare programs, the making of better people. (See Appendix A)

26. In this field, however, any significant expansion of activity would call for the provision of many more trained personnel than are presently available to organize and direct these projects. Private institutions have the expertise to train this leadership, but obviously not without financial assistance from federal sources as suggested by the Hellyer Task Force Report.

Out-Migration

27. Where regional disparity is a major contributing factor in the persistent poverty of a given area, the solution often advanced is that of out-migration to other more affluent, and more rapidly growing centres. We are not convinced that out-migration, by itself, is any kind of permanent remedy for the situation.

28. It is certain that the condition of the individual is not generally remedied by out-migration; often his condition is worsened. An underprivileged family from a rural setting frequently becomes an even more desperate problem in an urban slum.

29. In our view, the problem of poverty, no matter where it is found, must be faced in the here and now, not in some vague "elsewhere" or "tomorrow". Out-migration can certainly be an element in the war on poverty, but if people are to be exported they should be skilled, trained, and capable of taking an effective part in their new environment. People who are uneducated and unskilled will be a liability no matter where they are, and they will be unhappy. To move them from place to place benefits no one. (See Appendix B)

30. One must bear in mind, additionally, that the general uplifting of a backward area may depend in very large measure on the availability of a suitable pool of local, educated and skilled labor. Admittedly, out-migration to newer growth centres may have a role to play in the war on poverty, but its operation will call for careful supervision and control.

Old Age Groups

31. One of the groups most acutely deserving of attention in any discussion of poverty is that of the middle-aged and elderly. The age at which pensions are paid has been substantially reduced in recent years, and there is a good prospect of further reduction. In certain special cases, as for instance in the coal-mining communities of Cape Breton Island, pensions are being paid to miners still in their fifties, a measure taken to alleviate hardship during the "phasing out" of much of the area's coal-mining industry. No doubt, this plan will be extended to the older people in fishing, farming, forestry, etc.

32. People in this category must not be cast aside as unemployable. Until now we have had only minimal experience with measures designed to keep our older people interested, active and valuable members of the community. The whole field is open to study, and we strongly recommend the undertaking of a wide variety of experimental programs for the involvement of elderly people, and particularly of those whose place on the pension rolls has been prompted by technological change.

33. This is a field where local community groups and institutions, working with government on a generous cost-sharing basis, should be encouraged to develop new programs and projects to attract and hold the attention of the older members of society. In this field, as in the others, the employment of competent, highly-trained professionals, as program directors and counsellors, is imperative.

APPENDIX A

Housing and Poverty

A1. Educating impoverished people will be accomplished only if society can find vehicles which will prepare the poor for effective action in the wider social and economic environment. Educational and other programs will be effective only to the extent they accomplish this. If a person in poverty can accomplish a goal which is very important to him, and which is recognized by the other members of his family as being important, he gains pride and recognition by his achievement. It is important for any man to accomplish something useful and meaningful, but for the family head in poverty, this is of major importance.

A2. We use cooperative and self-help housing as one vehicle for delivering this kind of achievement. The provision of shelter itself is important but one could argue that this can be made available in the form of federal-provincial public housing projects.

A3. Cooperative housing has functioned for thirty years in Nova Scotia. It is much less costly to government than public housing and has inherent techniques which can do much to break the poverty syndrome. We shall list some:

(a) Participation—the forming of a co-op housing group of families of varying income, educational and employment backgrounds but with one common unifying force—the desire to own a home.

(b) Accomplishment—families working together to overcome the requirements for loan approval achieve intermediary plateaus of success as each requirement is fulfilled. Housing groups often regard loan requirements as obstacles placed in their path. To be able to tick off a step toward their goal with loan approval, is satisfying.

(c) Meaningful Education—the five to ten months of weekly meetings before construction begins, is a preparation period during which a variety of educational experiences happen.

New members of co-op housing groups know little or nothing about home building. They must prepare themselves for self-help participation before construction. During this five to ten month preparation period, organized short courses in practical home construction, use of materials etc., are conducted. The group discussions on pertinent topics—often with guest speakers present—are learning processes in themselves. At home, too, the education continues as husband, wife and often, children, sit over houseplans and discuss floor plans, window arrangements, heating and electrical layouts, kitchen facilities, color schemes, etc., etc. Together the family must work out some of the details of building a home with approximate one-half of the money required to contract the job. Family life is strengthened by this common interest.

(d) The Levelling Process—for the first time in their lives, many members find themselves dealing directly with persons in society that they had held on pedestals and find them to be persons with their own weaknesses, problems and frustrations.

The discovery that engineers, lawyers, planners, inspectors, and supervisors are capable of human error, makes an impact on low-income builders.

When angered by delays, seemingly caused by neglect of hired professionals, these groups soon learn the channels to pry—their M.L.A.'s, councilmen, etc. It is difficult to imagine any similar circumstances that would bring these families to a working knowledge of the function of so many civic, provincial and federal agencies in so short a time.

One often hears a chap earning less than four thousand a year, discussing the possibility that the Department of Finance and Economics may be having difficulty raising the money for the provincial government's share of their loan because of a financial crisis.

(e) Managing Money—as noted before, the loans presently make to members of co-op groups are little better than half the amount required to contract the construction of the units. Means must be found between the co-op group and the families involved to budget and to replace capital equity with sweat equity.

(f) Perseverance—both during the study stage and the construction stage the tendency is always there to "chuck it" when things get rough. This, of course, is especially tempting to poor families since it is a symptom of poverty. In a housing group, however, the presence of their peers is strong. A discouraged member must deal with the not-so-sympathetic decision of his fellow members if he quits. Invariably, when some members are down, others are up, and with each other's support the majority will overcome any problems facing them.

During construction, the same process is prevalent. Since most housing groups build on common land the presence of a slacker is noted by all other members building in the area. The kind of pressure exerted on the member who is behind in his home building takes various forms but it almost always results in the member making a drive to catch up. The awareness of what others think of his efforts, is made obvious to him by the close contact of group meetings and group construction. This generally has an enduring effect on the member. It carries over to employment, family and community relationship.

(g) Human Relations—it is often a source of amazement to the member of a housing group to find that people are really concerned with his problems. This is true to varying degrees from person to person but some are completely taken back when relatives and friends come to the building site to offer assistance. Unexpected help during construction can result in less strained and healthier personal relationships.

(h) Achievement—the pride of achievement in the finished product is indicated by the disarming willingness of families in recently completed co-op units to welcome visitors—often strangers—to inspect the fruits of their efforts.

It is always a source of wonderment to us working with groups to listen to previous builders speaking to new members about the merits of the plan when we can remember the growling and complaining of the same members when they met and built in previous years. It can actually be embarrassing for us since the plaudits and praise for the scheme doesn't prepare the new members for the bumps they will experience.

A4. With subsidies based on income this program of co-operative self-help housing could be extended to many thousands of poor people. Such a program not only builds homes, it develops people. Any objections that we have heard to subsidizing home ownership, were based on false assumptions.

APPENDIX B

Specific Proposal on Rural Poverty

B1. The problem of rural poverty in Eastern Nova Scotia is well documented. It is particularly well specified for rural communities whose economy is based primarily on the traditional inshore fishery. The socio-economic characteristics of these communities which are germane to a definition of poverty in its causes are:

(a) A fixed supply of available fish resources on the inshore grounds, i.e., lobster, etc.

(b) A limited season within which the fish resource can be exploited with the present level of technology.

(c) Over-investment in inefficient production units in relation to the available resource.

(d) Over-supply of labor in relation to the resource with the consequence that there is an inverse relationship between labor supply and productivity.

(e) A tendency for the lucrative but seasonal lobster fishery to attract excess labor into inshore fishing communities from the school system and from other less lucrative but more stable industries.

(f) A lack of alternative exploitable resources in inshore fishing communities and the immediate region.

(g) The specialized nature of the occupational structure of inshore fishing communities provides very limited experience to adults and youth with alternative occupational opportunities.

B2. Research studies are fairly unanimous on the following recommended solutions to poverty in inshore fishing communities:

(a) Long-term amelioration of economic instability in inshore fishing communities must be based, primarily, on the concept of resource adjustment rather than resource development as in the past, that is, a balance must be achieved between the available natural resource and the human resource exploiting it.

(b) Resource adjustment must be programmed in such a manner that the human resource remaining to exploit the natural resource do not constitute a residual unskilled element of the population.

(c) Production technology and marketing organization must achieve an optimum level of efficiency which will guarantee adequate earned income to the entrepreneurs remaining in the inshore fishery.

(d) Motivation must be developed among the adult and youth population for occupational and residential mobility.

B3. Traditionally, most inshore fishing communities have been serviced by a plethora of public and private agencies interested in eliminating economic instability. The main characteristics of this over-all activity has been as follows:

(a) Superficial treatment of community problems by several uncoordinated agencies on a "once per year" basis with the consequence that no one problem receives the intensive and sustained treatment it requires.

(b) Provision, on a diffuse basis, of adult education, community development and training programs which have but little effect in eliminating the fundamental causes of economic instability. At most, many of these ad hoc programs constitute a substitution mechanism which permits avoidance of the more intensive and costly programs which are obviously required.

(c) Absence of scientific evaluation of the effectiveness of community improvement programs.

B4. On the assumption that diffuse and uncoordinated programming can have but little effect in inshore fishing communities, the following specific project is proposed as an experimental social change program:

(a) Selection of three inshore fishing communities in Eastern Nova Scotia as objects of an experimental social change program.

(b) Establishment, by scientific research methods, of benchmark measures of level of living, level of income, employment stability, attitudes toward occupational and residential mobility, knowledge of vocational opportunities, and other socio-economic characteristics.

(c) Implementation of an intensive community adjustment and development program under the direction of one full-time community development worker. He would have the responsibility of proposing, developing and coordinating on an intensive and sustained basis the community adjustment and development program. This would involve the creation of learning experiences for adults and youth directed at such areas as resource adjustment measures, occupational and residential mobility, vocational and educational opportunities. He would have access to financial resources necessary to obtain assistance from professional sources in constructing programmed learning experiences.

(d) On the termination of a designated programming period, social change in relation to the original benchmarks would be determined by research methods. Or, alternatively, evaluational measures could be made at each stage of the program.

(e) Ideally, such experimental programs should be carried out by institutions which can guarantee availability of community development and research personnel over an agreed upon period of time.

B5. The preceding action-research program as proposed would achieve two general planning objectives: 1. The achievement of community social change; and 2. scientific information on the effectiveness of particular educational techniques, responsiveness of types of individuals and groups to particular programs, and coordinated programming.

Second Session—Twenty-eighth Parliament

1969

THE SENATE OF CANADA

PROCEEDINGS

OF THE

SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE

ON

POVERTY

The Honourable DAVID A. CROLL, Chairman

No. 3

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 5th, 1969

WITNESSES:

Nova Scotia Association for the Advancement of Coloured People: Mr. Gordon E. Earle, Committee Chairman.

Social Deviance Class of St. Francis Xavier University: Mr. Murray Smith; Miss Dorothy Haley; Miss Zita Hogan; and Mr. Kevin MacNeil.

APPENDICES:

A.—Brief submitted by the Nova Scotia Association for the Advancement of Coloured People.

B.—Brief submitted by the Social Deviance Class of St. Francis Xavier University.

MEMBERS OF THE
SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE ON POVERTY

The Honourable David A. Croll, Chairman

The Honourable Senators:

Bélisle	Fergusson	MacDonald (Queens)
Carter	Fournier (Madawaska-	McGrand
Connolly (Halifax North)	Restigouche, Deputy	Pearson
Cook	Chairman)	Quart
Croll	Hastings	Roebuck
Eudes	Inman	Sparrow
Everett	Lefrançois

(18 Members)

(Quorum 6)

Patrick J. Savoie,
Clerk of the Committee.

ORDERS OF REFERENCE

Extract from the Minutes of Proceedings of the Senate of Tuesday, October 28, 1969.

"The Honourable Senator Croll moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Roebuck:

That a Special Committee of the Senate be appointed to investigate and report upon all aspects of poverty in Canada, whether urban, rural, regional or otherwise, to define and elucidate the problem of poverty in Canada, and to recommend appropriate action to ensure the establishment of a more effective structure of remedial measures;

That the Committee have power to engage the services of such counsel, staff and technical advisors as may be necessary for the purpose of the inquiry;

That the Committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, and to report from time to time;

That the Committee be authorized to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the Committee, to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate, and to adjourn from place to place;

That the evidence taken on the subject during the preceding session be referred to the Committee; and

That the Committee be composed of the Honourable Senators Bélisle, Carter, Cook, Croll, Eudes, Everett, Fergusson, Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche), Hastings, Inman, Lefrançois, McGrand, Pearson, Quart, Roebuck and Sparrow.

After debate,

In amendment, the Honourable Senator McDonald moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Burchill, that the motion be not now adopted, but that it be amended by striking out paragraph 4 thereof and substituting therefor the following:—

"That the Committee be authorized to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the Committee, to adjourn from place to place, and notwithstanding Rule 76 (4), to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate."

After debate, and—

The question being put on the motion in amendment, it was—
Resolved in the affirmative.

The question being put on the motion of the Honourable Senator Croll, seconded by the Honourable Senator Roebuck, as amended, it was—

Resolved in the affirmative.

ROBERT FORTIER,
Clerk of the Senate.

Extract from the Minutes of Proceedings of the Senate of Wednesday, October 29, 1969.

"With leave of the Senate,

The Honourable Senator McDonald moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Smith:

That the names of the Honourable Senators Connolly (Halifax North) and MacDonald (Queens) be added to the list of Senators serving on the Special Committee of the Senate appointed to investigate and report all aspects of poverty in Canada; and

That the name of the Honourable Senator Nichol be removed from the list of Senators serving on the said Special Committee.

The question being put on the motion, it was—

Resolved in the affirmative.

ROBERT FORTIER,
Clerk of the Senate.

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS

Dalhousie University Auditorium,
Halifax, Nova Scotia.

Wednesday, November 5th, 1969.
(3)

Pursuant to adjournment and notice the Special Senate Committee on Poverty met this day at 9.15 a.m.

Present: The Honourable Senators Croll (Chairman), Belisle, Connolly (Halifax North), Cook, Eudes, Fergusson, Hastings, Inman, McGrand, Pearson and Sparrow. (11)

In attendance: Frederick J. Joyce, Director.

The following witnesses were introduced and heard:

NOVA SCOTIA ASSOCIATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF COLOURED PEOPLE:

Mr. Gordon E. Earle, Committee Chairman.

After a brief statement by Mr. Earle, he was thanked by the Chairman who then adjourned the Committee until eleven o'clock that morning.

Following the adjournment, a sub-committee was formed for the purpose of visiting the Halifax Neighbourhood Centre.

Of the two briefs submitted by the Nova Scotia Association for the Advancement of Coloured People, the one presented on the day of the hearings is printed as Appendix A to these proceedings. The earlier brief has been retained in the Committee's records.

At eleven a.m. the Committee resumed its hearings.

The following witnesses were introduced and heard:

SOCIAL DEVIANCE CLASS OF ST. FRANCIS XAVIER UNIVERSITY:

Mr. Murray Smith;
Miss Dorothy Haley;
Miss Zita Hogan; and
Mr. Kevin MacNeil.

In attendance:

Miss Marie Dunne.

At the conclusion of the presentation by the Social Deviance Class of St. Francis Xavier University, the Chairman thanked all those who had participated.

The brief submitted by the Social Deviance Class of St. Francis Xavier University is printed as Appendix B to these proceedings.

At 12.15 p.m. the Committee adjourned until 9.30 a.m. Thursday, November 6th, 1969, at Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island.

ATTEST:

Patrick J. Savoie,
Clerk of the Committee.

THE SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE ON POVERTY

EVIDENCE

Halifax, Nova Scotia, November 5, 1969.

The Special Senate Committee on Poverty met this day at 9.30 a.m.

Senator David A. Croll (Chairman) in the Chair.

The Chairman: I will now call this meeting to order. On my right is Mr. Gordon S. Earle, who is the spokesman for the Nova Scotia Association for the Advancement of Coloured People. He will speak to us now.

Mr. Gordon S. Earle, Spokesman, Nova Scotia Association for the Advancement of Coloured People: Thank you, Mr. Chairman and honourable senators, my committee met last evening and further discussed our presentation to you this morning. We decided unanimously that you erred yesterday in failing to hear the presentation from the Federation of Labour, the School of Social Work and others.

We feel you erred even more greatly in failing to grasp the opportunity to meet with concerned citizens at the Neighbourhood Centre last evening.

Now your reasons may have been good but we know that in any serious study on poverty, it is imperative to meet and talk with those who are most directly involved or affected. To the research scientist, this is known as "going to the root source." The Nova Scotia Association for the Advancement of Coloured People feel it incumbent upon ourselves to give you an opportunity to right his wrong as well as to refocus your perspective.

We have, therefore decided to donate our submission time this morning to you in order that you go to the Neighbourhood Centre and honour the invitation that you so wrongfully refused. We have important points which we shall submit to you for perusal and study at some later time or during the trip to your next hearing.

If you have any questions with regard to our submission please feel free to contact us by mail or telephone.

The Chairman: Thank you very much, Mr. Earle.

We will adjourn until 11.00 a.m. at which time we will hear representations from St. Francis Xavier University.

Upon resuming at 11.00 a.m.

The Chairman: The student group from St. Francis Xavier University will be introduced by Mr. Maurice Smith.

Mr. Maurice Smith: Thank you Mr. Chairman. With me this morning is Marie Dunne, Dorothy Haley, Zita Hogan and Kevin MacNeil. We are the students of the Social Deviance Class of Saint Francis Xavier University and we have been working on this brief for about a month now. Each student did a little bit of research on his own, with his own ideas and with his own personal experiences and this was compiled to form this brief.

Senator Hastings: Doug or Kevin?

Mr. Smith: Kevin. We will try to answer any questions you have on the brief. I didn't plan any definite procedure this morning, I just thought that I would like to talk at the beginning. Everyone knows that we are here because we feel that something must be done. I think it's more than obvious that what we are doing now isn't enough for the poor. Most of our records to this date have been useless (even wasted in some cases). I think, one case is this very Committee in a sense. A special committee on poverty is really a big deal. It sounds great but we think that an attempt to provide a forum for the poor to express their views is a failure in that sense.

I think the press and news media have already decried this fact that special educational institutions and special groups have been presenting briefs and they are asking "Where are the poor?" They are also asking "Why don't they have anything to say?" I think the way this committee has been set up it's almost impossible and although I'm not offering any alternatives but I think it's almost impossible for the poor to present their views. For instance, the fact that this brief has to be accompanied with fifty type-written copies and I find this very difficult to believe. I mean, who among the poor are going to be able to afford to have fifty copies of a brief made up? I think, this is a point to show that our existing poverty problems—what we have been trying to do for the poor is not enough.

The word is not getting to the poor. What I am trying to say is that our policies to this time have been merely "stop gap measures". We have been keeping the poor going but what we have in effect been doing is perpetuating poverty. Giving "handouts" has only helped the poor people to be fed, keeping them in a position of poverty and thereby enlarge the poverty cycle.

This is to perhaps where things are very much outdated, such as our values of work; like the god of work and the big business interests being the creeds of that god. The idea that welfare must be kept at the minimum in order that people will not lose incentive is ridiculous. By keeping welfare as low as possible, people we maintain lose incentive.

The constant struggle and the grappling for their very existence, living from day to day without any change or hope of change—and this is the situation that they must contend with under the present poverty programmes and present welfare systems. This situation can only lead to despondency and lethargy. It can only result in a lack of incentive. So, in effect, the main argument used by many and that is that welfare only makes people lazy, makes them parasites in society and makes them lose their initiative is, in this sense true. That is, under the present welfare system. It does not enable people to rise above their position. It keeps them where they have always been and it does rob them of their incentive. Now, we are not saying that the majority of those who are now on welfare are parasites or that they are lazy people. It's a well known fact that the majority on welfare don't want to be there. What we are saying is that the present welfare system can't have any real effect if it keeps these people in that position and they are not able to better themselves.

We feel that our recommendations are right in tune; something that will break this poverty cycle. If applied, we feel that they would work and would help to break that poverty cycle. So, to get into it, the first thing we would like to do is to give the people a decent standard of living and we feel that this could be best accomplished by means of a guaranteed annual income. Not just enough for subsistence (as it is under the present welfare system) but enough to enable people to better themselves. Actually, what we are saying is more welfare is what is needed. By paying more welfare now (and this is for those who feel that this is a dollar and cents issue) myself I don't, we feel that we will be saving in the longrun for this will help to curb the rise in poverty.

This is only one of our points—the guaranteed annual income. We also recommend that reform in education and reforms in housing be made. These reforms are recommended or recommendations that are in the brief and as I say, if you have any questions we would be quite willing to try and answer them and defend what we have said. We feel that these are the main things—income and education and housing, and that if these reforms could be initiated or carried out in some way, the poverty cycle would be broken.

The Chairman: You said income, education...

Mr. Smith: And housing.

The Chairman: Where does employment come in?

Mr. Smith: Employment?

The Chairman: Is that put in on the basis of income? I gather you weren't thinking of employment in the sense of income, were you?

Mr. Smith: No, I am thinking of income in the sense of a guaranteed annual income—in the sense a guarantee that they will have enough to live on.

The Chairman: Yes, but you say you put it in the sense, income, education and housing.

Mr. Smith: Well, let me just elaborate on that for a moment.

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Smith: What we mean is an annual income at the level that will be decided that will enable people to have a decent standard of living. Everyone is saying that we should have it.

Miss Zita Hogan: I think this would be for both, the employed and the unemployed so that everyone would be on the same standard. Everyone would be on the same standard to start out with and on the same base. This would be able—I know poverty is relative for or thing, but it would bring everyone up to level where say a man and his family would have a decent standard of living. He wouldn't have to become a cultural poverty inclined.

The Chairman: Would any members of the Senate care to ask questions? Senator Bélisle?

Senator R. Bélisle: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. First of all may I be permitted to say that I sincerely believe that any money that we spend on education is an investment in the future. You say here on page 10:

Poorer families are not education oriented. The sooner the youth brings home any type of income the happier the parents seem to be. Therefore the youth is not provided with intellectual stimulation or encouragement to remain in school. The most pressing problem in educating poverty stricken children is to give them incentive.

How can we overcome the inability of the poor to take advantage of free education? How can we assist them in supplying them with better teachers, better counsellors. How can we do it?

Mr. Smith: Let me get this straight. What you're saying is that you are wondering how—in other words we have free education now. I think the biggest problem is that we must realize that this is a poverty culture that we have now. It is a poverty culture which we have now and it is self-perpetuating. In effect, this is the case like the poor children in school. When they do reach a certain age that they can work the parents agree that they should be bringing in an income, helping to support them. I don't think—you were saying that this was part of in effect the cultural poverty. We don't have any definite recommendations for that. First of all, I think there has to be an understanding of the cultural poverty and we have to make the people understand. We have to make them understand that the best thing to do would be to stay in school. How we can do that—I don't really have any specific recommendations but as I was saying if we can break the poverty cycle through the methods we have recommended then this problem could be solved.

Senator Bélisle: Yesterday we heard from Father Roach saying that leaving school for money wasn't the main reason why they were leaving school.

The Chairman: Excuse me, Senator Bélisle. Now what you are recommending is based on the experience of your group?

Mr. Smith: Well, we are living in a rural area at the University in Antigonish and it has been—you can see it when you go downtown and see a lot of the school-aged people that in the winter are cutting wood. This type of thing.

The Chairman: You mean young school-aged children?

Mr. Smith: Well, not preschool as much but school children.

The Chairman: High school and university?

Mr. Smith: Yes. I am not saying that that is the main reason why they leave school but they don't believe that they can get anything. This is their whole culture, this is what they have been brought up in. Money is everything to them because they are struggling for the next meal. They have had no direct results from education but what they do need is a chance to break this poverty cycle.

Miss Dorothy Haley: This is one of the things in our survey that working girls between the ages of eighteen and twenty-three; these girls leave their homes because they have no money to continue on in school. We have free education, yes, but we have to buy notebooks; we have to buy paper, pencils and these add up. We go through high school and everybody is suggesting that we have to buy this book and we have to buy that book to do our papers and things and these all add up. The poor families just don't have this money and therefore in our survey that these girls have left school between the ages of eighteen and twenty-three. They are making an average of about thirty-five or forty dollars a week and they are living in slum conditions. This isn't right. In our culture in Canada we can afford to get these people out of the situation they are in. If people know about them. Only about half of these girls realize the situation they are in. They grow up in poverty and when they go out they are independent. However, they are going to stop there, they have no money to go further. Their parents have no incentive to tell them to continue on with their education because there is no money. They can't put anything behind them. They can't back them up in what they want to do. Therefore, something has to be done especially for the young. If we start working with the young something can be done. Even then, they can go back to their parents and show them that "We have done this", even though we know you couldn't help us but we are going to help you.

Senator Hastings: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I might make an observation here. What we are dealing with here is incentive and motivation of the students who remain in school. Now, the question I want to ask you is, would you consider a meaningful allowance; I am not talking about the youth allowance of ten dollars a month, but I am talking about a meaningful allowance of eighteen or twenty-one dollars a week as a motivation to keep that child in school providing he attains his scholastic standing.

Miss Haley: This would be a help but also then besides this money they also have to have incentive and this would encourage them to stay in school by having a reason for staying in school. They can see that they are not taking from their families what family doesn't have to stay in school, then they will have this incentive. If they get this allowance of so much per week and certainly ten dollars a month isn't enough—it's not worth a thing because it doesn't go anywhere.

The Chairman: It did once when you were a little girl.

Miss Haley: If they get this allowance possibly what you say eighteen or twenty dollars a week, well then, yes, they would have something to start with.

Senator Hastings: Thank you.

Mr. Kevin MacNeil: I think one of the problems is that the parents themselves—the reason they don't encourage a child to stay in school is perhaps that their own financial position is weak and that is what we meant regarding the recommendation for a guaranteed annual income and housing, and then the parents wouldn't need the child to go out to work so early in life. This would give more encouragement for the child to stay in school. I think that answers your question.

The Chairman: Yes. Senator Belisle—I think you have answered Senator Belisle's question. I gathered the impression that you were talking of a rule aspect and I forgot to ask the young lady if what she said applied to a rural or an urban or semiurban aspect?

Miss Haley: Well, the survey was conducted in the town, the people that were working in the town.

Senator McGrand: What town?

Miss Haley: In Antigonish. These students, these teenagers were from or around, from the town.

The Chairman: That is what I wanted to know.

Senator Belisle: May I be permitted to ask one more question?

The Chairman: Just let this young man finish.

Mr. MacNeil: I thought your first question was what we could do to encourage staying in school. This is why I say that we should endeavour to incorporate such things as guaranteed annual income and adequate housing for parents; then they wouldn't need their children to go to work.

The Chairman: Senator Belisle?

Senator Belisle: On page 12, Student Aid Programme, it says:

On the Provincial level we think the Nova Scotia Government should modify its bursary programme. What we would suggest here is that the Government place a contingency on its awarding of bursaries. The contingency would be that the individual has a passing score in at least four academic subjects from the previous year. Under the present system there is no incentive for an individual to achieve high standing.

In other words, are you suggesting that a means test, a cultural means test be placed on persons?

Mr. Smith: No, what I am saying or suggesting is that the bursaries now are given to—in most cases anyone who applies for some sort of bursary. They can go to the—there is no requirement that they keep a standard, a certain standard, other than the fact that they have to have fifty per cent, this sort of thing. In effect, they are having it pretty easy, so what we were suggesting would be that the bursaries be put in line more compatible with the achievement of students. For instance, if a student was doing well then instead of a loan—instead of him depending on a loan, he should have a bursary. For instance the Federal loans now that we get—well, the loans that we get were initially suggested as a loan and if the student improves himself, that is, worthy of academic achievement, that this loan would be cancelled. It would be a bursary in effect.

Senator Belisle: May I be permitted to say, Mr. Chairman, that in Ontario we had to change our views. We had to change our views because we were limiting applications which we didn't want to do.

Mr. Smith: But what we are saying—I don't think the criteria is that you have to have seventy-five as an average, this sort of thing. I think what it would do for a number of cases, it would put a lot of people that are simply skimming along, it would make them earn bursaries in effect.

Senator Belisle: Do you believe that there should be at least sixty per cent as a requirement for all grades, that is to pass that grade?

Mr. Smith: Well, I couldn't say myself, you know, I am only a sixty-percenter myself and I don't want to say that it should be sixty per cent or sixty-five per cent. I think basically what we are trying to get at is that now the system is simply to have people to live on easy street! What we want to do or what we would like it to suggest is that the loan and the bursary—because they are sort of together—would be made so that those most deserving I think would qualify for these bursaries. The ones that are most deserving would get these bursaries.

Senator Cook: Now on that point, on this point of deserving. On page 6 you illustrate two different families. In one family you have a widow with eight children. In this case would you think guaranteed annual income would be wise? Have you given any thought to the guaranteed annual income? Should there be any conditions? For example, this case that you state, the case in which the widow with the eight children—she has them, three in university, two in school, two working and one married. Now, the other case might certainly have merit as well, considering the way in which they are living. Have you given any thought as to whether that father and mother should be given the guaranteed annual income?

Mr. Smith: Well, I don't think any conditions are necessary. The reason why these people are living like this is because they have no other choice. We tried to explain that they had this television but in many cases this accounts for the reason they are poor. They are trying to keep up this status that everyone says they should have. Of course, they don't have it. Very often, you find them buying things like television sets because the person next door has it. You see, they don't understand. I don't think, and our present policy proves it, that just giving money means anything. What I am trying to say is that money has to be co-ordinated with education.

Senator Cook: Well, you say that giving money doesn't mean anything. That's what I asked.

Mr. Smith: Well, if people don't know how to spend money now, there is not much you can do about it.

Senator Cook: Well, do you not think there should be any conditions whatsoever?

Mr. Smith: Well, what would be some of the conditions you would think would be required? Do you mean they would have to have a Grade 10 education or do you mean...

Senator Cook: No, no, I mean solutions as to how it would be spent?

Mr. Smith: Well, I can see where this is definitely going to be a problem, but I would think perhaps it could be channelled for instance education funds should be set down, etc.

The Chairman: Are you students in your class taught how to buy, how to charge, what to do and how to budget?

Mr. Smith: No. No, at least not in this class.

The Chairman: No, but in any part of the course?

Mr. Smith: Well, I am not that far into the course, but that's more of a home economics course. I think this is a difficult thing. For example, in my case I am quite convinced that if I need money I would go back to my parents.

The Chairman: I am quite sure you would.

Senator Connolly: Mr. Chairman, this group has properly raised the matter of incentives apart from monetary aid. One, that has for me a particular fascination has to do with the ability of teachers in the earliest formative years of children in school to so attract the attention of the children and focus their interest on school work and the necessity for education so as to operate against future drop-outs. If we are going to do that, we ought to have, it seems to me, a special type of carefully prepared teacher in greater numbers than we now have in the earlier grades of our public school system in this province who can handle the problems of the children and so engage their attention. Once you get in Grades 6, 7 or 8, you have lost out of the opportunities to concentrate their attention on further higher education.

I wonder if any member or members of this group would care to discuss that phase of the situation?

Mr. Smith: Well, if anyone else would like to say so, sure, but I would just like to say that we can't do anything unless these people are given an incentive. It seems to me a contradiction in a sense. If you have these specially trained teachers as you say, instructors, who would try to give these people incentive and the children spent say five hours a day at the most in the school, if they are going home to poverty where the stress is on the dollar because that is the only way they live, it seems to me as you said the emphasis in the formative years has to come from the home. I do think the main problem is in the home.

Mr. MacNeil: I would just like to comment on what Mr. Smith has just said. You must remember that socialization of children takes place between the ages of one and five and when they get to school these five years are going to have more influence than one teacher is going to have on a group of students. I think you have to account for this factor that the socialization takes part in the home and if the parents are poverty stricken surely the teachers are not going to change the child's attitude from what he's been brought up in.

The Chairman: That's rather a bad term "socialization".

Mr. MacNeil: Well, I mean his environment and the values the parents instill in the children.

Senator Hastings: You will agree then with what Father Roach told us yesterday, that the family's home environment whether or not good or bad is the primary influence on the child?

Mr. MacNeil: I would say so.

Senator Hastings: Well, we had evidence the other day that the black child at four has already depreciated himself with respect to his white counterpart and that the poor children have lost their self esteem when they arrive at Grade 1. Do you have any idea of getting to that child in pre-school years with head start or other organizations?

Mr. MacNeil: Well, as such things as these, you know, kindergarten and these things could be set up in the poorer sections of the cities or towns. Still, I think that you have to consider the individual family, what their conditions are if they are poor at home. You have to start right in the home. You have to start right in the home before you can do anything with the children.

Senator Hastings: I think it's significant also in all of your briefs you seem to be unanimous in the opinion that there are not enough student counsellors. Is that correct?

Mr. MacNeil: Yes. Student counsellors—I wasn't aware of that until Grade 10.

The Chairman: Senator Connolly?

Senator Connolly: It is my observation that we do not have in this province enough teachers skilled in guidance and you make particular reference to it in this brief.

Now I suggest to you that it's too much to expect the average teacher in any grade at any level in grammar school or high school to be so skilled in guidance as to properly direct the attention of the pupils to the field in which those pupils should continue to operate. It seems to me to require the specialized services of a teacher trained in guidance with the proper degrees. Do you know whether or not we do have sufficient skilled guidance teachers in the public school system of this province?

Mr. Smith: I would say no. Obviously I think that if we did have they aren't working. They aren't working because of the results. I don't think we have enough of them. I think they do a good job and I believe that they can direct a child as to his capabilities and what the best field to enter. I think, in my own high school (if you don't mind my bringing in a personal element here) it was the high school that the students were from that were here yesterday, Sydney Academy, and that was great because we had one when I was there. We had one guidance counsellor and I think his main thing was sort of to say what university do you go to—there aren't enough of them and I agree with you on that point.

Senator Connolly: Thank you.

Mr. Smith: I don't think that's the entire answer.

Miss Haley: I think that we could be more selective in our teachers. We can see in the universities today that anybody that comes in; they don't know what to do, so they go into teaching. You know, they have nothing else to do so they go into teaching! Anybody at all can come in and be a teacher. They don't have to be personally involved which they should be. They should be concerned about what they say and especially concerned about their students. In the school everything shouldn't be taken out of texts. In high school this is the case. Everything is taken right out of the texts. Know this and know that. In the exams you know, you have to pass. Now why don't they put something else, something personal, into a classroom? The teachers have to do this themselves. They ought to learn this from the general public and therefore the attitude of the general public is important. It's not just individuals; it's everybody together and then what the individual learns from the co-operative work of everybody in the town—of the community and of the country. It's the attitude they have towards other people. Everybody is as important as everybody else and if this attitude can be instilled in a person and in a teacher, the teacher could have it flow over into his students and into the classroom and could see something come out of it.

If someone sees someone else involved and concerned, immediately they are going to feel "Gee they are concerned" and they will do something.

The Chairman: Senator McGrand?

Senator McGrand: I have two questions. Each of them requires very short answers. The question has been brought up a great many times about drop-outs from school who went out and helped earn money to bring into the family. Do you know of any actual cases where a child dropped out of school to help support his family? This was a common thing a generation ago, but for my part I cannot recall any of the many drop-outs that I know who ever dropped out in order to support the family. Is it common or not?

Mr. Smith: No, I am not saying that. I am not saying that. I am saying that among the poor people in culture, the idea is that the dollar is the important thing. They need it. They need it to live, for food and clothing, this sort of thing. I am saying also that at home they don't get the incentive to go on because the idea is that if you are bringing in five dollars a week we can use that money. I am not saying that all drop-outs drop out because of financial reasons.

Senator McGrand: But how many of them drop out and earn money and bring it back to the family?

Mr. Smith: I have no idea but I think that they are looking after themselves. They do this so they won't be a drain on the family.

Senator McGrand: Well, the second question is to follow up on something that Senator Connolly asked. He asked about qualified teachers and I think he put the emphasis on qualified teachers in the early grades that could train a child not to be a drop-out. How would you compare the salaries of the teachers at the primary grade level as compared to the teachers in the higher grades? Do they get as much money as the teachers in the higher grades?

Mr. Smith: I would probably say no, since they probably don't need as much of a licence to teach in the lower grades. I don't know for sure but I would think that they don't get as much.

Senator Connolly: Well, I think that probably that is part of the problem.

Miss Haley: There is no reason why someone with a higher education can't teach a lower grade, but because there is nobody there, they don't think they can do anything in the lower grade to combat the people that are personally involved. If we can get people that are personally involved to go in to these lower grades—you know, who would be quite good in lower grades, this would be quite beneficial. Even a B.A. who would go into the lower grade would have a salary. It's this personal involvement that these teachers need. Usually in the lower grades you have younger people. You have younger students. You have younger people that try to teach younger people and it is the young people that are our concern. The teaching of these younger grades is where the effect is put on them. This is where their lives are determined—that is in the younger grades. If we can get the teachers to become personally involved—well then, if we go into the universities and tell them that with a B.A. "Go and teach a younger grade". You can get as much out of teaching a younger grade as you can a higher grade if you have this personal involvement. If you have this personal involvement and you want to help, there is an awful lot that you can teach the younger people.

Senator McGrand: In your opinion in teaching young children, would you prefer to have a young teacher teach the younger children or would you prefer a teacher with say ten or fifteen years' experience.

Miss Haley: I don't think it has anything to do with age. It has to do with the way a person thinks towards the student.

The Chairman: Senator Inman?

Senator Inman: Mr. Chairman, I don't know whether this question has been asked before or not, but do you think that many primary teachers use teaching as a stepping stone for another job or another vocation. Consequently they might not take such a great interest in the students. Do you think this happens?

Mr. Smith: Well, I think probably that you would probably find that with a lot of them—for many, but some of them would probably take it as an interim measure and if they decide they are not getting paid pretty good salaries they would move on. You know a lot of them move on to other fields. I will agree with you, yes.

The Chairman: I want to know what's wrong with a teacher trying to move herself up to some other grade or other standing and trying to better herself with her job.

Mr. Smith: Well, I think that's obvious. Why does she want to be a teacher? Why doesn't she do something else? Obviously I think it's something that a person wants to do. It's a personalized thing to better yourself, but as you know, that's something that everybody wants to do, is to better himself.

The Chairman: Usually teachers will move from grade teachers to vice principal to principal and then perhaps move out and pick up another degree at university and what's wrong with that?

Mr. Smith: There is nothing wrong with that. Perhaps, I misunderstood you. I thought that you meant using education strictly as a stepping stone.

Senator Inman: That is what I meant. As a stop gap measure.

Mr. Smith: I would agree with you.

Senator Inman: And consequently not being interested enough.

Mr. Smith: Right.

The Chairman: Any more questions?

Senator Pearson: I just wanted to suggest that apparently you don't have a great deal or a great many kindergartens in the province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. Smith: Yes.

Senator Pearson: There are only a few that are there?

Mr. Smith: Do you mean pre-school?

Senator Pearson: Pre-school, yes.

Mr. Smith: They are not public, if you know what I mean. This is usually done for people who can afford it.

Senator Pearson: Well, in this small town that I know in the West in conjunction with the school they run a pre-school class there a half a day. This is done five days a week. The mothers take charge of this pre-school class. In this town that I am speaking about we are adjacent to a number of Indian Reserves and a number of the Indian children are in foster homes in this little town and they go to this pre-school. When they come to Grade 1 and Grade 2 they are thoroughly integrated with the white children that are there, so that there is no difference in the moving up into Grade 1 with these children at all. They get along beautifully.

Mr. Smith: You are saying that this should be a public thing?

Senator McGrand: Well, it might be possible because it's run on a voluntary basis in that area there and I think it could be something that is public, the pre-school kindergarten.

Mr. Smith: What size of a town is it?

Senator Pearson: It's a town close to a big centre where people commute a lot and the younger people live there, so there are a lot of children in that area.

The Chairman: I think what he is asking Senator is that if it's the sort of a place where a mother leaves her child while she goes to work?

Senator Pearson: No no.

The Chairman: It's not a day centre in that sense?

Senator Pearson: No, it's a nursery school.

Mr. Smith: Well, I am wondering if this would be practical in say a city even the size of Halifax. There isn't that much...

The Chairman: There is no need for it?

Mr. Smith: Well, definitely there is a need for it and it sounds as if it could work but there isn't that much of an association of say mothers living in the same area; what would happen with mothers living on the other side of the town? I can see it happening in a small town and I would be doubtful if it would work in a city like Halifax.

Senator Pearson: But I do think it's an excellent idea.

Mr. Smith: Yes, I think that we should look into it.

Senator Belisle: This system is applicable in Ontario—in all of Ontario in both public and private schools. The children, in order to attend, must be five years old before January the 1st. In other words it's paid out of public funds both private and separate schools. We have two systems in Ontario.

Mr. Smith: What are you saying, Senator?

The Chairman: He is saying it is available to everyone.

Mr. Smith: Is this for pre-school?

The Chairman: Actually, what the Senator meant was everyone could take advantage of it.

Senator Belisle: Everyone in Ontario. Even the smaller centres of five hundred people can take advantage of this. The government requires twelve.

The Chairman: Well, you are an educationist and you do know better than I do. Senator Hastings.

Senator Hastings: Mr. Chairman, I just want to make one observation with respect to a statement made in the brief on page 9.

Education must help formulate the attitudes of the general public regarding poverty.

I just wanted to point out that that is one of the prime jobs of this Committee and as a result of our work I think we have stimulated a national debate on this.

The Chairman: And a very firm local debate.

Senator Hastings: All of the people in Canada are not aware of the need for action in respect to poverty. In my own Province of Alberta they are still gabbing about Medicare.

Whether they are ready to accept action on poverty or not it will be our job to educate them. We have heard comments with regard to the need or the urgency for action. Mr. Critchley yesterday said that we were on borrowed time and one of the groups said we need action now. I wonder if you would care to make a comment on that?

Mr. Smith: Well, I think it is imperative. What we are dealing with now is the children—the people we really want to get to and as has been mentioned, what can you do for a family even if you do give them the money, they will just spend it. It is with the children now, this generation coming say, in the last ten years, these children that you have to get to. As I say a whole new generation is self-perpetuating and increasing poverty. In the longrun unless there are some long-reaching plans to do something we are going to be in trouble. Insofar as this guaranteed annual income, if you enact it now you will in effect be saving money. Tell that to the people in Alberta.

Senator Hastings: I will do that.

Senator Cook: At what age?

Mr. Smith: Well, at what age. That's a good question. I think it's a problem just trying to decide what age we can go to vote.

The Chairman: It will be eighteen next year.

Mr. Smith: I hope so. I suppose it would depend on the dependency question. If a person is looking after himself, I think then there would have to be some sort of minimum. Anyone who is looking after themselves should certainly be included in this.

The Chairman: Are there any other questions? If there is not we have a timetable. If there is no other questions may I say to you on behalf of the Committee that you young people have been a delight to this Committee. We had another group of which you are an alumnae, I guess you could say and they have been very rewarding to this Committee and we thank you for your interest and we thank you for your suggestions and we thank you for your criticisms and we thank you for taking the trouble to come here on your own to make this contribution. You may rest assured it has great value, not only because you spent a great deal of work on it, but because you are a young and energetic group and for that reason we are very happy that you came here. And you can go home and feel that you made a real contribution. Thank you very much.

Just before we close the meeting I wanted to just make a few observations. I think for the record they should be there. This morning in a response to a sudden invitation to visit the neighbourhood centre a subcommittee of the Senate did go along to the neighbourhood centre. They saw the centre and some of the subsidized housing as well as housing that was not up to the standard of the subsidized housing and they visited some of the homes and of course they will make a report. Last night Senators Sparrow, Fergusson and Pearson—we went out and we covered this same area that was covered today and looked over this area. Originally we had planned to go to the centre on Monday and we went, most of us, for—a subcommittee of us went to the manpower centre on Monday. We spent about an hour there from four to five. We then thought we would go on to the neighbourhood centre and found that it was inconvenient—that it hadn't been arranged, so it was dropped at that point. I thought that we were going yesterday afternoon and when we didn't we went out anyways and looked around and saw for ourselves. I think it should be made clear that in this committee we are intimately acquainted with poverty. We are acquainted with poverty itself in every aspect. Our difficulties are with solutions and they don't come too easy. There are not too many people offering solutions and that's why we came here. There were some exceptional briefs offered to us here today and it was worth walking this far in order to hear a couple of these briefs. There were some excellent briefs and on the other hand there were just briefs presented. We, of course, make as much use as we possibly can of the information that comes to us and we get a consensus of what people are thinking about and the amazing thing is that most people have some ideas how you can break the back of poverty but when the people speak of our involvement; there is a million people in this country in poverty. How do you reach them? I don't know. I have been in this business for forty years and no one else around this table knows except through their organizations if you possibly can get them, and we are not overlooking—this statement was made in the Senate last week and I am quoting. This is from page 29.

In order to contact the poor in every province two members of our community liaison staff have been across the country twice to meet and visit with them. We think their involvement is essential because the poor have a role to play and must have a voice in their own destiny. A place must be carved out for them round the decision tables and once and for all if we are going to succeed they must enter the in group.

That was the chairman speaking as late as last Tuesday. We are not unaware of what is needed in this country, but it's just hard to deliver it all in one day or that quickly.

Now, let me before closing say that Dalhousie University which is traditionally and historically open to all people was opened to us. We thank them for the accommodation and we thank them for the excellent arrangements that have been made here. The Committee benefited from the interest of two particular young people, Dorothy M. Campbell and Frank Glasgow. They helped with the technical arrangements and Miss Campbell is in the third year Nursing at Dalhousie University and she is very active on the student council. Mr. Glasgow is the original Liaison Officer in the Citizenship Branch. We wish to thank them. In fact, wherever we turn, we had people welcoming us and greeting us and they said to us "How can we help?" We understand the frustrations of the poor. We understand their difficulty. We understand what they are up against and when they say "Surely you must know where they are and how they got there". It's not that easy. We have said time and again for the first time in the history of this country someone has been given the task of looking at the poor in totality; the whole of them—and we have been able to identify the poor which is more than has been done on other occasions. We can tell you how many there are and we can tell you where they are and we can tell you what classifications that you can put them into and that is progress.

We have people discussing this and there is a dialogue in this country on the poor and no one is running away from this question. The leaders of the political parties have declared themselves on it. There is a constant dialogue going on. There is attention to a committee that comes into Halifax to try and do a job. Some people don't like the way it does that job, but the fact is that the people in Halifax know that there is a committee—a Committee on Poverty, so there is interest here and that in itself is progress. We are quite content and we are very happy to have been here and heard the people and we thank those who prepared very good and excellent briefs and we learn as we go along. This young man said to us, "How do you expect us to do fifty briefs? We are poor, we can't afford to do that sort of thing." The Director is sitting beside me and we have decided that in future they may send one brief and we will make the copies. All these things we learn as we go along. Thank you very much and it's been very pleasant being here.

The committee adjourned.

APPENDIX "A"

NOTES ON BRIEF
ON POVERTY
SUBMITTED TO SPECIAL
SENATE COMMITTEE

The Nova Scotia Association for the Advancement of Coloured People.
November 5, 1969.

Mr. Chairman, we are here because of our concern for the over-representation of the blackman in the poverty picture in N.S.

Definition

We will not attempt a full definition of poverty as we believe that such a definition has already been given by others such as the B.U.F., The Economic Council of Canada, The Institute of Public Affairs, suffice it to say that the essence of poverty is the individual's lack of self-respect in the sense of standing in the community.

Income and Employment

Poverty as defined above is not completely removed by the institution of a guaranteed annual income alone. Concomitant with the guaranteed annual income there must be provided meaningful employment for everyone.

Development Programmes

Over the years there have been in this province a number of development programmes—A.R.D.A., A.D.B., I.E.L., A.P.E.C., V.E.P., R.EEX. These programmes have had least effect on the black (and Indian) poor. Studies done on black communities 5-10 years ago if repeated today would show that there has been very little change. Future development programmes must be poor people, black people, ethnic minority oriented.

Education

The correlation between education and prosperity is too obvious to be further laboured by one. The Dalhousie Institute of Public Affairs brief has adequately made this point. It thus follows that to remove poverty, to find a permanent solution to poverty as opposed to mere stop gaps a major break through must be made in the area of education. Education is a shared responsibility of both the provincial and federal governments.

Public School

The blackman would like to see a trend towards a more global perspective in curriculum content which would portray our people in a true light. Everyone must be informed of the blackman's contributions to history, science, the arts—federal grants to the department of education for curriculum development could solve that problem.

Head start

There is now no doubt in most peoples minds as to the significance of pre-school education in the fight against poverty. The federal government can really get its teeth into this aspect of education by providing adequate financing for research, programme development, staff training, and implementation. This could be done through direct grants to local universities with the stipulation that the development and implementation be a joint responsibility of their faculties of education, psychology, and sociology.

(demographic studies—sociology)

(human psychology—psychology)

(curriculum development and methodology—education)

Adult Education, Job Retraining, Vocational Training

Because any plans for substantial industrial expansion must definitely include the black work force, the black work force must be substantially represented in all job training or retraining programmes for new jobs created by Mr. Marchand's department.

Human Rights

Prejudice, discrimination and community attitudes have been successful in making and keeping the black man, and the Indian, poor. Those of the white community who argue that they have not indulged in such practice have condoned them by allowing them to take place.

These attitudes can be changed, or at least controlled, if along with the educational break through there is rigid enforcement of human rights legislation. This legislation is today most meaningful when qualifications are equal. Therefore once qualifications are equal, enforcement must guarantee equal access. Education and human rights go hand in hand.

Conclusion

The blackman demands to be involved in all decisions affecting him consequently the N.S.A.A.C.P. or the B.U.F. should be the first to be advised and consulted about all initiatives or plans, or proposed initiatives concerning the black people of N.S.

We as a people do not want to be wards of the state, nor do we want to be a special case in the welfare budget. We, the black people of Nova Scotia want jobs like everyone else; we want jobs in accordance with our educational capacities and aspirations.

We want to make our equal contributions to society. We want equal access.

APPENDIX "B"

BRIEF

to the

SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE ON POVERTY IN CANADA

Submitted by

STUDENTS OF SOCIAL DEVIANCE CLASS

Sociology 340

SAINT FRANCIS XAVIER UNIVERSITY

Marie Dunne

Dorothy Haley

Zita Hogan

Kevin MacNeill

Maurice Smith

Antigonish, Nova Scotia

(Phone: area code 902, 867-3746)

October, 1969

INTRODUCTION

This report on poverty is a summary of the personal views of some fifty (50) students all of whom expressed their ideas as to what is the cause and what the solution to the problem of poverty in Canada. Consequently, many of the ideas expressed will have a local flavour since many people relied upon personal experiences to explain poverty and to show how existing agencies are neither sufficient nor efficient.

For many, poverty was mainly perpetuated because of lack of education and the solution for them seemed to be that of educating people. Others felt that poor and inadequate housing was a major cause of the poverty cycle and therefore housing, it was felt, should be a major concern. Still others seemed to think that the problem was basic to dollars and cents. The poor just did not have enough to live on and therefore, a guaranteed annual income was the solution. Opposition to this idea was expressed by those who felt that a guaranteed annual income would only create more poor or new poor. It will be much easier for those people who do not want to work to sit back and enjoy life. After all they are getting a guaranteed annual income which will insure them the basic needs of life.

For the most part, education, housing, and income, i.e. the guaranteed annual income, seemed to be recurring themes in many of the papers. These then, will be our major areas of discussion.

Our class conducted a formal vote on policy recommendations of the Canadian Welfare Council (43 participants) and results are given in Appendix B.

PREFACE

The cause, rise and incidence of poverty we have found to be quite closely related to housing, education and income. Each of these three areas has been looked at in order to determine what effect they have on poverty, and in what way they can be changed to lower the incidence of poverty.

In housing it was found that inadequate housing can perpetuate the poverty cycle. Those who grow up in poor surroundings usually have no conception of anything better and they continue the pattern of life which is so early established.

We recommended that a co-op housing policy be enlarged and encouraged by government assistance. This would supply not only adequate housing but also good surroundings which would give the children of the poor a chance to break out of the poverty cycle. The psychological effect of a family working towards a common goal is immense. It provides incentive and makes a person proud of owning his own home.

From the survey which was conducted on housing for single working girls it was concluded that existing housing was for the most part too expensive and often sub-standard. This was discouraging and for those who had little opportunity for advancement it could only encourage poverty.

It was suggested that the following recommendations be adopted:

1. A provincial scale to determine standards for rooming houses and apartments should be set up.
2. An official should see that the standards are enforced.
3. Rents should be made to coincide with the facilities being offered.
4. Government housing of some type should be set up.

In the field of education we found one of the basic weapons to combat poverty. The uneducated and unskilled cannot get employment which will enable them to enjoy a basic standard of living. Thus they are poor. Edu cation and training will enable people to find jobs which will raise their standard of living and make them independent.

Great emphasis was placed on the education of the children of the poor—again with an aim toward breaking the poverty cycle.

Adult education was encouraged but it was considered that it is just as important to provide jobs after the training has been completed. It was also thought that training should be based on the type of industry which is located in the area where the program is being held.

With higher education we concluded that the Student Aid system was permitting some to live on easy street for a few years. Student aid, it was felt, should be more in the form of bursaries with the qualifications for it based on need and success.

The final major topic which was reviewed was income. For the poor whether they are now on welfare or are earning a subsistence wage, something must be done to make their earnings relative to the cost of living. This it was concluded can only be accomplished by a guaranteed annual income. It was recommended that the best means of bringing this about would be with the adoption of the negative income tax.

HOUSING AND THE POOR

In our study we found that housing and poverty are directly related. Most of the poor are living in slums, or at least in inadequate housing. One case in particular we have noted points all too clearly to the problem at hand. This incident has been witnessed by one of the members of our study and he feels that his evaluation of the situation is a modest one.

The Gautier family live in rural Quebec. Both parents were raised in lumber camps and therefore have no education. Neither can read or write. They have eight children. Presently they are living in a one-room shack which has been built out of old lumber salvaged from a dump. The family, of necessity, sleep together. Plumbing and electricity are non-existent. The family is on welfare and Mr. Gautier works only sporadically.

Clearly this case is in the extreme but it does emphasize our point. Housing for the poor is inadequate and this, we contend, is one of the major factors which perpetuates the poverty cycle. Children raised in these surroundings can have little hope of ever having a proper outlook regarding family life. They will grow up in the surroundings and will fall victim to the same type of life.

If adequate means of housing could be provided for the poor it could only have the effect of helping to reduce poverty. As an explanation of this and as a means of reaching this goal we would advocate more extensive use of co-op housing. This would accomplish many goals. Primarily it would provide adequate housing. Besides this the co-op idea gives people incentive. They are working towards their own home. Because of the built-in educational program they are bettering themselves. In addition a new atmosphere will be provided for the family and the children would, because of this, be given more of a chance in life.

Co-op housing then has many advantages. We think it to be quite an important step towards the break-up of the poverty cycle. Consequently it is our recommendation that this type of housing be encouraged and that the three branches of government should share in this effort.

After all poverty is not just a federal concern, but rather, one which is, or should be, a concern of all branches of government. Through loans and subsidies the government can encourage this plan. Loans make the builder feel that he is paying for it himself. He is not just getting a hand-out. This gives him incentive and makes him proud of his work. This pride in what one has and is doing goes a long way to help people to improve themselves. Nevertheless, today, because of high interests on mortgages, subsidies toward payment of interests for the lower income groups is necessary in addition to loans to make home ownership an accessible goal to them.

There is a further aspect of housing which we would like to consider. It is one which, in many cases, precipitates poverty. Our knowledge of this and our recommendations concerning it are based on a survey which two of our members did. The survey together with its results are given in Appendix "A".

Briefly the survey covers the area of housing that concerns the single working girl. This for the most part is an assessment of the types of housing available with suggestions for improvement.

GUARANTEED ANNUAL INCOME

Guaranteed Annual Income and negative Income Tax are topics of current discussions among the political minds of our country. On this topic, the noted psychologist Erich Fromm says: "This right to live, to have food, shelter, medical care, education etc., is an intrinsic human right that cannot be restricted by any condition, not even the one that he must be socially useful."¹

It was suggested that the poor in society are poor because they are striving to keep up with others. Often debt is incurred in this attempt. An actual case may help illustrate this. The family in question has eighteen children. The fathers' salary is small, not by any means enough to support such an army. For over a decade this family has lived in a two room shack (about 18 by 11). The windows are stuffed, there is but one bed. The father shaves in the same bucket out of which the family drinks. There is a television but not a chair in the house. The parents have, after a long period of struggling, accepted their environment as part of their pattern of living. They have become fixated to a certain living habit. It can be said that money is not the total solution to this problem but it is with an economic base that we must begin in this case.

There is a second case which we would like to bring to the attention of the committee. In this case we have a widow with eight children:

- 3 in university
- 2 in school
- 2 working
- 1 married

This widow is not working but receiving compensation of approximately $3000 yearly. Average income in her city is $5400-$6000 yearly. Now, if this widow goes to work, her pension stops.

What we believe would benefit our two cases and what we would like to propose for similar cases is a universal graduated negative income tax. The graduated scale would be relative to individuals, couples, and families. For example, a laborer with a wife and three children and a salary of $6000 per year, may be allowed an immediate tax deduction of $3000, leaving him with a total of $3000 to pay taxes on. A laborer with the same salary but only one dependent may be allowed an immediate tax deduction of $1500 leaving him with a balance of $4500 to pay taxes on.

This basic tax deduction will be determined by the government and simply consists of the minimal amount of money needed by an individual, couple, or family, for food, clothing, and shelter. This amount may vary from year to year, depending on the rising or lowering of the cost of living from year to year. If a wage earner's fixed income is not enough to cover the determined minimal for existence we propose that his actual income be supplemented up to the established floors by payments from the Treasury.

For those who are not wage earners but are presently on assistance, their incomes, we feel should also be supplemented to the determined minimal amount for existence. This method of determining what is the minimum amount an individual could survive on, would also serve as a check on whether government assistance plans were at present adequate or antiquated.

What we would further like to propose is that with this system of the negative income tax, approach the present system of youth allowances be dropped since family allowances will be combined in this method of tax deductions measured by the number of dependents.

We believe such a universally applied system would be cheaper to administer than present facilities and there would also be much less stigma involved. We propose that we are carrying the Keppler report one step further so that everyone in Canada will have the guarantee of a subsistence income and not only the old aged, blind and crippled citizen (the economically unproductive) whose fate it appears would be the same for all time.

One may ask what a graduated negative income tax would accomplish? To answer this question we would like to quote the economist Clarence E. Ayres: "With the guarantee of a subsistence income, so that, come what may, they could feel assured that they would not starve to death, most of the present victims of poverty would make an effort of reorienting themselves to the industrial economy."²

TYPES AND ELEMENTS OF POVERTY

Poverty is a lack of possibilities. In an economic sense it is the lack of money to buy material possessions. But common consensus qualifies this view by making poverty absolute with regard to a standard in numerical terms. Thus the Bureau of Statistics in 1961 draws the line of poverty at $1,500 per person, $2,500 for two and $4,000 for five. Forms of economic poverty are three:

¹Theobald, Robert, (editor); "The Psychological Aspects of The Guaranteed Income", The Guaranteed Income, Doubleday & Co., Garden City, N.J., 1966, p. 184.

²Theobald, Robert, (editor), "An Institutional View", The Guaranteed Income, Doubleday & Co., Garden City, N.J., 1966, p. 176.

1. Crisis poverty, where an accident or illness occurs.
2. Depressed area poverty such as the closing down of a mine, etc.
3. Long term poverty such as handicaps or old age.

Each must be compensated either temporarily or permanently.

Poverty is also a lack of social identification with the rest of society. The "culture of poverty" binds the poor together due to common characteristics such as lack of education, poor housing, lack of participation in the rest of society due to psychological as well as physical barriers, aggression, and deviation, and lack of incentive, which is the key to self help.

Elements of poverty can be seen in living conditions where the lack of positive attitudes result in a hopeless acceptance of filth and unsanitary conditions. Dress and manner display the plight of many. Speech also portrays the orientation and socialization of an individual which often marks him for life.

Poverty is often hidden or unknown to the poor if placed in context of "everyone is the same". Thus poverty is often seen objectively by outsiders who do not realize that values and community spirit in the negative sense can have a solidarity effect, making it harder to alleviate the pain of not having. Thus the poor must become aware of their situation, not just knowing that they are poor but knowing the possibilities and services available to them. But first of all they must become educated in a very elementary sense. Their values and attitudes must change and this can be done only by and with the help of those that are in the position to—the larger society.

EDUCATION

One of the most effective weapons in the fight against poverty is education. Education must help formulate the attitudes of the general public regarding poverty. For example there is no stigma attached to those who receive various pensions or family allowances yet those who receive welfare are "branded". This is the result of public ignorance. The general public must be made aware of:

1. conditions surrounding the poor,
2. the functions of our welfare system,
3. its necessity.

Information centers should be established where the public can obtain such knowledge and those in need of assistance can find out what is available to them.

EDUCATING POVERTY STRICKEN CHILDREN

Poorer families are not education orientated. The sooner the youth brings home any type of income the happier the parents seem to be. Therefore the youth is not provided with intellectual stimulation or encouragement to remain in school. The most pressing problem in educating poverty stricken children is to give them incentive. They must feel that they can accomplish something in school; that they are not destined to live in poverty; that there is hope.

It is especially important at the elementary level to have a teacher who understands and can influence the children for it is at this age that study habits and attitudes are formed. By the fifth or sixth grade it is usually quite obvious to the teachers who the potential drop-outs are. It is then that they should begin to stream the children into a vocational or other practical course in order to keep them in school. There is also a need for guidance councillors at the junior and high school level.

Better use should be made of the school building itself. It should be opened the year round to everyone—not only for classroom studies but for recreation, meetings, library facilities, etc. Also we feel that more physical education programs would benefit both the physical and mental health of the children.

ADULT OCCUPATIONAL TRAINING PROGRAM

We feel that the Adult Occupational Training Program is a worthwhile assistance program. However, we recommend a change in the format of such a program. Before introducing our proposal we will attempt, by use of an example, to describe what is wrong with the present format.

At Point Edward, Nova Scotia, a small area outside Sydney, men, without much formal training or education, are taking various trades such as auto mechanics, plumbing, and carpentry work. Upon completion of this course the individual, in most cases is unable to find work in the local area, and thus will settle for almost any job. Therefore, the purpose of the training program is defeated. Now we realize that it is almost impossible to guarantee every individual who attends trade school at Point Edward that he is going to get a job in the local area, but we feel we have a possible solution which would increase the prospects.

There is located at Point Edward a car producing plant. If men could be trained in various operations of this car plant, then upon completion of their course they could obtain employment at the car plant. The point we are trying to make is that the government, before setting up Adult Occupational Training Programs, in any area should survey the leading industries or potential industries of the area, check with management of these industries concerning the hiring of properly trained local personnel, then set up the trades program. It may cost more initially to set up such specialized training but we feel long run gains would prove worthwhile.

STUDENT AID PROGRAM

The student aid program has enabled many students to attend colleges, universities, and other institutes of higher learning, who under normal circumstances would be unable to do so. We feel however, that the government (federal) should set up a bursary system. The bursary system, we feel, would consist of reducing the amount of the loan of a successful "graduate". The reduction would act as an incentive for students who apply for loans, to graduate rather than having a vacation on government funds for a few years.

On the provincial level we think the Nova Scotia government should modify its bursary program. What we would suggest here is that the government place a contingency on its awarding of bursaries. The contingency would be that the individual have a passing score in at least four academic subjects from the previous year. Under the present system there is no incentive for an individual to achieve high standing. For the individual who did not achieve the standard to be eligible for a bursary, we propose the provincial government set up a loan system whereby a student could borrow the same amount as a student bursary would be. If the student achieved the standard during that academic year he would not have to repay the loan. However, a student would be allowed this form of probation only once in his academic career.

APPENDIX A

A questionnaire was administered to twenty-nine single working girls (ages 18 to 23) in the town of Antigonish. The survey includes a cross-section sample, lab-technicians, secretaries, clerks, kitchen help, hairdressers, waitresses and trained personnel.

From actual observation we noticed that the quality of many rooms did not coincide with the price being paid. Some girls realized this and commented "We take what we can get", "It will have to do". However, others in sub-standard conditions did not seem to recognize this fact, that these were conditions below the standard of our present day social status. They had very little finances and the bulk which was being paid out had little comfort or even a suitable living quarter to show for it. These were girls who had no future hopes of attaining a better job with higher wages, so they had nothing ahead of them, to advance them from this state of poverty. Other girls in the same state, e.g., students and higher paid personnel regarded these quarters as merely temporary and had the idea that better things were ahead; so for them this situation doesn't mean a lifetime condition.

In one instance there were seven (7) rented rooms in a rooming house and only one bathroom. In some of these rooms there were two (2) and three (3) girls. Question—"Do you have a private bathroom?" Answer—"When you can get into it."

Another example of poor conditions was endured by three girls in one room. This room was said to be furnished, however, these furnishings included two beds, one dresser with three drawers and two hooks on the back of the door and no closet. These girls received clean linen every three (3) weeks, and are paying weekly rent of seven ($7.00) dollars each.

As a result of our collected data and general observations the following recommendations are made:

1. Apartments and rooming houses must meet certain standards set on a provincial scale.
2. A base should be set for the rent to coincide with the facilities being offered.
3. More housing opportunities should be made available by government sponsored programs for the individuals in the bracket investigated.
4. An appointed government official should check conditions regularly and enforce required standards.

QUESTIONNAIRE:

1. In what year did you begin renting?
2. Are you presently occupying the same apartment? If not, why?
3. Is so has the rent been raised since you first occupied the apartment? Why?
4. Was your apartment furnished or unfurnished?
5. Are you sharing your apartment with others? If so, how many?
6. What is your take-home salary per week?
7. What is your rent charged per week?
8. Does this include your heat and electricity?

9. If not what is your average heat and electricity bill per week?

10. What is your average expenditure on food per week?

11. "A" How many rooms are included in your apartment? "B" If you occupy a rooming house, how many other rented rooms in the house?

12. Do you have a private bathroom?

13. Do you think the size of your apartment or room adequate or inadequate?

14. Do you think your rent is reasonable?

15. What are your complaints or disadvantages concerning your rent, room or apartment?

Question No.	1.	2.	3.	4.	5.
Person 1.	1969	No, doubled up	—	Furnished room	Yes, 1
2.	1968	No, didn't like	—	Furnished Apartment	Yes, 3
3.	1969	No	—	Furnished Trailer	Yes, 1
4.	1966	No, found better	—	Unfurnished Apartment	Yes, 4
5.	1969	Yes	No	Furnished room	No
6.	1968	No, rents high	—	Furnished Trailer	Yes, 2
7.	1969	Yes	No	Furnished Apartment	Yes, 4
8.	1967	Yes	No	Furnished Room	Yes, 1
9.	1969	No	—	Furnished Room	Yes, 1
10.	1965	Yes	—	Furnished Room	Yes, 3
11.	1969	Yes	—	Furnished Room	Yes, 2
12.	1968	Yes	No	Furnished Room	No
13.	1969	Yes	No	Furnished Room	Yes, 1
14.	1967	No	—	Furnished	No
15.	1969	No	—	Furnished	Yes, 1
16.	1967	Yes	Yes, $10.	Furnished	Yes, 2
17.	1966	No	—	Furnished	Yes, 4
18.	1968	Yes	No	Furnished	Yes, 1
19.	1968	No	—	Furnished	Yes, 3
20.	1969	Yes	No	Furnished	Yes, 2
21.	1969	Yes	No	Furnished	Yes, 2
22.	1969	Yes	No	Furnish, a little	Yes, 1
23.	1968	No	—	Furnished	Yes, 1
24.	1969	Yes	No	Furnished	Yes, 2
25.	1968	Yes	No	Furnished	No
26.	1969	No	—	Furnished	Yes, 2
27.	1967	Yes	No	Furnished	Yes, 1
28.	1968	No	—	Unfurnished	Yes, 1
29.	1968	Yes	No	Furnished	Yes, 1

Special Senate Committee

Question No.	6.	7.	8.	9.	10.	11.
Person 1.	$35.00	$ 8.00 ea. ($16.00)	Yes	—	$12.00	B-3
2.	$75.00	$ 9.70 ea. ($38.75)	Incl. Heat	$2.00	$ 5.00	A-6
3.	$48.00	$10.00 ea. ($34.00)	Yes	—	$ 7.00	A-6
4.	$50.00	$ 5.00 ea. ($25.00)	No	$2.00	$ 8.00	A-5
5.	$45.00	$12.00	Yes	—	$14.00	B-3
6.	$75.00	$12.50 ea. ($37.50)	Yes	—	$ 6.00	A-5
7.	$37.50	$ 8.00 ea. ($40.00)	Incl. Heat	$1.00	$ 5.00	A-5
8.	$37.50	$ 5.00 ea. ($10.00)	Yes	—	$10.00	B-3
9.	$40.00	$ 8.00 ea. ($16.00)	Yes	—	$10.00	B-2
10.	$40.00	$ 3.00 ea. ($12.00)	Yes	—	$20.00	B-3
11.	$65.00	$ 7.00 ea. ($21.00)	Yes	—	$15.00	B-5
12.	$50.00	$ 5.00	Yes	—	Free at work	B-7
13.	$49.00	$ 7.00 ea. ($14.00)	Yes	—	$11.00	B-3
14.	$40.00	$ 8.00	Yes	—	$10.00	B-4
15.	$62.50	$15.61 ea. ($31.32)	Heat only	$6.00	$ 6.00	A-5
16.	$50.25	$14.50 ea. ($43.50)	Heat only	$6.00	$ 5.00	A-5
17.	$85.00	—	Yes	—	$ 8.00	A-6
18.	$95.00	$13.12 ea. ($26.24)	Heat only	$3.90	$15.00	A-5
19.	$34.80	$ 7.00 ea. ($28.00)	Yes	—	$ 7.00	B-4
20.	$40.00	$ 3.00 ea. ($ 9.00)	Yes	—	$ 9.00	2
21.	$38.75	$ 7.00 ea. ($21.00)	Yes	—	$ 7.00	1-use of 5
22.	$35.65	$ 5.00 ea. ($10.00)	Yes	—	$14.00	B-5
23.	$40.00	$ 7.00 ea. ($14.00)	Yes	—	$ 8.00	B-8
24.	$35.00	$ 6.00 ea. ($18.00)	Yes	—	Free at work	B-3
25.	$60.00	$16.25	Yes	—	$13.50	A-4
26.	$38.00	$ 6.00 ea. ($18.00)	Yes	—	Free at work	B-4
27.	$52.00	$ 8.00 ea. ($16.00)	Yes	—	$ 6.00	B-1
28.	$80.00	$13.75 ea. ($27.50)	Heat only	$4.50	$17.50	A-5
29.	$57.50	$ 8.00 ea. ($16.00)	Yes	—	$16.00	B-1

Question No.	12.	13.	14.	15.
Person 1.	No	Adequate	No	No private entrance. Can't receive guests. Can't use electrical appliances in room. Landlady very unreasonable.
2.	Yes	Inadequate	No	Too small, no maintenance, not enough privacy.
3.	Yes	Adequate	Yes	—
4.	Yes	Adequate	Yes	Crowded and noisy.
5.	No	Inadequate	No	"I take what I can get." No kitchen privileges, no electrical appliances in room. Landlady unpredictable. "No spending money left."
6.	Yes	Inadequate	Yes	Not enough closet space.
7.	Yes	Inadequate	No	Rent raised because five in apartment, crowded, poor maintenance, have to wait to have things repaired.
8.	No	Inadequate	Yes	Not enough closet space, too small, no electrical appliances allowed in room.
9.	No	Adequate	Yes	"I starve."
10.	Yes	Adequate	Yes	Not much spending money.
11.	No	Adequate	Yes	—
12.	No	Adequate	Yes	Can never get in the bathroom.
13.	No	Adequate	Yes	—
14.	No	Adequate	Yes	Satisfied.
15.	Yes	Adequate	No	Too much to pay in general.
16.	Yes	Adequate	No	Basement apartment. No private thermostat.
17.	Yes	Adequate	Yes	Satisfied.
18.	Yes	Adequate	Yes	For Antigoni it is O.K.
19.	No	Inadequate	Yes	Too small.
20.	No	Adequate	Yes	Satisfied.
21.	Semi.	Adequate	Yes	Very satisfactory.
22.	No	Adequate	Yes	Furniture is not good.
23.	No	Adequate	Yes	Satisfied.
24.	No	Inadequate	Yes	Small, cold, no closet space, 2 P.M. latest out, fresh linen 3 weeks, no baths after 10 p.m.
25.	Yes	Adequate	Yes	Satisfied.
26.	No	Inadequate	No	Small, each use of hairdrier costs 50c, linen not looked after, one dresser between 3 girls, not permitted to go out after 10 P.M.
27.	No	Adequate	Yes	Satisfied.
28.	Yes	Inadequate	Yes	Too small, especially bedrooms.
29.	No	Adequate	Yes	Satisfied.

Poverty

3 : 27

	7b	9b	10b	7, 9, 10
Person 1.	22.8		34.3	57.1
2.	12.9	2.6	6.7	22.2
3.	20.8		17.5	38.3
4.	10.0	4.0	16.0	30.0
5.	26.7		31.1	57.8
6.	16.7		8.0	24.7
7.	21.3	2.6	13.3	37.2
8.	13.3		26.6	39.9
9.	20.0		25.0	45.0
10.	7.5		50.0	57.5
11.	10.8		23.1	33.9
12.	10.0		at work	10.0
13.	14.3		22.4	36.7
14.	20.0		25.0	45.0
15.	25.0	9.6	9.6	44.2
16.	28.8	11.9	10.0	50.7
17.	n.d.		9.4	n.d.
18.	13.8	4.1	15.8	33.7
19.	20.1		20.1	40.2
20.	7.5		22.5	30.0
21.	18.1		18.1	36.2
22.	14.0		39.3	53.3
23.	17.5		20.0	37.5
24.	17.1		at work	17.1
25.	27.1		22.5	49.6
26.	15.8		at work	15.8
27.	15.4		11.5	26.9
28.	17.2	5.6	21.9	44.7
29.	13.9		27.8	41.7

SUMMARY:

1. In what year did you begin renting?
1965—1, 1966—2; 1967—4; 1968—9; 1969—13.

2. Are you presently occupying the same apartment? Yes—16; No—13.

3. If so has the rent been raised since you first occupied the apartment? Yes—1; No—13; Not applicable—15.

4. Was your apartment furnished or unfurnished? Furnished—26; Unfurnished—3.

5. Are you sharing your apartment with others? If so, with how many? No—4. Yes—25; with 1 other—12; with 2 others—7; with 3 others—3; with 4 others—3.

6. What is your take-home salary per week? Between $34 and 38—8 (2 free meals); $39 and 43—5; $44 and 48—2; $49 and 53—5 (1—free meals); $54 and over—9.

7. What is your rent charged per week? Between $3 and 6—8; $7 and 10—12; $10 and 13—2; over $13—6; no data—1.

8. Does this include your heat and electricity? Yes—22; No—1; Heat only—6.

9. If not what is your average heat and electricity bill per week? Between $1 and 2—3; between $3 and 4—2; over $4—2.

10. What is your average expenditure on food per week: Free food at work—3; under $6—3; between $6 and 10—13; between $11 and 15—7; over $15—3.

11. A—How many rooms are included in your apartment? 1 to 3—1; 4 to 6—10; 7 to 9—1.

B—If you occupy a rooming house how many other rented rooms are in the house? 1 to 3—9; 4 to 6—5; 7 to 9—1.

12. Do you have a private bathroom? Yes—12; No—16; semi-private—1.

13. Do you consider the size of your apartment or room adequate or inadequate? Adequate—20; inadequate—9.

14. Do you consider your rent reasonable? Yes—22; No—7.

15. What are your complaints or disadvantages concerning your rent, room or apartment? Satisfied—8; dissatisfied—18; no comment—3.

Special Senate Committee

APPENDIX B The Canadian Welfare Council, second printing; April, 1969), pages 71-77. Recommendations 37 and 38 were not included because

SOCIAL POLICIES FOR CANADA

Students of our class studied the list of Policy Recommendation and published by the Canadian Welfare Council in the publication Social Policies for Canada, Part 1 (Ottawa: aid. The class conducted a formal vote on the recommendations—43 students participating—and the results are as follows:

Recommendation Number	Approve	Approve with some Reservation	Disapprove	Undecided	No Opinion
1	42	1
2	43
3	37	5	1
4	33	9	1
5	38	4	1
6	38	3	2
7	35	6	2
8	35	3	5
9	43
10	32	3	7		1
11	36		7
12	40	1	2
13	33	3	6		1
14	40	1	1		1
15	40	1	2
16	37	4	2
17	34	2	5	1	1
18	35	5	3
19	39	2	1		1
20	39	4
21	40	2	1
22	41		2
23	37	4	1	1
24	39	3			1
25	36	3	2		2
26	41		1		1
27	39	3			1
28	37	3	1		2
29	39	2	1		1
30	40		2		1
31	35	7			1
32	41	1			1
33	37	2	1	1	2
34	40		1		2
35	38	2	1		2
36	39	1			3

Second Session—Twenty-eighth Parliament

1969

THE SENATE OF CANADA

PROCEEDINGS

OF THE

STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE

ON

POVERTY

The Honourable DAVID A. CROLL, Chairman

No. 4

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 6th, 1969

WITNESSES:

Premier Task Force on Extended Care and Alcoholic Treatment Facilities in Prince Edward Island: Dr. M. N. Beck, Director of Mental Health, Province of Prince Edward Island; Dr. John Maloney, Obstetrician; Evelyn Cudmore, Community Worker; Mr. Robert Blakeley, Sociologist and Member, Economic Improvement Corporation of the Department of Development; Mr. E. C. MacDonald, Provincial Director of Child Welfare; and Mr. John Green, Co-ordinator, Human Resources Sector, Department of Development.

Fraternity of Grey Knights: Frank Sigsworth, Counsel for the Fraternity; and Barry Gass, Prefect Commander.

The Catholic Social Welfare Bureau: Lawrence MacPherson, Social Welfare Administrator.

Prince Edward Island Newstart Incorporated: Miss Andrene Fandford, Programme Designer; and Louis Richard, Counsellor.

APPENDICES:

A.—Brief submitted by Premier Task Force on Extended Care and Alcoholic Treatment Facilities in Prince Edward Island.

B.—Brief submitted by the Catholic Social Welfare Bureau.

C.—Brief submitted by Prince Edward Island Newstart Incorporated.

MEMBERS OF THE
SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE ON POVERTY

The Honourable David A. Croll, Chairman

The Honourable Senators

Bélisle	Fergusson	MacDonald (Queens)
Carter	Fournier (Madawaska-	McGrand
Connolly (Halifax North)	Restigouche,	Pearson
Cook	Deputy Chairman)	Quart
Croll	Hastings	Roebuck
Eudes	Inman	Sparrow
Everett	Lefrançois

(18 Members)

(Quorum 6)

PATRICK J. SAVOIE,
Clerk of the Committee.

ORDERS OF REFERENCE

Extract from the Minutes of Proceedings of the Senate of Tuesday, October 28, 1969.

"The Honourable Senator Croll moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Roebuck:

That a Special Committee of the Senate be appointed to investigate and report upon all aspects of poverty in Canada, whether urban, rural, regional or otherwise, to define and elucidate the problem of poverty in Canada, and to recommend appropriate action to ensure the establishment of a more effective structure of remedial measures;

That the Committee have power to engage the services of such counsel, staff and technical advisors as may be necessary for the purpose of the inquiry;

That the Committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, and to report from time to time;

That the Committee be authorized to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the Committee, to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate, and to adjourn from place to place;

That the evidence taken on the subject during the preceding session be referred to the Committee; and

That the Committee be composed of the Honourable Senators Bélisle, Carter, Cook, Croll, Eudes, Everett, Fergusson, Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche), Hastings, Inman, Lefrançois, McGrand, Pearson, Quart, Roebuck and Sparrow.

After debate,

In amendment, the Honourable Senator McDonald moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Burchill, that the motion be not now adopted, but that it be amended by striking out paragraph 4 thereof and substituting therefor the following:—

"That the Committee be authorized to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the Committee, to adjourn from place to place, and notwithstanding Rule 76 (4), to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate."

After debate, and—

The question being put on the motion in amendment, it was—
Resolved in the affirmative.

The question being put on the motion of the Honourable Senator Croll, seconded by the Honourable Senator Roebuck, as amended, it was—
Resolved in the affirmative.

Extract from the Minutes of Proceedings of the Senate of Wednesday, October 29, 1969.

"With leave of the Senate,

The Honourable Senator McDonald moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Smith:

That the names of the Honourable Senators Connolly (Halifax North) and MacDonald (Queens) be added to the list of Senators serving on the Special Committee of the Senate appointed to investigate and report all aspects of poverty in Canada; and

That the name of the Honourable Senator Nichol be removed from the list of Senators serving on the said Special Committee.

The question being put on the motion, it was—
Resolved in the affirmative."

ROBERT FORTIER,
Clerk of the Senate.

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS

Confederation Centre,
Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island.
Thursday, November 6th, 1969.
(4)

Pursuant to adjournment and notice the Special Senate Committee on Poverty met this day at 9.30 a.m.

Present: The Honourable Senators Croll (Chairman), Belisle, Connolly (Halifax North), Cook, Eudes, Fergusson, Hastings, Inman, McGrand, Pearson and Sparrow. (11)

In Attendance: Frederick J. Joyce, Director.

The following witnesses were introduced and heard:

PREMIER TASK FORCE ON EXTENDED CARE AND ALCOHOLIC TREATMENT FACILITIES IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND:

Dr. M. N. Beck, Director of Mental Health, Province of Prince Edward Island;

Dr. John Maloney, Obstetrician;

Evelyn Cudmore, Community Worker;

Mr. Robert Blakeley, Sociologist and Member, Economic Improvement Corporation of the Department of Development;

Mr. E. C. MacDonald, Provincial Director of Child Welfare; and

Mr. John Green, Co-ordinator, Human Resources Sector, Department Development.

In Attendance:

Mr. Clair Hill, Assistant Executive Director of the Hospital Services Commission.

At the conclusion of the Premier Task Force's presentation, the Chairman thanked Dr. Beck and the other participants.

The following witnesses were then introduced and heard:

FRATERNITY OF GREY KNIGHTS:

Frank Sigsworth, Counsel for the Fraternity; and Barry Gass, Prefect Commander.

In Attendance:

Curtis Barkhouse, Pro-Consul Adjutant.

At the conclusion of the presentation by the Fraternity of Grey Knights the Chairman thanked Mr. Sigsworth, Mr. Gass and Mr. Barkhouse for their valuable testimony.

At 12.15 p.m. the Committee adjourned until 2.00 p.m.

The Committee resumed its hearings at 2.00 p.m. whereupon Senator Hastings informed the Committee of the visit by a sub-committee consisting of Senators Belisle, Hastings and Sparrow to the Charlottetown City Lock-Up and the Queen's County Jail. During the tour, the Senators were accompanied by Alan Holman and Richard Lord of the Committee staff, Mr. Frank Sigsworth and two members of the Fraternity of Grey Knights.

The Chairman informed the members that a sub-committee had been formed to hear a joint brief submitted by Messrs. R. Paul Batchilder and Bernard A. Cahill during the hours of three and four in the afternoon and submitted by Mr. David Morrison during the hours of four and five in the afternoon. The sub-committee was chaired by Senator Pearson, with Senators Belisle, Hastings and McGrand as members. These briefs have been retained in the Committee's records.

The following witness was introduced and heard:

THE CATHOLIC SOCIAL WELFARE BUREAU:

Lawrence MacPherson, Social Welfare Administrator.

(Biographical information respecting the above witness follows these Minutes.)

At the conclusion of the questioning, the Chairman thanked Mr. MacPherson for his presentation on behalf of the Catholic Social Welfare Bureau.

The following witnesses were then introduced and heard:

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND NEWSTART INCORPORATED:

Miss Andrene Fandford, Programme Designer; and Louis Richard, Counsellor.

At the conclusion of the questioning, the Chairman thanked the witnesses for their presentation.

The brief submitted by the Premier Task Force is printed as Appendix A to these proceedings.

The Task Force also submitted in support of their brief, the report of the Premier Task Force on Extended Care and Alcoholic Treatment Facilities in Prince Edward Island, dated March 31st, 1969, together with an address by M. N. Beck, M.D. to the Rotary Club of Charlottetown, on October 6th, 1969, entitled "Helping Services for Youth in Prince Edward Island". These have been retained in the Committee's records.

The briefs submitted by the Catholic Social Welfare Bureau and Prince Edward Island Newstart Incorporated are printed as Appendices B and C, respectively, to these proceedings.

A brief by the P.E.I. School Trustees Association was presented to the Committee and duly acknowledged by the Chairman.

At 4.00 p.m. the Committee adjourned to the call of the Chairman.

ATTEST:

Patrick J. Savoie,
Clerk of the Committee.

BIOGRAPHY

MacPherson, Lawrence, held the position of activities organizer for the Young Christian Workers (Antigonish Diocese) for a period of four years. He then supervised native residential students at Prince George College, Prince George, British Columbia for two years. Later, he attended the Nova Scotia Institute of Technology in Halifax and was granted a Social Welfare Worker Diploma. In his capacity as Social Welfare Administrator for the Catholic Welfare Bureau, he is involved in family counselling and the organization of a Day Care program in the Charlottetown area. Mr. MacPherson is married and resides in Charlottetown.

THE SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE ON POVERTY

EVIDENCE

Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island,
November 6, 1969.

The Special Senate Committee on Poverty met this day at 9.30 a.m.

Senator David A. Croll (Chairman) in the Chair.

The Chairman: This is a meeting of the Senate Committee on Poverty and we are holding this first meeting in the Province of Prince Edward Island. We are very pleased to have the benefit of sitting at Confederation Centre which is a national memorial. This is the birthplace of Canada and there is so much of our yesterdays and much of our tomorrows which begin here and still continue and for this reason it makes it a very special place.

The purpose originally over one hundred years ago—I don't have to repeat this—was to unite this country into a united people who will have their share of the wealth and bounty and goodness of this land. We are here today to pick the brains of persons in this province in order to obtain what help we can in our common fight with poverty.

I think it would be fitting if I reminded those here that a little over one hundred years ago our forefathers through will and determination overcame great obstacles to make this a great Canada. It is now our opportunity to display our will and determination to overcome and develop in order to keep it a great Canada.

Now, the first submission this morning is by the Premier's Task Force on Extended Care and Alcoholism Treatment Facilities in Prince Edward Island.

The brief deals with many matters of vital importance and on my right is Dr. M. N. Beck, Director of Mental Health for the province. He will be the first witness and he will introduce the people who are with him.

Go ahead, Doctor.

Dr. M. N. Beck, Director of Mental Health, Province of Prince Edward Island: May I first express, sir, my pleasure at being here and draw particular attention to the first submission in our short brief that we first apologize for the inadequacy of our submission. We have explained the reasons for it on the first page. The primary reason is that most of us are not primarily professionally called day to day to be concerned with the poor and thus we did not attend to this matter when we heard about this Committee coming in the summer. Subsequently we were asked by your local representative to meet with you and this was in mid-October and by then there was certainly no time to prepare an adequate submission, one of which we could have been proud or one of which may have done a better job in a more organized or at least a more brief way of presenting our viewpoints.

We therefore have done the best we can. We have supplied to you a copy of the report of the Premier's Task Force, which is a very long document, many parts about applying to the needs of those in poverty and especially the introduction on the first chapter of that report.

Before I talk, having rendered a group policy, I would like to introduce the members of the group who are with me. We have all the members of the Premier's Task Force save one who is not now in the province, Mr. Lorne Murphy.

On my immediate right is Dr. John Maloney, obstetrician in this city who has been active in many things besides obstetrics for many years. Next to him, Evelyn Cudmore, a very active community worker over the past many years, a staff member on the Red Cross and presently president of our provincial united fund.

Next to her is Mr. Clair Hill, Assistant Executive Director of the Hospital Services Commission of this province, and next to him is Mr. Robert Blakeley who has been more concerned with poverty and who is a member of the Economic Improvement Corporation of the Department of Development, which group is concerned with the overall poverty of this province. He is a sociologist and has been particularly concerned with the poor in this area. Those are the members of the Task Force who are with us.

We have supplemented our forces by having with us Mr. E. C. MacDonald who is the Provincial Director of Child Welfare and has perhaps rubbed shoulders more with the poor than any one of us here. Next to him is Mr. John Green who served for many years in this province as the Director of Family Allowances and then has taken on the additional task of the Old Age Pension. He knows these two fields very well and is now Co-ordinator of the Human Resources Sector of the Department of Development and has through these many past years been actively involved in many worthwhile community affairs, particularly those connected with welfare.

I would point out to you, Mr. Chairman, and to the other Senators present that our knowledge does not lie to intimate knowledge of the problem of poverty. Our background is quite diverse and not particularly focused in on this particular area.

We do feel that whatever contribution we can make to your deliberations (and we realize they are very very important ones) lies not in our particular knowledge of the poor or the theoretical background of poverty but lies rather in the kind of task force situation, save what Mr. Green concerns himself with, but this is a tremendous problem which we see inherent in the organization of the services by which we attempt to help the poor.

We are concerned and we have attempted to outline this very briefly on the second page of our submission. Perhaps I could start off by reviewing this with you as the centre of our discussion.

It is that chapter and also the summarization on the first page of Chapter 1 of this blue report. In there you will see the services which we think as a minimum should be integrated together in decentralized centres across the province. We have listed some 28 such services most of which we feel are intended to do the same type of thing for the same general group of people, most of whom we think have very much in common at the present time therapeutically and we really see this concept for decentralization tied in with integration of services as being sine qua non in the effective delivery of these helping services.

That idea, sir, is the main area where this group can be of help to you. As you said, this is a tremendously important problem with which you are engaged.

The other appendix is an address which I presented to Rotary which was the publicized version somewhat of the content of the Task Force report.

After talking with you, Mr. Chairman, I would point out a couple of things which I think are very relevant to all. The first is this: Although this looks like an ideal province, in many ways, I can assure you, the presence of poverty in our midst is all too real.

I have introduced some statistics into the second appendix which are not found in the Task Force report of the interpretation we have of the Economic Council of Canada's figures because they show an estimate that there are 25,000 individuals in the province in poverty and that is well borne out by the fact that our main welfare bureaus over the past year of 1968 19,800 Islanders have indeed received financial assistance from our various welfare agencies and this is getting very close to 20 per cent of the total Island population.

Other figures I carried through, such as the fact that we find in the same year there were 585 children who were wards of the Department of Welfare; that we had in a two year period almost 4000 people appear in court with alcoholic-related offences and so far as we were able to count this is a minimum. We can count over 1000 alcoholics in this province.

The other thing in which you express particular interest and being a child psychiatrist I have a particular interest in myself is the problem of school dropouts. We are running about 15 per cent of our children dropping out of school at or before grade 9.

Now, many of these drop out at grade 5, 6 or 7, although the larger rate would drop out at the grade 8 level. Now, this is really a horrendous number of young people, 393 kids, roughly 400 kids, coming in to our labour market year after year after year at ages of 14 and 15 and this presents very real problems to the children affected and very real problems to society and in the next few years this problem will be peaking because of the post-war baby boom and there are two things that should be said about this.

The first is that many of these children are not at high school level of competence intellectually or socially. Their capacity, environment and academic milieu, which we define as schools, is limited. They are not suited to the type of school system we now have and to say to keep them in school with our present school emphasis is, I know, a means of a solution.

Related to that is the fact that schools in this province and in most jurisdictions of Canada simply do not provide the type of program which is suited to these children's needs for their abilities. Having done, as it were, the basic academic exercises, reading, writing and arithmetic, by the time a person gets to grade 6 most of the reading and writing and arithmetic, which one requires to carry on ordinary life, is well achieved but having got to this limit the high schools are now doing very little to prepare these slow learning kids for life. In effect, by structuring no program through to them these kids are being very actively and very aggressively expelled from school without a formal expulsion. There is just nothing in school for them in most cases.

Any one of these topics I can assure you I can talk on at length and use up all our time. I will desist, Mr. Chairman, from doing this. I believe myself and the rest of the group with me are available to you and the rest of the Senators of the Special Committee to ask any questions you might wish to direct our way.

Senator Hastings: Dr. Beck, I would like to discuss the matter of school dropouts with you just for a moment, if I could. We have been told at most of our hearings that this is one of the great factors contributing to poverty in the Maritimes. We are also told that a child is affected at the early age of four and I notice in your brief you say three. We have to get to them at that age in order to maintain his will or his motivation for education.

I notice in your brief at page 3 you discuss the operation "Headstart" in the Province of Prince Edward Island. I wonder if you could start that one.

Could you just elaborate on that operation?

Dr. Beck: As you are aware, the emphasis of this is somewhat the "in" thing in the social services circles over the past five years. The theory of this is very sound and the theory is that basically the children of the poor are not only deprived economically, they are deprived culturally, they are deprived socially, they are under-stimulated and there is much evidence to back this up; and particularly they are understimulated in regard to the academic intellect type of achievement.

When children with backgrounds like this are faced with the school situation at age five or six, they undergo a great deal of cultural shock, among other things, and the attempt in operation Headstart is to introduce such children to intellectual stimulation and the type of middle class cultural milieu that is so fully represented by our school system and to drive through these problems.

This program has been operative in the States for some years now and we are studying to get preliminary reports on its effectiveness and these reports aren't all a glowing success.

The Chairman: Take the Westinghouse Report.

Dr. Beck: I cannot take that particular one, but the general impression I got from the reports is that in grade 1 the kids who have gone to operation "Headstart" do better than children who have not gone to operation "Headstart" but by the time you get to grade 2 or 3 age level, these two groups start coming together.

I would point out in saying this that this is very preliminary and the effect of operation "Headstart" really cannot be evaluated until about 15 years hence when we see what happens to the children here who had this early exposure in their career as opposed to children who didn't have this in their early career.

Senator Hastings: You speak of the Prince Edward Island Welfare day care. How many day care centres are in operation and how many are in contemplation?

Dr. Beck: I cannot give you a precise figure on that. We have had two in Charlottetown for the last year. One in Summerside. Operation "Newstart" has started one this year. You will have representatives from these groups with you later and I think they can give you the details.

Senator Hastings: Carrying this on: Then we go forward from the pre-school age to the school age. We have had evidence given that the high percentage of dropouts has contributed to your poverty in the Maritimes.

I wonder if you would care to let me have your observations or information with respect to a meaningful allowance to a student as an incentive so as to instill motivation to remain in school?

I am not thinking of the $10.00 a month they receive now as an education allowance but a meaningful payment to a student of $20.00 a week in order to clothe themselves and bring themselves up to the standard of other students. Would that work as a motivation to keep him in school?

Dr. Beck: I will ask Dr. Maloney to speak to that because he has been a member of the School Board here for many years.

Dr. J. H. Maloney, Member, Premier's Task Force: My own impression of that is that that would not correct the basic reason why the child does not go to school. I don't think that we give him motivation with money. It might give him motivation to remain in school. It would not give him motivation to learn anything there.

I think that the basic problem is the school is too oriented academically towards college and that the curriculum is one that was inherited from the Middle Ages and teaches subjects that are not of use as the child sees it and—I think he is overall correct—as being of no use to him in living or of very little use.

I think the general conclusion is that this is not a useful way for him to spend time and therefore he does not go. He does not want to go. I think he is bored.

Senator Hastings: He feels rejected.

The Chairman: You were on the Board of Education and I think you had been qualified sufficiently beyond your other duties as an obstetrician. What subjects are there do you think are of no more significance and what attempts have been made to correct the situation since you say you are aware of it?

Dr. Maloney: I am not perhaps as aware as you think I am. I will give you my impression.

There are a great number of subjects which are taught in the schools that are not of any use to the children. For instance, let us take geometry. That was designed and worked out on the foot-plains of the Nile by a Greek. It really is of no use to a child at all. There are many of us here still stuffed with a lot of theorems such as theorem 28 or theorem 47 which is of no use to a student in the ordinary case. There are a small minority who may go into some form of mathematics or science that may use geometry.

You take mathematics. I think that all the mathematics a person really needs which may be to buy your groceries or to count your pension can be done by grade 8 or 9 and to teach calculus to a great number of children is a waste of time.

You can go on for ever. Take French which begins in our schools at the 3rd and 4th grade and goes on in to the final years of school and there are a lot of children who after taking French for 7 or 8 years can't speak French.

If a manufacturer had a product upon which they worked for 7 or 8 years, I am sure they would certainly be able to produce the product at the end 7 or 8 years.

For example, history as it is taught is of the Battle of Hastings and what we should teach is a historical presentation and a history of how people have dealt with food and how they have dealt with having an inter-personal relationship.

Of our whole curriculum, I think you will find that 50 per cent doesn't pertain to the child living in the 20th century. If you are going to live in the 20th century you have to teach the principles of the great few, Marx, Freud, Darwin etc. If you are going to live in the 20th century you are going to have to know something about inter-personal relationship.

Take psychiatry; none of this is taught until the children are at college.

Mr. John Green, Member, Premier's Task Force: May I add a point to that.

We live with what everyone has described as this emotional age. These children are in school for 12 years and never are exposed to any technology. They have no exposure to the world. A child can go into grade 12 without any mention of the way he will live. By grade 12 a child should have reached a reasonable degree of training. They go into grade 12 completely neglected in this sense and completely unprepared for any kind of earning capacity.

Senator Pearson: Mr. Chairman, supplementary to that...

The Chairman: The doctor was just going to add to the question.

Dr. Beck: This is just one of the problems. I agree with what Dr. Maloney and Mr. Green have been saying but the main problem we have is with fourteen and fifteen year old children with limited academic achievement. What these gentlemen are speaking of are kids with normal intelligence and the school milieu is often more ill suited to the type of children with which we are concerned than it is to normal children.

Senator Pearson: I was just thinking that with operation "Headstart", would it not be possible to segregate children into various classes for instruction that they might use later on; get them away from mathematics and algebra and get them into that sort of class.

Dr. Beck: We are expressing personal opinions here.

Dr. Maloney: The whole school curriculum is little adjusted to the present day. Like a child coming out of school and not knowing what it is that makes an automobile work. They have no idea what a piston does and so on.

What you are suggesting, I understand, is rather a special educational system for children of special needs?

My own feeling is that we should attack the weakness where it is and that is in the schools and in their attitude and in their orientation which is absolutely based upon college orientation so it does not affect most of those and particularly does not affect ourselves.

We have had experience with children who have passed through special classes or desegregated classes and these retarded children have not benefited either academically or socially by this segregated class and the scientific evidence that is now coming in indicates this to the point where we have to face that question very clearly and it indicates that at the present time the segregated system of education is not likely to be the answer.

Mr. R. Blakely, Member, Premier's Task Force: I would like to add to the form of presentation and perhaps get us back on the track here.

Some years ago I worked with the Training Centre for delinquency prevention control at the University of Minnesota which was looking at precisely the kind of problem we are concerned with, poverty, and they used big words like "cultural deprivation" to describe it.

One of the things we were centering on was the training of teachers for some schools and the re-designing of curriculum which was more relevant to the needs of these children. They didn't understand Gerry and Jane. Those big houses and cars and things, they really don't understand that and in this great

T.V. wasteland of ours, we should really understand that large numbers of these kids, particularly in Prince Edward Island consider these middle class homes in the situation comedies as a fairyland.

They have never seen anything like that. They would refuse to believe people do live like that.

Now, if you had one of your staffers here acquaint himself with what this training centre has concentrated on and what the effects of this program (which has been going for 4 or 5 years down there) has been in re-designing curriculum and in training teachers to teach the culturally deprived, I think you might pick up some fairly good information.

The Chairman: Doctor, whom should we contact there?

Mr. Blakely: Just the training centre of delinquency control at the University of Minnesota. I do not know who is running it now.

The Chairman: All right.

Mr. Blakely: Could I point out that actually our main competence that we bring, however, is in the delivery of health, welfare and related services. Maybe we might better spend our time pursuing this.

The Chairman: Do you want to say something, Senator Belisle?

Senator Belisle: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Dr. Beck, I believe you said a while ago our whole school environment is maladjusted to our present technological age and I agree. My question is this: What can we do to impress our provincial educators to change their present method so that a better educational milieu be made for all our children who are in the category that we have described.

Dr. Beck: I do not want to appear flip but the best I can do with that question, Senator, is to say that I would almost as soon try to change the Catholic church as try to change our school system.

Senator Belisle: May I add the Catholic Church, to which I belong, has made a considerable change in the last few years.

Dr. Beck: It required a very great deal of effort and this is the point I wanted to make in my flip remark.

This is not just simply a matter of changing curriculum. It is a matter of changing attitudes. It is a matter of changing rules. Our school system has traditionally been almost exclusively fixed on this business of preparing children for college and I have asked in the last couple of weeks five, six or seven educators "What is high school for?" And the only answer I got is "To prepare children for university," so you are tied in with a whole social change in that question of tremendous magnitude.

Dr. Maloney: Mr. Chairman, to speak to this for a moment. Number one: I think why it is very difficult to change our educational system is because our educational system was one of the first things socialized and therefore it is quite rigid and the more rigid a system the harder it is to socialize it.

I think we have inherited the old Aristotelian idea of statism, that things were always the same; that they changed socially that it didn't affect a man much in his lifetime. I think we are coming now to the idea that change is what is and unchange is the thing that does not occur; that we live in constant change. We must adjust to change and therefore any system we bring in must always allow great flexibility.

My second point is: How do we change it? In what way, if you would change it, would you change it? I think the first thing to do is to throw out those things which are not relevant. There would not be a great deal of change in the first five or six years of school because in that time a child is learning the skills of reading, writing and arithmetic. Those are the things he will use to educate himself further so that section of school, I think, is pretty well done now, but it is following that that you must start and throw out and make education relevant.

Now, the first thing you must do is to teach, above all, logic. We say in our schools now we teach children to think. We don't do this at all. We teach children to memorize. You see, if you are really teaching a child to think, for instance—again I go back to one of these theorems. If he mastered theorem 8 or whatever the problem was, you wouldn't then sneak in an examination on him six months later to find out if he remembered it, so this is really what you are testing.

In all these subjects you are testing memory. There is no course in our schools that teaches a child to think and yet this is the thing we all pay lip service to.

So the first thing you do is to teach the child logic. Anybody who has ever sat in on any committee of any sort knows that the biggest bugbear that the chairman of a committee has is even to get people to talk relevantly because to many of our people this is a very very difficult thing to do.

The second thing is we subscribe and believe that the longer you talk about something the more important it becomes; so the first thing to do is to teach logic. Then you start in teaching subjects which are relevant. When you take history, for instance, the first thing you realize is that man lived for one million years before there was written history and all the basic problems and skills of living were learned at that time. This is neglected completely.

History—we go on to things like corn laws and all these battles, the War of the Roses and so on. I will not go into all of this. You know them better than I do.

The second thing is to teach him what he sees in the world around him. If you take today and go to our schools anywhere, I don't think there is 10 per cent of the people could identify 6 birds. They could not identify 6 trees. They don't know why there is a water fall in the middle of Ottawa that they happen to see. Why the St. Lawrence River runs south as it does. Why there is a building up a little hill and it slopes away as it does. They have no idea what occurs when you dig a basement, etc.

You could go on endlessly about the ignorance of the child towards the world in which he lives.

The second thing is: The greatest skill a man can have is the skill of inter-personal relationships and unless he learns those he is crippled for life. It holds him back. He never really reaches his full potential. We have no course at all in which this is done effectively. We have very little idea that this is even a problem or no appreciation of its importance and you could go on from subject to subject like this.

Mr. John Green, Co-ordinator, Human Resources Sector, Department of Development: I would like to answer the senator's question now.

The Chairman: Go ahead.

Dr. Maloney: I thought I did.

Mr. Green: Dr. Maloney, there is a famous Dr. Maloney principle we have heard around here that Dr. Maloney created. You should never do anything for the first time. This is one of the difficulties of making changes in the educational and school system. How do you go about changing the system? I think Dr. Maloney was talking of the content.

One of the things we have lived with for a long time is this myth of local responsibility in education. There is no such thing. I think if we are ever going to change the system we have to break it up into smaller pieces. We are simply not going to change the system by having the same people operate it.

On the island most of the proposals here, which you may be interested in and which is in context, is an attempt to set up larger units of administration, regional units which will generally be able to draw upon the larger base of common people and I hope that these people will be able to exercise some control over a lot of individuals' thinking.

I want to make one other point. There is an area in the western part of the province, a favourite of mine, around 400 schoolchildren in it and there are precious few of those kids ever get out of high school and a relatively small percentage get into high school and very very few into college; yet we continue to insert the same kind of school system into that section operating under the central agency here.

Now, this is utterly ridiculous. The things that John was saying are quite true. What is done in the schools must be changed; the methodology must be changed; the whole school era must be changed. The kids must be put out into the fields so that they are there as well as in the classrooms. These kids had nothing in their background to condition them after being in the classroom 5 hours a day and listening to someone natter at them.

The only way we are ever going to change this whole area—and this is a concentration of poor kids—is by giving control to the central office and into the regional office and try to insert some competence there to support the people in the area because surely to God they must know what is going on. We don't know here what is going on because we have done nothing about it for 50 years.

The Chairman: I have Senator Fergusson and Senator Inman in that order.

Senator Fergusson: I would like to ask Dr. Beck a question.

I refer to the section in his speech on page 1 where he suggests that T.V. is an important source of mental stimulation to children. This is rather refreshing, I think. It seems to me that when I hear talk of T.V. it is referred to as an idiot box and the time that children spend looking at it should be very limited, but apparently this is not your opinion, Doctor Beck.

I wonder if you would elaborate on your opinion.

Dr. Beck: I am afraid, Mr. Chairman, I had no intention of getting into another one of my favourite interests, but I am afraid we are getting away as Mr. Blakely pointed out, from what I think is our unique contribution to make to the Senate. We have gotten locked into this school thing which is of such interest to all.

Senator Fergusson: I have another question if you would like to take it.

Dr. Beck: No. I will take your question because I would like to take your question.

The homes that are perhaps technically better classified as culturally deprived homes are characterized, among other things, by a lack of verbal stimulation, by a lack of other types of stimulation. These children are homebound by and large. If they live in one of our culturally deprived pockets in Prince Edward Island they very seldom move out of their own little community. They don't move into the villages, even. In the metropolitan areas they don't go beyond their own block. There are hundreds of kids in Toronto who have never been out of the two or three blocks they have lived in hardly. They do not know Maple Leaf Gardens. They do not know the Soo. They do not know any of these things.

The only effective attack that our society has made in penetrating that problem is T.V. and through T.V. we are getting into those homes and we are showing the kids something else. We are giving them verbal stimulation. We are stimulating their imagination. It may be in a fairyland kind of way that Mr. Green has described but at least their imagination is being stimulated now as it never has been before.

That is why I say when you see a little shack with a big T.V. antenna on it, we should say "Thank God" and not "There they go wasting their money again."

Senator Fergusson: The other little question I would like to ask—it will take only a short time—is that Mr. Green referred to regional service centres. I presume he was referring to recommendation one of the Task Force Report. I know that it is not very long since the Task Force reported but I was wondering if you could tell us have any steps been taken to implement this study on regional centres?

Mr. Green: I was referring there to the regional units of administration in education.

Senator Fergusson: Yes?

Mr. Green: But I will answer your other question. We have an inter-departmental committee on human resources consisting of deputy ministers of the department. We are now undertaking a study of this concept and the extent to which this will be implemented will be based on the appraisal of the Committee of Deputies and their recommendations to Cabinet, but there will be some regionalization of service. It is a matter of how much the administration goes in regionalizing others. I think Dr. Beck pointed out we would like to take this opportunity to examine the concept.

Dr. Beck: To add a bit to that. The concept of the regional centre is written into the development plan. The report has been with the public now for some months. It is a politically attractive concept in the best sense of being politically attractive in that politicians, above all, are sensitive to the needs of people and see how this can fit into the needs of people.

It has not been introduced in the last speech from the Throne as an objective of the present government.

The problem will be there the same as the problem in the schools. It will be what I somewhere referred to as the twin devils of professional sectarianism and organizational rigidity; overcoming that type of phenomena so that people do not think of welfare as entirely different from health, and health as being entirely different than education and education being entirely different than manpower.

All these things are inter-related and of a piece but we are not now organized in such a way as to recognize that fact.

Senator Inman: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask this question of Dr. Beck with regard to education again.

Would you think, Dr. Beck, that pre-school classes or in other words, kindergartens would be a help in preparing children to integrate when they get into the older classes? Young children, as we know, are not assessed.

For instance, a child from three to five is not assessed if they are not dressed as well as the child next to them.

I had the experience of having my children going to kindergarten and I always thought it helped them in integrating better with classes when they grew up to the six and seven and eight year old classes.

Now, I suppose our system would have to be changed to bring this in but I think it is a good thing. They have it in other places.

There is another question I have at the same time.

Do you think that it would be a good thing if they had—as they do in other places—different streams? Now, the slow learners would not be in classes with those who learn quickly so they don't feel they are lagging behind.

Dr. Beck: Those are very important questions. My only reservation is that our time is getting limited.

In response to your first question might I say that your kids and my kids should not have kindergarten. That is a radical statement, but it is one in which I firmly believe. I think all we do by sending kids to school when they are five is that we are starting to train them for college one year earlier and I do not think they need that additional year.

My own feeling is that the greatest waste of money in Canada is kindergarten programs.

Senator Belisle: I disagree with you.

Dr. Beck: Now, if I could do it, what I would do is take the money we are now putting into kindergartens for rich kids and middle class kids and kids that do not need it—in Scandinavia they don't start their kids to school until they are seven and the Scandinavians are as smart as we are—I would take this money and I would direct it to the 15 or 20 per cent of kids who have these very disabling needs that you people are going to face all across the country.

The question of special streaming; I think we are getting enough evidence in now that streaming is a very questionable way of going about things because as well as bringing in some advantages it brings in this tremendous disadvantage of segregation and segregation always means, to some extent, alienation and difference and emphasis of difference rather than the same things.

Senator Belisle: I have just returned on the Science Policy touring Europe and Scandinavian countries and I wish to register that I disagree and these people disagree with your thinking.

I will shut up now.

The Chairman: Dr. Blakely, did you wish to join in this discussion?

Mr. Blakely: Yes. I am not a doctor yet but I am hoping. I think you will find that you have a great deal of interest in the Newstart presentation later today. Dr. Beck has mentioned the real problems that you are going to hit with the poverty kids but my opinion from talking to them is that they are even getting children five years of age who cannot speak yet and this is the level of the problem that we are facing in culturally deprived people here.

I have met adults and I have met children who cannot carry on any conversation because they don't know enough words to talk about anything except food and fishing.

Senator Connolly: I have a question Mr. Chairman for the chief witness.

Doctor, in the operations of your Task Force, did you ever have occasion to ask the victims of poverty what their solutions were for their conditions and if so did you ever have an opportunity to analyze their proposed solution?

Dr. Beck: May I reply to that by stating, sir, that we, as a Task Force, were primarily concerned with alcoholism treatment facilities and extended term facilities, long term care facilities and this is the reason I tried to prepare the ground today by saying our area of expertise is not in poverty and we therefore did not go to the poor because we were not particularly interested in that problem. This came in conjunctively like so many other problems did to our inquiry.

We are concerned rather with services and delivery of services to people who need them which again brings us back to the point, Mr. Chairman, I would try to get to the fore again the business of service delivery systems.

We do not have particular expertise in regard to poverty.

Senator Connolly: Did you find many of them resentful of the inquiries you made on them? Did they resent you as intruders into their private lives?

Dr. Beck: I expect they did but as is usually the case, we didn't hear about it.

The Chairman: Doctor, isn't there a poverty of service in this province? We are talking particularly of this province because you said you were not qualified as far as economics are concerned and we will accept that from you. Is there not a poverty of service?

Dr. Beck: Yes. I will ask Dr. Maloney to answer that.

Dr. Maloney: Mr. Chairman, yes.

I think in talking about poverty we are dealing with an example of what I was talking about earlier, a failing to take in logic and linguistic analysis in our ideas when we talk.

Poverty tends to be used in conversation with two different meanings at the same time and sometimes even in the same sentence. It would be better if we spoke about the needs of the people and then use poverty perhaps, if you wish, but at least arbitrarily lay it down one way or the other, poverty being the lack of cash income, or if you wish to use poverty for lack of all that a human needs in the milieu in which he happens to be using this then we should say so at first.

Now, for the moment I would arbitrarily state that a man has a number of needs one of which is cash income, but he also needs a wide spectrum of services. If you take all a man's needs in a lifetime for himself and his wife and family and put it in lineal dimension you might have a line this long and the cash income—depending on how complicated and civilized one becomes—really is not a very big part of that spectrum.

He needs his children to get to school. He needs medical care. He needs all these services, 28 of them I think we have listed in our regional service centre.

I might add in answer to one part of Senator Connolly's question we have on the Board of the Regional Service Centre the poor represented, two out of nine, is it?

Senator Hastings: Do you think that two out of nine is adequate?

Dr. Maloney: I don't know if it is adequate but I know this is one of the first times they have ever been put on a board at all.

Now, to go back to the question of man's needs. Instead of using poverty—I am restricting for the moment poverty as cash income—probably the most important thing is to get services.

You would then have your spectrum broken in two. You have all these services. The biggest thing that we need here is (a) the expansion of our services and (b) that our services be brought to the level of the people. This was the end for which we recommended the setting up of regional service centres in each area because the people who need these services are not articulate. They do not know how to make demands. They are very easily turned away. They are easily embarrassed. Your receptionist in such a centre could ruin the situation just by pretending she doesn't hear. She doesn't realize that poor people very often do not speak very well. They do not speak as we do, with a topical sentence at the beginning of a paragraph. They often start in the middle of the paragraph.

Now, if we are able to overcome two things: Number one is to expand our social services with more personnel and number two, bring these social services to the people; we then have satisfied to a great extent a large part of the segment of need which we classify under poverty.

You then come to the question of cash income which does not come under service. Now, in cash income I think the one thing we should think about is the Canada Assistance Act and the Canada Assistance Act (at least I think in everybody's opinion) is an excellent Act. It is broad and it has not been too narrowed by any regulation and has allowed a lot of flexibility.

But there are two ways in which you can wreck an injustice on people. The commoner thing in our tradition is that you apply the law unequally to equals but there is a second way that we are very often unaware of and that is that you apply the law equally to people in unequal circumstances.

Now, what we have done with the Canada Assistance Act federally is to enshrine the legislation with a method whereby people who are poor will get less than people who are not poor, and therefore widening the Act.

Let me explain how this operates. It operates as follows:

In this province our budget just cannot match the federal, that is we need much more welfare but our share which we can allocate in the budget towards welfare under the Canada Assistance Act is not large.

Now, if you go to another province in which the gross national expenditure for the product or wages or salaries index, whichever way you want to take it, is higher in Prince Edward Island, they are able to allocate the larger amount of their money to match with the federal under the Canada Assistance Act and therefore their poor are able, even though they have less of them, are able to have more funds so this codifies the method in which the poor get less and those who have more will get more.

The Chairman: Doctor, your summation of the Act of which these Senators are well aware, is precise and exact.

Dr. Maloney: Thank you.

The Chairman: Let me just say one thing. We did not get across to you very excellent witnesses today and we have tried as a Committee to do that.

We have said time and again in Parliament and out of Parliament we are examining poverty in totality. We are concerned with income. We are concerned with services. We are concerned with who is going to carry the services so there is no aspect of it that we put any greater emphasis on; but the people we meet put emphasis on various aspects of it.

It does not make any difference whether you are in Prince Edward Island or you are in any other part of Canada the first need of anybody in poverty is money to begin with, and services extended from there.

That is perhaps why you got the impression we were concerned with that more than we were with any others but that alone will not solve these problems. We just want you to understand it is the totality and what we have in mind—what we have been discussing—(we have nothing in mind at the moment, our minds are working) we want to know the solutions.

What we are thinking about is perhaps we can find some way of having income come from the federal government and service come from the provincial government with an umbrella like the Canada Assistance Act available. That is our broad general thinking, so I don't think we are too far away.

Dr. Beck: May I add to that, sir, that the point where I am afraid our best ideas were floundering is with this method of delivery, and we are now yoked with a helter-skelter system of delivery of services which grew up like Topsy really.

The S.P.C.A. in Nova Scotia started the child welfare association and this grew into the division of Child Welfare eventually.

We come from an historical tradition of private initiative in all of these fields. There has been no overall planning. There has been no conceptualization of trying to tie together any mechanics to utilize the limited resources we have.

The Chairman: But, Doctor, it seems to me if the country adopts a minimum income, there are services that must be eliminated. You can't have them both. You can't have it both ways.

Now, I am going to ask you a question unless there is some Senator who would like to ask a question.

Senator Fergusson: Yes. I would like to ask a question.

The Chairman: Go ahead.

Senator Fergusson: I am a little confused because I understood from what Dr. Maloney said we need services and money but money was the smaller part than the services. The services were really more important. Maybe I misunderstood.

Dr. Maloney: No. I think there are two different meanings here. The total of a man's needs—if you add up all a man's needs that he has with his family in his lifetime the total amount of services would come to much greater than his cash income.

You see, if you take what it costs him for schooling and everything else—let us say it costs a family, if you add everything that was given by the state, it might cost him $12,000 a year but his cash income is only a quarter of that.

Senator Fergusson: Thank you.

The Chairman: I am satisfied that you people understand the problem and this question is for anyone who wants to take it, or all of you.

We began our welfare system, as you realize, Dr. Beck, back about 1929 and we are now in 1969 which is 40 years later. As you know, we built on it. We have got a first class group of laws providing very many requirements, as good as any in the western world including the Scandinavian countries—better, I think, than the Scandinavian countries—but in any even we have had many social measures that do not appear to have been of use to the public.

We are spending very large sums of money, I think up to $6 billion total; 3½ billion by the federal government. We have now almost approximately a million people drawing welfare in this country at the present time.

Dr. Beck, where have we failed ?

Dr. Beck: I think our services have failed, as far as I can assess it, in the contact of services with the people who need them, with an intimate knowledge of that single important position interfaced between client and helper, and I see no way of counter-acting that without developing a system of delivering these huge sums of money in a way so that interphase can become effective.

The Chairman: Doctor, you have got me confused now.

Dr. Beck: Can I start again?

The Chairman: Yes.

Dr. Beck: We have the funds and we have the staffs centrally located, people who are working in the system. Let us take Mr. MacDonald here, for instance. I do not use this in any disparaging way. He is tied up with looking at and looking after 585 child protection cases in one year.

Now, there is no human on earth can look at 585 persons in a professional way as individuals and if we divide this by this limited social work staff, they are running a case load of 80, 90, 100 or 150 and that human inter-action is not happening and the only way to do that is to get professionals out with the people and with limited numbers of people.

Let me talk about Toronto, what I call the Toronto syndrome, where you set up a mental health clinic that services Metropolitan Toronto, two million people.

This happens in Alberta. It happens in Prince Edward Island and it happens all across the country. The retardation services in Toronto serve all of Metropolitan Toronto. It cannot be done effectively. The retardation services or mental health services or welfare services, or preferably all combined, serving maybe nine blocks in downtown Toronto could work. A service in Prince Edward Island relating to the group in West Prince with maybe a total population of 10,000 has a chance of working because this human interface can then come into play.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, may I add to this question?

The Chairman: Just a minute, Mr. Green. Wait until the doctor is finished and everyone will get a chance.

Dr. Beck: I think what I am saying, sir, in direct answer to your question is that if we try to deal with humans in need in huge numbers, even numbers as huge as the little province of Prince Edward Island, it is bound to fail.

The Chairman: It is what?

Dr. Beck: It is bound to fail, when this is our method of operation.

The Chairman: What you are saying is that we are dehumanizing these things. In effect, that is what you are saying.

Before we start again, is there anybody here who has a question or do any of the Senators have anything to say?

Dr. Maloney: Yes.

The Chairman: All right. Please make it short.

Dr. Maloney: I will just take two minutes and perhaps you could go down the line.

I think, Senators, that you have asked the basic question: "Why have we failed?"

Well, I think that the first thing one should do in solving the problem is to find out what the problem is. Now, anybody knows the answer to a simple question such as "Why are people poor?" There is, as far as I know, very real basic research on why people are poor.

I think we are getting into some thing here—and that is, we don't know what the philosophy on poverty is.

You see, what we are intending to do right now—I think there is an unconscious assumption to bring everybody up to middle class values and ways of thinking, etc. Now, I think that what one would find if we did the same research in depth on why people are poor, a great number of these people reject our values. They do not want them and I think the worst thing we could do is, under the guise of welfare, force a cultural change on a segment of our population.

Now, what do we do? Do we not do anything for them?—Not at all. I think we should supply the basic needs of housing or see they get the basic needs of housing, of clothing, of food, etc., and those services which allow their children to make a choice as to which class they wish to move in but let us not—under the guise of welfare—force a cultural change on a group of people who may not like it at all because when we work 9, 10 and 11 hours a day, as the people in this room do, these people don't want to. They are not all up-tight as we are here now trying to figure out something. They are relaxed. This is a good way of life and let us just give them the basic needs in this.

Any time they signal they want more—they have the motivation—let us have an avenue open that they can immediately explore their own potential.

The Chairman: Did I hear you say these people who are in this position say this is a good way of life?

Dr. Maloney: Yes, I think so, because I think some do. I have asked a few but I would say a great number of them have never been asked.

So, what I am saying is that we may very well find out a great number of people do not want to be living the way we are living.

Senator Fergusson: That is right. Maybe they are right, too.

Senator Cook: And pay the price for it.

Dr. Maloney: And pay the price.

Senator Fergusson: Mr. Chairman, Mr. Green wanted to make an interjection.

The Chairman: Yes. Go ahead, Mr. Green.

Mr. Green: I knew I should never sit back here in the corner. I should apologize for my discourtesy to Dr. Beck. We have been working together for a long time and whenever Mac pauses, I start talking. It is the only way I can ever get in.

The major point I want to make on the guaranteed income proposal, to me is the way to make people stop being poor. If we are going to insist on giving them money to make them stop being poor I think we are trying to change their way of life. I came from a meeting at Miminegash last night where people are concerned with what we are doing, and this poor section of the province was concerned with what we are doing.

We are going to change a way of life that they have been accustomed to for 30 or 40 years. They can't change this way.

You spoke, Mr. Chairman, of the excellent welfare system we have. We have an excellent system in delivering money to people but we have not backed it up with services and what these people would like are some services to make life more tolerable.

I am just going to take a couple of minutes to try and develop this.

I read a case recently of a Home Maker Service—and we shouldn't get into the case—but this woman had six illegitimate children, some by different men and four by a married man. She was dirty, filthy and their whole situation was bad. She was living with the children. They were unprotected. Finally they were reported to the Child Welfare. The Child Welfare Agency Director moved in and took the children out of the situation and the woman said "Everybody complains about how I look after my children but no one shows me how." She was 23 years of age. Then this woman had sense enough to realize that maybe this was true. Maybe she should be showed how so they put a home-maker to help her for 6 months. At the end of 6 months they managed to work a new pattern of living, caring for the children, getting more money and getting a sick child off for treatment.

At the end of 6 months the woman who had gotten very little more money from anybody said, "I didn't know it was possible to feel so good and still be poor."

Now, this is what services should do and money can't do. Money cannot make these people feel good. Services, support, encouragement, some kind of protection that will make them feel good as most of them want to, so this is the point.

Now, the second point I want to make is that P.E.I. and other areas in the country are in a situation with poor people who say, "If we can afford to buy a freezer, we can save money on the grocery bill but we cannot afford to buy a freezer and because we cannot afford to buy a freezer, we cannot afford to buy half a beef at one time."

We can save money on welfare if we can provide services. We cannot afford to provide services. This means we are spending more of the Canada Assistance Act plan money and the federal government has got to share in it. So with the failure to put money into the services Canada is supplying us with more money than they should do.

Mind you, the federal government can afford to make these long-term investments. They can afford to give us money to supply services so that in the long range both of us will save money. Both of us will help the people we are trying to help.

Now, the Canada Assistance plan would not do it. That formula is a silly formula. It will not do it and the way that it apparently operates it looks to me as if we are five years away in changing that bloody formula; so that there must be some new mechanism to give money to the areas that need the supply services and five years is too late. It will just be wasting money and we are not helping the poor.

If I could make one more point with regard to the services for the poor. I was in a place where I met a public health nurse coming out. As I was coming out I met the Director of Child Welfare, three of us at one house within an hour. The woman did not resent it. She got accustomed to it because we are doing this to them all the time. They just have a tolerance for this sort of thing but that does not mean we should not stop doing it. This is what we would like to do with regional centres.

There is one other thing. I was at Tignish and there is a local woman who is in the Red Cross organization and she told me about having, through her own efforts in the area, identified five or six children who had physical deformities from birth and were not attended to because the poor people did not know there was a service.

We have this game with the poor. The first thing they have to figure out is, "Is there a service I need?" The next thing is, "Where is it located?" "Who should I talk to when I get there?"

So finally they drive into Charlottetown. They go to one agency and they say, "Yes, we will do this little part of it but you have to go to the next office for another little part," so they go there and they say, "Oh, go to the Family Allowance office and fix up that part of it." Then they send them down to Manpower and they fix up that part of it and if I was the poor, I would go back home by this time because we shuffle them around. We never tie the thing together, so I want to advance the service centre concept in order to identify the needs of the area we have to put people in the field. In order to provide the service we have got to have the people there knowing what the poor want.

You cannot find out what the poor want by bringing them before this kind of a Committee. If the poor are rejected, they won't come here. They are scared to come here. If I was poor, I would not be here.

Now, the third point—what is the third point?

The Chairman: Let me make the first point, Mr. Green. As a man who is in contact with the poor and whose job it is—do you not know what the poor want?

Mr. Green: I have some reasonably good ideas.

The Chairman: Well, between the group you have sitting here in front, here is Mr. MacDonald who is in the division of child welfare. No one gets more closely to a family than that particular aspect of the problem. I should think if he told me and as I am going to ask him now to tell me—what have you to say, Mr. MacDonald?

Mr. E. A. MacDonald, Director, Division of Child Welfare: Mr. Chairman and senators, I would like to say this in answer to your first question.

Where have we gone wrong? We have been treating the symptoms rather than the disease. Anyone can identify a cough but it takes someone more skilled to diagnose what a cough really means, whether it is T.B. or something else.

We have a tradition of putting people into the field of the poor who can identify coughs and who treat coughs and this, I think, first of all, betrays society's attitude towards the poor.

We do not allow, for instance, any unskilled person to practise medicine but we allow most unskilled people to practise what we call welfare—in big quotes—on people and believe me, they practise.

Now, here is the basis of where we go wrong. First of all I would like to concur very strongly with what Dr. Maloney said and Mr. Green has just said rather than go all over this again; and speaking of fragmentation of services and getting people into the field and so forth; but I want to emphasize that it is of great importance to get the right people into the field so that we can study and really get to the basis and understand what the people's needs are rather than the fact they are poor, and our system of giving pittances here and pittance there is just creating a greater poverty; poverty in the sense that these people are impoverished of spirit when we are through with them rather than of the pocket because by our system we have created and we have promoted and we have crystallized a system of dependency in our poor and this is a greater poverty by far than very often the kind of poverty with which they started or at least what we start when we start to deal with them.

Dr. Beck: Is there anybody else who would like to say anything?

The Chairman: Well, Mrs. Cudmore, you are a woman and a social worker in the city. What is your opinion?

Mrs. Evelyn Cudmore, Member, Premier's Task Force: My opinion is that in this province we need decentralization of services and our concept of regional service centres to me is an answer for our problem.

Again it is the personal contact with the people who have need and I concur with what the last person has said that many of the so-called poor are unable to articulate their needs. They are unable because of lack of education and lack of general knowledge. They are unable to find services they need and many times they don't really know so I would hope very much that these regional service centres could be established in the immediate future in Prince Edward Island.

Senator McGrand: Mr. Chairman, may I ask a question?

The Chairman: Yes, go ahead.

Senator McGrand: This pertains to this question. I do not want to thrash old straw which we have been talking about for probably an hour but I want to go back to Dr. Maloney who mentioned something that interested me.

Education to me is the preparation of people to live with fellow human beings and with a sense of life around them. You mentioned that man lived for a million years or more before history was written, which is true.

Now, today anthropology reveals how our primitive ancestors lived and how perhaps we developed even today our present emotions. Now, that is very important.

Now, T.V. has been mentioned and it should be used to teach children but it is my impression that what children see on T.V. is usually crime and violence and they watch it because the adult members in the home want to watch crime and violence and we have developed a sort of crime culture.

Now, I will agree that geometry and algebra does very little to prepare a child to have suitable emotions to live in his environment. Have you any comment on that?

Dr. Maloney: No. I agree with most of what you said. I do not quite know the point you are getting at but I think if you are getting at the point, which I think you are it is as follows: That as we live today we are in a material civilization and we have very definite evidence in our society that a sizeable segment of our society is rejecting that set of values.

Now, going back in the million years that you are talking about I think you will find there that people can find a very meaningful way of life in other types of living in which there was not that emphasis on material things.

I think that part of our society which chooses to be poor, if you wish, part of it should be allowed to do that if they can, because you know, you can quote Darwin. He said that after he had measured the bones in chickens in his comparative zoology for so long, he lost his taste for poetry and music. In other words when you get into one way of life, you can lose the taste and meaning that other people find in a way of life.

In our welfare we should always watch that we allow a segment of the poor who do that by choice to be that.

Senator McGrand: Yes. Supplemental to that: Mention was made by Mr. MacDonald we perhaps have got the wrong people in welfare, but how do you choose the people to do this work? It is only done by trial and error, is it not? You hire a person and if they fail to do a good job they are let out, otherwise it is done by trial and error.

There is no way I know of that you can go out and find a person and say, "This is a suitable person to carry out this type of planning."

Mr. MacDonald: Well, first of all I think society in general has to adapt or acquire a philosophy with respect to these people and this philosophy will be reflected in most of our people and then from this society we should have a greater choice of people, first of all. Certainly, to start right now, we have to be very very careful to study the types of people, what their attitudes themselves are towards the poor; what their concept of poverty is and such things as this. Then, they should be properly trained for the job and properly paid.

Senator McGrand: Who trains them? A person graduates from a school of social sciences and they get a job. How do you know that when that person goes on the job that they are tuned in? They have to book knowledge but how do you know they are tuned in to help solve the problem. It is only that they are tuned in? They have the book by trial and error.

Mr. MacDonald: This is a decision which should not be made after a person has gone through school. This is a decision which should be made prior to his going through school or in the early stages of his being in school.

If these people in these schools know their jobs properly they should then see very early in the first semester—if they have not found out when they applied—and turf them out.

Dr. Maloney: This is a perfect example of what I was saying earlier about our lack of knowledge in inter-personal relationships. The people that we need should be chosen for empathy. We have no tests of people to choose people for empathy. Certainly they are not obliged to.

Senator Belisle: Mr. Chairman, I believe that Mrs. Cudmore in her statement paraphrased what is in that last paragraph regarding integration but my question is this: How can we integrate them more closely with the local community without infringing on the local civil rights or provincial jurisdiction; and let us assume that the federal government will adopt a guaranteed annual income. Should the whole welfare service become a total federal responsibility?

Mrs. Cudmore: I don't think that I am prepared to answer that particular question. My interest in this whole thing is focused on the needs of the individual. I am particularly interested that the needs of every segment of society be met, whether it is from taxpayers' payments or taxpayers' donations, but I think we have to identify the need before we can fulfil it.

I see no way in this province where the individual needs of pockets of people in the province can be identified without well trained people in the local region and this goes back to our concept of regional service centres and as a citizen my interest is in having the needs of the individual identified and those needs filled.

Senator Belisle: You are aware under the B.N.A. that local and municipal and provincial rights are very jealously guarded and preserved.

Mrs. Cudmore: I think this is part of today's establishment in that we have many laws and regulations that probably need to be changed in the future of what we are talking here about human needs.

Somebody said it would take five years to get anything changed. I think we have to start immediately and proceed to carry on from there.

Dr. Beck: May I try to recount what I think is the underlying problem in your question, Senator.

There is an implication that if we pay in a guaranteed annual income that the federal government assumes more and more responsibility and this is one of the problems of our society which is that the man who pays the piper calls the tune.

This comes down to something we dealt with at length in the Task Force Report which is to try to introduce into our society the concept that services must be operated by the people who know the people who are getting the service and this demands decentralization in administration and professional authority in the operation of services.

Now, we have done this in some fields and done it quite well. We have done it in hospitals. We have done it in schools. We have overdone it in school situations but we have left the operative decision-making at the level of the local community which can be responsive to the client in need and the point that I am trying to make here is that we must get away from this concept of, because the federal government supplies the money, the federal government must operate the service or because the provincial government supplies money the provincial government must operate the service. Because I think we have enough objective evidence now that when the provincial government operates a service, generally those services do not operate well and I cite the instance of the Mental Health Service as a fine example.

Rather, what we have to do is to get the operation of the service decentralized and then secondarily, integrated.

Mr. Green: I think that many of your questions can be answered tomorrow morning if you people will see that you are able to go out, as we have arranged, and meet some of these poor face to face tomorrow morning and I can guarantee that two or three of you are not going to have dinner afterwards because your stomachs will not be in shape for it.

I hear that your plane may not be going and you may be going by bus and I would urge you to make that bus late enough so we can get you out there and if you want the answers to some of these questions, come out and ask these people.

I am probably one of the few people here in this room who has been poor.

Senator Belisle: I am two of eighteen.

Mr. Green: We have a definition I think here which was, you are poor if you do not have enough to eat and I talked to a woman in Minto, New Brunswick when I was out doing some work there, who had 19 children and whose husband was a trip runner in the mines, which means he doesn't make much money. She was so frustrated. She said to me, "This is just hell." And then she said, "No, that is not right. If it was hell it would be a little warmer and there would be a better class of people."

The Chairman: If there are any Senators who have any other questions, please ask them. If there are no Senators with questions...

Senator Hastings: May I ask Mr. MacDonald with respect to this visit tomorrow morning.

The Chairman: I will speak about that later. Mr. Blakely told me all about it.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, is it possible to make one other remark?

The Chairman: Yes, certainly.

Mr. Green: There is a mention in regard to services for the poor which most people ignore. I am thinking in terms of recreation. When you commonly refer to recreation, this is a notoriously related activity or a middle class function because we do not think of the poor in terms of recreation. By recreation I mean a way of enjoying your environment, getting happiness and pleasure out of where you live.

You do not have to think always in terms of being somewhere else or doing something you cannot afford to do.

I would like to suggest that somewhere along the line you consult with some people competent in the field of recreation to see if there is any way that you can get recreation therapists—by this I do not mean organized and accredited team sports—I mean activities by which you can enjoy the environment in which you live, so if you can get some information on that, it may assist you.

The Chairman: On behalf of the Committee, Dr. Beck, through you and to all the members—and we have tried to have you participate—our very deep appreciation. It is obvious that although the members of the Committee had a very short opportunity to scan through the Task Force Report, it is a monumental work and while we have no opinions on it you say the government has taken notice of it and they have opinions on it, your answer to questions here this morning were useful and valuable.

We think it was well worth while coming down here and speaking to you even though we have heard just one witness and will hear many others.

On behalf of the Committee whom, I am sure, feel that you know the score and will bend your efforts in the future to having the best possible, I thank you and all the members of your group.

Dr. Beck: Thank you, sir.

—Recess.

The Chairman: I have two announcements to make.

Doctor, we asked Mr. Blakeley and the group yesterday to make arrangements, within the confines of our problem, to visit the poor here and he had told me earlier that arrangements had been completed and we will convey that to the Committee some time during the day.

The other is that there are two or three new and very interesting briefs have come in. I do not know how we are going to be able to arrange to give these people some attention.

As soon as this meeting is over I would like to see Mr. David Morrison, Mr. Paul Pelletier and Mr. Bernard Cahill if they are here. I would like to see them and talk to them about matters in the brief and see what arrangements can be made to give some attention to what those new briefs represent.

Now, our witness at the moment is Mr. Frank Sigsworth. He is a barrister and solicitor and a very distinguished lawyer who has a brief to present. He will speak for himself without fee, I am told.

Mr. Frank Sigsworth, Counsel for the Fraternity of Grey Knights: Mr. Chairman and senators, first of all I would like, with respect, to correct Senator Croll. (a) This is not my brief. (b) I am not speaking without fee, and (c) I am glad that it was another lawyer who was introducing me.

First of all then in carrying out the instructions of my client I understand there has been some rather valuable inquiry as to who my client is, the Fraternity of Grey Knights, and I am its lawyer.

I am not one of the poor. I am well off, opulent and live comfortably.

Senator Pearson: Most lawyers are.

Mr. Sigsworth: Well, I don't know. It depends how good you are. When you are as good as I am, you are.

My client is a provincially-incorporated organization under Part 2 of the Companies Act. It pays me well for my activities or I wouldn't be here. Part 2 of the Companies Act incorporates bodies politic for charitable purposes. Their charitable purposes are to help themselves. From the Letters of Incorporation, if I recall correctly, they assist others in difficult circumstances by enlisting the assistance of other persons of means, practicality and interest. Difficult to find but they somehow find them.

They are a secret society. They do not like to talk about themselves. They gave me very very rigid instructions about how much I could say about them, but I can say that much about them because their incorporation is public information on the record.

They have two levels of organization, their corporate organization and their fraternal organization.

Faternally they operate within themselves in their own way and declare it to be nobody else's business. Who gets in, how you get in and what you do. They decide. They bring in their own members. They help whom they want and they help themselves.

One of the Committee members asked where the name came from. They are neither black nor white. They are grey. They live in the grey twilight very often that exists between enthusiastic and generous interest to total heartless disinterest in their lives.

They have no axe to grind and no drums to beat. They are here to bring before you, as I am instructed, circumstances that exist that they feel you might overlook. Many of them have been in intimate contact with it. They know a great deal more about it. Indeed, some of them know much more about procedural law than a lot of lawyers I know.

The two members of the Grey Knights whom I have with me—and who watch very very rigidly to see that I do not exceed my instruction—the Prefect Commander of the organization, Mr. Gass, Barry Gass on my immediate right and next to him the Pro-Consul Adjutant, Curtis Barkhouse. Mr. Gass is 23 years old and a student at Holland College in commercial art. Mr. Barkhouse is a Grade 10 student at Charlottetown Rural High School.

The brief which you have before you, gentlemen, I have been instructed to present. Aslo I was to draw to your attention first of all the reason that they engaged high powered legal help. They see a lawyer—they are very practical people. They deal in a very practical level. They need a mouthpiece who is articulate and there is nobody more articulate than I. They want the best, they got the best.

Somebody during the last brief said that the poor do not like to come before people and they do not like to talk too much. Certainly whether or not these people are poor, I do not know. It depends on this terrible definition and I do not propose to go into semantics here. I know one thing: They want a mouthpiece. They are not prepared to embarrass themselves before the Senate Committee so that they engage a shield. I am that, I suppose.

The brief was prepared by them. They engaged the assistance of some expertise besides myself among which was Mr. Green whom you heard in the last brief and whom they asked to sit with them, so he is a party to this, too.

The brief itself was drawn as closely as possible to their words and their thinking on the subject and this has to do with the law of the poor in the face of the law, justice and the poor. You will bear with me, perhaps.

This is as brief a submission as could be made of a vast and complex problem. The Grey Knights are very happy that the Senate Committee came here. They feel they can do something. They feel it is a God-given opportunity to make themselves articulate to a group that can do something about it and these are things that perhaps would go unnoticed by the Senators unless it was brought to them in this manner.

They do it with all respect and in the hope that it will be some assistance in your work.

First of all, as the brief sets out in the beginning, it is not a learned brief because it is not a learned society. That doesn't mean they are not intelligent or they are not educated or they do not have a great deal of ability. They do. Some of them have gone through grade 6 or 7. Some of them had to stop their education. Some of them got it in the penitentiary. Some of them got it afterwards. Some of them got their start elsewhere. Some of them learned about the value of doing something with their abilities in jail, but they spend their time on the practical and very very important job of developing what they have to their use and the use of society and that doesn't often allow much freetime to do anything else.

Barry here was very concerned about the fact there was a member of Manpower here. He is subsidized at Holland College in commercial art and he wondered whether or not he would lose a day's pay for coming before the Senate Committee, but he thought it was worthwhile.

I mentioned that I would look into the law on the point.

First of all on page 1 of the brief the brief sets out as you see:

We propose to deal with the experience of the poor with our system of justice, from the time of the reporting of an incident involving a possible violation of the law until the matter is finally disposed of. It goes on to deal with the report and the report being somebody phones the police and says, "My warehouse is being broken into."

The system of justice, as we get involved with it, begins moving at the moment of a report and at this point the system begins to divide itself.

My clients instruct me that immediately an incident is reported to the police, consciously or subconsciously, there is a division right away.

If the report is made by an important person the immediate presumption is that an offence has indeed occurred. If Joe Doaks, who owns the warehouse, is "clean" as my clients say, has never been mixed with the fuzz, if he reports that somebody broke in the police—again it is not critical of the police—but the presumption is implicit, if he says something happened, something happened. The police begins searching for a man or men who fit the pattern of the incident, which is very proper and logical for the police to do.

If the report comes from the poor, the call for help may not be answered, the presumption being that there is no sense or that in other circumstances the person reporting the incident would be doing the same thing himself.

Barry gave me certain instructions on the point and two or three others have mentioned the same thing. He said, "Can you imagine one of us calling the police and saying somebody just hit me a punch on the mouth?" It is quite conceivable the desk sergeant would think, "Is that so. Well, he probably deserved it anyway for some of the things he got away with and who knows that if he wasn't busy reporting the incident, he was probably out punching somebody else on the mouth." That is the division. The poor puts a call in and there is no immediate action. The rich, the well off, those of position, the establishment, put a call in and the presumption is there is something the matter, we must go out and investigate.

Some of the clean people, some of the clean poor will get a better response. The clean poor—the word "clean" you will notice is in quotation marks—that means "clean" "no mug shots", no penitentiaries", "no record." But the point is that there are many people who cannot expect that a report to the police means help for them. That is the division, immediately there is a report.

The next point is the round-up of suspects. We have never heard of anyone but the poor being involved in the round-up.

Now, this is in no way critical of the methods of the police. This is a most logical and indeed reasonable way to find an alleged violator of the law. If, for example, a youngster is involved the police will go to the school and pull a poor child out of the classroom, or go into the home and do the same thing, sometimes without a warrant in order, we presume, to get him while he's hot, to find the stolen goods on him or to get him before he is able to consort with his accomplices and what have you.

No such thing will happen to the children of the well-do-do; the parents will first be contacted for a polite discussion of the possibility that their child might be involved in a demeanor.

We do not suggest that the latter should suffer the same treatment as the poor, but rather that the poor should get the same consideration from the system as the well-to-do.

The system works well with the well-to-do. That is the way they say it should work with the poor. It is not that the well-to-do should be treated like the poor but quite the reverse.

We believe that if the presumption in every case were that the poor have the same access to legal defence as others, they would get fairer treatment on arrest. Maybe members of this Committee have not had an opportunity to witness the different treatment handed out to a poor man who is a "shako" and the professional person who is an "alcoholic". They make a distinction. If you have no money, are poorly dressed and are picked up drunk on the street, you are some "shako"; but if you have a shirt and a tie on and you are shaved and you are just as drunk on the street, you are an "alcoholic".

A similar thing happens in the realm of theft. If you shoplift during Christmas time and you are from the establishment, from the well-to-do—who knows why they shoplift, but then who knows why these people do some of the things they do—if you do this shoplifting, if you steal, you are a kleptomaniac. If you have no money, you are a thief.

The foregoing are not major points, and we can live with the system even if nothing changes because up to this point nothing serious has happened. We present it simply to show that the police are not commonly regarded as the poor man's friend, and that the attitude on the part of both to one another is as much the cause of crime as the result of it. We are now addressing ourselves to more serious matters.

Now, the charge. We have had the report of the incident. We have had the round-up of suspects and now somebody is charged. The moment the police decide to lay a charge, the poor are in trouble. Normally, the system provides that the accused may obtain a lawyer, post bond and be released on bail, prepare himself for a court appearance and a defence, and so on. And that usually happens unless you are poor. This does not apply to the poor. They have no access to bail unless they can get a lawyer to come to the jail, and lawyers will not respond to a call from a man who has no money. No lawyer will, very few will. A poor person in jail finds he can get bail. The system does not deny bail to the poor. He has to have a lawyer to draw the bail bond and carry on other formalities.

If the poor call a lawyer—"What is your name?" "so and so" that slots in his mind, "poor, no fee. Sorry, get somebody else." So he sits in the jail whereas somebody with means gets out forthwith. This is an indictment of lawyers but then lawyers are part of the system that they attack.

We believe that the Legal Aid system should move into action at this point to ensure that the poor have the same access to bail as the monied. If this is not possible, then the matter can be solved in a number of other ways which would cause pain to no one but an immense relief to the poor.

The other ways is: (1) Greater use should be made by the police of summons, rather than arrest. Instead of arresting the person and putting people in jail simply summon them to appear and tell them, "Fine, we suspect you have committed an offence. Be here in court tomorrow morning and then you don't need bail"

(2) Rather than the posting of a bond, release should be by means of a court order directing the accused to appear for trial. If it is a more serious offence then say, "Fine, you be here tomorrow at 9 o'clock. If you do not you are in trouble for violation of a court order and there is a second offence, now go home."

(3) Even within the present system much greater use, they say, could be made of release on the accused's own cognizance. If there is no change in the present system, we believe that the desk sergeant should be empowered to set bail. Instead of needing a lawyer, let the desk sergeant set the bail for the offence. Let the police clerk draw the bail bond and let the magistrate sign it. Let the persons who are already paid do the work and then you don't need a lawyer.

You see, I am cutting my own throat.

The Chairman: You are cutting mine a bit, too.

Mr. Sigsworth: The point we wish to make here is that there are people in jail awaiting trial because they do not have money, while other people charged at the same time with the same offence may be free and on the streets. It is not unusual that some persons have served as much or more time in jail awaiting disposition of their case as their eventual sentence or possibly more and even in some instances eventually proven innocent.

We wish to make another point concerning the charge in that this is the point where there is a separation. In Prince Edward Island the statutory age of a juvenile is 15, or up to his 16th birthday.

We believe there are very good reasons for the juvenile court system, among them being that it gives troubled youngsters time in which to mature and prepare themselves for the demands of society without incurring the penalty of adult offenders, and a criminal record which can follow them for the rest of their lives.

Now, it is interesting on that point this is not a matter of a criminal record being wiped out at some time. That is a lot of claptrap. A criminal record exists. It is fiction. It is a national thing. Pick up an application for any job. It doesn't say "Do you have a criminal record?" It says "Have you ever been convicted of a criminal offence?" Whether you have legislated or not it is like sex. You can legislate against it but you will not make it unpopular.

You can legislate a criminal record out of existence but still you must answer that question, "Have you ever been convicted of a criminal offence?" You are a criminal.

The majority of juvenile delinquents are from poor families, and they start life at a serious disadvantage. We believe that they need that extra year in P.E.I. just as is provided for in many other provinces, and therefore ask that the government of this province increase the statutory age of a juvenile to at least his 17th birthday, with an analysis of the pattern of offences to determine whether or not 18 might be a more appropriate age. Simply stated, if it is illegal for a young man to be in a liquor lounge at 20 on P.E.I., he should not be sent to a penitentiary at 16.

The court appearance now after the charge.

We mentioned this as an indication...

The Chairman: Is he sent to a penitentiary at 16? Are you talking of a federal penitentiary or are you talking now of a provincial jail?

Mr. Sigsworth: He went when he was 16 to Dorchester Penitentiary, Exhibit A.

We mention this as an indication of one of the side effects of the bail system. The poor man who has been held in jail over-night or over a weekend appears in court unshaven, with the clothes he has slept in, feeling beat in every respect, frequently without an attorney.

The well-to-do are there clean, shaven, neatly dressed, accompanied by an attorney. There is fear in the mind of the poor man that he is going to get the gears, because of the fact of his poverty and his appearance and presentation in court can easily leave the impression that he is capable of doing anything. The well-to-do just don't do the things these poor people do—they start with that advantage.

We would like to refer briefly to the Legal Aid system, which is non-existent in this province.

Here the Attorney-General's department will appoint a lawyer to defend an injured person in the case of an indictable offence when the accused elects trial by judge and jury.

In effect, this eliminates the option of electing trial by magistrate, which is often not only faster but fairer because of the number of cases handled by magistrates and the pattern they can establish.

We believe that the Bar Society in P.E.I. or some responsible group should take the initiative in setting up a Legal Aid service, or that some type of public defender system be established by government.

Now, the conviction. This is page 5 and there is just another half of it left, gentlemen, and then I will leave the matter to my clients.

On conviction, there are many offences for which the penalty is a fine, or jail in default of payment. We would recommend that this Committee undertake a study of the number of people in jail because they are poor, and how much it is costing this country to maintain a system of detention for the poor and for alcoholics.

When there is no money to pay the fine the result is frequently loss of employment, with additional difficulties for the family. Where there are dependents there will be a need to turn to welfare departments for relief, and the system takes so long to release a cheque that the family can suffer hardship. This is indirectly the result of the offence directly, it is a result of being poor and unable to pay the fine.

We believe that the court system should be prepared to accept payments of fines on the same basis as other creditors, on the time set-up. It may seem a ridiculous suggestion to some, but that is because they haven't had to serve 30 days because they could not raise $30.00. You can get released today but it sometimes is hard to hold on to the $15.00 or the $30.00 or the $10.00. Why not pay by instalments? It means they would have to set up an accounting system within the system.

We wish to say one other thing about sentencing.

We would like to hear the end of having people sent to the penitentiary "to learn a trade." If the court is interested in having people learn a trade we would suggest that they be sent to some more appropriate place, like P.V.I. That is the Provincial Vocational Institute here.

Trade training in the pen is a useful way to spend time, but people are not sent there to learn a trade. It seems to us that this is a way the court has of justifying its sentence, and we would recommend that they stop using it. It doesn't soften things a bit for the accused; in fact, it makes him feel sick.

And finally the jails.

Here my clients have instructed me to make the strongest and most violent of my strong and violent representations to have you people come down and have a look at the Queens County Jail. Go in, look around and leave. They don't make any other comment than that.

We believe that the reasons that we can't get anything effective done to improve jails is that for the most part only poor people go there, especially to the county jails. While you are in Charlottetown we would like to suggest that you go and visit our jail and go to the tank too and see the lock-up where you are kept for a while before you graduate into more comfortable places, and see how the people in this province wish to have their fellow human beings—in fact, their neighbours—treated.

This organization was successful in placing a television set in the jail a year ago last Christmas, but the men do not even have benches to sit on while watching it.

Now, then it was put in and the suggestion of some place to sit on was under discussion, there was that group associated with the administration of the jail that were protesting the inconvenience now to have to drag blankets out because they will probably want blankets to sit on instead of the floor. At least Louis the Fourteenth said "Let them eat cake."

In addition, the set is turned off at 9.00 p.m. although the men have nowhere to go and nothing to do with their time. There is simply nothing whatever to do in the county jail, and it is possible for people to serve up to two years there. You get this same position of the court saying, "It would not be merciful to send you young men to a place like the county jail and therefore I am going to send you to Dorchester Penitentiary."

We have just opened up the subject in this brief as a means of enabling us to discuss these matters with members of the Committee. We would like to have been able to put together a more scientific document, but we thought we would touch on the little things which can be easily corrected with a little twist in the right direction, and a little more humane consideration for troubled people. None of us get in trouble because we prefer it that way; we could not yet give you an explanation for some of the things we have done—they were often done impulsively, or compulsively, without premeditation or forethought, and often while drinking heavily.

On the other hand, the "corrections" system has been deliberately and rationally designed. If we plead the mercy of the court, say my clients, will society do the same?

Such then, gentlemen, is the brief of the Grey Knights and the two Grey Knights are here with me and will answer your questions.

Senator Pearson: I just have a short question.

Where does the division come in the administration of the court, that is judge and jury? Where is the division in crime?

Mr. Sigsworth: Well, Senator Pearson, with certain offences in the law you are declared to have the right to elect. It depends on the offence. For example, theft under $50.00 you must be tried by a magistrate. You have no choice. Theft over $50.00 you can elect to be tried either by a judge and jury or a judge without a jury.

I am not charging for that.

Senator Sparrow: In the discussions which we will be getting into with representatives of your group, can we get into the area of the discussion of the relationship of poverty to crime? As a group are you prepared to discuss the brief in that light?

Mr. Sigsworth: Yes.

Senator Sparrow: I am just wondering if he is going to make a statement.

The Chairman: Give him the question and he will battle it.

Senator Sparrow: Are they going to make a statement now?

Mr. Sigsworth: You put the question to them and they will give you the answers.

Senator Sparrow: You mentioned that this is a secret organization or a fraternity. Is your group primarily made up of ex-convicts?

Br. Barry J. Gass, Grey Knight: Yes, it is.

Senator Sparrow: Totally or primarily?

Mr. Gass: Yes. It is primarily made up of people that have been in trouble and ex-convicts.

Senator Sparrow: You are talking to a Poverty Committee now. I would like to have my question really relate to your organization as such.

What percentage of the people in your province are there because of poverty? For example is there any relationship directed to poverty in your study?

Mr. Gass: Well, yes. There has to be a relationship because like it states in the brief, only the poor are in jail so this must have something to do with the poor people going there or getting in trouble. It is just the poor who are in jail. You do not see any rich people there at all. They have the money to get out. The poor person has not.

The Chairman: Are you now speaking of the man who has the alternative of $20.00 or 5 days in jail? Is that what you are talking about, or are you talking of the man who commits a criminal offence? What are you talking about?

Mr. Gass: $20.00 in costs or 5 days in jail, this is county. This is something that is done in the county. It doesn't matter if you are rich or poor. If a rich man is fined $20.00 or 5 days he can pay his fine and he goes. The poor person goes to jail.

When you get into criminal offences, there is not much distinction between the rich and the poor man. If it is a criminal offence the rich man goes to prison as well as the poor man although there are things leading up to it like we said in the brief. If you go to court clean-shaven and everything, you have a lot better chance of probably a minor sentence, but whereas the guy that goes up there with a criminal record before and is all dirty and everything and can't afford to get cleaned up to go to court or is not allowed to get out on bail before court to get cleaned up, he usually gets probably a bigger sentence.

Senator Inman: Mr. Chairman, I am very interested. I want to ask this witness if these people who have acquired these criminal records in the case of robbery, is it from need of food or need of clothing that they commit these things? Is it because they are poor? Can you give me some reason why they are tempted to do these things?

Mr. Sigsworth: If I may, Senator, I am sure either one of these gentlemen could answer it, but I represented Mr. Gass, the witness, the last time he was sent to the penitentiary. I do not use that as public relations. It is a lost case. He got two and a half years for break, entry and theft.

After my plea of mitigation because of his youth and because of his background he received this sentence and the judge sentencing him pointed out—I think this, perhaps, senator, will help you towards an answer to the question. I had said in the sentencing Mr. Gass is a young man who has been the victim of difficult circumstances. He came from a broken home. He never had many of the advantages that those from a more stable and well-to-do home have.

He found himself with a great deal of ability, no money and nothing to do on the street, and the only cheap thing in Charlottetown is trouble.

He found that from his previous sentence in penitentiary he had learned to be a cabinet maker. He had made 83 marks in the last year of the schooling they gave there. There was nothing else for him to do in penitentiary. When he came out he couldn't get a job. He couldn't do anything but travel the streets and just wait.

The judge pointed out "Oh no, Mr. Sigsworth, that is just forensic eloquence. We have places like the YMCA and the Basilica recreation." I always act on my client's instructions and so I leaned down to him and said, "What do you say to that?" He asked me a very penetrating question. He said, "If you had a son my age and he came home and told you he was talking to Barry Gass at the rec centre, would you let your son go back?"

I told the judge that. He didn't go in there because it was not for him. Nobody told him he couldn't. His mother worked as a cook. He had no job. He would have to ask his mother for enough money to sit and buy a coke in there. The result of it all was to put in the time he used his ingenuity and mind you his crimes are ingenuous. I am sure he could qualify for a senate seat if only they had been on this side of the law.

The upshot of it was that he asked at that time to speak on his own behalf. It is a dangerous thing to let a sentenced client talk to the court. Sometimes they have nasty things to say to the judge and the system of justice. I asked of the court and he was granted permission. He said just that. I have taken all the courses that the penitentiary has to offer and I could not get a job when I came out. I am a cabinet maker. I have finished grade 10 in school. I tried. If you are sending me to the penitentiary to be trained more that is not going to be achieved.

I think it bothered the court's conscience. He got into trouble. He became a break, entry and theft artist. He became a real expert in a number of very intricate areas of crime that are only mastered by the most intelligent because there was nothing else to do.

Senator Inman: Just one other question. You mentioned a point about them not having to work. Don't you think it would be a good thing for those two men on your right, do you not think it would be better if you had something to do and occupy your time?

Mr. Gass: Well, definitely.

Senator Inman: Learn something to improve yourself.

Mr. Gass: Definitely, but what is there? It definitely would be better, but what is there to do?

Senator Inman: Of course, I have always had the theory that at least you could have some sort of farm or something where they could go.

Mr. Gass: A jail?

Senator Inman: Yes.

Mr. Gass: The county jail is all they have here and the recreation is the television.

Senator Inman: Yes, I grant that but I think it is wrong to do that. I do think there should be something.

Mr. Gass: It might be a very good idea.

Senator Sparrow: Mr. Chairman, if there wasn't poverty and this is what we are trying to alleviate, find the roots of the problem, solve the problem of poverty this presentation, you are saying, would in fact be unnecessary because the courts and the laws are satisfactory for the well off people.

This brief then is really unnecessary if we didn't have this poverty group that faced the court problems.

This is the first opportunity we have had—and we have been accused of not going to the poor people as such—of actually having a representative of a group here of poor people. You said you were representing that group we are talking about that gets into crime problems.

I am concerned about this brief because we put a little bit of band-aid, so to speak, on the problem without getting to the roots. Stop the necessity of poverty and we stop the necessity of this brief.

What can you tell us today now, not five years from now, but what can we do immediately to alleviate this poverty situation? We have outstanding briefs from educators that say there is a problem of education, but that takes a long time. We have got problems with housing but that takes a long time. Can you tell us now what we can do now; right now? Even now in government is still a long time, but right now.

Mr. Gass: I don't think you will ever alleviate it completely but say places for people to go like, say, somebody, John Doe had 30 days in jail now for drinking and couldn't pay his fine because he didn't have the money to pay it. If there was a place for these people to go, say—I think some towns have flop houses and that is where people can go, you know, and if they were sentenced there, why not be sentenced perhaps to this here place and do their time there and not a jail, especially not this one out here.

It would help them to hold on to their jobs and they could go into these places and they could leave every day and go on to their job and go back there. It wouldn't be a county jail, any kind of building at all, and any work that came in, the people that were in there who were doing time could get this job and if the people running these places, probably the government more than likely, they could have an in with Manpower for any jobs or a couple of days work could be allowed to these people that were in this flop house or whatever.

Senator Sparrow: You are talking about after the crime is committed?

Mr. Gass: Yes.

Senator Sparrow: I want to find out what the answer is before the crime is committed and we do not have to send them anywhere.

Mr. Gass: I don't think if everybody in the system was in the upper classes it still wouldn't alleviate all the problems because we have had it through the centuries. I guess we will always have it to a certain extent.

The Chairman: Always have what?

Mr. Gass: Crime.

The Chairman: As long as you don't make up your mind you are going to be poor all your life, it is all right with me.

Mr. Gass: Yes, because on my own if I had money at times when I was out getting in trouble and that, I know myself I would not have done it. I do not think a lot of other people would do it either.

Poverty produced poverty, as far as I am concerned. If a person is poor in some ways just because they get money it is not going to solve everything. If they have a broken home or something like this, money is not going to solve the whole problem. There are many different categories that it would fall into.

The Chairman: Are you finished, Senator Sparrow?

Senator Sparrow: Yes.

The Chairman: Do you want to say something, Senator Connolly?

Senator Connolly: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I just wanted to say I listened with a great deal of relish to the delightful sense of humour of Mr. Sigsworth as he presented his brief. I have developed a tremendous admiration for Mr. Gass' courage in appearing before us today.

One question: Do you have any animus against society, Mr. Gass?

Mr. Gass: Not particularly in my own case I guess probably I did, probably up till a year ago until Manpower did get me into a school and stuff like this. I am getting along all right now. I haven't got that much against them.

really, but I am thinking in terms of other people, people I know myself that are poor.

Senator Connolly: Thank you very much.

The Chairman: That is the line of questioning I was going to take. I think the Committee better do a little thinking, not knowing what this brief was going to bring up, about people coming here and sort of opening up things that are not perhaps our business in principle as individuals, but it is here now.

You are now in Manpower and training for something.

Mr. Gass: Yes, sir.

The Chairman: Why didn't you go to Manpower originally and ask them to train you before anything happened to you?

Mr. Gass: Well, I was in trouble since I was a juvenile and I was as you know, an incorrigible.

Senator McGrand: We cannot hear you.

Mr. Gass: I was noted as an incorrigible when I was a juvenile and I didn't know about Manpower then, I didn't know anything about these places—home school and taking trades and this here stuff. I knew they would find you a job but Manpower wasn't even in then. It wasn't even here. Then, it was the unemployment department. Half of the trade systems and everything they have got now were not available.

The Chairman: Amongst the people with whom you are working is Manpower having a purpose and a good one?

Mr. Gass: As far as the poor are concerned?

The Chairman: As far as training is concerned?

Mr. Gass: Yes, definitely. I think it is a very good idea.

The Chairman: You think it is very good. Are there many of your friends or acquaintances in there?

Mr. Gass: Not that many people are in right now. They only hold twelve seats.

The Chairman: At one time?

Mr. Gass: Well, this year. This is the first year for Holland College. They only had twelve seats.

The Chairman: Twelve seats for a particular trade?

Mr. Gass: For all the trades that are there.

The Chairman: All trades, twelve seats?

Mr. Gass: For commercial art, yes.

The Chairman: For all trades undertaken, they have twelve seats.

Mr. Gass: Yes.

The Chairman: This is the first year?

Mr. Gass: Yes.

The Chairman: Just while you are here, are there other people taking trades in the same way you are at the College?

Mr. Gass: Yes.

The Chairman: How many?

Mr. Gass: I think there was close to 90.

The Chairman: 90 trades?

Mr. Gass: 90 people.

The Chairman: How many trades?

Mr. Gass: Four different trades, maybe five.

The Chairman: Four different trades and are they making progress?

Mr. Gass: Oh, yes, definitely.

The Chairman: And are they young people?

Mr. Gass: The biggest majority of them are, yes.

The Chairman: Now, are the people who take this training and sort of graduate—and that is as good a word as any—policed? Do they get jobs?

Mr. Gass: They have a good chance, but I don't think they have that much of a chance around here. Mostly everybody that just graduates from school I think leaves the island. There is not much industry or anything around here.

The Chairman: From what you know and since you are interested in this part of the thing, are these people trained well enough to hold a job in comparison with the man from Nova Scotia or New Brunswick or Ontario?

Senator Pearson: Mr. Chairman, why can't Manpower begin to train young people or older ones for some position or job that is suitable to this island, not Nova Scotia or somewhere else where they can return to this island.

The Chairman: That is what he said.

Mr. Gass: What do you want to be, a farmer?

Senator Pearson: If that is all there is. You have a community freezer that is a different thing.

The Chairman: I was trying to get at whether these people are sufficiently well trained so they can hold a job in industry.

Senator Fergusson: Mr. Chairman, how can this witness answer that?

The Chairman: The question was asked by Senator Sparrow: Is this a group of people who have some difficulties and I imagine it is what he hears from his friends.

Mr. Green: May I help Barry in this situation by rephrasing the question for him. Do you think it enough for people you know or your friends in the trade to have a service offered to them or do they need a great deal of support and encouragement all the way through to stay with it; and first to go into the service and stay with it?

Mr. Gass: Oh, definitely. Just because they get a chance to take a trade doesn't mean they are going to be rich.

Senator McGrand: We cannot hear you.

Mr. Gass: Just because they are offered a trade in one of the schools doesn't mean they are going to be rich in a few years or that they are going to make use of it when they get out, but they need help all the way through and these people I am talking about, my friends now and members of the Grey Knights, these are not—you probably got the impression they were all classmates of mine which they are not.

The Chairman: No, no. You are working with them. I am asking you whether from listening or hearing from them these people can be placed after having gone through the Manpower service?

Mr. Gass: Well, like I said, they all leave the island. It is the only thing to do. There is not that much here for them.

The Chairman: Do you hear from them at all?

Mr. Gass: No.

Senator Hastings: Mr. Chairman, pertaining to the operation or activities of this organization, without divulging your secret aspect or what you are doing, do you feel in your opinion from the work you have done that you, as an ex-prisoner have a better appreciation and do a better job for ex-prisoners than a parole office or a professional counsellor?

Mr. Gass: Certainly. I know what it is all about. They don't.

Mr. Green: May I explain here something that happened to me.

One of the Grey Knights phoned me and he said he was drunk. He was one fifth away from a penitentiary term. He was afraid he was going to get into violence. This is his pattern, and so he phoned me to see if I would come and keep him from getting into a fight somewhere—he was quite drunk and I wanted him to go without it and sober up. I couldn't get him. I had to go to Barry to find out how to do it and Barry said, "You will have to go to a bootlegger and get him two beers." So they took me to a bootlegger and we got him two beers and the guy did come out and sleep if off in the house that night, but I couldn't have got that guy home without Barry's help. He knew the two beers were necessary.

Senator Bélisle: Mr. Chairman, can I change my mind? I said a while ago I wasn't going to ask any questions. May I ask the main witness if he has, as a well-to-do lawyer, made representations to the Prince Edward Island Bar, to the Canadian Bar and what is their thinking about it?

Also my last question is: What do you think of our present parole system? Should we have a more liberal system? I personally feel we should have a more liberal system to permit them to work while they are under sentence.

Mr. Sigsworth: In answer to your first question as to whether I had made representations, no, no. I long ago got disenchanted and gave up making representations. I act on my client's instructions. They have better idea than I have. They are not interested in representations and they are not academic people. I am. I have five degrees and I am embarrassed about it because I am very theoretically minded. They are practically minded.

It is of very little interest to a Grey Knight ex whether the system is changed eventually. It is here and now he wants to know: "Fine. I am getting out tomorrow. I will get in trouble again. I have got no job. Who is going to hire me? I would like to go to school. What can I do now?"

The answer inevitably is M-o-n-e-y and that involves r-e-d-t-a-p-e.

That is one of our secrets. The Grey Knights have no red tape. They make errors. There are no files. There are no interviews. There is nothing. They know them. They can write somebody off. Never mind, he is a dead-beat. That fellow is a con artist. No—that guy—yes. There is no loan. There is no promissory notes. There is no this. There is no that. They get where they want what they want, and if they don't, if they step out of line they don't go to the system either. They have their own system. There are very few disciplinary problems inside.

As a lawyer I feel that (a) there should be an expansion of the parole system most definitely, most definitely.

For example, here Barry has just instructed me there should be a parole officer in the court when the prisoner goes up for sentence. There should be a parole officer—we do not have any probation officers here. We have a man in Moncton who flies over and chats to his parolees.

I am instructed by some of the Grey Knights who have done time in Dorchester Penitentiary, that there is nothing so frightening as to get out on parole with a set of rules—you must not do this, you must not do that. You must do this. Nobody helps and nobody cares. There is nobody around except a couple of weeks later you must report to someone and tell them "did you do this?" "Did you that?"—and then it just becomes a routine report.

That parole system should not be expanded. It should be altered as the brief points out, redirected; little changes made, some personal interest. The Grey Knights are not a parole organization, but when they under their auspices care for somebody, he is totally cared for. Indeed, he almost becomes a chattel of theirs.

The Chairman: I have two more senators, Senator Bélisle and Senator Fergusson. I will ask Senator Fergusson first.

Senator Fergusson: I would like to ask if there was a John Howard Society on the island and if there is then do the Grey Knights cooperate with them?

Mr. Sigsworth: I will have to tell my client to restrain himself in answering that.

Mr. Gass: There is a John Howard Society here and they do make the odd trip over to Dorchester Penitentiary. I do not know how it is around the county jail. But I was over in Dorchester Penitentiary. I do not know how it is around the county jails. I have never seen them there myself in the county jail. But I was over in Dorchester twice and I have not seen representatives of the John Howard Society once.

Mr. Sigsworth: You got money from them; tell them about that.

Mr. Gass: I had to find my own job while I was over there. I had to do it through letters to mostly Mr. Sigsworth here, and to my mother, but I had to find a job myself or to have a place to stay and everything when I got out, whatever else took place.

Maybe the John Howard Society had something to do with it, although I doubt it very much.

When I did come out and went to see them, of course, I was paroled to a member of the John Howard Society. I went to see them and while they gave me the odd "You are not allowed to do this—you are not allowed to do that" and $60.00 for work clothes and report to them every two weeks and I had to sign a promissory note to pay them the $60.00 when I got my pay.

Mr. Sigsworth: Tell them how the note was called.

Mr. Gass: Yes. It was called in after a certain amount of time.

Mr. Sigsworth: He had to get money from the Grey Knights to pay the note.

The Chairman: Let me just say this for the record and I am not only doing this for the record.

It looks like you will have some work ahead of you. It is the custom and it is the practice in many provinces in Canada for locals to be—people who are known—permitted to go home without bail and instructed to report the next morning. It is not unusual at all in many provinces.

It is also common for desk sergeants in the evenings when no magistrates are available or justices of the peace to fix bail, and that is common practice in many provinces in Canada.

It is also very common practice for a time basis to pay, $5.00 a week, pay $10.00 a week or pay $2.00 a week until you pay it off, not what we used to do "$30 or two weeks," and that is carried on.

It is also the federal practice to allow a man to absent himself from the penitentiary in the day time now to work and to return to the penitentiary or to the reform jail at night and serve his sentence out and be out in the day time and work and support his family.

These things are very important. All of them are vital and some of the provinces also permit this under the provincial regulations. The federal government does permit it under the penitentiaries, some of them. I do not say it is common, mind you but just recently the federal government invoked a rule permitting a man to go home and live with his family for a period, perhaps for good behaviour, and it is given to him as a reward. He goes back and serves again.

If he is to be let out in two months, and he has been put away for 5 years, they will let him out to make visits to his home and sort of break in slowly until he is released. That is not uncommon. It is being done now so that we are not without wanting to do the right thing.

I think what you need to do is your good friend Mr. Sigsworth here, who knows his way around and can do some valuable speaking on the matter, should bring some pressure where it needs to be brought to bear and that is on the provincial government here who can do much of this within their own scope, except for the penitentiaries. Under two years they can of course in the penitentiary.

Your problem is really one of your own problems and what you have pointed out is very very important and from our point of view it is vital because the people we are concerned with, as Senator Sparrow points out are this group in this position, so if you can do some work at this end, we will do the work at the broader end.

Senator Sparrow: May I ask one more question, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: Yes.

Senator Sparrow: What could society have done and what should society have done so that you would not be here today, you would not have got into that problem? I think this is what we are not getting at today so that we can see or we can stop this from happening in the future.

I don't know what age it starts at. Maybe you got in trouble at 15 or 14, I have no idea, but are we talking about the word "money"? Where did society fail you and at what period of time? What should society have done?

Mr. Gass: I don't think money had that much to do with it. I think services would be more appropriate.

Mr. Sigsworth: One final thing, if I may.

I assume we have reached the end of our time. I want to, again following my client's instructions here, thank the Senators for taking the time to listen to them and taking such a sincere interest and I am within my instructions in assuring this Committee this:

Curtis Barkhouse, who has not been as vocal as he might have been, could have told you a great deal, as much as Barry. He is probably just as happy because he was petrified he would stutter in front of the Senators.

One thing you have achieved. These people will go back to their own jubilant that eleven senators focused their attention on their little problems for this long and there is one final thing.

You took such an interest—I may be fired for this one—in Barry here that I think it is only right I should point out: Barry Gass, declared incorrigible by the juvenile court, sent up at 16—15, to the adult court for trial, twice sentenced to the penitentiary and twice over there. There at 16 finished grade 10. There came out, went to the vocational school, took art there. Is now a student in Holland College in commercial art and he did the silk screen work for the advertising for the National Gallery poster that will advertise Canada's display from the National Gallery at Expo 70 in Osaka, Japan.

The Chairman: You know, it pleases us too when we hear some of the things we do find favour with people and we have helped somebody, lifted somebody's spirits. That is our purpose and I hope that we will be able to do that to other people.

We thank you, Mr. Sigsworth. We thank Mr. Gass. We thank Mr. Barkhouse for coming here today. It has been most interesting.

We have not had this problem before and it has been a most useful morning.

Mr. Sigsworth: Thank you very much.
The meeting adjourned.
Upon resuming at 2:00 p.m.

The Chairman: I will call this meeting to order. Late last night and this morning we received some additional briefs. We hadn't planned for these briefs and we couldn't make arrangements to hear them or we would have had to set somebody aside who had an appointment fixed some time ago to be heard, so we decided to appoint a subcommittee. I discussed this with the persons who presented us with the briefs and we appointed a subcommittee of Senator Pearson, Senator McGrand and Senator Belisle who will hear these persons involved in another room starting at three o'clock. One brief from three to four and the other brief from four to five or however long it takes. Mr. Holman of our staff will act as secretary and clerk.

Senator Hastings: Mr. Chairman, before you proceed with this afternoon's hearing, I might report to you that Senators Sparrow, Belisle and myself accepted the invitation of the Grey Knights and visited the County Jail and the local police station over the noon hour and we will be filing a report with you on our visit. Secondly, I wonder if we could have, sir, a quick resume of the programme for tomorrow?

The Chairman: Well, I just can't give it to you at the moment. It just depends on things and it has been arranged almost as we had discussed it originally subject to weather conditions and a lot of other things.

Senator Hastings: But we will be making as of now the visits as planned for tomorrow morning?

The Chairman: Yes. Mr. Blakely, who is here, was one of the men who arranged it.

The brief that we have here is from the Catholic Social Welfare Bureau and on my right is Mr. Lawrence MacPherson who held the position of activities organizer for the Young Christian Workers, Antigonish Diocese, for a period of four years. He then supervised native residential students at Prince George College, Prince George, British Columbia, for two years. Later, he attended the Nova Scotia Institute of Technology in Halifax and was granted a social welfare worker diploma. In his capacity as Social Welfare Administrator for the Catholic Welfare Bureau, he is involved in family counselling and the organization of a day-care programme in the Charlottetown area. Mr. MacPherson is married and resides in Charlottetown.

I will now call on Mr. MacPherson.

Mr. Lawrence MacPherson, Social Welfare Administrator, Catholic Welfare Bureau, Charlottetown, P.E.I.: Mr. Chairman, honourable senators, ladies and gentlemen: we have gathered here today to look at some of the causes of poverty and what means may be taken to combat it effectively. For the next few moments I would like to enlarge on some of the views which we presented in our brief. We have dealt with the attitude of society towards poverty and how these attitudes perpetuate poverty. Society is a giant mirror which reflects to the poor their own feelings of failure and atrophy. Society's institutions have been set up on middle-class values and leaves no room for that segment of the population which has not been socialized to these values. Our own educational system is one example. A set of standards must be reached before a child is given the same opportunity as the middle-class. A child must be clean, well-dressed, healthy and alert before educators feel he can be successful academically. The poor child enters the school system with very little in common with the majority of his classmates. He is distinguished by the clothing he wears which reflects to the poor he is in some way inferior to his peer group. This is reinforced by the fact that he misses more school time due to poor health and automatically falls behind academically. In six or seven years he is put in a category as a likely drop-out.

This morning a brief was presented by the Grey Knights on our legal structure. I won't go into this in any detail but the middle-class indirectly dictates the makeup of welfare programmes. The middle-class forms the voting majority in this country and, admittedly, is the group which must bear the cost of welfare programmes through their tax dollars. Government is forced to use this income in a way which will satisfy the middle-class. In many cases, the outcome of an election is based on the possibility of the increase or decrease in the tax load. In this regard the poor are voiceless. Here again is another example of society's attitude towards the poor. If we do not begin to change the general attitude of society towards the poor, how can we ever expect to overcome poverty? Our social assistance programmes give money to the poor in the form of welfare cheques, but fail to give the needed support to make these moneys truly effective in combatting poverty.

In order to make the moneys that have already been legislated to help the poor effective, we must attach a personal involvement to the problems of the poor. We can use these moneys not only to satisfy the inner needs but also as a lever to further extend the rehabilitation programme. In the Charlotte-town area the welfare assistance is granted from two local agencies. The workers at these agencies are involved with families receiving this assistance. Presently, the workers are unable to spend the long hours that are necessary to work intensively with these families. They carry a large case load and so cannot exert a concentrated effort in each individual case.

At the present time in the Catholic Welfare Bureau, we are setting up a pilot project and will be giving courses in budgeting, home management, nutrition and child care. These courses would be given to families who recognize their weaknesses in these areas and are willing to take steps to improve their situation.

The workers have been involved with these families for a number of months and have gained their trust. Their immediate needs can be satisfied to some extent through welfare assistance, but it is hoped that this programme will enable the families, through their own efforts, to solve their problems and be able to hope for a decent standard of living.

Our present Social Assistance Act states that a family of seven needs a minimum of $325 a month to meet their basic needs. If we could give this maximum amount and aid the family in the proper budgeting of this money, we could show the poor that society is trying to make a just effort to satisfy their basic needs. But, in reality, we cannot afford to pay the maximum to the poor, because of our economic limitations. Prince Edward Island's economy is a weak one. There is a high level of dependency and on a fifty-fifty cost-sharing plan with the Federal Government, this is an expensive one for this province. Before we can put any programmes into effect we must take the programme known to the poor. At the present time there is very little information directed to this class of people. There is such a stigma attached to any welfare organization that the poor are reluctant to seek this help. When the poor decide to seek help, they must locate the service themselves. They must go through a degrading experience in order to receive any help at all. When they receive the help, it's only the minimum. Any information they can gather is only a very small portion of what should be available to them. Most of the poor's rights are hidden from them and this increases their feeling of insecurity and failure. These programmes have to be known to the poor in intelligible terms to which the poor can relate. We must be there when the poor need help and not when we have time for them.

There is no stigma attached to the Family Allowance assistance because all of society receives it. If there is a change in this legislation, as everyone knows he is entitled to receive these extended benefits. When there is a change in the Social Assistance Act, are the people who are affected by the change informed of how they may benefit from it? No. This is kept from them and only in extreme cases do they become aware of their rights.

We tend to judge the poor by those four or five per cent who try to take advantage of welfare programmes. Welfare programme policies are geared towards this percentage rather than trying to help the ninety-five per cent who are honest and sincere in their efforts to try and help themselves. In a democratic country, the majority decides what course of action is to be taken and all must abide by their decision. For the poor, the minority are the major factor in the setting up of policies. Why does the democratic process apply only to the rich and not to the poor?

These are all the comments I have at the moment, Senators, but I would be happy to try and answer any of your questions.

The Chairman: You said that when there are changes made in the Social Assistance, no one appears to know it except the person directly concerned. What have you in mind on the changes? Do the changes need consent; can it be made at the local level? I am thinking of consent of other governments?

Mr. MacPherson: Before we speak of changes the poor are not even informed of the legislation that is now available to them. Our Social Assistance Act states that a family of seven needs three hundred and twenty-five dollars a month just to meet their basic needs, but when they come into the office you can't afford to give them this three hundred and twenty-five dollars, so you try to give them a hundred and fifty to a hundred and seventy-five dollars and you say, "You make both ends meet on this." They don't know their rights. Legislation has said "We know you need this and it should be available to you, but it's not. We are not going to tell you about the programme." It sounds good for a government to come out at election time and say that this is what we are going to do, but in order to implement it we need the money and our island here hasn't got the money.

The Chairman: Well, what you are saying, in effect, is that the Legislation says you can go up as high as three hundred and twenty-five dollars a month on the basis of need and we will contribute fifty per cent of the money that you spend on the basis of need. In the rich Province of Alberta and Ontario the person gets $325, because they can put up the other half. You can't afford to put up the other half so you get along as best you can. That is what you are saying?

Mr. MacPherson: Yes.

The Chairman: And that's not very good, is it?

Mr. MacPherson: It's not for Prince Edward Island.

The Chairman: Well, how do we change that then; you're a social worker?

Mr. MacPherson: Well, I haven't got all the answers. Even if the money that we have had's legislated for the poor and we give it to the poor—there has to be more than a welfare cheque from the central office. Here in the Charlottetown area we are unique. The welfare agencies are able to use the money as a lever to get to the poor, but we spend hours and hours of our time each month going through reams and reams of paper to justify the $175 that we have given to this particular family. If the agency itself was granted this money—"saying this is your budget for the year and you will work with these families and at the end of the year you have to account for the moneys"—I think we could bring more effective service to the poor.

The Chairman: You told us that there were no local agencies and I gather from what you said they are doing what you are suggesting, or am I wrong?

21352-41

Mr. MacPherson: Yes. This is the way we are trying to work it now. Still we have to answer to the Provincial Government at the end of each month for each amount of money that we handle.

The Chairman: Why shouldn't you have to answer to the Provincial Government? The Provincial Government answers to the Federal Government why shouldn't you have to answer to the Provincial Government?

Mr. MacPherson: Because each month takes hours and hours of a worker's time to put this down on paper and to justify giving the money to the poor and if the grant was given initially to the agency itself where they are going to be responsible at the end of the year to account for this money rather than spending hours and hours a month just to justify to the Provincial Government.

The Chairman: Don't you see that what you are doing is that you are using money that belongs to people in British Columbia—public moneys and somebody has to account for public money surely?

Mr. MacPherson: I agree with that, yes, but what's the difference between accounting at the end of the year and at the end of each month?

The Chairman: Well, I suppose one of the reasons that they ask that is that they can keep a finger on what is going on and they have a little closer contact. This is an experimental thing.

Mr. MacPherson: The poor okay. We have to justify why we give this man $175 and justify for every cent of it. When the money comes down—I shouldn't be saying these things because I haven't got things to back them up, statistics, but when this money comes down from Ottawa to the different provinces throughout Canada, if a full investigation goes into this, there are some missing there too you know, so does the money get down to the poor? This is what I want to know. If a million dollars is allocated from Ottawa for the poor, does this million dollars get to the poor? Or is there some taken out in the meantime for different odds and ends—whatever they may be?

The Chairman: No, no.

Mr. MacPherson: I don't want to get into this.

The Chairman: Well, you asked the question; let's understand it. If I don't explain it correctly, you set me right. The contract is for an open end contract on a fifty-fifty basis with certain limitations and it's administered by the province and all the Federal Government is doing is have their accountants come in and check the books—not what you did, but how much they spend and they check the books. Isn't that right?

Mr. MacPherson: Yes.

The Chairman: So it isn't a question of money going elsewhere. All of the moneys that are spent on welfare by the Province of Prince Edward Island must be spent on welfare. It must be directly spent on welfare in order to receive fifty per cent. There is not a dime that is bypassed. It all goes in. The point you're making is that there isn't enough going in and you haven't got enough authority to give them what they require because the province can't meet her share. That's what you are saying?

Mr. MacPherson: Yes. In our province with the Canada Assistance Plan, if we could initiate a programme—maybe I am wrong on this—but we'll say that the programme is going to cost two million dollars. The province itself has to come up with the two million dollars to initiate that programme and then at that year end they get a million dollars, half of it, back.

The Chairman: Yes, that's right.

Mr. MacPherson: Why can't we have a cost-sharing right from the beginning?

The Chairman: You are perfectly right. I suppose the answer to that is because you are such frugal people and have such good credit—I don't know the answer to it, but that's the method that they employ but that really doesn't handicap you.

Senator Sparrow: You asked the question and maybe you could answer the question. Your question was how much money filters down to the poor. Of the amount of money you handle—you distribute. How much of that money is filtered down to the poor in the form of money and how much is used up in the form of administration—you know, salaries and offices, etc.?

Mr. MacPherson: Well, our work—we work on a deficit financial base or basis where we deal with the agency. The agency's money is allocated to the poor and then at the end of each month, the Provincial Government comes in and investigates the files and says "Well, you paid out $8,000 benefits for the poor and we will return your $8,000 to you." In our agency we have two workers, secretaries and the administration head of the organization. I don't know the figures of what was taken up in administration.

The Chairman: How much money would you spend in the course of a year?

Mr. MacPherson: I don't have that figure.

The Chairman: How much in a month?

Mr. MacPherson: You mean in social assistance?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. MacPherson: Oh, I can give you that figure. In the summer months probably six hundred dollars; in the winter we probably go to nine or ten thousand. Six thousand dollars in the summer and nine or ten in the winter.

The Chairman: Do you get an average of seven or eight? Would you run a hundred thousand dollars a year?

Mr. MacPherson: Somewhere around there.

Senator Sparrow: You referred in your verbal presentation to the value, or at least I believe you were suggesting that there was a certain value in a universal programme. Are you suggesting that all help that is given should be universal like a guaranteed annual income or that type of thing? Are you suggesting that all programmes should be universal?

Mr. MacPherson: No. Only of those who are entitled to the programme. Welfare everyone in Canada is entitled to it. There are some that don't qualify to receive under these programmes, but all in Canada are entitled to it. But this is the thing. No one makes these facts known to the poor. They figure that they are the only ones that are receiving charity in Canada. There is a stigma attached to this. Take a man that goes in to cash cheque, a family allowance cheque and a welfare cheque. The bank teller reflects society attitude for the family allowance cheque. The family allowance cheque is taken and there is no reaction at all, but you put a welfare cheque over the counter and they stop at look. I am seeing this personally, because when I get paid from the agency, I get paid by cheque and it's the Catholic Welfare Bureau and when I go in the bank and I put this across the counter, the initial reaction is to stand back and look.

The Chairman: Well, that's because of its size.

Mr. MacPherson: I wish it was.

Senator Connolly: What is your view of the means test?

Mr. MacPherson: Well, this is it. We have to work on the means. If they need it we have to be there at least to try and give it to them.

Senator Connolly: If they don't need it could they get it?—this social allowance of any kind?

Mr. MacPherson: Well, we are getting into the Family Allowance and the Family Allowance has been accepted as universal assistance. I can't see personally that a man that is making fourteen thousand dollars—where the extra ten or twelve or twenty dollars a month is going to matter to him either way. If this money can be taken and given to the lower categories there would be more funds; there would be more benefits received.

Senator Cook: That's means test, though, isn't it? The only way you are going to determine it is to have a means test?

Mr. MacPherson: Well, I am not very well versed on the means test or on basic needs, you know, but you should deal with people under the circumstances that they find themselves in.

The Chairman: Well, in the first place I think we should make it very clear that we in the Federal Government under the Canada Assistance Act did away with the means test and replaced it with a needs test and that was a great forward step, so let's forget about the means test. The needs test is on the basis of need. If you have a client who comes in to see you and needs $325, what is there to stop you from giving them that final $325?

Mr. MacPherson: We don't have the money to give each individual that comes in exactly what they need.

The Chairman: Yes, but you told us that at the end of the month the Provincial Government comes in and looks at your books and says that you spent $8,000 and they reimburse you that $8,000. They don't go through your books and say did you give Joe Smith $200; why did you give it? Am I wrong in assuming that?

Mr. MacPherson: Right. Because my files are taken out and a number of records are selected at random and they go out and each thing is checked. It's a funny thing, but he may have gained $10 a week by collecting bottles on the street and a neighbour reports that he received extra income and then they say you people are not capable and if I make the mistake, I misjudged this, we are back again judging the few who may take advantage of the welfare programme. This is what we get back to each time. You made a mistake and so then they come in and you are put under pressure so that each person that comes into the office you are skeptical. You say to yourself: "I don't want you to cheat me because I will look bad in front of the investigator when he comes in here and I am not doing a proper job." This is why we give him the feeling of inadequacy and make them beg and crawl until we decide what we are going to give them.

I know for a fact that when I am in touch with Manpower on Monday morning that there is no jobs available and if I have a person that comes in to the office, I have the pressure on me; I have to say, "Did you check Manpower?" and I already know that there is no jobs available at Manpower, because if my files are going out to be investigated they are going to ask "Were you down at the Manpower Office on such-and-such a day? Were you told to go to Manpower?" and if he says no, we are not doing our job at the agency level. This is why the poor are put through such hell to receive assistance. This is the reason. "Go to Manpower and get a medical certificate to show me you're sick." We never take their word for it and it has been proven that there is only five or six per cent that try to take advantage in these ways. They are not willing to go out and work.

The Chairman: Senator McGrand?

Senator McGrand: I can't recall your exact words when you were introducing your brief, but I think you said when they receive it, it is only a minimum and inadequate.

Mr. MacPherson: Yes.

Senator McGrand: Now our Chairman has explained a good many times that welfare started during the dole and has grown step by step to old age pensions and Family Allowances, etc. Any true welfare programme should try to rehabilitate the person as an individual, as a human being. Would you share the opinion of some people who believe that welfare is a continuation of colonialism by the upper classes that says to the poor "Here are a few extra dollars; put them in your pocket now and don't bother us for a while."

Mr. MacPherson: No. Money is not going to be the answer. I can give my clients $500 each which would be enough to buy their basic needs, but that is not going to help them with their problems.

Senator McGrand: That's right.

Mr. MacPherson: We have to sit down with them and this is why if the money is at the agency level and the workers can come out and use this money as a level—a lever to deal with the families and work with them and find out their problems and what steps can be taken to help them overcome of these problems, then we will make some progress. Until then we won't.

The Chairman: Well, really we have to get down to the raw bone here and talk it over. The real poor people on welfare really don't trust the social worker, do they?

Mr. MacPherson: That's a lot of nonsense. It depends on the social worker. It depends on the person who is working with them.

The Chairman: He answers your questions gladly and favourably?

Mr. MacPherson: It depends. It doesn't come when you first go in and interview the man. You have to prove that you are there willingly to help them. You have to prove that you are there to help with an honest effort and this doesn't come by one or two interview or three interviews in the office. You have to go down to the home and you have to come back and you have to win his trust.

Senator Hastings: You are not there as the ambassador of the society that put him there?

Mr. MacPherson: No.

Senator Belisle: In other words, you disagree with your own brief.

Mr. MacPherson: No.

Senator Belisle: Well, I was interested when I was reading it last evening on page 3 you said:

What do the poor really know about the services and assistance that our society, through Government, has made available to them?

Why don't you tell them?

Mr. MacPherson: Yes, I agree. We perpetuate it. The workers, the people who are working with the poor because we relate to the poor what society wants us to relate to them. We are afraid of our jobs too. You gentlemen have gone through life and you have reached your position...

The Chairman: We are set for life.

Mr. MacPherson: Exactly, but if I go into an agency and sit down and start working this way and I bump somebody above me, I have to make a living too. There are pressures on me and I have to work.

Senator Belisle: Don't misunderstand me but maybe it was the aeroplane ride or the weather that disagreed with me, but as I am reading it—you go along further and you say:

We hide from the poor the rights we have legislated for their benefit. We appear to feel that we must give the poor the minimum to which they are entitled. Why have we not disseminated the policies and the legislation to that segment of the population which it was designed to help? Are we afraid that when this knowledge becomes available we would be unable to financially meet the needs of the people to whom we have already committed ourselves in legislation? Or are we afraid that people will take advantage of these programmes? These are questions that can only be answered by government.

And then you go on to say:

"The maximum help, even if the maximum were given, is not the answer."

M. MacPherson: I was trying to relate in that brief as to you the Senators that this society's attitude toward the poor. We don't want to know about these programmes. If we don't attack these attitudes that we, society has towards the poor, we won't, no matter what we do, we are not going to succeed.

Senator Cook: Well, it isn't fair to say that we hide from them. This amount you speak of, the Canada Assistance Act is only cond tional and the province puts up so much money, so therefore you don't hide it from them. You say that is their right. It is only their right provided the provinces put up their share.

Mr. MacPherson: How many of my clients come in and know anything about the Canada Assistance Act?

The Chairman: Why don't you tell them.

Mr. MacPherson: Well, this is what I'm doing now. We are telling them of their rights and we have various families who are working—I mentioned this pilot project in here—we have families who are working and making $200 a month. We are going to try to supplement their income on a pilot project and get them into these courses in child care and nutrition and budgeting to see if this is going to help. We have already started towards this goal.

The Chairman: In the course of your talk you used a word that strikes my fancy and I wonder if you would take a minute just to tell me about something. You said clients. When does a welfare person become a client? At what stage?

Mr. MacPherson: Well, this is what we are taught in school.

The Chairman: Is that what you were taught in school?

Mr. MacPherson: Yes.

The Chairman: When he comes in and you take him on...

Mr. MacPherson: Then he becomes a client.

The Chairman: Well, I haven't heard the time applied that way for some time.

Senator Fergusson: I would like to ask one question. The written brief on page 4, it says:

It must be pointed out that recipients of welfare assistance are but a small portion of those who are living at or below the poverty line.

Would you comment on that? Would you enlarge on that, please?

Mr. MacPherson: Well, in the beginning of the brief I mentioned two things that were perpetuating poverty here. One, of course, was the lack of job opportunities and low wages. We have a lot of people in the Charlottetown area, a great number of them who are good workers and who want to carry out their responsibilities, but if you have a family of five or six or seven and you make $210 a month, this is not enough to meet your basic needs. This is not enough to make your basic needs, let alone any extras in life.

Senator Fergusson: Well, these people are really just getting along on less than the reasonable conditions, or are they doing this without applying for welfare? They are living below the poverty line?

Mr. MacPherson: Well, here's where we get into another problem. They don't come to welfare because there is so much stigma attached to it and then they turn to local loan agencies and they get deeper in debt because it offers immediate solutions to their problems; then they find a year or two years later that they are $800 in debt and they have a payment to meet each month or their wages would be garnisheed. This is when the welfare agency begins to receive their clients when they have nowhere else to turn. We have to reach them before they reach this stage.

Senator Fergusson: Then you have many people living on that borderline?

Mr. MacPherson: Yes, many.

Senator Inman: Mr. Chairman, down page 3 about halfway down the witness says:

If we neglect the poor's psychological needs, no amount of money is going to satisfy their inner wants; such as the feelings of being needed and being part of society as a whole. It is only when we can make them feel that they belong to society where we hope to break the chain of poverty."

Do you feel that there is a great cultural poverty here?

Mr. MacPherson: Yes. They feel their values are not the same. They can't walk up the street and hold their heads up and say "I am doing my job and I am doing what the rest of society is doing." They can't do this and society reflects to them all their inadequacies, all their failures.

Senator Inman: What would you propose that we do to remedy this?

Mr. MacPherson: Well, first of all we have to get down to their level and find out the problems and show that we do care and that we are interested in them as people and not as statistics. This is going to take work and personal work with the individuals involved and it is not going to be carried out by having the central office giving more welfare money out. It has to be by new supporting services like homemakers' services to show a mother that if she doesn't know how to look after her home to help her to understand her problems. Day-care centres. We have day-care centres in our Charlottetown area and we are serving sixty children, but if we can't work with the parents the programme is not going to be that much or have that much effect.

Senator Inman: In other words, it's an educational problem?

Mr. MacPherson: It is.

Senator Hastings: Mr. Chairman, on the last page it says:

We have made reference to those who exploit the poor.

The Chairman: What page?

Senator Hastings: The top of page 7.

... Many of the poor are deeply in debt with one or more of the money-lending institutions in the area.

Could you enlighten me on this? Any other areas that you feel institutions are exploiting the poor? Any other areas other than the loan companies?

Mr. MacPherson: Well, I would try to answer your question this way. We have people who get in debt with small doctor's bills or small clothing bills, just small bills that are placed with a collection agency. They write them off as a lost cause, so you know they just pass it over to them and just maybe we will get something back. They have given up all hope themselves so that these people then apply the pressure because they are making a living off of this. What they collect is their business, so these collection agencies—you know you have them going into a man's place of work and wait for him while he is getting his paycheque. Two weeks ago there was a man waiting while the man received his cheque, cashed it, took his payment out first and that took the food off the table.

The Chairman: When does this province go into Medicare?

Mr. MacPherson: I'm afraid I don't know.

Mr. Alexander Burke: Sir, you made...

The Chairman: Do you live here?

Mr. Burke: Yes.

The Chairman: Fine. Go ahead.

Mr. Burke: You made a statement about the collection agencies seeing a man at his job and taking his money. What can the people do about that? It would be through the powers of government, would it not, to give them the power to go to the job and take the money off the man? Who allows them in our community to do this?

The Chairman: It's not his fault.

Mr. Burke: Just answer the question.

Mr. MacPherson: I would just like to point out that these are problems which we have to attack. We have to help the people who are the poor who are being picked on by this segment of our society who are living off of the poor and these are points I'm just finding out by going out and working with the poor. These are things that we have to fight. You know they shouldn't be in the building. They shouldn't be allowed to bother the workers and this is an education process and this is what we have to do. This is a need that we have to overcome.

Mr. Burke: Thank you.

Father Simpson (Charlottetown): There was one question asked or at least it was insinuated that the amount of money that was used or gobbled up in administration, money that perhaps would do better good or more good if it got directly to the poor. Now, I have in mind particularly the Department of Indian Affairs and the criticism has often been made that a large percentage of the money that is allocated for the Indian Affairs branch of the Government is certainly gobbled up by the bureaucrats and by public servants and so on, and only really a small portion really gets down to help the Indians.

Now is this true and is it true of all the welfare organizations or welfare department? Altogether too much is gobbled up by bureaucracy.

The Chairman: Well, Father Simpson, Senator Belisle who asked the question asked, it because it was a very reasonable question and a very appealing question because it certainly appealed to you.

Senator Belisle: Mr. Chairman, I didn't ask the question.

The Chairman: Well, whoever asked the question. Senator Sparrow. It's a very sensitive question and it's often asked and people want to know how much for administration, how much goes out and this is quite a reasonable question. You asked the same question to us but none of us can answer your question in detail but when one makes the statement that the vast proportion of it is paid out in administration as against what goes to the Indians you are entirely wrong. Whoever makes that statement is entirely wrong. The administration in the Indian Affairs Department situation as I know it is in no ways higher—maybe a little bit, I don't know because we have—they have to do a great deal of personal work—maybe a little higher, but not out of line as far as I know.

Father Simpson: What information have you got?

The Chairman: I have no data here.

Father Simpson: What control have we got?

The Chairman: Well, only government control. The Department has the control over spending the money and they are pretty careful on that. My contact with the Indian Affairs Department has been that they are spending the money pretty usefully. They may not be doing too much good, but I didn't think it was overburdened with administration although I can't give you the figures. I have been at various times on the Indian Affairs Committee and that is what I have learned and I know something about Indian Affairs.

Father Simpson: Well, I have talked to the people who are in the field helping the Indians—not only on the island but particularly in Western Canada and this is their impression.

Senator Sparrow: Mr. Chairman, we're discussing this administration cost and I wasn't asking the question to try and find an answer that there was too much administration costs, out in this presentation and in the many others we have had there is the continual recommendation that we have more administration, more workers in the field and we require more money for more workers and we heard this in the Education Brief and the Social Workers' Brief. If there is more money to come it's got to come and what you are suggesting is that it has to come—more money to be filtered directly down as well as additional money to have the administration administered properly. Is that what you are saying?

Mr. MacPherson: The supporting agencies to go along with this and to give these agencies a chance to work.

The Chairman: You spoke of local agencies who were working pretty well independent of everyone else. Would you please describe what these agencies are doing here, because I believe they are doing something a little differently.

Mr. MacPherson: Well, our Bureau instead of the social assistance being granted directly from the central office, it comes down through a bureau and this way we can work with the poor and still have the money to help them with their basic needs. This way instead of having two contacts and an investigator from the central office comes out and gets these files on them and myself goes in to the house and tries to find work for them and help them with their problems. I have control of both and I can use the money as a lever to work with them. Also the Bureau runs an adoption agency and a home for unwed mothers and counselling and now they are starting the courses for the poor. This is what the agency is doing.

The Chairman: Well, does the agency have complete discretion to do what it thinks ought to be done subject to accounting for the money; is that all?

Mr. MacPherson: Yes. This is what we have to account for, for the money. We are limited. We can work with the poor and give them the money but if the investigation is taken over by the Provincial Government, they think that this man was paid too much money, we are responsible for it.

The Chairman: They charge you back?

Mr. MacPherson: Right.

The Chairman: Well, how long have you carried on this rather interesting programme?

Mr. MacPherson: Well, I don't know the number of years but I know it's for the past two years.

The Chairman: You have been in there two years?

Mr. MacPherson: No.

The Chairman: What is the incidence of charge-back? What is the incidence of charge-back in any period that you can remember?

Mr. MacPherson: I only know of one and maybe I will ask Sister Joan from the floor out here. She might know of some. How many times were there charge-backs?

The Chairman: How many times did you have to account for overpayment, sister?

Sister Joan: Well, you don't have to account for it because we really try not to have overpayments. Last February we had some overpayment, but not really possibly through all the fault of the agencies. In a few cases, you know, we took at face value, but most of the time we never pay the maximum in our agency so you don't really have to worry about overpayment.

The Chairman: Well, it was just a matter of judgment, wasn't it? Did it involve a great deal of money?

Sister Joan: No. Not too much because it was under the alcoholic treatment programme.

Mr. MacPherson: What it does, when you do make overpayments and then there is more pressure which comes from the top to check your files because you made some mistakes with the files and since then we have had our files investigated once a month instead of every six months; so this just adds extra work because you have to make sure.

Senator Hastings: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the witness how many employees are there in your office administering this thing?

Mr. MacPherson: Two employees.

The Chairman: Besides yourself?

Mr. MacPherson: No, counting myself.

Senator Hastings: Two people?

Mr. MacPherson: Yes.

Senator Hastings: And is there anyone in the field?

Mr. MacPherson: We are in the field and we are doing that work too.

Senator Hastings: And how many clients would you have?

Mr. MacPherson: Well, we have roughly one hundred and fifty.

Senator Hastings: Have you given consideration to employing or taking into your office some of the poor themselves to train them in social welfare work?

Mr. MacPherson: No, not to my knowledge. We have been talking about this. We were talking about bringing somebody in. I come from a family of twelve and my father was a miner and I know what it's like. I didn't come from a family with a ten-thousand-dollar income. He raised us on four or five thousand dollars; he brought up twelve of us. He gave us all an education, but just because he worked extra time himself to make this, you know; we can't expect it of all the people.

Senator Hastings: I am not questioning your qualifications or your motives.

Mr. MacPherson: No, I know that. We haven't taken any of the poor in for training.

Senator Hastings: You mentioned that they have to be educated as to what is available to them. This would be one way by starting to educate three or four of them in your office and you might find that they would be very good administrators, being well qualified on poverty themselves.

Mr. MacPherson: Along with that we hope in this pilot project we are starting to make it known because they are the ones who have friends in this category and they are going to take it to the people and this is what we hope to do. The question is how far can you go with nothing? This programme that we are setting up is strictly volunteer. We have borrowed a hall, we have borrowed instructors to give these courses and it's all on a voluntary basis.

Senator Hastings: I was going to ask who finances your operations?

Mr. MacPherson: We are supported by the United Appeal.

The Chairman: Up to a point?

Mr. MacPherson: Yes, up to a point. Somebody asked who was the administrator of the job and she said "St. Joseph".

Senator Hastings: Who is the other agency?

Mr. MacPherson: The Protestant Family Service Bureau.

Senator Hastings: Is it the same way?

Mr. MacPherson: Yes.

Senator Hastings: Not St. Joseph?

Mr. MacPherson: No.

Senator Fergusson: I would like to ask the witness isn't a hundred and fifty a very large case load?

Mr. MacPherson: For two workers it is.

Senator Fergusson: Well, isn't it unreasonable large to be able to do a good job?

Mr. MacPherson: Well, depends on how much time you are going to spend. If you are spending twelve or fifteen hours with them a day and you come back to the office at night to do your paper work and catch up—it all depends on how much effort you put into it. It is a large case load and we have to be sure that we do a fair job, but we are trying our best with what we have to work with.

Senator Fergusson: You should be congratulated for handling such a large caseload as that.

The Chairman: As I understand it, when you were at school you were taught thirty was the load?

Mr. MacPherson: Yes, twenty-five to thirty was a load.

The Chairman: The two briefs that are being heard in the other room is the one by Mr. Batcheler and Mr. Cahill and Mr. Morrison. That is in the other room and you can go out there and Mr. Lord will show you the way out.

Mr. Blakley: I think your question of the cost of administration versus the amount of money being administered to reach the poor is adequate. You have two workers and a hundred and fifty people for a caseload. I had occasion to look at the Kings County Welfare Bureau Administration costs last year and the only conclusions I could come to were that they were providing the service from a donation that amounted to several thousand dollars by each member of that agency. The director's salary would be probably four thousand dollars below that of any equivalent position elsewhere and this goes down through the agencies. So our administration costs for welfare in this province are miniscule.

The Chairman: Well, Mr. Blakley you know better than that. Listen to me for one moment while you are on your feet and you are such an intelligent fellow. You start out doing your job, looking after one hundred and fifty people with two people whom you work to death and they don't do a good job because there is only twenty-four hours in a day. The result is that people are not getting the kind of service that they ought to get from poorer people where they could conceivably get better service and save you money. There isn't any saving at all.

Mr. Blakley: It's not a saving, but is a very responsible use of money and I think the purpose of our brief this morning was to point out that we do not have adequate resources for administration.

The Chairman: No, but the one hundred thousand dollars he has to spend isn't squandering. At the moment, he is just breaking his back.

Mr. Blakley: That's the point.

The Chairman: Yes but they can spend a few more dollars on administration, do a much better job for the poor.

Mr. Blakley: I hope so.

The Chairman: Not spending any more money.

Mr. Blakley: I would hope so.

The Chairman: Well, that is what I am talking about. I hope you agree.

Senator Sparrow: Are you suggesting that this is a cold calculated conspiracy against the poor—were you telling us this and I think you were—a person, a family is entitled to $325 by law, but we conspire against them to cut them down to $175. That's what we are doing. Is that because of the shortage of the dollars—sure they are entitled to it by law, but there is just not enough money in the pot to give each one the $325. Is this what it boils down to?

Mr. MacPherson: To my knowledge this is true. There is just not enough money to go around.

Senator Sparrow: If you had a budget of $400 and you gave one person $325 the next person that comes along almost in as much need, you only have $75 to give them?

Mr. MacPherson: Right.

The Chairman: No, no. You have him running out of money when the second person comes along and that is not right.

Mr. MacPherson: That's true. If I am dealing with say seventy-five clients and I give everyone the maximum amount, I could probably go over fifty before my money runs out, but I have twenty-five that I can't do anything for as far as supplying the basic need is concerned.

The Chairman: No, just a moment. What you are doing is dividing the money evenly amongst the seventy-five and if you only looked after fifty you deny twenty-five. Let's get this straight. You don't deny the twenty-five. You divide the money as best you can amongst the seventy-five, so that they all get a fair deal.

Mr. MacPherson: Yes, I think that is what the senator was asking?

Senator Sparrow: If you are distributing welfare now and you have a family that is getting, say $325 a month, do you have a family with less than that, say, with as much need?

Mr. MacPherson: No, we are dividing it out as equally as we possibly can to everyone. Everyone is treated on an equal basis and nobody's given so much because he is so-and-so and we just try to work it this way.

Senator Hastings: Who sets your budget?

Mr. MacPherson: You mean from the social assistance end of it?

Senator Hastings: That's right. At the beginning of the month do you have so much money to work with?

Mr. MacPherson: We work with the agency's money and then at the end of the month the files are turned over to the Provincial Welfare and then they reimburse us.

The Chairman: There is no limit to the budget?

Mr. MacPherson: We can only work with what we have.

Senator Hastings: But you are not limited to so many cases next month or so much money next month?

Mr. MacPherson: No. I would just love to see what would happen if we could work it this way.

The Chairman: We have another brief to consider. Thank you very much, Mr. MacPherson. You have done very well; you have done your job very admirably within your limitations. Thank you.

The next presentation is from the Prince Edward Island Newstart Incorporated. On my immediate right is Miss Andrena Sandford, the programme designer, and Mr. Louis Richard, counsellor. In the course of their dialogue they will indicate what this programme is all about and then the questions will come afterwards.

Mr. Louis Richard (Counsellor, Prince Edward Island Newstart Incorporated): Mr. Chairman and honourable senators, we at Newstart think it is a very commendable venture for a committee of such national scope to give such timely importance to the problems of poverty. We hope that these discussions will lead to future better planning for the problems of poverty that we are all here to study. We wish also to add that we in our own way have a research organization and are very interested and eager in bridging the gap between the affluent members of our society and the poverty stricken.

Miss Andrena Sandford (Programme Designer, Prince Edward Island Newstart Incorporated): I think it might be useful to begin with if we were to give you a short resume of what Newstart is, what it is trying to do. The P.E.I. Newstart, as perhaps you know, is part of the Canadian Newstart Programme and there are actually six Newstarts, one in each of the three Maritime Provinces and one in each of the three Prairie Provinces. The individual Newstarts are all funded by the Federal Government, but each is set up as an independent corporation.

All of the Newstarts are concerned with researching to human resource development, but each one is dealing first of all with a different type of population and secondly, each is using a different approach and each is giving a different emphasis to human resources development. The Prince Edward Island Newstart, of course, operates in Kings County, so that it is dealing with a rural population. It is working an area which has traditionally been concerned with farming and fishing. At the beginning, the Prince Edward Island Newstart's main concern was to develop a training programme and in the course of giving these training programmes in the field with farmers in the area of farm management and with the homemakers for families who have a very low income—$2,000 or less a year and they have also worked with young men and women who have been either unemployed or underemployed and lack training to prepare for future employment. In order to prepare them for a better type of working life, we have given them basic education and vocational training that might be business fields or it might be an introduction to trade training or it might be preparation for what we call parent professional occupations, things like daycare attendance, nursing attendance and so on.

However, since the beginning of the P.E.I. Newstart a couple of years ago, its mandate has broadened somewhat and now we are trying to fulfil other parts of the human resources development and in order to do so we have instituted some community service centres in two communities in Kings County. One in Souris and one in Morell. The community centres have daycare centres associated with them and they look after approximately twenty to thirty children. We also have a counselling service which is in addition a referral service in an attempt to link the people in the area with the social agencies and with government departments which for the most part are located in Charlottetown.

The community workers also serve as a catalyst for community action in Morell and in Souris. This is just a brief outline of what Newstart is doing and I haven't touched at all on the theory behind what we are doing.

Mr. Richard: I introduced the concept of bridging the gap and I would now like to develop this for a few moments with you. In our North American society abundance where many people have the right to great affluence and in a society where free enterprise is in vogue, it seems to me that the distance that exists between the disadvantaged and the haves and have-nots will have to be breached if for no other reason than we are losing a lot of human resources.

It seems that the history has shown that these people, the haves, will not come down to meet the have-nots. I think it's fairly safe to say that the haves will continue to prosper; they will continue to acquire wealth and profit by the good life. It seems that we must find some way to upgrade many of the have-nots, preferably all of them, so that they too can fully benefit of the good life. These people are not going to be able to do it on their own. They will have to be helped to take giant steps not only to meet the haves, but also in the hope of reaching the haves when they will have acquired additional wealth.

Miss Sandford: I think I should emphasize the Prince Edward Island Newstart is a research organization and therefore probably we have a more academic approach to the problems of poverty. We are not a service organization. We are not primarily concerned with solving the problems of individuals or families or communities, although in the course of our research we try to give the best service that we can. Newstart is concerned with accumulating a body of knowledge which will be useful to the service agencies. We are not on the front line of the battle. We are hopefully performing a useful function by acting as a recourse for the service organizations. They don't have the time nor the personnel to get involved in the individual cases or to document them in the course of operating their services; so this is the job of the organizations like the Prince Edward Island Newstart and all the other Newstarts.

Rather than trying to solve immediate problems, we are working towards longterm goals. First of all we are making an attempt to discover where the roots of poverty lie and where the efforts of Government Departments and the service organizations should be directed. Probably our community centres make more contributions than our training programmes and we have accumulated some information already on human resources surveys which were carried out in Kings County in the summer of 1968. Secondly, we are trying to discover more effective methods of training people toward employment, and this is where the training programmes come in. Thirdly, we are trying to explore possible methods of lessening the lack of knowledge of their rights and to the help that is available to them either on the part of the disadvantaged people in Kings County. Most of our training programmes are accompanied by a social development programme which we call life skill programmes.

The Chairman: Life what?

Miss Sandford: Life skill programmes. Skills for living; in these life skill programmes we are attempting to provide our trainees as we call them with the ability to find a better job with sufficient knowledge of the helping agency, so that they can actually go out and get help. We are trying to help them to handle the little money that they have sufficiently well so that they can lead a fairly successful family life.

Another objective of the life skill programmes is to help the people who are being trained to learn to articulate better. I think it's essential that poor people should have their voice heard. Therefore we are trying to help them articulate their situation. However, we don't say that at the end of the five years that we are going to have all the answers to the problems because we are only touching a very small area of poverty and the more you get involved in this kind of thing, the more you realize just how great the problem is. I think the case study that we used in our brief illustrates just how complex the problems and difficulties of any one family are. We are going to show you one or two slides and go into this case study just a little bit.

Mr. Richard: Mr. Chairman, I have just received word that it will be a problem to show slides, but with your permission, however, and for the benefit of the audience I would like to read a few excerpts from our brief—describing this one family.

The Chairman: Go ahead, please.

Mr. Richard:

The 'Smith' family, as we shall refer to them, lives in an impoverished section of Kings County. The parents are in their mid twenties; they have three preschool-age children and are expecting a fourth child shortly. The father is unemployed, but for occasional seasonal work, and is inclined to periodic drinking bouts. At the moment, the husband and wife are separated, and since this occurrence, Mrs. 'Smith' who is now at home with her father, has received Social Assistance for herself and her three children. In the process of working with the family, the counsellor discovered that 'Mrs. Smith' had not once shopped for groceries during a period of nine months.

Now, this statement was recorded in August and the counsellor who did ask Mrs. Smith this very question was myself. After the separation of these two, Mrs. Smith obtained some social assistance. The day after her voucher for food was spent she was very excited. She told me of shopping with her sister and children and this was a great source of excitement to her. When I did question her about when was the last time she bought groceries, she said it was a long time before last Christmas. We know that the groceries that the father did bring home were very limited and most of the food that this family ate was obtained from the neighbours. The following are excerpts from our file about this family and I quote.

The house is small, approximately fifteen feet by twenty feet, consisting of only one room—kitchen and livingroom combined, and at the far end of the house are two beds. As far as furniture is concerned, they have an old couch and a five-gallon can for one chair.

The home is an absolute firetrap. The ceilings are all stuck with potato sacks and there is not even a chimney—only pipes. There are no toilet facilities indoors or outdoors. They carry water from the stepfather's place.

One example of the father's consideration for the children comes out clearly in the case where he took one of the little girls, who attends our daycare centre, for a drive on an old Honda while he was drinking; he upset the Honda and the little girl received a badly burned leg from the exhaust pipe.

The child was in great pain all night and cried considerably; the father then beat her in an attempt to stop her crying. The next day the supervisor at our daycare centre discovered that the leg was badly infected and sent the child to the doctor where she was treated with antibiotics and the wound dressed. The child was returned to the doctor a second time for a checkup.

We can hypothesize that if there was no outside intervention the said wound suffered by this young child might have been aggravated to a great extent.

They have four or five dogs which seem to occupy a more permanent place in the home than the mother or children. It must take quite a bit of food to feed these animals and it is not known where the food is obtained.

There is no type of entertainment for the mother whatsoever. She is shut up in this 'hole' seven days a week; she has no type of relaxation or entertainment but maybe she does not realize it.

I should have added as well that this family does not even have the luxuries of electricity or telephone and they further show in the records that on a cold rainy day she was washing outside by hand. Mr. Chairman, these are the comments that we have prepared at this time and we are prepared to answer anything that is in the brief or to anything that is not already given.

The Chairman: You say you have a daycare centre here now serving between twenty and thirty children?

Mr. Richard: Yes.

The Chairman: What do the people who treat these children at the daycare centres do and why do they take them to the daycare centre?

Mr. Richard: The daycare centre was begun with the idea of providing a worthwhile service to the most disadvantaged group of the area where the centre is located. The people did not ask to come to the daycare centre. In a programme we call "Out-Reach" where we knock on doors and told the people that we had this programme where their children could come and learn to socialize with other children and learn to prepare themselves for school; there was a gradual acceptance of this programme. We provide transportation for these children and a hot meal at noontime as well as a snack at mid morning and mid afternoon and for many of these children the warm meal that we provide five days a week is the only complete meal that they get. Our purpose in doing this besides providing a service for the children was to free the mothers that have large numbers of children so that they would have a little breather for a few hours. It was also a chance to give the mothers a chance to work outside of the home where money was needed and as well to take various upgrading courses.

There is one incident that I would like to relate to this audience. When we approach poor people—especially living in a disadvantaged area and characterized by isolation and small community attitudes, we are not always met with great enthusiasm. One case that illustrates this is a family that had two children in Grade 1 and five preschoolers at home. Upon our initial contact they refused to send their children to the daycare centre. We did not get in touch with the family for a number of weeks and after it was seen that the welfare was not taking the children away, we sent a counsellor to see this woman and at this later stage she was very agreeable that we bring her children to the daycare centre as well. What happens is that when these children arrive they fit in very well with the group we already have. The mothers can convey to their children by their attitude that the mother was ready to leave them in the care of somebody else for extra hours of the day. By this time mother knew that we were not going to take the child away as is often the fear of these people.

The Chairman: What are the age of the children that you take?

Mr. Richard: The youngest child that we have is two and half and the oldest is five years. We have these divided into two groups.

Senator Inman: Speaking about this example family that the witness spoke of, this 'Smith' family, would you consider this an isolated case or would you find several families in those conditions? Another thing, why all the dogs? I live in Kings County and when we found a lot of dogs in places like that, we were rather suspicious that there might be a little moonshine around?

Mr. Richard: You might be right in that, Senator. I will give you a blunt no that this is not an isolated case. There are many more for which I have prepared no records.

Senator Inman: Could anything be done about these children? Would you consider that they should be taken by Welfare?

Mr. Richard: As was pointed out earlier this morning, we have to intervene at the family level and interject—inject something which the family can understand and use constructively. The example was given from the Child Welfare Division where a homemaker was sent to the home and at the end the young mother said "I didn't know I could be so happy as a poor person." This is a programme that we have also—a homemaker programme, who goes into the home and teaches these women the basic concepts of nutrition and how they can best deal with the money that they have at their disposal. As Miss Sandford pointed out, we are not a service organization and we are looking at better ways of reaching out to these people as I was saying our homemaker programme and our home economists work with these mothers with what they have. They have gone into such things as family nutrition, budgeting, sanitation and I must say that the response to this has been excellent. Our home economist started with a small number of people and a number of referrals from the women themselves and I think when you go into these homes—this is where we need manpower—and you have time to develop a relationship with these people, sit on their dirty chairs without raising an eyebrow—I think this is where Newstart is helping.

Mr. Skip Hambling: Louis, I am interested in the development—

The Chairman: Just a minute, please. You speak when you get permission to speak from the Chair.

Mr. Hambling: No sir, I will speak right now.

The Chairman: You don't speak now.

Mr. Hambling: Why not?

The Chairman: We are holding a meeting now and there are other people who are speaking.

Mr. Hambling: Yes sir, but I am asking a question. I have a question that I would like to have answered.

The Chairman: You will put the question through me. Go ahead, Senator Hastings.

Senator Hastings: Mr. Chairman I want to ask a question. You spoke of one daycare centre; do you have one or two? Your brief says two?

Mr. Richard: We have two. We have one in Morell and one in Souris.

Senator Hastings: And you state you have twenty or thirty children each?

Mr. Richard: A maximum of twenty in each.

Senator Hastings: Now then, getting back to this human resources survey which you took last summer, who conducted the survey?

Miss Sandford: The survey was conducted by the P.E.I. Newstart and it was restricted to Kings County. We tried to get all of the adult population in Kings County over the age of thirteen. Of course, not all of them answered the questionnaire or were willing to be interviewed, but we got the majority of the people in Kings County.

Senator Hastings: And it was conducted by the staff of Newstart?

Miss Sandford: The actual interviews were done by university students.

Senator Hastings: By university students?

Miss Sandford: Yes.

Senator Hastings: From Prince Edward Island?

Miss Sandford: Yes, that is where the majority of them come from.

Senator Hastings: How many of them would you use?

Miss Sandford: Thirty.

Senator Hastings: Now, getting to your staff of thirteen, is that the whole staff?

Mr. Richard: No. The staff of thirteen people—these people are people who have been involved in one or another ways in the preparation of this brief. We have approximately eighty in our staff.

The Chairman: Eight zero?

Mr. Richard: That's right.

Miss Sandford: This would include secretarial staff and so on.

Senator Hastings: Where do these people come from—the poverty class?

Miss Sandford: We do have additional people who are working in the daycare centres and some of the girls went through our training programme—went through a programme of training and now they are operating the daycare centres. They operate in these centres in Morell and Souris.

Senator Hastings: So that practically all of your staff is either professionally oriented or comes from middle class?

Miss Sandford: Yes.

Senator Hastings: Now, I would like to quote you from a brief that was presented to us recently in Ottawa with respect to professional staffs. It says:

The poor themselves are the most experienced and knowledgeable experts on what poverty is all about. Yet the poor are never paid to study poverty, and never paid to sit on committees and dicuss it, are never paid to research it, and are never paid to administer poverty programmes. One gleaming concrete example is a Newstart programme set up two years ago in an area heavily populated with Indians and Metis living in extreme poverty. After a year and a half of operation, the programme had built up a staff of forty-seven middle-class professionals and trained a total of twelve people, including one Indian. If research is the goal of such programmes, why don't they train the poor to be the researchers? Filtering "poverty money" down through the bulging ranks of the professionals in hopes that it would reach the poor.

I would like you to comment on that.

Mr. Richard: I don't know who said this...

Senator Hastings: It was the Company of Young Canadians in their brief.

Mr. Richard: That particular programme is not a Prince Edward Island Newstart.

Senator Hastings: No, that's in Alberta, but...

Mr. Richard: As Miss Sandford indicated, we have attempted to hire indigenous people and we have trained some. We believe that there is a lot of work to be done in this area. This is one of the areas that we are studying. We are studying a number of other areas as well, but we are giving some consideration to this. If I may read from one of the recommendations—one of three recommendations at the end of our brief on page 8, and I quote:

The poor, in order to achieve a sense of responsibility and overcome a sense of powerlessness, must take an active part in the solution of their problems. To this end it is suggested that consideration be given to consulting with the poor themselves prior to making definite statements about their conditions and plans for their future. Perhaps the time is ripe to complement the recommendations of politicians, senior civil servants, and the people in the professions with the opinions of the disadvantaged.

We feel very strongly about this.

Senator Hastings: I can give you the benefit of the manpower centre in Halifax who set up a special office in a certain part of the City of Halifax and hired twelve local people and gave them a crash course in counselling and so forth and from the views of the manager of that company that the people were ex-convicts right from the local area, and from his views it was working fine. They were just as qualified as the professional. They had the one qualification which he looked for—desire to help. It was working and working very well.

The Chairman: What research do you think might be important to us which has now been undertaken? What particular aspects are you researching perhaps with some success or immediate success?

Miss Sandford: I think probably the most original aspect of our training programme is the training that we are beginning to give in life skills, which was the term that we used. As I mentioned before, life skills is concerned with very practical skills that every person needs in his daily life. The ability to handle money, the knowledge of the resources that are available to him, the ability to speak out. Mostly these programmes are rather nebulous and they cover just about every area that you can think of, including life in the home and family.

Mr. Richard: Somebody made a comment this morning that most of the curriculum in our schools today is irrelevant—that it should be closer where the students are living. I think we are trying to make an attempt in familiarizing the disadvantaged with some of the knowledge, some of the skills that they require to compete in a highly complex world. This involves communication with the banks, interest companies, insurance companies and various types of insurance credit buying and this sort of thing as well as the information on family living.

Miss Sandford: I might add that something we haven't yet run into, but we plan to in future programmes is legal rights. Familiarizing the people who are taking our training programme with their right and the right that they do have.

The Chairman: You heard the programme this morning?

Miss Sandford: Yes.

The Chairman: Was that of any interest to you?

Mr. Richard: Certainly. I think that the points that were brought out—the fact that it was a much more difficult situation financially on the poor people who commit a crime than it is on the richer segments of society. They don't have the money. The suggestion of instalment payments if we are going to continue the present system of buying I think is an excellent idea.

The Chairman: You had a question?

Mr. Hambling: Yes, I was interested in community development component of the Newstart planning. Exactly how it works and what it seeks to do.

Mr. Richard: I think the person who is asking the question...

The Chairman: Hold everything. Your name please?

Mr. Hambling: Skip Hambling.

The Chairman: Do you live here?

Mr. Hambling: No.

The Chairman: Where do you live?

Mr. Hambling: Nova Scotia. The Company of Young Canadians in Nova Scotia.

The Chairman: You are from the Company of Young Canadians?

Mr. Hambling: Yes.

The Chairman: Whereabouts in Nova Scotia?

Mr. Hambling: Cape Breton.

The Chairman: Who is in charge?

Mr. Hambling: In Cape Breton?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Hambling: Bert Deveau.

Mr. Richard: Mr. Chairman I think the gentleman who is asking the question can possibly be as verbal if not more verbal than myself to explain to the group here what we haven't done in our community service centres because he has been hired on a consulting basis with P.E.I. Newstart and with your permission, senator, perhaps he can explain to the group what is happening.

The Chairman: What you are saying is that he is a member of your staff?

Mr. Richard: He has been with us on a consulting basis for three months.

The Chairman: And he is still a member?

Mr. Richard: Not at this time.

The Chairman: He is not now a member of the staff?

Mr. Richard: That's right.

The Chairman: Was he doing the community consulting work?

Mr. Richard: Yes.

The Chairman: That was his job precisely?

Mr. Richard: Yes.

The Chairman: Well, you tell me how well he did it then.

Mr. Richard: The theory behind the community development work is to give power to the people. This involves the work of one very dedicated person among a group or a number of groups of disadvantaged people. This person acts as a catalyst and informs a group of persons of their rights. He assists them to form into groups and to take a common united front for a solution of their problems.

The Chairman: He is an activator. That's what you call it, isn't it?

Mr. Richard: You may use that term.

The Chairman: Well, we use that term in other places; he is an agitator which has a legitimate purpose. He takes the community that is sitting on its rights or doesn't know its rights and explains the rights to it and it gets it into action and I think as a matter of fact it has worked very well in many parts of Canada.

Mr. Richard: There are indications that it is working very well in two areas where we have set this up under Mr. Hambling's supervision and the people have been assisted through a greater awareness of themselves, of their human dignity and as their value as citizens.

Mr. Dennis MacKay: Is this the type of programme that you want?

The Chairman: Just a minute. I have made it very clear that you have to put your questions through the Chair. What is your name?

Mr. MacKay: Dennis MacKay. A month ago we were contacted and told we could present a brief. Yesterday we were told that we could not present a brief. Today again we were told that we could present a brief.

The Chairman: Just a moment, please.

Mr. MacKay: Then you wanted to send us down into a room where there were a couple of Senators and a couple of members of the press. Now we don't want to only speak to you; we want to speak to the people here. I have a brief and I am going to give it. I have a brief and I am going to give it here and now. We are not the poor. We are merely witnesses. The real experts on poverty are out on the—out in their communities around the island. But they should be here. Why aren't they? Why weren't they considered? Simply, they are never considered. Welfarism dictates that they shall serve that very system that keeps them in poverty. Welfare considers the poor to be clients and the Government considers them to be poor. Now, when in the hell are we going to start treating them as human beings? Welfarism must be smashed. The people must be considered. The people will be served.

The solution is simple; not simplistic. We must stop ministering to the poor and begin working directly with them. All economic exploitation and political oppression must end. We must give power to the people. We must do it today.

Power is simply the ability to act. To consider the people is to make them free to develop their own destinies as they see them. In any way the people find. The state is the people.

The people only are sovereign. We must realize this. They don't have to command the confidence of the Government. The Government—you—must maintain the confidence of the people. The people are always right. The country and everything in it is theirs. Your only duty is to serve.

To serve the people you need only make it possible for them to achieve those goals they select; to facilitate the realization of self-defined community needs in all ways. There need be no question of fiscal responsibility or efficient administration. The only question to be asked is: What do the people want? As all comes from them, so all should return to them.

Therefore we call on you now to give power to the people. While you are still able to give it. Take the lead. Dissolve yourselves and make your funds immediately available to the citizenry.

You must act today. Yesterday was already too late. All power to the people.

The Chairman: Do the senators have any questions of the witnesses here?

21352—5½

Senator Fergusson: I would like to ask about the day centres. This is something that has been brought up in your brief and you say a great many day centres—we don't have so many but we are trying them out. I would like to know—I think if they don't do anything but provide the mothers with a little free time to catch up on what they might like to do in their homes—but I would like to know from your research how you found the mothers made use of their time. Did they use it just to catch up on themselves or did they use it to perhaps go to work, part-time work or perhaps to take some of the courses that are provided to upgrade themselves to do the work in their homes?

Mr. Richard: I think perhaps Miss Faulkner would be the person to answer that question.

The Chairman: Where is Miss Faulkner? Come up here please.

Mr. Richard: I think a member of our staff could possibly answer this question better.

The Chairman: Please, come up here.

Miss Rosemary Faulkner, Home Economist: Senator Fergusson, I agree with you that there are not enough daycare centres and especially on Prince Edward Island. On the Island there are only nine and tomorrow I am giving a brief regarding legislation for daycare centres on Prince Edward Island and hopefully a grant will encourage them to establish daycare centres especially in disadvantaged communities. Where daycare centres have been established we have found that mothers have sought employment and the mothers have been freed from the burdens of nervous tensions which is so very often the case where there are lots of little children around and a drunk husband most of the time. Mothers have sought employment and they are taking our home-making training and if nothing else they have become aware of their needs. They have also become aware that they have resources that can do these things that they never thought they could do before. If nothing else, also the family is much closer, that's what we have found.

Senator Fergusson: From your research, Miss Faulkner, you feel that we should have more daycare centres, not only in Prince Edward Island, but throughout Canada?

Miss Faulkner: That's true. For instance, the Canadian Welfare Council is putting out their paper on research done on daycare centres all over Canada. When this paper is out—I've been waiting for it for three months but it still hasn't come—you will see a great many changes that have been made, I hope.

Senator Fergusson: Thank you.

Mr. Richard: Another comment I would just add is that communities outside the communities where we have located our daycare centres and people have read about these, they have visited our daycare centres and a number of women have come to us asking for the feasibility of setting up another daycare centre, so the word is getting around.

Miss Faulkner: The problem is that no one supports people who want to start daycare centres. There is no guide or anything. Even poor people who want to start their own centres can't because there is no one to help them. In a letter we wrote to the Premier we requested daycare legislation immediately. As it stands now, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island are the only provinces without daycare legislation.

The Chairman: New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island?

Miss Faulkner: Yes.

The Chairman: What do you mean by daycare legislation?

Miss Faulkner: Daycare legislation is required so that people may establish daycare centres that they may be most useful to the children because a lot of people will establish daycare centres only to obtain means for themselves and have no regard for the children. Daycare legislation lays down required facilities, programme requirements, staff requirements, etc. I would like to comment on C.Y.C's. comment that we should be training the poor. All our girls in our daycare centres are from the disadvantaged and wherever we work in the home we work with disadvantaged ladies. By training disadvantaged women to work and visiting homemakers for the Department of Welfare.

The Chairman: What do you mean by "disadvantaged"?

Miss Faulkner: Disadvantaged both culturally and economically. Income below the subsistence necessary for survival and culturally they don't—they aren't aware of their legal rights, they aren't aware of things around them or where to get good buys, where to send children for their education; you know, for example daycare centres—just that they are disadvantaged. They just don't have the chance that middle-class society does.

Senator Fergusson: Thank you very much for a very informative answer.

The Chairman: Were you asking a question, Mr. Burke?

Mr. Burke: Yes sir.

The Chairman: Go ahead.

Mr. Burke: Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, there are two parts to this question. Part one is how many, if any, of our colleague friends who have presented the brief, how many, if any, poor did he invite to this meeting today?

The Chairman: What is your second question?

Mr. Burke: How much money is it costing the people of Canada for this Committee to talk among themselves when the poor people hear nothing of it?

The Chairman: I can assure that it's costing the people of Canada nothing more than it would under ordinary circumstances. If we weren't employed here we would be employed in Ottawa and if they weren't here they would be some other place.

Senator Sparrow: We have the same problems in our minds as these people have since we have started out on these hearings. The problem is not finding the means of talking directly with the poor people and we are finding that we have to go right out into the field which we are doing. Is there a way from the Newstart people as to how we can get to the poor people themselves up here?

Miss Faulkner: You come around to my home tomorrow morning.

Senator Sparrow: No, no, I said that we are doing that.

The Chairman: We are going out tomorrow morning and it has already been arranged.

Miss Faulkner: I think it is the development department.

The Chairman: Well, it might be the development department but no matter who they are, we have been invited out tomorrow morning.

Senator Sparrow: All of us here are saying the same thing, that there is no poor people here. We would like to see this hall full of poor people. How do we get them here?

Mr. MacKay: They will come to you.

Senator Connolly: Mr. Chairman, perhaps we should improve the loudspeaker system so that everybody could hear. I must confess that there were some things that I couldn't hear and I am a member of the Committee. Now these mechanical difficulties are not the responsibility of this Committee and I say this with some trepidation, ladies and gentlemen, because I too come from Halifax. There are different types coming from Halifax. Now, if the public address system is at fault, then perhaps our staff could make arrangement the next time we sit to improve these public speaker systems. I don't think they were adequate in Halifax and I don't think they are adequate here. I think when people are sufficiently interested in this problem which is such a massive problem and can't be solved by slogans, and it can't be solved overnight, and it can't be done instantaneously and anybody who knows that, so perhaps we can let everybody who does attend with interest in their heart at least what is being said. This, as Mr. Burke says, they have not heard today, then the fault belongs to this public address system.

Mr. Burke: We only read it in the paper.

Miss Faulkner: They don't read papers.

The Chairman: Both sides here will conform to the usual practice. You have a question?

Mr. Hambling: Senator Sparrow, I think I can give you a suggestion as to how you can get the people here because this is the work that I have been involved in. You can get the people here through the process that has already been delineated somewhere from the floor, that is, through community development. That is simply going out and giving the people the power which is simply the ability to act—for if they have the ability to act, they do become vocal, they do become mobile and they do become articulate and they will be here if you gentlemen ever hold an insurrection of this nature again. Our point is simply this. Community development programmes are being instituted all across North America today. The Province of Manitoba has its own component. Newstart even has a component. The Company of Young Canadians have some projects working here. Man has been working at this for twenty-five years in the United States of America, in Pakistan, in India and in all of the emerging countries of the world. It is not a new tactic. There is nothing to be researched or done any further on it. Simply do it. It's very simple. You get the workers out there with the people and the people will come to you and they will be articulate. I suggest to you, gentlemen, that what you are afraid of is that very fact. You don't want the people to be articulate so you do not seriously consider our brief about giving power to the people. It is again, not simplistic, it is very simple and you are simply deluding yourselves if you do not direct your attention to it.

The Chairman: Senators, no further questions. This meeting is adjourned.

APPENDIX "A"

Submission to

THE SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE ON
POVERTY

The Premier's Task Force on Extended Care and Alcoholism Treatment Facilities in Prince Edward Island

Mrs. E. M. Cudmore

Mr. R. Blakely, Mr. C. W. Hill,

Dr. J. H. Maloney, Dr. M. N. Beck together with

Mr. E. A. MacDonald, Director of the Division of Child Welfare

Mr. J. E. Green, Coordinator, Human Resources Sector,

Department of Development

A. Explanation of Format

First may we apologize for the inadequacy of this submission. This reflects neither our deep concern regarding the matters into which you are making enquiry, nor the respect which we attribute to your Committee and the importance of your work.

Rather the evident lack of preparation of this submission is related to two factors. Firstly, none of us are primarily concerned in our professional roles with the problem of poverty and therefore did not take an early initiative in preparing this submission. Secondly, when your local staff representative asked us to consider making this presentation in mid-October it was then too late to entertain any thought of making adequate preparation.

We have, therefore, done the best we could under the circumstances, viz.; to prepare this covering memorandum and append to it two already prepared documents which we think have relevance to your area of enquiry and especially to that part of your charge which is stated as, "to recommend appropriate action to ensure the establishment of a more effective structure of remedial measures".

APPENDIX I. The Report of the Premier's Task Force on Extended Care and Alcohol Treatment Facilities in Prince Edward Island contains the basic concepts required in developing meaningful delivery systems of the helping services. We would direct your particular attention to the Introduction and Chapter 1 of this report. These we think will be of interest to your committee and we are prepared to discuss them with you. APPENDIX II. An address to Rotary on Helping Services for Youth on P.E.I., adds to this basic document some local statistics and a brief review of the progress to date in working toward an improvement in the helping services in this province.

B. Basic Principles

In an attempt to focus attention on the areas in which this group might make some contribution to the deliberations of your committee, we would state the following principles as guidelines for discussion.

1. The extent of personal and social problems generally comprehended under such terms as poverty, cultural deprivation, disability, child neglect, alcoholism, mental retardation, unemployment, family breakdown, mental illness, delinquency, etc. is simply enormous. Human need cannot be defined solely in terms of cash income and poverty cannot be discussed in terms of economics only.

2. These human situations and conditions are highly inter-related, interdependent and really inseparable from one another.

3. Our helping services, in Prince Edward Island and in the rest of the country, are not now able to cope effectively with this vast range of human misery and personal suffering. They are underdeveloped, underfunded, undermanned and badly organized.

4. The historical traditions in the development of our helping services have resulted in these services becoming fragmented into isolated professional and administrative empires which communicate very poorly with each other and collaborate hardly at all in their efforts.

5. This fragmentation of service delivery systems results in serious gaps and overlaps in the services being provided.

6. Our helping services must become visible to persons in need, must become aware of persons in need as individuals, must be prepared to work with the whole person and his family, and must welcome their clients.

7. An effective attack on the enormous problems of human need in our society demands expansion of these service programs.

a decentralization of helping services to the home communities of the clients being served, and above all the integration in the local community of those services now being provided through private agencies, and the various governmental departments—Health, Welfare, Education, Corrections (Attorney-General) and Manpower.

Respectfully submitted,

Mrs. E. M. Cudmore
Mr. R. Blakely
Mr. C. W. Hill
Dr. J. H. Maloney
Dr. M. N. Beck
Mr. E. A. MacDonald
Mr. J. E. Green

APPENDIX "B"

A SUBMISSION TO THE SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE ON POVERTY

PRESENTED ON BEHALF OF THE CATHOLIC SOCIAL WELFARE BUREAU
NOVEMBER, 1969

Everyone has the right to a standard of living adequate for the health and well-being of himself and of his family, including food, clothing, housing and medical care and necessary social services and the right to security in the event of unemployment, sickness, disability, widowhood, old age, or other lack of livelihood in circumstances beyond his control.

Article 25, United Nations Declaration of Human rights

Even though there is widespread national and international acceptance of this declaration, we still find within our urban setting many families, who through no fault of their own, have not attained this standard of living.

What are some of the causes of such a situation? We feel that the more prevalent ones in the Charlottetown area are low wages, limited job opportunities, inadequate education, inadequate household management, alcoholism, poor mental and physical health. We do not feel it necessary to go into these causes at any length because they have been studied and restudied by many experts.

We are more concerned with the attitude that society has toward the poor and how this attitude is communicated to the poor. Do we feel that the poor are, in the main, responsible for their own condition? Or do we admit that society, through its attitude, has perpetuated poverty?

It is evident that society has accepted its obligation to its members by means of legislation passed by government in the hope of alleviating the social conditions of the poor. However, in many cases, the humanistic basis of the legislation is soon lost in the midst of the bureaucratic organization which administrators feel necessary to implement the legislation. We become so concerned with the economic and financial aspects of a program and the fear of its effect on the tax structure, that we in welfare barely meet the basic needs of the poor in relation to today's standard of living. As a result, we do not look at the seemingly more expensive, long-term rehabilitation possibilities but seem content with social welfare programs as they are. So often, we give money to the poor in the form of welfare cheques because to some this still appears to be the simplest and most economical way of satisfying, to some degree, this segment of our population. At the same time, we realize that we have not solved the problem of poverty in Canada. Are we looking for new programs that are going to perform miracles in a short period of time? Perhaps we should look carefully at the established welfare programs to see if they are reaching the potential which the legislators envisioned.

In order to illustrate this point, we would like to briefly examine the Social Assistance Act as it is administered in Prince Edward Island. Assistance to the poor is simply a means of obtaining the bare essentials of life. The policy has been to make it extremely difficult and complicated for an applicant to satisfy the qualifying regulations. Our attitude has caused the poor to feel degraded when they request assistance and so we support the feelings of inadequacy which they already have.

What do the poor really know about the services and assistance that our society, through government, has made available to them? We hide from the poor the rights we have legislated for their benefit. We appear to feel that we must give the poor the minimum to which they are entitled. Why have we not disseminated the policies and the legislation to that segment of the population which it was designed to help? Are we afraid that when this knowledge becomes available we would be unable to financially meet the needs of the people to whom we have already committed ourselves in legislation? Or are we afraid that people will take advantage of these programs? These are questions that can only be answered by government.

Financial help, even if the maximum were given, is not the answer. The poor need to know that society really does care what happens to them and their families. If we neglect the poor's psychological needs, no amount of money is going to satisfy their inner wants; such as the feelings of being needed and being a part of society as a whole. It is only when we can make them feel that they belong to society will we hope to break the chain of poverty. We are handicapped in this area by a shortage of qualified personnel in the field of counselling, budgeting, nutrition, public health and community development.

In addition to qualified personnel, we must inform the poor of the programs and services that have been set up for their benefit. There is a segment of society that seemingly makes its living by exploiting the poor. How does this segment reach the poor and convince them of their "needs"? Through the use of the mass media, they contact the poor and lead them to believe that they will attain the standard of living towards which they have been striving. In the end the poor are in a worse state than originally. We, as a society, take no steps to reach these people before they are exploited. Our programs have only given the poor the bare essentials of life, forgetting their need for guidance and support.

It must be pointed out that recipients of welfare assistance are but a small portion of those who are living at or below the poverty line. There are families who struggle through life unable to reach a decent standard of living because of a poor educational background. They are forced to work for wages that are out of step with today's cost of living.

In Charlottetown there has been little or no industrialization and, consequently, job opportunities for the unskilled and semi-skilled are very scarce. If we are unable to supply jobs at adequate wages, we have denied the worker his right to find in his work the means whereby he may satisfy his own needs and those of his family. Such a situation upsets family life and endangers the peace and harmony that should reign in the home. The head of the family is humiliated because of his inability to fulfill his family responsibilities; he feels that he is a failure. Moreover, a good number of those who are working, live in daily fear of losing their job. They know that there are many unskilled and semi-skilled workers on the labor market who could easily replace them.

As a consequence of low wages, many people are forced to live in substandard housing. Rodent-infested buildings which have been condemned by the health authorities still house some of the poor. Heating such premises is a major expense which adds to the frustrations and tensions of this class of people. This type of housing is the only kind that is available to the poor who usually have large families.

The poor are a very real part of society. If they cannot contribute to society and share in its productivity, the whole of society suffers. We must realize that by bettering the social, educational, economic and psychological conditions of the poor, we will be bettering the whole of society. An investment in the rehabilitation of the poor through better wages, better housing, better education and so on is an investment in the whole of society.

RECOMMENDATIONS:

The two major causes of poverty in the Charlottetown area can be clearly identified as lack of job opportunities and low wages. We, therefore, recommend if this is feasible that government encourage diversified and profitable industries to locate here and pay a living wage to its employees thus the first step in combating poverty would have been taken.

In Charlottetown, we have a unique situation regarding the distribution of social assistance. The two private welfare agencies are able to administer this program directly to the poor. This enables the worker to use the money not only as a means of satisfying the client's immediate needs, but also as a lever to become involved in the rehabilitation process of the client. We believe that this set up offers a greater advantage over the central distribution of welfare cheques. We recommend that for this system to be truly effective we need more workers and additional supportive programs such as courses in child care, budgeting and nutrition.

A valuable asset in our work would be the availability of the maximum amount of assistance to which a client is entitled. However, we are aware this is hampered by the economic limitations of our Province.

We have made reference to those who exploit the poor. Many of the poor are deeply in debt with one or more of the money lending institutions in the area. The fact that they have no hope of ever regaining solid ground is a strong supporting factor in their feelings of inadequacy. We try in so many ways to aid the poverty-stricken but offer no protection against the wolves of society. We recommend, therefore, legislation compel such companies to make a full-scale investigation of each case before credit is granted. If a person is found to be in a financial state that would likely make it impossible for him to meet the repayments the applicant should be refused credit.

CONCLUSION:

We are devoting much of our time to searching for ways to break the cycle of poverty. But in order for the poor to feel a part of society the rest of society must change its attitude towards the lower social economic group. If the stigma that is attached to poverty was erased, it would be a major breakthrough in the war on poverty. All must be educated to an awareness of the problem and all must be willing to work for a satisfactory solution.

This brief is one of the many that you will hear throughout Canada. It is concerned with the problems of the Charlottetown area which are similar to other areas in the Atlantic region.

We thank you for the opportunity to be heard and we hope we have aided you in some small way in your responsibility to make recommendations which would benefit the poor.

BRIEF HISTORY OF CATHOLIC SOCIAL WELFARE BUREAU

The Catholic Social Welfare Bureau had its origin as an activity of the Charlottetown Hospital, which was operated by the Sisters of St. Martha. In 1931 a Social Service Branch of the hospital was started to serve the needy of the city and provide part-time nursing care.

1934—Organization of Catholic Charities on a diocesan wide basis.

1942—Moved to location at 135 Pownall Street

1948—Catholic Social Welfare Bureau became incorporated

1950—Constituted as a child welfare agency under the "Children's Protection Act".

Services:

Administers general welfare assistance to needy persons in the Charlottetown area.

—Child Welfare Services:

- (a) unmarried mothers (residence)
- (b) foster homes
- (c) adoptions

—Co-operates with other agencies in operation of a day care program.

—Operates a detoxification unit for alcoholics (Talbot House).

The Catholic Social Welfare Bureau is a member of the Canadian Welfare Council and the Catholic Charities of Canada.

APPENDIX "C"

Brief presented to

THE SENATE COMMITTEE ON POVERTY

by

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND NEWSTART
INCORPORATED

Montague
Prince Edward Island
November 6, 1969

Confederation Centre, Charlottetown
Prince Edward Island

The following brief has been prepared by Prince Edward Island NewStart, which, as part of the Canada NewStart program, is conducting research into methods of human resources development. Based in Kings County, P.E.I., the company, which began its actual operations in the winter of 1967-68, has been concerned both with the development of individual potential (through educational and occupational training programs) and with community development (principally through community service centres in Morell and Souris, two of the larger communities of Kings County). By instituting the training programs and the community service centres, P.E.I. NewStart has been brought into close contact with some of the large number of disadvantaged people in the area. In addition, by carrying out a Human Resources Survey in the summer of 1968, it has accumulated evidence that poverty does exist in Kings County, information which has since been substantially confirmed and expanded by the reports of NewStart personnel involved in the actual implementation of our projects.

Innumerable attempts have been made to define exactly what constitutes poverty, and the bemused inquirer can only conclude that there are as many faces to poverty as there are poor people. However, certain factors continually recur in any description of the disadvantaged and, as the Human Resources Survey convincingly demonstrates, these factors operate upon the people of Kings County. Lack of steady, well-paying employment is undoubtedly a major cause of poverty in an area in which the traditional sources of work (farming and fishing) are in a process of decline and which has little in the way of natural resources to attract industries. (Of the men who responded to the survey, 47.55 per cent of those unemployed at the time reported that they could not find work.) It follows, as a result of this fact, that many families in the area are subsisting on an extremely low income (consisting for the most part of welfare payments and family allowances). Unavoidably, these families are restricted to the lowest possible standard of living—highly inadequate food, clothing and shelter, with the inevitable accompaniment of physical and mental deprivation. In this situation, education becomes an expensive luxury rather than a basic right, as the drop-out rate from schools shows (61.10 per cent of the men and 41.21 per cent of the women who took part in the survey have an education of grade 8 or less). Without education and vocational training, the unemployed are severely handicapped in their search for jobs. In addition, while jobs may be available elsewhere (e.g., in urban centres of other provinces), it would appear from the survey that the disadvantaged population of Kings County is relatively immobile or, if eventually impelled to move, will prove to be incapable of achieving successful adjustment to an environment other than the one they are accustomed to. The survey revealed that 57.62 per cent of the male population interviewed and 44.48 per cent of the female population—i.e. 1,390 men and 1,016 women—had left Kings County to look for employment or for higher-paying jobs, and had subsequently returned.

The immobility of the disadvantaged, combined with the isolation of a rural population, affects not only employment, but also their physical and mental well-being. Since most of the medical services and social agencies which could provide the poor with valuable assistance are located in the larger centres (principally Charlottetown), they are, to all intents and purposes, virtually inaccessible to the people who require them most. It was largely to provide a necessary link between the people and the services that NewStart decided to set up its community service centres.

Lack of employment, minimal incomes and a low standard of living, insufficient education and job skills, immobility: these factors crop up with significant striking regularity.

So far, we have been concerned with a general appraisal of some of the causes of poverty in this rural area of P.E.I. In order to illustrate the effects of poverty and the seemingly insoluble web of frustration in which the disadvantaged person finds himself, we would like to present the case of a family with whom the counselling staff of one of our community service centres has been working. The "Smith" family, as we shall refer to them, lives in an impoverished section of Kings County. The parents are in their mid-twenties; they have three pre-school-age children and are expecting a fourth child shortly. The father is unemployed, but for occasional seasonal work, and is inclined to periodic drinking bouts. At the moment, the husband and wife are separated, and since this occurrence, Mrs. "Smith", who is now at home with her father, has received Social Assistance for herself and her three children. In the process of working with the family, the counsellor discovered that Mrs. "Smith" had not once shopped for groceries during a period of nine months.

The following are excerpts from the file compiled by the counsellor who has been most involved with the "Smith" family:

"The house is small, approximately 15' x 20' consisting of only one room—kitchen and living-room combined, and at the far end of the house are two beds. As far as furniture is concerned, they have an old couch and a five-gallon can for one chair.

"The home is an absolute fire-trap. The ceilings are all stuck with potato sacks and there is not even a flue—only pipes. There are no toilet facilities inside or out. They carry water from the step-father's place.

"One example of the father's consideration for the children comes out clearly in the case where he took one of the little girls, who attends the Day Care Centre, for a drive on an old Honda while he was drinking; he upset the Honda and the little girl received a badly burned leg from the exhaust pipe; the child was in great pain all night and cried considerably; the father then beat her for crying. The next day the supervisor at the Day Care Centre discovered that the leg was badly infected and sent the child to the doctor where she was treated with antibiotics and the wound dressed; the child was returned to the doctor a second time for a check-up.

"They have four or five dogs which seem to occupy a more permanent place in the home than the mother or children. It must take quite a bit of food to feed these animals and it is not known where the food is obtained.

"There is no type of entertainment for the mother whatsoever. She is shut up in this "hole" seven days a week; she has no type of relaxation or entertainment, but maybe she does not realize this exists."

The "Smith" family is representative of many disadvantaged families in Kings County, in that their situation is compounded of an intricate network of problems. Since NewStart's intervention in the case, the father has succeeded in finding steady employment and his drinking bouts have become less frequent. The mother and children, although still separated from the husband and father, are temporarily in a more stable environment and are better-off financially. However, a great deal of work still remains to establish the "Smiths" as a successful family unit. NewStart has only begun to document the nature of poverty in Kings County. The importance of continuing research into the causes and possible solutions of the problem cannot be too strongly emphasized.

During the past two years, P.E.I. NewStart has carried out a number of experimental training programs in farm management, homemaking, basic education upgrading, introductory trades training, and vocational training (for day care attendants, male institutional attendants, and sales personnel). Many of these courses have been accompanied by a social development program designed to teach the practical skills (money management, job-finding techniques, etcetera) necessary for successful family life and rewarding employment. The community service centres, since their opening this summer, have been active in teaching home management and in providing day care centres for pre-school children from disadvantaged families. The community workers, operating from the centres, have been involved in encouraging community action and in providing a counselling service.

Since NewStart is primarily a research organization, all of its projects are being documented and evaluated, and it is proposed that the results of the research presently being carried out will be made available after the close of NewStart's operations to various government departments and social agencies. Although final conclusions cannot be reached until a later time, we would like to present the following recommendations based on our findings to date.

Recommendations:

—The problem of poverty in any area, whether rural or urban, must be met by a combined force, rather than by a host of individual organizations, whose independent actions often result in much duplication of effort; there is an urgent necessity for all private, public, and voluntary sectors to pool resources. However, it must also be remembered that no single program will suffice; the problems of the disadvantaged, many and varied as they are, can only be solved by an energetic, simultaneous attack on every front.

—Rural poverty, aggravated by isolation and small community attitudes, can be dealt with most effectively on a regional rather than a national level. A national body, no matter how competent and concerned is unavoidably removed from the immediate impact of poverty. A local body is more aware of problems particular to the area and is better able to institute measures most appropriate for that area.

—The poor, in order to achieve a sense of responsibility and overcome a sense of powerlessness, must take an active part in the solution of their problems. To this end it is suggested that consideration be given to consulting with the poor themselves prior to making definite statements about their conditions and plans for their future. Perhaps the time is ripe to complement the recommendations of politicians, senior civil servants, and the people in the professions with the opinions of the disadvantaged.

—If the problem of poverty in Canada is to be overcome, it is essential that extensive and comprehensive research such as that presently being conducted by the Canada NewStart program be continued until effective solutions can be found and implemented. The disadvantaged segment of the population will then be provided with the opportunities for healthy development and successful living which the advantaged already enjoy.

The study of the development of human resources and their utilization can yield much new knowledge, knowledge which can teach us about the social and economic interactions of man and by which we may alter these interactions. We must continue through research to seek knowledge and to use that knowledge for the betterment of the Canadian people.

Respectfully submitted,
Austin L. Bowman
Executive Director

AUTOBIOGRAPHY

STAFF OF PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND
NEWTART INCORPORATED

Name: Austin L. Bowman

Age: 38

Education: B.Sc. 1962 Agr. McGill; M.S. 1965 Cornell University; Ph. D. 1967 Cornell University.

Position: Executive Director.

Name: Thomas R. Connor

Age: 34

Education: A.A.S. 1956 Alfred State Tech.; B.S. 1962 S. U. C. Oswego; M.S. 1965 S. U. C. Cortland.

Position: Director of Research.

Name: Thomas M. Roger

Age: 27

Education: B.A. 1963 St. Francis Xavier University; M.Ed. 1966 University of Ottawa.

Position: Assistant Director of Research.

Name: Peter C. McGonnell

Age: 33

Education: B.A. 1959 St. Dunstons University; M.A. 1962 Dalhousie University.

Position: Assistant Director of Research (Measurement and Evaluation).

Name: Edmond C. LeClair.

Age: 34

Education: B.A. 1958 St. Dunstons M.S.W. St. Francis Xavier University

Position: Social Development Specialist

Name: Andrena E. Sandford

Age: 24

Education: B.A. 1965 Bishop University M.Litt. 1968 University of Edinburgh

Position: Social Development Program Designer

Name: Louis Richard

Age: 26

Education: B.A. 1964 University of Moncton, M.S.W. 1967 St. Francis Xavier Position: Counsellor Supervisor

Name: Leo Walsh

Age: 23

Education: B.A. 1969, Saint Dunstons University

Position: Counsellor

Name: James Cain

Age: 21

Education: B.A. 1968, St. Dunstons

University

Position: Counsellor

Name: Charles Mair

Age: 32

Education: Grade XII, working experience in finance and personnel

Position: Counsellor

Name: Christelle MacKenzie

Age: 35

Education: Experience in secretarial duties, business counselling and teaching

Position: Community Development Worker

Name: Joseph Coffin

Age: 38

Education: Two years university at St.
Dunstons Univ. 1950

Position: Community Development Worker

Name: Theresa MacDonald

Age: 46

Education: Teachers licence 2. Five years teaching experience

Position: Counsellor

Second Session—Twenty-eighth Parliament

1969

THE SENATE OF CANADA

PROCEEDINGS

OF THE

STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE

ON

POVERTY

The Honourable DAVID A. CROLL, Chairman

No. 5

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 12, 1969

WITNESSES:

Dr. J. R. Smith, Chairman, Economic Council of Canada. Dr. Sylvia Ostry, Director, Economic Council of Canada. Mrs. G. Stewart, Staff Member of the Economic Council of Canada. Mr. B. Lacombe, Staff Member of the Economic Council of Canada. Miss J. Podoluk, Statistician, Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

MEMBERS OF THE
SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE ON POVERTY

The Honourable David A. Croll, Chairman

The Honourable Senators

Bélisle	Everett	Lefrançois
Carter	Fergusson	MacDonald (Queens)
Connolly	Fournier (Madawaska-	McGrand
(Halifax North)	Restigouche,	Pearson
Cook	Deputy Chairman)	Quart
Croll	Hastings	Roebuck
Eudes	Inman	Sparrow

(18 Members)

(Quorum 6)

GERRY LEMIRE,
Clerk of the Committee.

ORDERS OF REFERENCE

Extract from the Minutes of Proceedings of the Senate of Tuesday, October 28, 1969.

"The Honourable Senator Croll moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Roebuck:

That a Special Committee of the Senate be appointed to investigate and report upon all aspects of poverty in Canada, whether urban; rural, regional or otherwise, to define and elucidate the problem of poverty in Canada, and to recommend appropriate action to ensure the establishment of a more effective structure of remedial measures;

That the Committee have power to engage the services of such counsel, staff and technical advisors as may be necessary for the purpose of the inquiry;

That the Committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, and to report from time to time;

That the Committee be authorized to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the Committee, to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate, and to adjourn from place to place;

That the evidence taken on the subject during the preceding session be referred to the Committee; and

That the Committee be composed of the Honourable Senators Bélisle, Carter, Cook, Croll, Eudes, Everett, Fergusson, Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche), Hastings, Inman, Lefrançois, McGrand, Pearson, Quart, Roebuck and Sparrow.

After debate,

In amendment, the Honourable Senator McDonald moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Burchill, that the motion be not now adopted, but that it be amended by striking out paragraph 4 thereof and substituting therefor the following:—

"That the Committee be authorized to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the Committee, to adjourn from place to place, and notwithstanding Rule 76 (4), to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate."

After debate, and—

The question being put on the motion in amendment, it was—
Resolved in the affirmative.

The question being put on the motion of the Honourable Senator Croll, seconded by the Honourable Senator Roebuck, as amended, it was—

Resolved in the affirmative."

Extract from the Minutes of Proceedings of the Senate of Wednesday, October 29, 1969.

“With leave of the Senate,

The Honourable Senator McDonald moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Smith:

That the names of the Honourable Senators Connolly (Halifax North) and MacDonald (Queens) be added to the list of Senators serving on the Special Committee of the Senate appointed to investigate and report all aspects of poverty in Canada; and

That the name of the Honourable Senator Nichol be removed from the list of Senators serving on the said Special Committee.

The question being put on the motion, it was—
Resolved in the affirmative.”

ROBERT FORTIER,
Clerk of the Senate.

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS

WEDNESDAY, November 12th, 1969.

Pursuant to adjournment and notice the Special Senate Committee on Poverty met this day at 9.30 a.m.

Present: The Honourable Senators Croll, Chairman; Cook, Eudes, Ferguson, MacDonald (Queens), McGrand and Quart.

In attendance: Mr. Frederick J. Joyce, Director.

The following witnesses were heard:

Dr. J. R. Smith, Chairman, Economic Council of Canada.

Dr. Sylvia Ostry, Director, Economic Council of Canada.

Mrs. G. Stewart, Staff Member of the Economic Council of Canada.

Mr. B. Lacombe, Staff Member of the Economic Council of Canada.

Miss J. Podoluk, Statistician, Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

(Biographical information respecting Dr. Smith, Dr. Ostry and Mr. Lacombe follows these Minutes.)

At 11.50 a.m. the Committee adjourned to the call of the Chairman.

ATTEST.

Patrick Savoie,
for Gerard Lemire,
Clerk of the Committee.

Curriculum Vitæ

Smith, Arthur J. R. Born Simcoe, Ontario, 1926. Family: Wife (née Ruth Carey of Hamilton, Ontario), children, three daughters. Primary and Secondary School Education: Coonor and Ootacamund, India; and Simcoe, Ontario. Degrees: B.A. (1947), McMaster University (Hamilton, Ontario), Mathematics and Political Economy; M.A. (1949), Harvard University (Cambridge, Mass.); Ph.D. (1955), Harvard University (Cambridge, Mass.), Economics. Previous Positions: Teaching Fellow, Harvard University, 1949-50; Economist, Federal Reserve Bank of New York, 1950-54; Canadian Economist, National Industrial Conference Board, 1954-57; Lecturer, Extension Department, McGill University, 1955-56; Secretary-Treasurer and Director of Research, Private Planning Association of Canada, 1957-63; Director of Research, Canadian-American Committee, 1957-63; Secretary, Canadian Trade Committee, 1962-63; Director, Economic Council of Canada, 1963-67. Present Position: Chairman, Economic Council of Canada. Member: Science Council of Canada; Social Science Research Council of Canada; Agricultural Economics Research Council; American Economic Association; Ottawa Political Economy Association.

Ostry, Sylvia (née Kneiman): Present Position: Director, Special Manpower Studies and Consultation, Dominion Bureau of Statistics. Born Winnipeg, Manitoba and attended Winnipeg public schools and University of Manitoba (two years pre-medicine and one year medicine). Degrees: B.A. (honours economics) McGill University, 1948; M.A., McGill University, 1950; Ph.D. Cambridge University and McGill, 1954. Theses: The Canadian Pulp and Paper Industry: A Study in Comparative Costs: M.A., 1949-50; The Development of Countries of Arrested Economic Development: The First Indian Five Year Plan: Ph.D., 1950-54. Awards: Isbister Scholarships, University of Manitoba, 1943-44; 1944-45; Aikins Scholarships, University of Manitoba, 1943-44; 1944-45; Alexander MacKenzie Scholarship, McGill, 1947-48; Cherry Prize, McGill, 1948-49; Arthur Tagge Fellowship, McGill, 1948-49; Moyse Travelling Fellowship, McGill, 1950-51; Canadian Social Science Research Council grant, 1959-60; Canada Council grant, 1960 (summer); Canadian Social Science Research Council, 1960-61; Canada Council, 1961 (summer); Research grants from McGill University, 1959-60-61. Teaching Experience: Graduate Assistant, McGill, 1948-50; Sessional Lecturer, McGill, 1951-52; Lecturer, McGill, 1952-55; Lecturer, Sir George Williams, 1948-50; 1951-54; Assistant Professor, McGill, 1958-62; Visiting Lecturer, Carleton University, 1959; Associate Professor, University of Montreal, 1962-64. Research Activities: Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation—Member of Interdisciplinary team studying the extent and nature of urban development in the province of Quebec in the inter-censal decade, 1941-51. Manuscript on economic aspects in McGill School of Architecture, 1951-52; Federal Department of Labour—"Third Party Intervention in the Canadian Railway Industry; Non-operating Unions, 1948-54", manuscript in Economics and Research Branch of the Department of Labour, 1955; National Film Board of Canada—Background research for film series on unionism in a modern industrial society, 1954; University of Oxford Institute of Statistics—Research Officer, 1955-57; Senate of Canada Committee on Manpower and Employment—Commissioned for Study on the Definition and Measurement of Unemployment, 1959-60; Government of Manitoba Committee on Manitoba's Economic Future—Commissioned for Study on Population, Labour Force and Wages, 1961-62; Dominion Bureau of Statistics—1961 Census Monograph on the Labour Force (in collaboration with F. T. Denton), 1962. Assistant Director (Research), Labour Division, 1964. Consultant on Manpower Studies; Economic Council, 1964-65, Department of Manpower and Immigration, 1966.

Publications: "Wage Criteria in Collective Bargaining", Industrial and Labour Relations Review, Jan. 1956. "The Wage Structure of a Large Steel Firm", Bulletin of the University of Oxford Institute of Statistics, Aug. 1958. "Interindustry Earnings Differentials in Canada", Industrial and Labour Relations Review, April 1959. "Some Aspects of Canadian Wage Structure: Implications for Union Policy", Proceedings of the McGill Industrial Relations Conference, 1959. "Inter-establishment Dispersion of Occupational Wage Rates: Ontario and Quebec", Canadian Journal of Economics and Political Science, May 1960. "The Canadian Wage Structure", The Canadian Economy: Selected Readings, edited by John J. Deutsch, Burton S. Keirstead, Kari Levitt and Robert M. Will, Macmillan of Canada, Toronto, 1961 and "Real and Money Wage Levels" in Revised Edition, 1965. Senate of Canada, Committee on Manpower and Employment, Vol. VI. "The Definition and Measurement of Unemployment". "The Senate and Unemployment", Canadian Banker, Winter, 1961. Labour Policy and Labour Economics in Canada, (with H. D. Woods) Macmillan Co. of Canada, Toronto, 1962. "A Note on Occupational Differentials", Southern Economic Journal, Jan. 1963. "The Economic Impact of Canadian Post-War Immigration", Social Planning Council of Metropolitan Toronto, April 1963. Population and Labour Force Projections to 1970, Ottawa, 1964 (with F. T. Denton and Y. Kasahara). An Analysis of Post-War Unemployment, Ottawa, 1964 (with F. T. Denton). Economic and Technological Change in the Sixties: Its Implications for Labour Standards Legislation, Proceedings of Twenty-Third Conference of the Canadian Association of Administrators of Labour Legislation, Charlottetown, 1964. "Uses of Job Vacancy Data in Various Countries", The Measurement and Interpretation of Job Vacancies, National Bureau of Economic Research, New York, 1965. Economic Status of the Aging, Ottawa (DBS), 1966 (with Miss J. Podoluk). The Female Worker: Labour Force and Occupational Trends, Ottawa (Department of Labour), 1966 (with N. Meltz). Regional Statistical Studies (editor, with T. K. Rymes), University of Toronto Press, 1966. "Comparative Research Approaches", Industrial Relations, Vol. 21, No. 4, October 1966. Historical Estimates of the Canadian Labour Force (with F. T. Denton), Queen's Printer, Ottawa, 1967. Provincial Differences in Labour Force Participation, Queen's Printer, Ottawa, 1968. The Occupational Composition of the Canadian Labour Force, Queen's Printer, Ottawa, 1968. Unemployment in Canada, Queen's Printer, Ottawa, 1968. "The Canadian Job Vacancy Survey", Proceedings of the Industrial Relations Research Association, Washington, Dec. 1967. "Problems and Possible Solutions in Measuring Job Vacancies: The Canadian Survey", National Manpower Advisory Committee Subcommittee on Research, Washington, March 1968. The Female Worker in Canada, Queen's Printer, Ottawa, 1966. Geographic Composition of the Canadian Labour Force, Queen's Printer, Ottawa, 1968. Working Life Tables for Canadian Males, Queen's Printer, Ottawa, 1968 (with F. T. Denton). "Canadian Manpower Problems and Policies" (with Gerald Somers) in Manpower Planning and Labor Problems in Canada, R. V. Miller and F. Isbester (editors), Prentice-Hall, Toronto, (forthcoming).

Lacombe, John B.: Born: Montreal, Quebec, September 10, 1944; Education: St. Mary's University—B. Commerce, Honours Economics Courses taken at University of Ottawa primarily on quantitative side of Economics. Positions: Bank of Canada 1½ years prior to joining staff of Economic Council of Canada in 1965.

THE SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE ON POVERTY EVIDENCE

Ottawa, Wednesday, November 12, 1969

The Special Senate Committee on Poverty met this day at 9.30 a.m.

Senator David A. Croll (Chairman) in the Chair.

The Chairman: Our witness today is Dr. Arthur J. R. Smith, Chairman of the Economic Council of Canada. Dr. D. L. McQueen, who was Vice-Chairman of the Council at the time, appeared before the Committee on April 22 and 24 of this year and gave us a great amount of valuable information. Before we proceed I wish to inform Dr. Smith and the members of the Committee that we have some ladies here from the Adult Education Division of the Collegiate Institute Board of Ottawa. Mrs. Pauline Posluns is in charge and they are taking a look at how government operates. This is about as good an example as they will be able to find, so they are welcome.

Dr. Arthur J. R. Smith, Chairman, Economic Council of Canada: Mr. Chairman, honourable senators, I should first introduce my colleagues here: On my right is Dr. Sylvia Ostry, who is a director of the Economic Council. On the far side is Miss Jennie Podoluk of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, who has been our consultant with particular reference to the field of poverty. Mr. Fred Belaire is Secretary of the Council. Mrs. Gail Stewart, Miss Angela Julien and Mr. J. Barry Lacombe are members of our staff who have been working in this field.

May I also say that it gives us a good deal of pleasure indeed to be invited to return to this Committee to testify again. It is rather like an encore.

Mr. Chairman, I think I should say a few words at the outset, especially since I was unfortunately unable to attend to testify last April when the Economic Council appeared before you at your first two days of hearings. I will fill in a little bit of background about what we have been doing in this field. We have continued to do some work in the field of poverty during the past year. The hearing last April was concerned largely with the work we had done in the preceding year which was reported upon in our Fifth Annual Review. Since that time we have published some further information on the work of the Council in the seventh chapter of the Council's Sixth Annual Review. Yesterday we released a technical document entitled "Measuring the Cost of Poverty: Some Considerations and Estimates," which I believe the members of the Committee have. It is a paper attempting to set out some rather preliminary and rough measures of at least part of the economic cost of poverty in Canada.

The Fifth Annual Review, as you will remember, had a number of purposes. It attempted deliberately to draw attention to the problem of poverty in Canada, to focus on the fact that it was a large and serious problem in Canada. It attempted to give some idea, even if very rough and approximate, of the magnitude, the dimensions, of poverty in Canada. It attempted to set out some of the basic characteristics of poor people, to the best of our ability with the information we could pull together from the 1961 census, in order to provide a better basis for an approach to planning anti-poverty programs. It also attempted to touch briefly on some of the relevant background information, including some of the developments that had taken place in the war on poverty in the United States, and to consider the relevance of some of these developments for Canada. It attempted, again in a very initial and preliminary way, to set out a few proposals in order to begin to lay the basis for better, more co-ordinated and more effective efforts to deal with the poverty problem in Canada.

In the Sixth Annual Review, we have continued our work, and in this case focused attention mainly on the economic significance and various economic aspects of poverty. This, as we emphasize at the beginning of the chapter, is not in any sense to suggest that the economic aspects of poverty are the main or, necessarily, the dominating aspects. In the past the human and social aspects of poverty have tended to be viewed as those of almost sole importance, and I think it is fair to say that there perhaps has not been enough attention focused on some of the economic aspects of poverty that are also significant and important.

In the course of the work we undertook, on which we reported in the Sixth Annual Review, we have tried to focus on some of the economic costs of poverty. We have tried to focus on some of the failures in our economic system as it has affected poverty, especially on the failure to seek out, to develop and to harness more effectively the potential manpower resources and capabilities of the poor. We have also taken a look at some of the effects of poverty on people, and we have placed considerable emphasis on the need to generate income earning capacities much more effectively among the poor.

In the course of our approach in that review, we drew attention to the fact that one could view the poor in basically two main groups. One is the group of people who have very little income earning capacity to develop or to deploy. For this group, which is by no means the largest group of the poor, it is obvious that income maintenance policies are essential. On the other hand, there is the larger group of people among the poor who appear to have what one might call "remediable disadvantages." They have disadvantages because they do not have an adequate amount of preparation, education, training and "investment in themselves"—if I can put it that way—to be able to play an effective part in our economic system. At the same time, our economic system tends to operate in a variety of ways that do not provide adequate opportunities. In many cases and in many places our system seems to discriminate against making effective use of people whose capacities may be limited but who nevertheless do have capacities, and have capacities that certainly could be developed further, especially as they gain work experience and perhaps some on-the-job training.

We have had a look at a number of sources of information, at various studies that have been made, and have concluded that for the most part those who are heads of families of working force age do not appear to be people who lack motivation or potential capacities; that given adequate training and investment in themselves they are people who can play a useful and significant role in our economic system.

On the basis of that premise, and on the basis of a variety of assumptions, we have attempted to calculate roughly in the technical document which we released on Monday, supplementing chapter 7, "Poverty", of the Sixth Annual Review, some estimates of what the economic cost of poverty is, or at least what a part of that cost is,—the part which we have called "lost output", the lost income that we have in our system—because of the lack of adequate participation by poor people of working force age.

In those calculations we have attempted, through a series of different kinds of assumptions, to examine how much more output we would have in the economy had we been able to bring poor people into more effective participation in our economic system—those who are unemployed under various assumptions of unemployment rates among this group, those who are not participating in the labour force at all, and those who are already employed but have very low incomes. Progressively higher estimates of lost output and incomes are derived from sets of assumptions about poor people's potential earnings—moving up from levels equivalent to those of people who are just entering the labour force to levels equivalent to those of the average person in the labour force of the same age and sex and education level.

Accompanying these estimates are other estimates attempting to indicate that there would also have been a larger total income—a contribution again to our gross national product—if adequate capital resources had been put in place to go with the higher employment and more effective employment of poor people. Putting these numbers together, we indicated a range of lost output from somewhere just below $1 billion to something of the order of $2 to $2.5 billion. That is a fairly sizeable amount of lost output. I should emphasize, of course, that that is a gross figure. That is an indicate of the benefits that would be derived from effective participation of poor people in our system. It does not take account of the costs that might have been involved in bringing them into active participation in this way, so it does not indicate the results which one might obtain from a cost/benefit analysis. It merely indicates the gross costs, but these are quite significant.

Mr. Chairman, I have covered a number of things, perhaps enough to start the ball rolling. We are very pleased to be able to assist in any way we can in the constructive work which this distinguished committee is undertaking.

Senator Fergusson: I have a question that is certainly not an economic one but is raised in chapter 7 of the Sixth Review. If the Economic Council has provided us with this reprint, I certainly thank them, because we look on your Sixth Review as sort of our bible. The reports are a little awkward to carry around, therefore, this will be most useful and I am sure we are very grateful for it.

What I want to discuss appears on page 111 of the Sixth Review where you refer to the misconception about poor people not wanting to work. You mentioned this already in your opening remarks, but on page 111 you refer to the widespread impression that the poor are poor because they do not want to work. Now, it is obvious from what is said in the chapter on poverty that you do not hold this belief and feel it is a misconception. I certainly agree with you and I am sure that many other people, including some members of the committee, find this misconception to be very widespread, because about 80 per cent of the people we speak to firmly believe it. You cannot convince them otherwise. Can you suggest any way that this misconception can be corrected? Is there any way to give effective publicity to it? Can the Economic Council help?

Dr. Smith: I would like to suggest, as an answer to that, that we should encourage them to read the Sixth Annual Review. I think this, as you so rightly pointed out, is a widespread, deeply entrenched view and it is a view which will probably only gradually get replaced. We all live, sometimes for a very long period of time, with certain kinds of mythologies. The myth that the world was flat was one that held sway for a long period of time before it was corrected. I do not mean to be pessimistic or flip about this. I do think it is a view that is widespread and I believe it will take some time. Probably one of the things that would help a great deal would be some demonstration projects of various kinds to indicate that this is not what the situation really is.

In the United States, where a number of projects have been undertaken, it is quite clear, from their experience, that this is not true. For example, the National Industrial Conference Board, in one of their recent Records, reported on some of these things. I remember one case in which they reported on a project seeking to bring the hard core unemployed into employment. They indicated that in the course of seeking to integrate these people into industrial activity, well over 50 per cent proved to be highly satisfactory and only a really small percentage—something like 14 or 15 per cent—were dismissed or let go because their performance was unsatisfactory. It was a very small minority.

Senator Fergusson: That is really a small percentage in view of what people think now. As you have referred to the United States, I would like to read the following from page 113 of the Review.

Recent U.S. attempts to develop careers for the poor by redefining job specifications in a number of fields, such as health services, education and social welfare, are particularly worthy of note in this context.

Could you tell us a little more about those attempts to develop careers for the poor?

Dr. Smith: Yes. I would ask Mrs. Stewart to tell you about this?

Mrs. Gail Stewart, Research Officer, Economic Council of Canada: This development of new careers, and the movement which is called New Careers, is an attempt to bring many of the disadvantaged people into occupations in the service industries where the social needs are great and where the professionals working in these fields are very hard pressed. In order to do this successfully, a careful redefinition of the kinds of jobs that are done is required. Perhaps I could take the medical field as an example. In the development of nurses' assistants and nurses' aides, it is necessary to examine and redefine some of the jobs done by nurses and distinguish those which could be performed by less trained and skilled personnel. The same principle applies to the field of social work where the social worker traditionally does many things—where, if the job were looked at very closely, it might be possible to restructure the jobs in such a way that people of less experience or less training could undertake some of the tasks. Teachers' assistants who work with children in the schools are another example of the sort of area in which new careers have been developed for disadvantaged people.

There is a considerable amount of literature and interest in these possibilities now in the United States. I do not think you would have difficulty finding and drawing upon this in order to see whether some U.S. experience in this field might be relevant in Canada. We would regard it as certainly worth looking into and would be happy to direct you to the literature that we know is available on this subject and some of the places where this kind of development is going on.

Senator Fergusson: This would mean that formerly when a job was advertised it required professionals with certain qualifications, and probably people with much less qualifications could do much of the work.

Mrs. Stewart: A job can be subdivided, in fact.

The Chairman: Mrs. Stewart, as I recall, much of the criticism has been directed against the federal Government for asking that certain jobs be filled by people with university degrees rather than less educated people who are well able to do the jobs. This has been brought to the attention of the federal Government.

Mrs. Stewart: In a very general way, in our Sixth Review we talked about barriers to entry which are generally set by educational requirements that are often unnecessary. I should point out that many of the principles embodied in "new careers"—this is a term which has been applied to bringing people into the service industries—are, of course, of much more general application in terms of looking at job specifications that can be applied to other industry and public services as well.

Senator Cook: Dr. Smith, you refer here to the extract from the Sixth Review on page 111:

The real sources of poverty among the potentially employable poor are generally to be found among such factors as a high incidence of inadequate skills and education...

That brings us right to the question of school dropouts. I have been surprised and interested in some of the excellent briefs we have had in which they make the point that dropouts occur, not necessarily because of economic reasons but because the student is not very comfortable in the system of education, which is designed primarily to fit him into a university. In other words, he has no intention, desire or ability to qualify for university. He becomes bored, and cannot keep up and so he drops out. Would you comment on that?

Dr. Smith: Yes. This has been a problem, but it is in the process of changing. The earlier dropouts we had were indeed high. As one looks back over the course of educational development in Canada, one can see that we put an enormous amount of effort and energy into education in the latter part of the nineteenth century and the early part of this century, primarily with the view of getting nearly all children, or at least a very large proportion of them, through elementary school. We were thinking of basic literature. There was a lot of discussion in those days of reading, writing and arithmetic. Just after the First World War we had largely achieved that objective, and a very high proportion of children, in fact, were graduating from elementary school.

During the 1920s we did not put a continuing effort into taking the children along further in the secondary school system. Our efforts flagged. It was not really until after the Second World War that that effort came through in a major way.

As I recall, around 1950 we still had only about half of the 14- to 17-year old children in school; the other half had dropped out. That has changed very dramatically in the course of time since then and we are now at a stage in which, of that age group, the 14- to 17-year olds, we have something like 85 per cent now enrolled.

This is an enormous advance in a relatively short period of time. The dropout problem is much less intense now. There is a variety of reasons, I suppose. Part of this reflects changes in the curricula and the introduction of somewhat more interesting things.

For a long time, too, we had a major educational gap in Canada. We had not developed post-secondary technical schools in any significant way, to provide skilled training at the higher levels. But this gap has been closing rapidly in the 1960s. Going back to the way in which you put your question, think there are now many more opportunities for people to go along and move into the non-university stream, into the higher level of skills, especially skills in which there have been intense shortages for a long time—indeed still are—in many fields. I think this in the process of improving.

Nevertheless, this is a problem. One of the questions to which we should perhaps be giving some more attention is this. Up to now we have put a very considerable amount of emphasis on enlarging the resources avail-for the formal educational system. But when we come to think about how to allocate resources to develop people who are better educated, with more skills, and ultimately a more productive labour force, we should probably be giving some further thought to ways in which we might allocate resources—perhaps even more effectively, in some cases—other than simply building more and better schools, improving the quality of teaching, and so on. There are other kinds of ways of using resources that might help to influence the minds and attitudes of parents and students towards education, and encourage more of a commitment among younger people to stay on in school. There are certain frustrations that encourage dropouts, and we do not understand some of these yet. There should be more research on this subject.

The Chairman: You speak of more commitment. Can you think of any better commitment than the returned veterans had after the last war?

Dr. Smith: What happened in that commitment after the last war—I do not remember the exact figures—was that we had a very large surge in the educational system. But we did not sustain that.

After the war, the United States had a large flow into the educational system, particularly at higher levels, in the universities. In the United States enrollments never turned down again after the last war. In Canada, veterans came back into the universities and here was a general bulge, but then there was a decline in university enrolment again. Sustained growth did not come until the 1950s and 1960s.

The Chairman: The reason for that general bulge you speak of, was it not because there was that sustenance there?

Dr. Smith: Yes.

The Chairman: Was that not the main reason, that they had the ability to do it, they had the wherewithal?

Dr. Smith: It was partly that they had the wherewithal and partly that that in itself effected encouragement by our society for them to do it. It was indicated that it was a desirable thing to do.

The Chairman: What you say is that it did not carry over to the younger brothers and sisters, to the same extent it did for them?

Dr. Smith: Yes.

The Chairman: The evidence we have been hearing so far is that in very many instances, although not entirely so, it is because they were not capable of doing it. They had to get out and earn some money and bring it into the house, and they did not have clothes, they did not feel they fitted in, and so they dropped out to try and earn what they could.

Dr. Smith: Yes. Of course, this has been changed in a major way, because we have been now building up very rapidly very large resources in our educational efforts. The expenditures on education have been growing, as you know, with great vigour. Our expenditures on education in Canada, Government expenditures, have been doubling every five years. So we have an extremely rapid rate of growth and very considerable effort is now being put into this field.

Senator McGrand: Rapid growth in education that you just mention—how will that affect or remedy the large number of dropouts from schools which Senator Cook has just mentioned? Are these dropouts who do not want or cannot do a university course? Are they good material for the services that Mrs. Stewart referred to, these new careers?

Dr. Smith: I am not sure whether we are talking about two different things or the same thing. A significant part of poverty—by no means the only part, but a significant part—is attributable to an inadequate educational and training base among people who are now adults and mature. The major part of the problem here is to consider how we can move more effectively in many cases to upgrade their education and training. In some cases, because of very early dropouts, there may be need to provide some very basic education. We have some procedures now to assist in this.

In other cases it may be that, without very intensive training, people can be relatively easily equipped to play some better part. One talks about the dropouts. However, at the present stage in the educational system these have now been greatly reduced. We are taking young people much further along in the educational system. The basic educational base in going up for these people. In adult life, it is going to be relatively much stronger than that of the present adults. However, one would still like to move higher. We are really at a stage, I suppose, now where there is a counterpart to the objectives that I mentioned earlier. We are really now at a stage where we are trying to move nearly all of our young people, if possible, through the secondary school system, and beginning to move a very significant part of them through at least a year or two of post-secondary education.

We have been building up the enrolment ratios very rapidly, and this is the major factor that has been putting a financial strain on the educational system.

When one looks at the enrolment in post-secondary institutions, there is sometimes a tendency to feel that this huge surge we have been seeing in the nineteen sixties is the result of the fact that the leading edge of the post-war baby boom has reached the secondary level, and become the leading edge of a boom which is occurring there; but, in fact, the longer retention of young people in the educational system is a far more important factor than simply increased numbers of young people in the rising enrolments.

On the question of the drop-outs that are still occurring, and whether these are people who can be brought along, I am not sure of that.

Mr. Lacombe, do you have anything to add in this field?

Mr. J. Barry Lacombe, Research Officer, Economic Council of Canada: Not right now, aside from saying that there are many factors which influence a student's decision to leave, some of which are, for example, operating within a school system per se, and others operating outside the school system—that is, family environment or some other factor. I do not know the relative importance of these, and there is not a great deal of evidence in Canada on this particular topic.

Senator McGrand: It seems that you have a great expansion in school building and school facilities. There have been tremendous expenditures, and that seems to go along side by side with the increased number of drop-outs.

Dr. Smith: Our drop-outs are declining, Senator. They have declined, as I indicated, quite steeply at the high school level over the past 15 years or so. They have been continuing to decline.

In the United States, if I remember correctly, in the 14- to 17-year old group, about 90 per cent of these young people are now in the educational system. In Canada we have about 85 per cent of them in the educational system.

Back in the early nineteen fifties we had something less than 50 per cent, whereas in the United States the figure was, as I recall, up around 70 per cent. So we have closed what was a considerable gap with the United States. We have gone a long way toward closing it.

If I recall our estimates on enrolment ratios for that group to 1975, we would anticipate that in Canada by that stage we would be up to 90 per cent or so. So there is some further way to go yet.

Senator McGrand: It is a general feeling you hear that children drop out of school in order to earn money to support their family. There is a big difference between dropping out to earn money to support the family that is at home and dropping out because the family has not got the financial resources to keep the student at school. You have to distinguish between those two groups. There is no mistake about the fact that the previous generation had a tremendous number of young people dropping out at school in order to help support their families. I wonder if that is so today? Have we any statistics or figures to indicate that young people are leaving school in order to support their mothers and fathers or the family that is at home?

Dr. Sylvia Ostry, Director, Economic Council of Canada: I think we have figures which suggest quite the opposite. Some portion of the surge in female participation has been undertaken in order to maintain the schooling of children for a longer period.

I also think it is important to try to put the role of formal education and its relevance to the questions you are discussing in some perspective. There is a tendency, I think, to believe that the extension of formal education is some kind of solution to all our problems, and while it is quite true that there has been a world-wide development of extending education to a larger and larger portion of people, the North American continent is unique in many respects in the degree to which that has gone.

In European countries, and even wealthy European countries like the Scandinavian countries, if you look at the relevant data, the streaming process starts much earlier than it does here. Young people who are clearly not either through motivation or aptitude or any other reason, intending to go on to university, are streamed at an earlier age. There is a good deal more vocational counselling at a earlier age so that they have more information about the kinds of choices they might make. There is a much more extensive network of relationships between the school and the place of work so that the transition from the educational and training system into the world of work appears to be a much easier one.

If you look at the teenage unemployment rates in these countries, they are the lowest of the rates rather than the highest of the rates, as they are in North America.

I am not suggesting that their pattern would suit us. We are a different kind of society. Nonetheless, I think there are questions to be raised about the relationship between formal education and some kind of training and job success—however you want to define that.

In the sixties there was a tremendous spurt under the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act, which was enacted in order to develop technical colleges and schools and to promote some form of streaming. I think the effort at streaming has been a healthy one, although we do not have enough firm information on the output of these schools and their relative success compared with the output of the more formal academic institutions.

The Chairman: Dr. Smith, you spoke earlier about our emphasis having been on the human and social aspects of poverty. You were directing your remarks more toward the economic aspects. I think that was more or less the statement you made earlier. Now, as I recall the situation when we began our movement in the social field—and our efforts have been considerable compared with those of any other country in the world, the basic information was not only in respect of the human and social aspects of the problem but also concerned the redistribution of wealth. That is what we were talking about all the time.

Have we failed in our purpose of redistributing the wealth?

Dr. Smith: Let me make quite clear that in what is said in the Sixth Annual Review the Council is not trying to suggest that the human and social aspects of poverty are not important. Obviously, they are of very great importance indeed.

However, to a very large extent there was in the past a widespread tendency to think of poverty as a human and social problem, and there has been an accompanying tendency to think that the problems of poverty can therefore be largely dealt with by welfare policies of one kind or another, by redistribution of income or redistribution of wealth. There is a tendency to think that poverty is basically a problem of lack of resources among the poor and that some sort of redistribution system will simply take care of this.

Obviously, elements of redistribution are very important and, as I stressed, income maintenance programs are extremely important programs for significant numbers of poor people who simply do not have a capacity to earn income. Nevertheless, I do not think we will find solutions to our poverty problems, if this is the sole or even the predominant approach to it.

There is something else that is also very important—the concept that the poor want to participate and should be participating in our economic system; that they have not had the preparation and they frequently do not have opportunities, because of the way in which the system works, to participate; that it is a very important objective—and this in economic terms—to help to bring poor people into active participation in the economic life of our nation. This is the approach we had in mind.

The Chairman: At page 112 you state:

...tend to make the economy function in a way that is pervasively discriminatory against the poor.

I think those are your words.

We hear it constantly said to us, "They are keeping us poor." We finally ask, "Who is keeping you poor?" They reply, "The system is keeping us poor." There is something to that statement by the poor, as you suggest in your report. Give us some leads, so we can go about helping to correct that, because we think there is something wrong too.

Dr. Smith: I suppose there is a variety of things. We have touched on one or two of these already.

The Chairman: Yes.

Dr. Smith: One of these, mentioned earlier, was that in approaches to recruitment there are frequently rules—if not formal rules, then rules of thumb—which tend to discriminate against the poor, perhaps by the fact of requiring higher levels of achievement in education or certain kinds of experience which may not in fact be necessary for the jobs in question.

There are ways in which, perhaps, even our social welfare and social development policies tend to create barriers. For example, I think we would want to have a hard look at the way in which there may be impediments imposed on the poor because of high rates of marginal taxation on added funds for the poor.

The Chairman: You mean earnings, do you not?

Dr. Smith: Yes, earnings. In some cases they cannot use added resources, sometimes they cannot even use some social assistance payments, to take courses. There is a lack of day care facilities and centres which might provide a basis for better participation. In other words, there is a whole variety of things that appear, on the one hand, to make it difficult for people in poverty to make the kinds of advances that would allow them to participate, and barriers and impediments, in terms of discriminatory hiring practices and so forth, which reduce the opportunities for them to gain steadier and better employment.

The Chairman: Doctor, just take a quick look at the White Paper. Assuming it stays as it is, it would seem to me that at the moment there is some provision for such things as day care centres. That could be under the provision permitting a woman $500 per child, up to four children, for some such care. There is something there about exemptions. There is something there about taxation. Do you see anything at all within the concept of that paper that should be of some considerable help to the poor of Canada?

Dr. Smith: I have not had an opportunity to consider in any detail the implications of that White Paper. Obviously, one of the major functions of the proposed changes is, in fact, to bring about a significant redistribution. The clear intention is to reduce the burden of taxation on lower income people and, relatively, to increase it on the higher income earners.

As for the day care provisions, Mrs. Ostry may want to add a comment.

I think with regard to poor people there is the question of whether the provisions of being able to deduct $500 per child for day care centre payments will be of great value to most of those at the very low income levels, because most of them do not pay significant amounts for such care.

Dr. Ostry: There was a survey undertaken a couple of years ago, which should be published quite shortly by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, for the Women's Bureau of the Department of Labour, which showed that in the case of the great majority of working women with pre-school children the children are cared for under informal arrangements, either in their own home or in the home of a neighbour or a relative, and a very small proportion of mothers paid for child care service while they were working. In those cases, we have some idea of the amounts paid, and they were very small. This would suggest that even if they did pay and if they had to keep receipts and so on, it would be unlikely those women who were earning very little and paying nothing or very little for child care services could take advantage of the $500 allowance. This might be a stimulus to a greater proportion of paid services in communities, but I do not know.

Senator Fergusson: Is not the reason that the women make use of this informal method because there are not enough services for them to use?

Dr. Ostry: Yes, that is one reason; and this might stimulate the building of day care centres, and so on.

Senator Fergusson: Do you think the $500 would not be worth while?

Dr. Ostry: I have not looked at the data very closely. The earnings of these women are mainly in the very low end of the income distribution. I do not know, but I hope that study will be published quite soon. Certainly, the thing that is most surprising is that most of these children are looked after in their own home, and a great many by the father.

Senator Quart: I am sure I am not going to be very popular in saying this. I am not an economist or anything else, but certainly I am more confused than ever about all this, and I would like some things clarified, if possible.

To begin with, I thoroughly agree with what Senator Fergusson said about public opinion. Too frequently it is said of the poor that they do not want to work. From my very limited experience it seems that a poor person would soon become discouraged by continually going to see Manpower to find employment and discovering that they never seem to be able to deliver what they are supposed to provide for the underdog, but seem to be catering to the ones who can manage for themselves.

I agree with what Senator Croll has said about the welfare system. If any of us here were really in need—and perhaps after all the attacks that have been made on us, we will be—and we were on welfare, then we would be afraid to take a position in case we would be cut off, knowing that it takes weeks to get back on. That fact in itself is discouraging. I have been told that if a person is taken off welfare, it takes him ages to get back on again. This is what I have been told. I have never tried it, but one day I will, so help me. I will do what two people in Montreal did when they decided they were going to find out if all of these things were true. They put on old clothing, and went around to the welfare agencies. I wish they would write about their experiences, because I know they were given the runaround. A similar thing happened in Toronto just last week. Perhaps the agencies and the social workers upon hearing about this, will act differently.

Another thing is that the poor read about the enormous sums subscribed by the public to the United Appeal and the Federated Charities, and they know that when they go to the agencies they get their counselling, but that does not put three meals on the table every day. A tremendous amount of money is being spent by the Government and other agencies on research. I have been told that the reason for the failure of the United Appeal to reach its goal this year is because it came out that the salaries of the social workers absorbed 80 or 85 per cent of the amount subscribed by the public. I know that in respect of the Federated Charities in Montreal that is a fact. Perhaps that is all very necessary, but at the same time it does not put food on the table for a family.

The voluntary agencies long ago—and I assure you I know something about this—were more receptive to the demands made upon them than they are now. Most of them have said: "We will allow the Government agencies and others to carry on. They are getting the financial assistance", and they do not even provide fuel, clothing, and so on, which they did in the past. They say: "Look at all this money that is subscribed. Look at the amounts spent on research and for social workers. Surely, we do not have to work so hard."

I know I am going to be very unpopular in saying this, but would it not be possible to cut down on the staffs of some of these funds like the Federated Charities and the United Appeal, and give a little more monetary assistance to the people who really need it. If I happened to be in that class I think I could be starting a revolution. The employers are also to blame. They are too exacting. As someone mentioned, they want a Ph.D. when they are looking for a furnace man. The employers should be alerted as well.

The Chairman: Senator, may we come to the question?

Senator Quart: I am making a speech, but I am very het up about this. Do not be surprised if I appear before some of the agencies in the guise of a poor person, because I want to find out what is going on. I do not blame the poor people for being thoroughly discouraged.

I should like to mention also the student loans. Loans are being given to students who do not really require them, and whose families can provide the money, just as we did, for the education of their children in universities. Such students apply for student loans, and they get them because they can tell the bank manager that their fathers are so-and-so. But, when a poor person goes to the bank for a loan he finds it very difficult to get one. I have been wondering whether we could arrange for loans by which the Government would take a chance on these people, and encourage them to set up in some sort of little business with which they could cope having regard to their education. That may be ridiculous, but I still come back to the point that the people who are in real need today in Canada need monetary assistance as well as counselling.

Dr. Smith: Well, senator, I do not think I have anything to say...

Senator Quart: I am sure you have, but you do not want to be as unpopular as I am.

Dr. Smith: ...as to the alleged excessive size of the staffs of the social welfare agencies. We did a survey in a number of communities in Canada this year of how the social welfare agencies were operating, and it may be that Mrs. Stewart will want to add something as to that, but I would like to say something briefly about two of the other points upon which you touched.

First of all, with regard to the question of the interconnections between the social welfare agencies and the manpower programs I should say that this is a matter of very great importance. At page 119, in the second paragraph, of our last review we said:

There appears to be a widespread lack of co-ordination between welfare and manpower services; good co-ordination is needed here to help family units achieve economic viability...

Senator Quart: Congratulations.

Dr. Smith:

...It is the poor who particularly need access to manpower programs, and this should be reflected both in the objectives and the operations of such programs in Canada.

It is quite clear, I think, that while our manpower programs have been developing and are doing some useful things, this particular concern so far has not really been reflected very much in their approach.

With respect to student loans, I think it is vitally important that we be quite clear in this country that no young person who has the ability, capacity, and desire to go to university should, for financial reasons, be denied an opportunity to do so.

Senator Quart: I agree.

Dr. Smith: Our developing programs, including the student loan program, are aimed at that objective, and I think on the whole we are probably doing fairly well with regard to that objective at this stage. The amount of resources we are allocating to education is quite substantial. The tuition fees and other incidental educational expenditures by students at university now account for only ten per cent of the total government expenditure of post-secondary education. It is a small part of the total expenditure. There is still a very large cost to the students but that is a cost they all share, namely the cost that is involved because they do not earn an income while they are going to school. It is a cost to our society as well, a substantial and perhaps a larger cost than the government and private expenditures on education.

Senator Quart: Please do not misunderstand me; I am not against student loans. Could some sort of arrangement not be made for the poor? Senator Vaillancourt, who died not so long ago, had a Caisse Populaire in Quebec. During the war I had a lot to do with it as a member of the Soldiers' Family Welfare Committee. We could go to this Caisse Populaire if the dependents' allowances happened to be late or for some other reason these people really needed help. The wives of servicemen could arrange a loan at the Caisse Populaire as long as our committee was responsible. It was a marvellous arrangement that was set up at that time. It is just an idea I am throwing out, but surely I am entitled to express an idea. I am so confused about the whole thing, but something has to be done.

Dr. Smith: Mrs. Stewart, would you like to add anything about the social welfare agencies?

Mrs. Stewart: It is important to recognize that the question extends well beyond Ottawa. Indeed, there was an article in the New York Times within the last ten days about the role of voluntary agencies generally, and the communities who were contributing to them and how they were concerned about their needs and priorities. I think this concern is a very pervasive phenomenon throughout North America today.

It needs to be looked at in this broader context so that we can see it in terms of what the agencies are, and what they should perhaps be doing, and whether indeed they are there to provide services or to function as a channel through which income is transferred to the poor. We should see whether they should be providing services that we look to on a continuing basis as part of the service to the disadvantaged or whether perhaps some of the agencies should conduct experimental programs which the public sector might later take over on a continuing basis. The historical development of these agencies has frequently been that activities started in the private sector by voluntary agencies have been taken over later by the Government. Schools for deaf children, and so on, have moved in that direction.

Our survey indicated that the private agencies all across the country are in effect agonizing about the kind of choices they have to make. They are trying to evaluate in a systematic way whether their services are genuinely useful and whether some of them should disappear completely and other spring up. The whole movement towards citizens' action groups can perhaps be seen as a measure of the failure of the voluntary agency services to adjust sufficiently rapidly changing needs. New groups are coming along and gradually moving in. This is a broad subject area in itself. Voluntary agencies too are handicapped, as are government services, by the inadequate information which we all have in this area, and by the institutional barriers which are as pervasive in the voluntary agency field as they are in the rest of the country. There are barriers between agencies from different churches, ethnic groups and other groups in a community. Many are trying to decide whether they should get together and offer services on a larger scale. It is all one problem in a sense, and it has these many facets which are much better looked at as highly inter-related in themselves and inter-related with the public services that are now offered.

Senator Quair: That would certainly be my opinion. May I just add that it is much more difficult for voluntary agencies today to go out and collect funds, because people say "We give to the United Appeal; we do this and we do that." People get tired of knitting baby clothes to be sold at bazaars to raise funds. Maybe they should be subsidized to an extent. Would you not say that would encourage them to go on and do a tremendous job for the community?

Mrs. Stewart: Yes, I think there is no question that the volume of activities carried out in this country by the private agencies and in the private sector is not to be overlooked in absolute terms. In dollar terms the amount of money they raise is not very large, but the kind of services and the thinking in these agencies are a part of the total package of Canada's social services.

The Chairman: We are speaking now of agencies which rely on gifts by individuals. They are not awarded grants or subsidies.

Mrs. Stewart: It is difficult to draw that line in a very hard and fast fashion. Some of them do receive some forms of government support from various levels of government, but typically this is a small part. These are generally privately financed services.

The Chairman: The amount of money they receive would certainly not be more than 10 per cent.

Mrs. Stewart: No, it is very small.

The Chairman: So that 90 per cent of the money comes from the individual who wants to give charity. How do you tell him where his charity should go?

Mrs. Stewart: This is extremely difficult. It is difficult even for the people who administer the money to know where they should put it once they have got it. Some communities have carried out social audits for this purpose.

Senator Quair: Do you mean, Senator Croll, in order to prevent overlapping? Most women's organizations are rather cautious when spending money that has been so hard to earn. I think they would go in and make a little investigation before just giving out the money at random. I have a great belief in women's organizations, as you know. I should say the men's organizations too; I am sorry. I am not a militant suffragette, but I think most voluntary organizations are spearheaded by women anyway.

The Chairman: The voluntary organizations raise vast sums of moneys across this country which they spend in their own way. It would be a tragedy to the poor people and to us probably if we did not have an outlet for a great deal of that kind of activity. I know there are some problems in Ottawa but I picked up a newspaper the day before yesterday in Toronto and saw a figure for the welfare fund of $12 million, over-subscribed one or two per cent. Other places may do better or worse. In the main it is an outlet that gives people a feeling that they are doing something of value, and they are.

Senator Fergusson: I do not agree that a community-minded organization raising funds for the good of the community will spend money at random. I have no experience of Montreal, but I have some experience in my own city, albeit a small one. I am a member and a director of some organizations that apply to the United Appeal for help, and I know they do not inflate what they ask for, and they do not waste money; the money is spent to excellent advantage. Maybe it would be as well to have an investigation to find out how these things can be done better in the future, as Mrs. Stewart says. I am all for that. However, I do not like the criticism that these people are spending money at random, that all the money is going into operations, because I do not believe it.

Senator Quair: Neither do I.

The Chairman: Dr. Smith, in speaking of the cost of poverty in Canada—I know it is an "iffy", but your "iffies" have not all been bad in the past—you spoke of $2.2 billion approximately. Then you said that was 1961, when the gross national product was $37 billion.

Dr. Smith: We did not say that in our paper here. The newspaper said that.

The Chairman: I got that from the Canadian Press.

Dr. Smith: I assume they are correct.

The Chairman: They are usually correct. The gross national product is now $77 billion. Can I properly assume that the cost at the present time, brought up to date, would be approximately $4.5 billion?

Dr. Smith: I am not sure exactly what it would be. The conditions were somewhat different in 1961. For example, in 1961 there was 7 per cent unemployment in our economy, and under those conditions there would, I think, be an underlying tendency for there to be relatively more people in poverty. In the interim, there has also been a general movement of growth and development, many kinds of changes have occurred that might have some effect on this. Therefore, simply to take a percentage at that point and translate it to today's conditions is not quite correct. On the other hand, obviously with a larger GNP, the figure would be somewhat higher.

The Chairman: Somewhat higher than what?

Dr. Smith: Than the $2.2 billion.

Senator Fergusson: I understood you to say that some provision might be invoked to reach the poor people who are not being used to full advantage by Manpower. Am I right? The only reason I mention this is that at one of our recent meetings we learned that Manpower in Halifax is conducting a sort of pilot project that is reaching the really poor people. I thought I would just mention that to you, although you are probably aware of it.

Dr. Smith: Yes, I have heard about that.

Senator Fergusson: I was greatly impressed.

Dr. Smith: Within the present framework of policies there is nothing to preclude much more attention by Manpower in some of these directions. It may very well be that there is a built-in tendency, seeing people who come into the manpower centres, to feel that since the chances of success in training and placement may be relatively better with those who have a higher basic education; there is an ingrained tilt to bring those people into their operations rather than tilt it the other way and work on the basis of trying to make an effort for people who obviously have greater problems.

Senator Fergusson: It is easier not to do it, of course, but is there some way in which they could be persuaded to try this out?

Dr. Ostry: I do not think there is anything in the organization of the Occupational Training of Adults or in other parts of the legislation within the Manpower policy range to preclude their focusing on particular disadvantaged groups. In the United States the most recent pronouncements of the Administration and the Department of Labour have focused even more sharply on the disadvantaged. They have quite clearly said that the purpose and range of programs is to assist those who, for a variety of reasons, cannot accommodate themselves easily in the labour market. That has not been so here; that has not been explicitly stated. I think the project you mention, and other things I am aware of, suggest that the Department of Manpower is exploring this area. We really have no idea what portion of their program covers the group we would call the disadvantaged. We have to look into the characteristics of their trainees, the characteristics of their mobility grantees and so on, in order to know exactly what groups they are reaching in this program.

Senator McGrand: We have been talking a great deal about jobs for poor people. In the final analysis, this can come only from the development of our natural resources. Much emphasis has been placed on regional disparity and the poor areas of Canada. What part have these poor areas and these areas of regional disparity played in increasing the number of poor as we see the problem today?

Dr. Smith: In our last review we took a look at some of the regional patterns of poverty under the definition we used at that time, under the rough poverty lines we used as a proxy. We took a look at regional patterns and the regional incidence. What emerges, as you may recall, is that the incidence of poverty, the chance of being poor, is much higher in the low income regions, but in terms of total numbers the low income regions of the country do not contain most of the poor people in Canada. Most of the poor people are in cities from Montreal to the West.

We tried to emphasize at that time that approaches to anti-poverty policies and approaches to narrowing the regional disparities were two different things, and that we must be careful not to confuse them.

It is quite possible to conceive of a situation in which one might remove regional disparities—I am talking hypothetically—by bringing up the average incomes in the low income areas, in the eastern provinces, and still have a great deal of poverty in Canada, because most of it is not located there.

Secondly, it is quite possible to achieve, again hypothetically, a very large reduction—indeed, the virtual elimination—of poverty and still find that does very little to narrow regional disparities, because again most of the poor are not in the eastern provinces.

I think these are two separate problems and, in spite of certain inter-connections and inter-relationships, I feel it is very important that we have clearly different policy approaches to deal with them. There are two problems and we need two sets of policies in approaching them.

With regard to the question of natural resources, what has been happening in the long run in this country and indeed in virtually every country, as income rises, is a process that we loosely call "industrialization," but it is probably a rather bad word. When people think of industrialization they usually think of manufacturing activity, construction, and utilities. But this sector of economy, in terms of employment, has grown very little over the long run. It stays fairly stable. What happens basically in terms of the changing structure is a very substantial, relative decline, and in some areas absolute decline, in employment, along with a very large relative decline in output in primary industries such as agriculture, forestry, fishing and mining. On the other hand, there is relatively a very large growth in the service industries: transportation, retail, wholesale trade, finance, insurance, real estate, communications, community services, business services, personal services, government services. These all grow relatively.

In Canada this shift in structure has been taking place with great speed and vigour in the post-war period. Just after the war, about one-third of all our employment was in the primary industries. Twenty-five per cent of it was in agriculture and about the same in manufacturing. Today less than 10 per cent of our employment is in the primary industries, about seven per cent in agriculture only. A vast change has taken place. At that stage, just after the war, we had about 40 per cent of our total employment in services and 60 per cent in all the goods producing industries. Today that is reversed and about 60 per cent are in services and less than 40 per cent in the goods producing industries.

This is the kind of change that takes place. In the primary industries and the natural resources industries, by and large, there are major job adjustments taking place. Quite a number of these are declining industries, and this is posing considerable problems in certain regions of this country. It is posing large problems in the rural areas, because over the last 10 or 15 years our rural population has declined somewhat. These are areas which, no less than the surging urban areas, need high quality services, such as education, in order to provide an effective base for future population, whether they work in the natural resources industries or shift to other areas. These processes of adjustment create difficult problems.

We have two sets of problems on opposite sides of the coin. We have great problems in the primary industries and in rural areas in the process of these adjustments and we have, as we all know, great problems in our urban communities, which are expanding so rapidly that we are facing a whole array of difficulties arising from increasing congestion and pollution.

Senator Cook: Mr. Chairman, I want to go back to one final question on this subject of dropouts. First of all, I am sure we are all very encouraged to see that the figures indicate that the situation is improving. I was wondering if you have any observations as to what should be done to hasten that improvement, in the way of the services that have now been offered and as to what can be done for those who are not particularly anxious to have an academic education.

Dr. Ostry: Again, there are some pilot projects in the United States which have tried a variety of means: (a) of preventing dropouts and (b) of streaming students so that this transition I talked about can be more effectively implemented from the schooling system into the world of work. These have been sponsored by the federal manpower administration or more often by some lower level of government, either state or municipal. They have turned out to be extremely expensive projects from the cost benefit analysis that I have seen. There is not much of this available. They have turned out to be extremely expensive in the sense that for every person they retain, the amount of money spent in relation to the estimate of the benefits which flow from the retention suggest a very unfavourable cost-benefit ratio. This has led them to explore other means of doing this. That is the only evidence we have received that you can reduce the dropout level through very expensive campaigns and counselling.

There may be other factors of a more deep-seated nature, such as some that have been mentioned in terms of motivation and family atmosphere and environment. This also touches on the whole area of investment in education, and the returns to it. The reason people stay on or do not stay on at school is one which increasingly is being revealed through research to be infinitely more complex than we had thought even five or 10 years ago when the first literature was produced on this whole area of investment in human resources. Even that is not a very satisfactory answer. I am simply trying to say that we have done almost no work in this area. The Americans, who have done some, are uncovering more problems than they are providing answers for, and again one would hope that we would adopt the same approach that is the approach of demonstration or pilot projects of an exploratory nature where we could derive some information which would allow us to move forward.

Senator Fergusson: Dr. Ostry, you spoke about "streaming" children at a very early age and in some countries much earlier than in Canada. Do you think this is really valid? Can it really be determined, when a child is very young, as to which stream he should be put in, and is it not possible that at a later age a child may find himself locked into something which he does not like at all and for which he has no aptitude?

Dr. Ostry: Yes. I should make it perfectly clear that I am certainly not advocating the 11-plus system for Canada. I think the British have also moved away from this and are concerned that precisely what you have suggested is happening, and this is a great danger. Nevertheless, there is something intermediate between that very early streaming and the kind of system where everybody is prepared for university regardless of their aptitudes, desires, and so on. I am not sufficiently up to date in regard to other provinces, but in Ontario there is an effort to provide a wide range of opportunity to children, in the hope that they will be able to effect this transition—that is really what we are concerned with, the transition from the world of school to the world of work—without as much difficulty as has been evidenced in the post-war period.

Senator Fergusson: Thank you.

The Chairman: At the bottom of page 108 you speak about "remediable disadvantages", and then you go on to define income maintenance, and you say: "a decent minimum standard of living, without qualification." That is the first one. Secondly, you say "their incomes should be fully protected against inflation." How do you do that?

Dr. Smith: One way of doing that is to provide for escalation in relation to price changes. We have some of these now, as you know, in the case of the old age payments, but that is partial at this point.

The Chairman: It is usually well behind the actuality, and seems by comparison to be minimal. Is there any better way of doing that, than the way we have?

Dr. Smith: What happens if you do not have this is that you get major changes that occur from time to time—periodically one has to go through a difficult process to effect some major changes in payments. This has happened in the past in regard to old age payments, when some large changes were made. It is a very difficult process—it is a difficult process politically, among other things.

The Chairman: When you say "politically," you mean that if you suggest it has to be cut down, it is as well to leave town? But that does not happen or has not happened up to this. Then you say they "should be assured of some participation in the rising average real standards of living which the growing productivity in our economy makes possible." I may be misreading you there, but I think what you are saying—and you can correct me—is that there should be some participation in the gross national product. Or are you saying that?

Dr. Smith: Yes. What we had in mind is that, over the long run, as our economy moves forward, as we make increasingly efficient use of the resources, manpower and materials, at our disposal, as we learn to "work smarter and not harder", there is general basis for raising the real living standards of our people. Our view is that, as the Council's Act has indicated, all Canadians should share in rising living standards, and this means that elderly or disabled people, among others, should benefit from our growing economic strength and share in the fruits of our economic progress, as our productivity rises in the long run.

The Chairman: Assuming for a moment that old age security is spartan—that is my word, not yours, so you will not be blamed for it—on the other hand you have the “protection against inflation”, whatever it is at the moment, and there is some basis for it.

The figure often quoted on the gross national product is that the $78.50 that we pay now should run well into—the last figure I saw was, I think $125—if you took the figure at the time we fixed it at $75 and if you gave them the benefit of the GNP.

Dr. Smith: In a measurement of that kind, a lot depends on whatever base one uses. When one takes the longer term development in the post-war period and makes allowance also for the fact that there is a supplement to the old age payments as well at this stage, I think one could probably basically say that, on the trend, there have been adjustments which on the whole, have allowed elderly people to share in the progress and development of the economy.

The Chairman: There are two problems that plague us in our studies. There are many, but these two stand out constantly. They are the welfare system and the minimum wage.

You have had a look at the welfare system. Generally, across the country, it has not worked, it is not working. In many respects, it is considered to be a failure. We have devoted much brains and money to the welfare system. Our first question is: I would like to know why we failed in it? Our intentions were good. We tried. We looked at some other countries to see what they were doing. Why did we fail?

From that, I would like you to go into another aspect which is troubling us. It is said that the average family is 3.6 persons. We took the figure of 4 in a family and found that if a man is working full-time at minimum wages, in every province in Canada, he can earn less than he is entitled to receive on welfare. We have not been able to reconcile our views on that at all. I would like you to give us your views, or anyone else to give any views on it. I am sure you have views.

Dr. Smith: On the first question, I do not think I would like to write the welfare system off as a total failure. It has helped to achieve a number of things. What has become clearer is that we need a basic review of all aspects of this system. We need to go back and ask ourselves, particularly in the context of the conditions that we are in now and the conditions which we might reasonably look forward to in the medium term future, what are the objectives and purposes of the welfare programs. In the past, much too frequently, major welfare programs have been put into place without really clear conceptions as to what the objectives and goals were. We also did not ask ourselves enough about whether this particular program or this particular kind of objective.

We have done virtually nothing in evaluating and appraising whether what we were doing on these programs in fact was continuing to be effective to achieve the objectives that we had in mind. We have done very little hard appraisal and evaluation of that kind. One of the things we need is a basic clarification, as we called for in the Fifth Review, of objectives—what is it we are trying to do with these programs—a much clearer assessment of the alternatives that are available, and much more attention paid to evaluations of various kinds.

I sometimes use the analogy that it took eight million man-hours of professional time to put a DC-8 into the air, but in the economic and social fields we frequently have launched off very major programs costing very large sums of money with very little, or virtually no, professional assessment beforehand as to whether we have got something that is going to work. I am always very pleased when I travel in a DC-8 that there were eight million man-hours put into launching that plane. But I suppose we have very few major programs in the economic and social fields in Canada in which we have put even one hundred thousand man-hours. We are just underdeveloped.

We need a great deal more research in these things we need to move increasingly in the direction of undertaking pilot projects and test projects of one kind or another to find what really works in the field and not what one thinks is going to work when one is sitting behind a desk and thinking about the problem theoretically and analytically.

The world is a very complicated place. We are finding that it is much more complicated in the economic and social realms than we had imagined it to be. So this is what I would say about the welfare system. We need a thorough reappraisal and a much better informed approach to many of these problems.

The problem of minimum wages is very difficult. One of the things that is quite clear is that simply to raise minimum wages is not likely to be one of the main lines of solution to poverty problems. That may create, in many situations, the conditions in which certain operations simply stop, and there may then be significant adjustment problems that emerge.

On the other hand, in terms of a social legislation base, I think minimum wages are important components of that. In many fields some of the problems we have in terms of inadequate incomes and inadequate earnings and wage levels reflect a whole range of conditions and problems and policies. The basic reason why low wages get paid in many areas is simply the fact that the productivity is very low—we are using resources very inefficiently, and there may be all kinds of reasons why that happens. One of the reasons may be that our tariffs are too high and that we have provided protection for the activities of some firms which struggle along and survive in this country in a relatively inefficient way, generating relatively low incomes.

Among the countries that have tended to operate with relatively low tariffs, there has been a great deal more pressure put on the system to avoid having relatively inefficient activities that frequently do pay low wages.

When I was in Sweden a couple of years ago I was very impressed that the textile unions were agitating for low tariffs. They said that they did not want to work for low wages in the textile industry and that tariffs should come down, so that either the firms become more efficient and pay higher wages, or else they go out of business and the workers would work some place else. In effect, that is what they were saying. This is, of course, only one possible factor that might be cited. There are many factors which may lead to low productivity.

Perhaps Mrs. Ostry may want to add something on this point of minimum wages.

Dr. Ostry: I think it is important to try to sort out the reasons for low wages and the sort of people who are paid wages below minimum in order to be able to at least hypothesize on what the effect of a minimum wage would be on this area of poverty with which you are concerned.

There have been a number of studies which have suggested that minimum wage laws can, under certain circumstances, exacerbate the problem by creating barriers to employment of particular groups who would otherwise be absorbed into employment, and, if there is no alternative provision for dealing with these adverse employment effects of a minimum wage law, then you have not really contributed to the solution of the problem. You have only exacerbated it.

The Government of Ontario, so far as I know, is the only provincial government which has undertaken several rather intensive studies trying to estimate the employment effect of their revisions to minimum wages, and, although I have not seen those studies, I think it would be worth your while to look into them.

The federal minimum is a very recent phenomenon, as you know, and in the surveys that preceded the institution of that minimum, which, after all, only covers 10 per cent of the labour force, you can see which industries were going to be affected, and they were by and large banking, because the other industries under federal jurisdiction are high wage industries. Then one would want to examine the kind of labour force that that would hit. It is largely the single female. This is the kind of thing you would want to look into in trying to relate minimum wage as an instrument in an anti-poverty program, because it may turn out in certain circumstances not to assist but rather to exacerbate the problem.

The Chairman: Dr. Smith, you were speaking about research. Our experience has been, and our liaison people across the country keep reporting this to us, that the poor people themselves make the constant assertion that they have been searched and researched and re-researched and what is there that we want to know about them that we do not already know. That is the poor talking. Is there not a great deal of truth in that?

Dr. Smith: In fact, we really have not done very much research. When we came to do our work in this field, starting with the Fifth Annual Review, we found that there was very little we could build on. There were very few studies that had been done that were relevant. We were trying to search for many kinds of information that were not available. There has been more done in the United States, but even in the United States there is a general feeling that many things are still at a very early stage of development in terms of research and knowledge and understanding of problems.

In this context, I draw to your attention although I know that you are already aware of it—to the fact that in the United States there exists the Institute on Poverty at the University of Wisconsin, which is a sizable operation. It has a staff of professional people larger than the entire staff of the Economic Council of Canada, working in the poverty field. We have no counterpart to that sort of institute in Canada at all. We have had no Institute for Research on Human Resources in Canada, our most important resources. In field after field in Canada we are still very underdeveloped in research and, particularly, in the social sciences and the humanities.

Even when one goes back to very basic things such as defining "poverty," with appropriate information to try to get an appropriate poverty line, we had to use an approximation in our work because adequate information did not exist on a poverty line.

Incidentally, in that context, Senator McGrand implied a few moments ago in his comment that there might have been some increase in poverty in recent years. I wonder if it might be useful to have Miss Podoluk say a few words. She has recently completed a new set of data on poverty in this publication called, "Income Distribution and Poverty in Canada, 1967." I believe, Mr. Chairman, that you used that source in your remarks in the Senate the other day.

The Chairman: We have provided copies to the members of our committee.

Dr. Smith: Miss Podoluk has been invaluable to us in this field in terms of her knowledge of the data. Would you like to indicate the main results of your work?

Miss J. R. Podoluk, Dominion Bureau of Statistics: It has been distributed to your committee, so I assume the senators have looked at the information in it.

What it showed was that the absolute numbers have gone down, but the internal characteristics remain largely unchanged as to regional distribution of families, as to those headed by women against families headed by men, and as to families with the head in the labour force and not. These patterns show very little change, but the main change showed up in numbers. Anything said on the characteristics in the Review pretty well holds now.

The Chairman: The numbers are set forth in the document, of course.

Miss Podoluk: Yes, we express them in percentages. We gave the numbers as 840,000 families and nearly 600,000 individuals. As I mentioned before the hearings started, this translates into 3.8 million persons in terms of the overall population.

Dr. Smith: In terms of families, this means a decline in the estimates of poverty we had of around 25 per cent or a little over for 1961, to 20 per cent in 1965, and down to 18 or 18½ per cent now.

Miss Podoluk: That is right. This 18.6 per cent is now all families, including farm families. If the 1967 figures had been in terms of non-farm it would have been lower than 18.6—possibly 1 or 2 percentage points lower than that; but bringing in the rural farm families has had some effect.

Dr. Ostry: In terms of the other measure, it has gone down.

Dr. Smith: It was close to 30 per cent in 1961 including farm families—but the data on farm families was not good—we had an estimate of 28 per cent...

Miss Podoluk: I think it was around 26 per cent for families, and it probably would have been 28 or 29 per cent down to 19 per cent.

The Chairman: That is a pretty good record, Dr. Smith. Can you help us by attributing it to something or other that we have done right?

Dr. Smith: I think the major factor has been that during the sixties we have gone through a very great economic expansion in this country which has helped to lift up Canadian Standard of living, on the whole, in an extraordinary way. We have been through the longest period of recessionless expansion since 1961 that we have ever had in our history, and the overall dimensions of this growth are very striking. From 1960 to this year we have also had an increase in employment of 1¼ million people in this country.

Senator McGrand: In what industries did that expansion occur?

Dr. Smith: Mostly in the service industries; this is where the large increase has been taking place. Indeed, if I recall correctly, in 1967 and 1968 all of the increase in employment in Canada occurred in the service industries and there was no increase in the goods-producing industries at all.

Senator McGrand: We hear about industrial expansion, and we hear of a $50 million or a $100 million investment in some manufacturing development or work, but the actual people employed only number about 100 or 200. That development in itself does not employ more than a couple of hundred people, but perhaps it stimulates or activates other sources of employment. Is that it?

Dr. Smith: That is right. As we move to stages of higher income—and this is a general phenomenon at work all around the world in what we call the industrially advanced countries—the demands for increased services appear to grow very strongly. This is where much of the employment is created. We are very conscious of this in some of the areas where a huge expansion has taken place in employment—in the educational system in the sixties, in the health care system, in retail and wholesale trade with the development of more stores, and in government. These have all been areas of very rapidly growing employment.

Senator Cook: Also during the last ten years there have been large pieces of social legislation, such as Medicare, the Canada Assistance Act, and vocational training, all of which also help to make the picture a little brighter than it was ten years ago.

Dr. Smith: Yes, that is right.

The Chairman: Correct me if I am wrong, but by their very nature the service industries are lower paid and less organized. Is it fair to say that?

Dr. Smith: Some of them are: they are generally less organized; some are lower paid. On the other hand, in some you find that there are high payments, such as you find with the professional components in medical care services, university professors and so on. There are some areas where incomes tend to be quite high.

The Chairman: Doctor, we have been hearing a great deal in our evidence about the guaranteed income for the disadvantaged, and you have expressed your views on it. I picked up a report yesterday which bothers me. It is reported here that the provincial treasurer of Ontario has been talking of a negative income tax for those in the Province of Ontario who are below the poverty line of $3,500.

Dr. Smith: I have not heard about this.

The Chairman: If this report is correct, he has said that a couple of times now. Is it possible in our system as it is at the present time for any province to go off on its own on such a matter?

Dr. Smith: I do not think I can really answer that question. I have not thought about what might be the possibilities here, or the problems that might emerge. I would want to think about that some more. It is possible for provinces, of course, to have very different patterns and levels of taxes and expenditures, so I would not want to say off-hand that a province such as Ontario could not institute a negative income tax, but it would raise some problems.

The Chairman: You spoke of pilot projects a little earlier. Who best can do that work, and how best can it be done? I ask this question because we shall have to give some consideration to that in our studies.

Dr. Smith: I do not know. Some of these projects can perhaps be done by private organizations. As you know, there is a significant involvement by the Institute of Poverty at the University of Wisconsin in some of the pilot projects in the United States on the negative income tax. Their staff members are helping to monitor those, and provide professional manpower to assist, but I would think that for a great many of these projects there would need to be government involvement and government support for them.

In the United States, under the new arrangement that has evolved, the Office of Economic Opportunity has, in fact, become the office to analyze, examine, and experiment in an endeavour to develop new approaches to anti-poverty policies up to the stage where some of these approaches can be judged to be useful and workable. Then other Government departments at that time take over the actual implementation or general implementation on a large scale of the new approaches and policies. That is one way of approaching things.

I myself would think that in Canada we have a somewhat more complicated situation.

in that perhaps federal-provincial co-operation, on a basis of co-ordination and certainly of joint interest, ought to play some part in the background of approaches. Put exactly how this could best be done I am not sure. We have implied in our own work that the problems and questions in this field might usefully be taken up in a joint federal-provincial context at an appropriate federal-provincial conference.

Senator Cook: Is there any country now which pays, or which uses the concept of, a guaranteed annual income?

Dr. Smith: I do not think so.

The Chairman: No. The only income maintenance program in existence today is the one we have under the old age security legislation. That is the only one of its kind in the world.

At the present time, doctor, we make an adjustment for the cost of living. Do we make an adjustment for the standard of living?

Dr. Smith: We make some adjustment for changes in the consumer price index in connection with old age pension payments. There are two or three questions about this. One is as to whether the consumer price index, as we have it, is the best factor by which to adjust. In Canada we do not have a consumer price index developed around the particular basket of goods that might be more germane to the spending patterns of the elderly. This may be an area to which we should give some attention in the development of the prices data of D.B.S. but that again would be somewhat different from a cost of living index.

A cost of living index, as this term is usually used, would also reflect some changes in spending patterns, in part reflecting opportunities, changes, and alterations in buying patterns, partly in response to price changes. We do not have any genuine cost of living index in Canada.

As to changes in the standard of living, that term is usually related to changes in real per capita consumption—changes that occur over time. That would be something which in the long run would reflect the productivity improvement and the real growth of our system. We have no adjustment at this stage in any of our escalators that take account of that.

Senator Cook: Would you make an observation on the cost of credit to the poor?

Dr. Smith: Yes, we touched on this in our last review, saying that it is another area in which there may very well be, in practice, a discrimination that applies to poor people. In many cases the poor people do not have as easy access to some of the cheaper sources of credit, and the system operates very largely in terms of assessing the credit-worthiness of borrowers in terms of their present incomes, assets, and so on. That in itself also makes it difficult for people with low incomes to obtain access to credit, because people with low incomes also generally have small assets. Perhaps here there is scope for more consideration in the credit-granting process to what the credit is to be used for, and to the potential earning power that might be generated by the use of credit.

Senator Cook: Do you mean we should consider as to whether it is credit for a productive purpose?

Dr. Smith: Yes, as to whether it produces a pay-off which will enable the individual to be in a position to repay the loan in due course.

The Chairman: Would you like to be the judge of that situation?

Dr. Ostry: This is an interesting point, I think, because the American pilot projects in part are being designed in order to be able to provide information which would be quite relevant to what you are suggesting. If you have a sample of people which is a randomized sample—in other words, you have not biased it in any way—then what it should give you is some ability to be able to predict the kind of thing you are concerned with, within fairly narrow margins of certainty. This is in fact what we are suggesting with government programs. If somebody wants a mobility grant to move from the Maritimes to Toronto and he does not have the assets which would allow him to borrow from a commercial bank, the Government on the basis of its assumptions about the return on this kind of movement, says this man has credit-worthiness because he will be more than able to pay back that amount of money. You cannot expect the private banks to do this. This is the kind of interest one wants in assessing the "credit-worthiness" of an individual.

The Chairman: Actually, Dr. Ostry, the Department of Manpower and Immigration does that at the present time. The problem is so large and involved that we have tried to break it down into understandable proportions for ourselves. We tried to identify the people in this manner: the disadvantage, the blind, the disabled, the pensioned, those receiving old age security payments. These are the people who are no longer in the main stream of labour, but could be put into the main stream of life. I think your report agrees that they have a special place.

Secondly, we have looked at the single woman who is head of a family and widowed, divorced, deserted on some sort of an agreement where she has the responsibility for a very large number of young children. That we think is a special problem. We have got the hard core. That is a very special problem about which we are not too sure at all of what we can do.

Then we find ourselves in the middle, as you in effect say in your report, with the real problem being the working poor, the under-employed, seasonally employed. There we find far more than 50 per cent of our problem. Without discussing solutions, what do you say about our assessment of the incidence of the problem? Where do we go wrong there?

Dr. Smith: Is this in terms of your approach in this committee or in terms of our policies?

The Chairman: In terms of the approach of the committee in looking at it. Are we looking in the right places and are we looking at the right people?

Dr. Smith: In the past we have developed a wide variety of welfare programs, as you know, to deal with certain categories of people. They are frequently categories in which the incidence of poverty tends to be high, but they are not programs aimed specifically at poor people as such. As you were pointing out, we have programs that are intended to be focused on the aged. We have other programs that are intended to be focused on those who are disabled or blind, the young, the unemployed (in the case of unemployment insurance), but we do not have programs focused explicitly on the poor. In our review last year one of the central principles at the end was that if we are really going to start to develop effective anti-poverty programs, we are going to have to focus on the poor.

The Chairman: Please continue with what you said and recommended in your report.

Dr. Smith: One of the first things that you must do if you are going to have programs oriented that way more effectively is to be able to have a better definition and measurement of the poor. One of the crucial initial steps is to evolve a better definition. The Prime Minister announced in September of last year that efforts would be made to move in this direction. This is a difficult thing to do because this must focus not just on income. It has to go further than that and be concerned with such basic questions as what is involved in nutrition. It has to be concerned with what constitutes, let us say, decent housing. You have to have a lot of expert input into defining what are the basic minimum needs that must be met. I think this is the crucial point with which an exercise needs to start.

Then we need to have, as I was indicating earlier, a system which does provide for basic income maintenance for those who are unable to have access to the resources to meet these basic minimum needs. As I was also suggesting, we need something more than that. That will not really solve poverty. Something like a negative income tax or a guaranteed income system of some kind is entirely consistent with our approach in the last review, but it will not solve the problems that we are talking about.

What is required further is much more effective ways to bring the poor people who have income earning capacities, or who can be given income earning capacities, in to participate in an active way in the economic life of our nation. These basic minimum programs will not do that by themselves. They will assist in many cases because income maintenance assistance in many instances provides resources, more effectively than in the past, for people to invest in themselves and their children. This is vitally important. In this area there is a very complex question of how to bring people who are able to participate in the system into much more effective participation. Some of the problems lie on the side of preparing them adequately to play that kind of part. Some of the problems lie on the side of our economic system and how the opportunities may be expanded for drawing them in more effectively.

The Chairman: Doctor, we have been saying publicly and between ourselves that guaranteed income alone will not solve the problem. There are essential services and the delivery of those services is as important as the income. You cannot even start delivering these services until such time as you give them the basic income. Do you agree with that generally?

Dr. Smith: Yes, there is an interconnection between the two, obviously, a close association.

The Chairman: We have a few minutes left. The ladies who came in from the Adult Education Division have heard Dr. Smith and they do not often get a chance to hear him. Perhaps they have some questions they would like to ask the doctor? Do not be shy.

Dr. Smith: you have referred to research and what we require to do in the future. I could never understand why the attempt we made to deal with poverty in the way we did, with the organization we set up, did not bear fruit. Would it be embarrassing to you to suggest that you might know why? I could never figure that out. We set up a group to attempt to do something about it almost on its own, attached to the Prime Minister's office, if you recall.

Dr. Smith: You are referring to the Special Planning Secretariat?

The Chairman: Yes. Somehow or other, I cannot put my finger on anything at all that had any realism to it.

Dr. Smith: That initiative lasted only a short time and was then abandoned. Last year in our review we called for the re-establishment of something akin to that, some kind of group within government that would have a concern about, first of all, maintaining a central system of information about various programs having some bearing on poverty of one sort or another. We suggested that kind of office might also be one to which people from outside could come for information. It might evolve into an office in which there would be an increasing exchange of information an office through which some kinds of research would be undertaken, and which perhaps would play some kind of role as an agency to facilitate an increasing amount of co-ordination among many different programs and policies concerned with poverty. I think that kind of office would be useful. In the last review we again refer in a sense to this same issue.

The Chairman: On the last page, in the last paragraph, you refer to a kind of social engineering.

Dr. Smith: In the Sixth Review we included not only a special chapter on poverty, but also on page 166 of the final chapter of the review—the policy chapter—we suggested that certain steps be taken now. The first of these was that the federal Government should establish an office to provide information and to co-ordinate research on poverty. I believe that an office of this kind could play a very useful role in this field.

Senator Cook: Dr. Smith might be interested to know that a great deal of thought has been given to this by the public in Canada. We have had some excellent briefs, and undoubtedly the thinking public are thinking and applying themselves to the problem. The solution, of course, is another matter.

Dr. Smith: We have been following your committee's work with great interest, and I must say we are very much impressed by the interest and attention your constructive endeavours are receiving.

Senator Cook: We have heard a lot of nonsense too. At the same time, we have also had many very good briefs.

The Chairman: Perhaps you have been impressed by the attention we have received of a sort that we sometimes get too much of. However, that is neither here nor there. One of the best briefs I have seen has been from the Dalhousie Institute of Public Affairs. You should have a copy of that if you have not already seen it. That brief just stood out.

Are there any other questions?

Doctor, on behalf of the committee I must express to you and your staff our sincere appreciation. Whenever we have called on you you have been helpful and co-operative, and that has been true of your office. We are in great need of help and will be calling on you again from time to time. I am delighted that the ladies were here to see the type of civil servants we have at our disposal, and I am sure they will go away feeling that the country is in good hands.

The committee adjourned.

Second Session—Twenty-eighth Parliament

1969

THE SENATE OF CANADA

PROCEEDINGS

OF THE

SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE

ON

POVERTY

The Honourable DAVID A. CROLL, Chairman

No. 6

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 17th, 1969

WITNESSES:

Mount Carmel Clinic: Mrs. Anne G. Ross, Executive Director; Mrs. Marlyne Melnyk; Mrs. Simone Marand.

The Neighbourhood Service Centre of Greater Winnipeg: Mr. D. H. Lawrence, Executive Director; Mrs. Reva Waldman; Mr. J. G. Lyons.

Class of Design, School of Architecture, University of Manitoba: Professor Brian Woods, Faculty Adviser; Miss Nancy Thompson; Miss Lyn Gemmell; Mr. Israel Lyon; Mr. E. Hugh.

Winnipeg Tenants Association: Mrs. Harvelyn McInnis; Mr. Celestin Guiboche; Mr. Victor Couchène.

APPENDICES:

A.—Brief submitted by Mount Carmel Clinic.

B.—Brief submitted by Stony Mountain Native Brotherhood, Manitoba Penitentiary.

C.—Brief submitted by Department of Environmental Studies, Faculty of Architecture, University of Manitoba.

MEMBERS OF THE
SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE ON POVERTY

The Honourable David A. Croll, Chairman

The Honourable Senators:

Bélisle	Hastings
Carter	Inman
Connolly (Halifax North)	Lefrançois
Croll	MacDonald (Queens)
Eudes	McGrand
Everett	Pearson
Fergusson	Quart
Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche ,	Roebuck
Deputy Chairman)	Sparrow

(18 Members)
(Quorum 6)

Patrick J. Savoie,
Clerk of the Committee.

ORDERS OF REFERENCE

Extract of the Minutes of Proceedings of the Senate of Tuesday, October 28, 1969.

"The Honourable Senator Croll moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Roebuck:

That a Special Committee of the Senate be appointed to investigate and report upon all aspects of poverty in Canada, whether urban, rural, regional or otherwise, to define and elucidate the problem of poverty in Canada, and to recommend appropriate action to ensure the establishment of a more effective structure of remedial measures;

That the Committee have power to engage the services of such counsel, staff and technical advisors as may be necessary for the purpose of the inquiry;

That the Committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, and to report from time to time;

That the Committee be authorized to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the Committee, to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate, and to adjourn from place to place;

That the evidence taken on the subject during the preceding session be referred to the Committee; and

That the Committee be composed of the Honourable Senators Bélisle, Carter, Cook, Croll, Eudes, Everett, Fergusson, Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche), Hastings, Inman, Lefrançois, McGrand, Pearson, Quart, Roebuck and Sparrow.

After debate,

In amendment, the Honourable Senator McDonald moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Burchill, that the motion be not now adopted, but that it be amended by striking out paragraph 4 thereof and substituting therefor the following:—

"That the Committee be authorized to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the Committee, to adjourn from place to place, and notwithstanding Rule 76 (4), to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate."

After debate, and—

The question being put on the motion in amendment, it was—
Resolved in the affirmative.

The question being put on the motion of the Honourable Senator Croll, seconded by the Honourable Senator Roebuck, as amended, it was—

Resolved in the affirmative."

Extract of the Minutes of Proceedings of the Senate of Wednesday, October 29, 1969.

"With leave of the Senate,

The Honourable Senator McDonald moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Smith:

That the names of the Honourable Senators Connolly (Halifax North) and MacDonald (Queens) be added to the list of Senators serving on the Special Committee of the Senate appointed to investigate and report all aspects of poverty in Canada; and

That the name of the Honourable Senator Nichol be removed from the list of Senators serving on the said Special Committee.

The question being put on the motion, it was—
Resolved in the affirmative."

ROBERT FORTIER,
Clerk of the Senate.

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS

Winnipeg, Manitoba.

Monday, November 17th, 1969.

Pursuant to adjournment and notice the Special Senate Committee on Poverty met this day at 9.30 a.m.

Present: The Honourable Senators Belisle, Connolly (Halifax North), Croll (Chairman), Eudes, Everett, Fergusson, Hastings, Inman, McGrand and Sparrow.

In attendance: Frederick J. Joyce, Director.

The following witnesses were introduced and heard:

MOUNT CARMEL CLINIC:

Mrs. Anne G. Ross, Executive Director.

Mrs. Marlyne Melnyk

Mrs. Simone Marand

At the conclusion of the presentation by Mount Carmel Clinic, the Chairman thanked the Executive Director and her colleagues for a very interesting brief and presentation. At 11.15 a.m. the Committee adjourned until 1.30 p.m. while it left for a visiting tour of the Clinic to see its facilities and meet the staff and patients.

At 1.30 p.m. the Committee resumed its hearings.

The following witnesses were introduced and heard:

THE NEIGHBOURHOOD SERVICE CENTRE OF GREATER WINNIPEG:

Mr. D. H. Lawrence, Executive Director

Mrs. Reva Waldman

Mr. J. G. Lyons

In attendance:

Mr. R. H. Houston

At the conclusion of the questioning, the Chairman thanked the representatives of the Neighbourhood Service Centre for their interesting presentation.

CLASS OF DESIGN, SCHOOL OF ARCHITECTURE, UNIVERSITY OF MANITOBA:

Professor Brian Woods, Faculty Adviser

Miss Nancy Thompson

Miss Lyn Gemmell

Mr. Isreal Lyon

Mr. E. Hugh

In attendance:

Mr. Steven Barber
Miss Martha Banias

A brief statement was made by Professor Woods, followed by a presentation of slides dealing with design of children's playgrounds. The Chairman thanked Professor Woods and the students of Class Design for their fine presentation.

The Committee adjourned until 7.30 p.m.

The Committee resumed its hearings at 7.30 p.m., whereupon Senator Connolly made a verbal report of the visit by a sub-committee consisting of Senator Belisle and himself to the Stony Mountain Native Brotherhood, Manitoba Penitentiary.

On motion of Senator Connolly the brief by S.M.N.B. was ordered to be printed as an appendix to these proceedings.

The following witnesses were then introduced and heard:

WINNIPEG TENANTS ASSOCIATION:

Mrs. Harvelyn McInnis
Mr. Celestin Guiboche
Mr. Victor Couchène

In attendance:

Miss Gail Moss
Mr. Harry Boone

The briefs submitted by the Mount Carmel Clinic and Stony Mountain Native Brotherhood, Manitoba Penitentiary, and by the students and staff of the Department of Environmental Studies, Faculty of Architecture, University of Manitoba, are printed as appendices "A", "B" and "C", respectively, to these proceedings.

A paper entitled "Some Personal Views on Poverty", submitted by a women's group from Mount Carmel Clinic in Winnipeg, has been retained in the Committee's records.

At 9.35 p.m. the Committee adjourned until 9.30 a.m., Tuesday, November 18th, 1969.

ATTEST:

Patrick J. Savoie,
Clerk of the Committee.

THE SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE ON POVERTY

EVIDENCE

Winnipeg, Manitoba,
November 17, 1969.

The Special Senate Committee on Poverty met this day at 9.30 a.m.

Senator David A. Croll (Chairman) in the Chair.

The Chairman: Ladies and gentlemen, I will call the meeting of the special Senate Committee on Poverty to order.

We have quite a heavy and interesting programme. Many people have helped to make it possible particularly those who have responded to our invitation to come here today and tomorrow.

One particular word of thanks to Mr. Lloydenton who is a planning associate of the Community Welfare Planning Council in Winnipeg. He has been most helpful. The briefs are interesting and good and the papers have taken much time to prepare them and there are some very interesting observations from individuals as well as from organizations.

I think I should make clear at the outset some matters that would be useful for the persons appearing and those who will be following the proceedings. The reference made by the Senate to this Committee is to examine, report, and make recommendations on the totality of poverty. We accept, for the time being, the definition of the poverty line as outlined by the economic Council of Canada and these statistics—the very latest ones—from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics which indicate that there are 840,000 families below the poverty line consisting of three and one half million people in Canada. One of the early decisions that we made in this Committee was to identify the poor and to contact the poor. These were new approaches.

Now, we have had that in mind from the beginning and the Chairman speaking on behalf of the Committee had this to say when the Committee was reconvened—and I am quoting from Senate Hansard of October the 14th.

In order to contact the poor in every province, two members of our community liaison staff have been across the country twice to meet and visit with them. We think that their involvement is essential because the poor have a role to play and must have a voice in their own destiny. A place must be carved out for them around the decision table and once and for all if we are going to succeed they must enter the in group.

Now, I think I said that we have been able to identify them and I saw a report last week made by a special committee to the President of the United States in which they identified their poor and poverty stricken and they appear to be about the same as ours.

Now, our problem was "How do you contact the poor, the poverty stricken, when there are a million people involved?" Normally, you do it through public and private agencies, social workers and the organized poor but the poor aren't organized. Very few of them are. They don't write briefs. Poverty is a full-time occupation without such fringe benefits as writing briefs.

In addition to that we have to face up to the fact that the poor have privacy as we have privacy and we have no right to invade it without their consent. As a preliminary to our formula to see the poor and speak to them, we started out on a visit across the country; to provinces in the East and to provinces in the West here and in Vancouver this week to make, as I suggested, a preliminary visit to open lines of communication and to begin a meaningful dialogue with them.

They are seeking us out as I will indicate to you a little later on. Now, I think we should make it very clear at the beginning that we have no patent medicine for a cure of poverty and we have no magic formula. We come in goodwill and with high hopes and we are satisfied that this will not be an exercise in futility.

Before we can solve the problems, we must face up to it. One of our purposes is to ask the Canadian people to face up to it and to examine and to change things, how they should be changed. We are trying to start a dialogue, a debate, and we are even ready for an argument as to how things can be improved.

We are certain of one thing and that is as a result of our efforts every Canadian will be richer in the knowledge of his fellow Canadian and we hope this will activate him. Some things have come across to us in our hearing at the moment, and I think I should bring it to your attention. The poor are not poor because they are lazy or they lack initiative or they prefer Welfare. We have been told that time and time again and we have been told that by people who ought to know that that is not true. They are poor because our social structure guarantees poverty to many. Low minimum wages, unfair taxation, inadequate delivery of essential services. Just a few of the things I am mentioning now.

As for the welfare system as we know it now, the general consensus is that it has failed and this is no time to be thinking in terms of band-aids or Scotch tape. It was built to meet a different condition, for different times, different people, in different circumstances, and different concepts. We have to make up our minds what to do about it—how do we replace it and with what.

We have had a great deal of information about the guaranteed income. The rank and file appearing before us give it massive support. The experts are cautious. We are told time and again that the poor will not become unpoor without maintenance income. Quite immodestly I tell you that the idea of a guaranteed income originated in the Senate of Canada and was first suggested in the report that was made for the Old Age Security Programme. That was our report on the aging.

Now, I merely touched these two matters to indicate and to give you some idea of the many things we have already heard. What we come here for is to hear further evidence, to meet with the people who are deeply concerned personally and otherwise. We are looking for ideas. It's everybody's problem and something of an imaginary realism will come in very handy; new concepts, new approaches and we are listening hoping that what we hear will be beneficial for the people who are so much in need.

Now, the groundrules are very simple. The person who presents a brief will make a statement and subject himself or herself to questioning and we will try to leave some time for questioning from the floor. Please try to make your questions direct as we don't have too much time for speeches. If there is anyone else who has any brief or any presentations, get in touch with Mr. Fred Joyce who is our director and some arrangements will be made.

We have a very tight schedule, sitting as late as 9.30 tonight and we have to have an opportunity to give some consideration to these matters, and already since we arrived here yesterday we have two new requests for hearings and I have appointed a special committee who will be listening to some people this afternoon, Senator Connolly and Senator Belisle. They will not be here this afternoon as they will be attending some other hearings and will report to us later tonight.

Tomorrow morning, we have another request which we intend to meet and Senator Fergusson and Senator McGrand will give that attention.

Now, our first brief is from the Mount Carmel Clinic and Mrs. Anne Ross, who is the Executive Director of the Clinic, will be speaking on their behalf. This is a unique programme and in many ways a pioneer one. It's been looked at by many interested welfare people in Canada and the United States. She has with her two young ladies who will introduce themselves and make their statements, whatever they have to say. I wish to make it very clear to both of those young ladies that they are here of their own volition and we are in no way invading their privacy and they needn't come here—but they can if they like and they said they wanted to. We will leave the questioning until after their statements are finished.

Mrs. Anne G. Ross, Executive Director of the Mount Carmel Clinic: Mr. Chairman ladies and gentlemen, I would like to take this opportunity if I may, and welcome you to Winnipeg. This is the first one on the agenda and I believe this is your first trip to the West and to our fair city.

Our area of concern as Senator Croll has indicated, is a clinic and that brings to mind health. Not just health in general but health in the broadest term. Health as it affects the poor. We are most concerned, of course, with the ones who have no access to the kinds of care that you and I would like to have.

I would like to initially enunciate the clinic's policies. Our avowed policies being family oriented medical centre is to give total care to families. It attempts to promote comprehensive, unified, personalized and co-ordinated health care to the poor of the community.

Now, that sounds like a great big mouthful but a great deal has been said lately about co-ordination, comprehensive medical care, etcetera. I don't want to sound too smug but the Mount Carmel Clinic has been saying it for the past 15 years. There is no dichotomy between health and other needs. Both are inextricably connected to each other.

We wish to state that we believe that the economically deprived persons should receive the same care as you and I. We believe also that he should have a choice as to the type of health resources he uses. Now, that may sound odd. "What do you mean by choice." Surely you don't have a choice. Believe you me when you are poor you haven't too much choice.

In every part of Canada and in every part of the United States if you are poor there is only one place where you can get free medical care and that is in the large O.P.D.—the Out Patient Departments. I am not going to go into the kind of places those are but perhaps the girls would like to say because they have had a great deal of experience in regards to the kind of care they have received, but I don't wish to go into this discussion at present. I only know that there should be choice and the Mount Carmel Clinic offers that choice.

Patients who are struggling without proper housing, food or clothing, have a special problem, that we as medical people, in a medical centre, should assist them with. Once again, health is indivisible as there is no dichotomy. They should be given a chance for a rehabilitation to regain their dignity. They should be given a chance to regain their dignity and self respect. We say this within the context of a medical clinic. We should prevent them from running around from one agency to another and to cut some of the red tape. We say again that some of the neglected children should have special care and consideration.

Yes, we have neglected children, many. The reasons are too numerous to mention but neglect—"What does this mean?" When you are living in a rat-ridden house and when a child gets bitten and when that bite gets infected, and the mother doesn't know what to do and there are so many children that are equally, or similarly, or somewhat ill—they are neglected.

We, at the medical clinic, should be concerned not only about the infected areas due to the bite but why has that child received a bite in a rat-ridden house. The neglected child comes in covered with epigenous lesions—covered from head to toe. They were bitten by bed bugs and as they were scratching the infection set in. We, as a medical clinic, should be concerned and we show our concern by taking those children into our clinic and keeping them for the day, giving them medical and nursing care. We are a concerned clinic for the total needs of the family.

We say that the family must be helped to stay together in peace and harmony. When you see a child of twelve coming to you and saying, "Mrs. Ross, get me a foster home." Your heart just contracts. "I can't stand it anymore, my parents are fighting and drinking. I really haven't any clothes to wear to school but maybe if I went to a foster home maybe I will be treated better." We are concerned.

So we say that every need of the family including medical, emotional, financial, and legal should be met in one place. This would avoid duplication, confusion, and red tape.

I would like to take the Senators for just a very short and brief visit to the clinic. I know they are coming afterwards and we hope that you will enjoy that visit but I would like you to meet some of these cases. Just throw your imagination and try to see it. The grandfather is an Indian coming in with three small children. These children are covered with these epigenous lesions. We gave them medicine and three days later they came back and were worse. Do you wonder why? You go down and see the house where they live. You go in and there is a small garage-like affair—that, I believe it was a converted garage, behind the house, and you see these three children with these sores all over them playing in mud. Not sand, it looks like this sort of thin sand, but it is mud. You walk into the house and what do you find? You find a grandmother who has a heart condition and can hardly move around. You find no furniture, just apple boxes. You find one bed with no sheets on the bed. You find one tap in the sink which means "no hot water."

What were the instructions that we gave to this grandfather to look after these children? These children should have baths, here is some special soap, these children should have clothing—how can they possibly carry through these instructions when there is no hot water? They live in such circumstances.

We take the children in and we keep them there and that is how we treat them. Grandfather doesn't look so well. The grandfather was brought into the clinic and grandfather had infectious hepatitis. This is a highly contagious disease of the liver. He was so ill that we had to take him to the hospital, which left the grandmother to look after these children.

By the way, where was mother? Mother was in jail. Where was father? Father was fishing out in Selkirk trying to make a living for the whole family. They were living in these circumstances.

This is the fate of poverty. This is what we must reckon with. One more visit: a phone call. I can't come to the clinic I have no money. My husband has been fired from his job. I am very, very, very unhappy and I don't know what to do. The little one is ill. We have a clinic car and we pick up people who can't get in. We go down to the home—rickety old staircase and we walk up. There is darkness—it's winter—in fact it was Christmas and I remember it so well. We go in and we find three small rooms. There are six children, five pre-schoolers. Father was a taxi driver and he had a bad accident and he was suspended. There is some question as to whether or not he is eligible for welfare and it took us three days to fight it out with the welfare whether he should get it or not.

Meanwhile, once again, there are no sheets on the two beds. There are two burners and that's all. We want to get a turkey for them and it was very funny. We got some volunteers to bring them a turkey and suddenly we looked at each other "How are they going to cook that turkey—on what?" There were no globes in the lights. We wondered why. Well, they just didn't have any money to buy them. They just sat in total darkness. I walked up to the crib and there was this child lying there wrapped in an old overcoat right on the mattress. No bedding, no sheets. The temperature of a 104 and one ear was running and there was incrustation right down which was beginning to irritate the skin. We had a blanket with us and we wrapped up the child and we took three other children who were coughing to the clinic.

Mother was pale and apathetic. We examined the child who had an infected ear—it had a hole in the ear already, and we kept the child down in our day hospital. The two other children were coughing and had a bronchial condition. We kept them in the day hospital as well. The mother had high blood pressure, was anemic, and needed medication. After she felt a little better we had a talk about whether she planned to have more children—it was her decision whether she should or shouldn't.

These are the people that we look after day in and day out and this is the fate of poverty.

Let me introduce you to Stella. Stella is a beautiful Indian girl. Stella came for two years to the clinic and she was depressed and she didn't say very much. She was always very very tidy, very neat and very clean. She was concerned about her two boys who were growing up. Any attempt at finding what the problem was would be met with tears. We would sit in my office looking at each other and she was crying with tears rolling down her face. Not a word. "All right, Stella, when you are ready to talk come and talk." Pills were not enough. I was at her home once. It was bare but clean as a whistle. One day, Stella came running into the clinic hysterical and she poured it all out. She was married to a white man who beat her mercilessly. This time, he had tried to force his attentions on her and she couldn't take it. He threw her out into the night naked. She ran from neighbour to neighbour. Finally, she was able to get in and was given some blankets and something to wear and then when it became light she came to the clinic.

She needed counselling, she needed psychiatric care but fortunately this one has a happy ending. The husband suddenly realized what he had been doing to this girl and had a nervous breakdown. He was taken to the hospital. He slowly, slowly, under psychiatric care and counselling, and marriage counselling, became all right. As a matter of fact, I saw them both on Friday quite by accident and they are doing beautifully.

Now, there are many more so when we talk about a comprehensive programme, when we talk about an integrated programme, we talk about looking after the total human being. Not just the disease, not just what ails that person, but the total human being—what is it they need. They need better housing, they need care of all sorts.

The clinic has tried, to the best of its ability, but that best in our opinion is not good enough. It is not good enough because we have struggled for years—we were organized in 1926. We have struggled for years with very few funds. Every year it is a struggle to get a little more and our staff is limited. We do all we can with our limited staff to give a total care programme. We aren't able to do it because of lack of staff due to lack of funds.

We would like to make certain recommendations—if I may—in addition to all these things we are doing now, and which is known to the members of the Senate—I would like to just express that we would like to carry on a group therapy programme for deserted wives, pre-delinquent and delinquent youngsters and persons with other problems who can be helped through supervised group interaction and collective support. That can only be done if we have a psychologist and psychiatrist and social worker. We do have a psychiatrist but we do not have a psychologist and we do not have a social worker.

We would like to meet another need. Emergency financial assistance service. So often people come to us and say "We have nothing to eat—we have not been able to get any food in the welfare agency."

Now, I witnessed a very moving scene the other day. We have a group therapy programme of which these two girls are members and they will tell you a little bit about themselves and perhaps the group. When a woman who has spent a whole day in a welfare office and because her husband is self-employed, and because her husband has an old car, and because she had $30 which she had saved to meet these expenses until Tuesday—this is on a Wednesday when I saw her—she moved into a new house and she had to pay a deposit on gas of $30. She was without food for her children and herself. Because of all this she wasn't able to get any help. Now, it is possible if she had known that there were other places where she could go maybe she would have gotten help. She only knew where she went to one place, the logical place, one of the welfare places and they refused her. She knew that if she went to the Mount Carmel Clinic she would get help. We gave her some food but the moving thing was that when she got to the group therapy in the evening all the girls—and most of them are on welfare—when she told them her story each one took out a dollar and some of them two dollars, which they could ill afford and they said "Here take it until you have money from your husband." This was the most moving thing I have seen. The girls helping each other.

I think there should be financial—emergency financial help within the clinic when people need it.

I would like to see a Legal Aid programme with legal services available either on the clinic's premises or in the lawyers' office, as required. I would even stress that people living in poverty are constantly at loggerheads with the law. Be it delinquency by the young, alcoholism, or just a deserted wife requiring advice, a legal department should be there ready to assist in that area.

We are requesting—we should like to see a housing registry right on the premises of the clinic. How often have the girls come to me and said "Mrs. Ross, we are being thrown out. We haven't got a place—they don't want us (a) because we are Indians; (b) because we are black; (c) because we have too many children; (d) because we can't afford to pay what they are asking for that crummy place. Can you help me." How can I? We should have that available in the clinic.

I would like to see clinic specially trained people from the community—what I would like to call health advocates—something very new, to go out to the families and assist them in their health needs and other needs.

I would like to see, for instance, temporary babysitting services available on short notice. How often does a mother phone in and say "I am sorry, I can't come to the clinic today because I cannot get a babysitter. I cannot afford one."

We would like to see homemaker services to work in conjunction with the clinic.

We would like to see liaison facilities with police personnel who are specially trained for domestic situations that require police action. Just the other day in our group therapy we had quite a problem. One of the women living common law with a man who was good to her one the whole—but when he gets drunk he beats her mercilessly. This time he almost killed her. The marks on her throat indicated this and the doctor told her that she must get out of that house. By the way, he wouldn't let her go. She called the police three times and each time they said this is not our business. We cannot enter this house because he pays the rent. She says "Well, do I have to wait until I am killed?" Help me get away. I just want to get away and get out of the house.

This is not part of our problem. I would like to see a special police set up by the clinic, trained in handling such situations with an enlightened staff educated in psychology, sociology and governed by special laws.

Going back to the clinic we would like to see a play area put aside for the children who come and wait for their mothers. I would even like to see an area where the mothers could take one day off and leave the children with us. I think Simone would appreciate this—having 13 children—every now and again if we could just give her one day off—I really don't think she has 13 children because some of them are married but her seven children.

I am now running short on time so I would like to say this. It is obvious that if we had more funds which we would like to see given to us by the senior Governments to implement all these changes. We would like to implement all these new ideas and I would like to further recommend to the Senate that clinics such as these, or similar to them be set up throughout the length and breadth of Canada.

Once again, I think the poor have special problems and I think we should be concerned and acting in a concerned way we will be effective in promoting the rehabilitation of people who need it so much.

Mrs. Marlyne Melnyk: Mr. Chairman, Ladies and Gentlemen. I am Marlyne Melnyk a patient from the Mount Carmel Clinic group therapy club. I was widowed twice. The first time was when I was 17 years old and married at 19 and I was widowed again at 29. I lived on provincial welfare each time. I did try working but my health would not take it. I just wasn't strong enough.

At first I went on welfare for that reason but then I tried to work just to see if I could earn enough but I couldn't. It was impossible. My health couldn't take it and I got very sick. I tried waitress work, tried working in a service station as a service station attendant and tried cleaning houses and things of that sort.

The first time I was widowed I was living very much in the poor places since at that time the provincial welfare didn't allow very much money. I had cockroaches and mice to put up with. I had to move quite often because the housing was usually too crummy, unsafe, unheated or just plain inadequate.

When my health broke down it wasn't a matter of nerves at first it was rheumatic fever. I had it as a child and then I was working just before I got married the second time and right after I got married my health did give out. I had arthritis and rheumatic fever and a succession of illnesses. When I did get back on my feet again my husband got ill. I then got sick mentally, not real sick but I was disturbed because my second husband was dying of cancer. He died after nine years of suffering and when he died I was definitely incapable of taking responsibility of bringing in wages to support my two children.

I went to the provincial welfare scheme thinking that this was a very poor life. For instance, I never had enough money for food, I never had enough money to buy decent clothes, I don't mean expensive clothes, I mean just nice clothes for myself and my children. The majority of my clothing I have had given to me—even underclothing. I cannot afford dry cleaning for clothes, let alone buying them.

First of all my children need the clothes before I do because they have to go to school everyday, they have to have food and warm clothing and all I can afford is the bare necessities.

I cannot help but compare the way the Mount Carmel Clinic treats their patients and the way the big hospitals treat theirs. The Mount Carmel treats theirs with a personal concern. There is an understanding that you don't find in the big agencies and if you are seriously ill you know they are going to phone you and if you don't come for appointments they find out why you don't come.

If you have problems you can see a nurse or get in touch with Mrs. Ross. I know from experience because I did have some problems with my teenage son. I could talk to one of the nurses that I needed some advice and so on. I also found that if I don't have enough medication when I come to group therapy I could just go to the nurse and my prescription is filled for me.

There are many little things that people don't realize, the personal touches that the Clinic does give to each and every individual. It doesn't matter who or what you are. This is the kind of clinic that other cities should have and I think they definitely need more of them. The clinic is concerned with everything, your personal and private problems, anything and everything. There is no lines drawn. They are interested in our homes, our life in general, your friends and anything that you wish to discuss.

One thing I will say is that through the Mount Carmel group therapy I have gained self confidence in myself. If welfare would permit me to earn $100 or more I could earn whatever is allowed and my children and I would live much more adequately than we do now. I really believe that given the opportunity to earn—not just $20 a month because there is no achievement, but 100 or $150 then we would be able to save and it would be an achievement and we would have something instead of just being another number.

I cannot take a full-time job because I can't do it physically. Without the education and training I couldn't earn enough. If I was allowed to work part-time I probably would find some type of job and then I could perhaps take some training and better myself. For one thing, I really don't care to go to school without proper clothing to wear in the winter. I can't afford overshoes and I couldn't afford them last year. To help myself and my children I am quite prepared to go to work to supplement my income. I don't understand why I am not allowed to help myself.

Thank you.

Senator Everett: Mr. Chairman, may I have the witness' name again?

The Chairman: Marlyne Melnyk.

Mrs. Simone Marand: Mr. Chairman and Senators. I am Simone Marand and I am Chairman of the Mount Carmel Group Therapy Clinic. I am 40 years old and I have lived on and off public welfare since I was 17. I was married at age 15 and I have had 13 children and well, my first marriage didn't work out. This was partly due to lack of income, poor housing and many other pressures. We were separated many times and each time we were more helpless. In the end I left him for good.

Welfare has treated me as best they could but my allowance was never adequate. The basic necessities were met but they were just barely enough to live on. I never ever had enough income no matter how much I stretched the budget—my children have never had a doll carriage or a bicycle. I have never had a winter coat or a pair of winter boots. Perhaps, its no wonder that my children steal small items from grocery stores.

Many of the mothers on welfare have their problems because their children soon learn that at the end of each month they will be short of food.

In the past when my problems were too much for me and I had no one to help me I many times contemplated suicide. I was fortun-nate, I never went through with it. The welfare departments fed us but they never took the time to listen to my other problems. Usually the worker dropped in to investigate whether I was using my money in the right way. Lucky for me I heard about the Mount Carmel Clinic and became a client of theirs. When I need help I always know that they will take the time to listen to me.

The clinic is more than a medical and dental services although this is an important service. It is an important service for people who are on welfare. Also, the staff who work there care about us. They care about us as individuals and human beings. The clinic showed me that they really care.

My whole family uses these services of the clinic, sisters, fathers, mothers and everybody. I attend group therapy sessions each Wednesday night. We don't always solve everybody's problems but we do try to help each other. The problems that we discuss are unlimited. They include housing, marital relations, legal aid and child care and many others. As a group, we are able to support each other and have meaningful relations. This is the kind of help and support you don't get from the public agencies.

Now, when I need help I don't go anywhere but to the clinic. I still have seven children at home—the youngest is three but although they still need me at home I would like to have a chance to be someone. I feel that I understand people who have similar problems and would like to work with them. I am hoping that perhaps I could get some training and work as a welfare worker or social work on a part-time basis.

This would help me to support my family but also give me a chance to help others.

In closing, I would like to say that no one likes to be a welfare recipient. We would all try and work if we could get the help, support and opportunities to do so. The common concern and problems of being welfare. Being a welfare recipient is a degrading and dehumanizing experience. No welfare recipient desires or wants to be a public charge. All, if capable and able to do so would like to be gainfully employed and self sufficient. The stigma of being on welfare leaves a person open to exploitation by a landlord, by finance companies and furniture and grocery stores. Clients are propositioned for sexual favours if they want the articles at the regular price.

The general public is critical and ignorant of the welfare recipient's position. Teachers criticize a poorly kept and unkempt child, neighbours snoop and inform on the welfare recipient if she is seen drinking liquor or having company overnight. Social workers become investigators and not helping persons. The present system of welfare payments perpetuates the poverty problem because (a) payments are too low and they meet only the basic needs; (b) present means tests separate and break up families rather than reinforcing and holding them together; (c) the present system forces honest people to become dishonest in order to survive. The client begins to lie about his needs. If the client reports any additional income he stands to suffer immediate rejection of the social assistance. Consequently, the exploited learn to exploit the system.

The poverty culture breeds delinquency and crime. The common theft of food and clothing and toys are a common problem of poverty families.

The recommendations. 1. The Federal Government makes special provisions to increase their efforts in the area of facilitating the construction of low cost housing. 2. The Federal Government bring pressure on the provinces to enforce a health sanitation regulations. 3. Building codes and prosecution of neglectful or slum landlords. (a) The Federal Government enact legislation to see that the federal, provincial and municipal peace officers who deal with domestic affairs be required to take training in the following areas: (a) domestic relations; (b) social sciences and/or social work in order that they may have a better understanding of the problems of poverty, delinquency and crime. 4. The Federal Government support the establishment of nurseries, day care centres and kindergartens. This would facilitate the employment of many women who wish to be self sufficient. 5. That the Federal Government challenge the Canadian Bar Association who really assist needy people with legal aid. The present situation, with few exceptions, is ludicrous. Number 6. The Federal Government give serious consideration to new social welfare policies such as a guaranteed annual income or a negative income tax. Also that these programmes be constructed to provide incentives for those who want them.

Thank you, ladies and gentlemen.

The Chairman: I think I should make clear to the members of the Senate that the only assistance the girls received in drawing their briefs was the one of correct English. I know they felt a little hesitant about coming in and they had their English corrected—otherwise—its a very good brief.

There is just one thing before we start—and those in the audience know who they are—I was just wondering, on behalf of the Senate Committee, how many in the audience are students?

...Show of Hands.

I don't know what the classes are doing without you but I know that we are delighted to have you here. How many of you are in the social welfare field?

...Show of Hands.

Senator Belisle: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. May I say that I have been very much impressed with this brief and the wealth of information that the brief gives us. I say this sincerely regarding the human contact that is brought to our attention. May I say that having had the opportunity of serving two years on the special Senate Divorce Committee that I am in very deep sympathy with all of these problems that you have brought to our attention.

I have read your brief and in your recommendations, as you mentioned a while ago, I would like to ask you a question regarding paragraph 7, page II, and then in paragraph 8 and paragraph 13 where you say:

There is no protection for women, especially the poor, who have been brutally beaten and mistreated by their husbands. The police can only admonish, since legally the husband is in his own home. Often the husband, drunk and vicious, continues to pummel the wife after the police leave until tragedy ensues. We suggest that a Domestic Police Force, trained in handling such situations, with an enlightened staff educated in psychology, sociology and governed by special laws be instituted to save such women from permanent harm.

My question is this: how can we overcome the inability of the poor to take advantage of the legal services and other assistance that is now available and what can we do to assist them more directly. How can we integrate them more closely with the local community without infringing on the local citizen's right and the provincial right?

Senator Connolly: You are asking more than one question there.

Senator Belisle: Yes, I did ask those two questions but I realize I won't have another opportunity.

Mrs. Ross: Well, I wasn't prepared to come and solve your problems. However, what I am saying in essence is perhaps through your good offices and you are travelling throughout Canada—through your good offices and perhaps there could be some federal action say through the Attorney General's Department, where some special police or some special group or something to protect the woman alone. This is a very very severe situation that the woman has to face.

I am just throwing this as one of the things that might be done. I don't know whether this is the answer but all I know is that the stories that we get day in and day out, and the medical evidence has led us to believe that the woman is not protected. There is a complete non-concern on the part of the police. I am not saying that legally they can't do anything about it but I think there should be a change somewhere along the lines. Either through the Federal Government or perhaps talks should be started between the Federal Government and the Provincial Governments. They do have a severe situation that exists.

Senator Belisle: Did you appear before the Committee that was working towards the equality of women's rights which was headed by Mrs. Bird?

Mrs. Ross: Yes I did and that was my idea too. I recommended that at that time.

Senator Belisle: Thank you.

The Chairman: Senator Inman?

Senator Inman: Mr. Chairman, I was interested in Mrs. Ross speaking about the police. She said that the police didn't go or couldn't go into the home. I think that wife beating is illegal in the provinces and the police do go and I am just wondering why they don't go here?

Mrs. Ross: Well, they come and say that the man is in his own home. If you want to lay action lay action in the Family Court.

Senator Inman: Well, I just assumed that the law must be different in this province.

The Chairman: I don't think the law is different but I think the application of it is a bit different. They are hesitant you know to go in when two people are quarrelling. There is a reluctance towards it and you have to have some judgment when you are doing it.

Senator Everett: I was very impressed, Mr. Chairman, with all these briefs, especially those of Mrs. Ross and Mrs. Melnyk. I would like to ask Mrs. Marand—she makes a recommendation in the final part of her brief to the effect that the Federal Government should challenge the Federal Bar Association to really assist needy people with free legal aid. The present situation, with few exceptions, is ludicrous. I gather that you have had some experience?

Mrs. Marand: Yes sir.

The Chairman: Wait until Senator Everett has finished his question.

Senator Everett: Well, Mr. Chairman, I really have finished my question.

Mrs. Marand: Well, over the past ten years I have been trying to get a divorce from my legal husband. I have been told that this is not a matter they can help me with because I live on welfare. I should meet somebody that I want to really marry, how do I go about getting a divorce when I still have seven children and raising them on welfare?

Senator Everett: You tell me why they tell you they can't help you? Did they give you any reasons?

Mrs. Marand: Well, the Welfare Department refers you to Legal Aid if you want a separation or a divorce. They will help you for a separation but not for a divorce.

Senator Everett: Do they give you any reasons for this attitude?

Mrs. Marand: Well, you just don't have any money to pay.

Senator Everett: Well, I am saying that this Legal Aid will help you for a separation but they won't help you for a divorce?

Mrs. Marand: Well, usually, divorces are much more costly.

Senator Everett: Well, I am wondering if Mrs. Ross can tell me what the Legal Aid arrangements are in this province?

Mrs. Ross: Well, the Legal Aid will help you in a separation case and so on but I know from what the two girls have told me that everyone of them who has applied for a legal divorce in particular, has been turned down, except one and she made such a fuss and she threatened and she would just go there everytime and raise all sort of—and they helped her. She is the only one of the group that did get help but there are quite a few of the girls who would like to have a divorce and separations from their husbands. ing, you just aren't eligible.

Another thing that perhaps isn't as well known is the young woman who is separated and who needs Legal Aid and who works and supports a child would just barely make it. Free Legal Aid is not available to her at all. She is perhaps making just as little as the one who is on welfare yet because you are working, you just aren't eligible.

This is what our girls tell me. I went once with one of our patients to obtain Legal Aid for separation purposes and this was obtained but the feedback I get is that not divorces and not if you are working.

Senator Everett: This appears to be the feedback we are getting all over the country.

The Chairman: No, no. You mustn't mistake that. There are provinces that do provide for Legal Aid for divorces and Legal Aid for people who can prove that they are unable to obtain Legal Aid under certain circumstances. It's a matter of provincial regulations.

Senator Everett: May I ask Mrs. Melnyk if she has had any Legal Aid experience in this province?

Mrs. Melnyk: No I haven't. I am a widow.

Senator Everett: Thank you very much.

Senator McGrand: In looking at this material which has been given to us, this background of poverty, it mentions that Winnipeg's population has increased some 42,000 from 1961 to 1966. Now, has available employment increased in proportion to the increase in population? That's one question. The second one is, are the poor that you have referred to—and you have referred to a great many cases—are they native born Winnipeg people or were they born outside of Winnipeg and moved in in recent years?

Mrs. Ross: I will answer the second question first with the first so I will pass it up if you don't mind. I can only speak on behalf of my experience working with people at Mount Carmel. When you are talking of native people may I say that between 50 and 55 per cent of our patients are Indian Metis. Now, how native can you get?

Secondly, we do have quite a sort of mosaic in our clinic. As a matter of fact—I speak several languages and the other day a Portuguese came in and said "Mrs. Ross, we need you." We do get some fair number of new immigrants like Italians, Yugoslavs, and so on but the majority are people who are born and raised in Canada.

Senator McGrand: Well, I say Winnipeg?

Mrs. Ross: Well, Canadians I mean.

Senator McGrand: I know they are Canadians and they are probably born in Manitoba, but did they grow up in Winnipeg or were they people that moved in from the north or the east and so on?

Mrs. Ross: Well, Senator, that's a very good question except that I can't answer it because we haven't done any studies in that area.

The Chairman: Senator McGrand, were you speaking of the background material?

Senator McGrand: Yes.

The Chairman: Well, as you know, that was not received...

Senator McGrand: Yes, but we were speaking of poverty and employment, and employment is very closely associated with poverty. That is why I asked the question whether in your opinion the increase of employment balances the increase of the population? I know you are not in a position to say but that is my question.

Mrs. Ross: I really would like to pass that up.

Senator McGrand: Well, there is another question. Now, in these bed bug infected homes, what can be done and what has been done about this sort of thing. It is the landlord I suppose who is responsible for the cleanliness of his house or property. What attempts have been made to force the landlord to do something about that sort of thing?

Mrs. Ross: Well, when we get children—on Friday, for example, we had a family of eight who were bitten by bed bugs and they were covered. I don't mean infected, but covered and I said to the mother "Have you called the Health Department?" She said "No, I won't do that they will probably give me a notice." However, I convinced her that the Health Department should be called in to investigate this situation and she agreed.

Now, this is the problem. You call the Health Department and they might go into—I say they might go in—actually they do go in quite a few places but somehow these little bugs get into the furniture and into the wood-work and get into Lord knows where and they just seem to thrive and the landlord cannot be compelled to do anything because if you don't like it you can move out. Out you go. You give your month's notice and you are out and that's it. We have had cases where the people who live in such places, where the landlord wasn't responsive to her pleas to vacate the place and she reported him to the Health Department and she got notice in a great big hurry.

Senator Fergusson: Mr. Chairman, I would like to congratulate Mrs. Ross and Mrs. Melnyk and Mrs. Marand for a wonderful presentation. I think they made a very clear and a very vivid presentation to this Committee on the situation of many people who are really actually suffering from poverty. Their presentation was extremely good but the thing I would like to ask is this. Mrs. Ross suggested that if we had a housing registry, that this might do a lot to find proper housing for people. And what I would like to know is, even if we do have a registry is there enough suitable housing to assign to people?

Mrs. Ross: No. Perhaps that formulation wasn't very good and perhaps we should have said more than a housing registry. We should have said to work with other groups which are interested in the promotion of better housing where we could get better housing for people.

For instance, the clinic is situated in the most depressed—economically depressed part of the city of Winnipeg. I just have to look at it through the windows—I will show you when you get there, how you can see just how people live. We have tried and other people have tried to get the powers that be to take some of these houses and renovate them and rent them to people in the low income groups. When I talk about housing registry and I just sort of put it in there, but if you wish me to digress I can. This is the kind of thing we would like. We would like housing made available and that we should sort of merge these single governmental—the Provincial Government and the Federal Government—to make possible housing facilities so that we can get our people in to good housing.

Senator Fergusson: I was interested in your saying that there are houses that might be renovated. You do think that there are many of these existing houses that could be renovated?

Mrs. Ross: I would think so. When you walk into our clinic you will see—well, I won't tell you what you will see but I will tell you what you would have seen two or three years ago. It was a dilapidated place just falling apart and it was just ready to collapse. I want you to see what we did with it just two years ago—just how it can be done.

Senator Fergusson: Well, this is what I meant. You don't feel that all these old buildings have to be torn down, that many could be made use of if they are not quite so dilapidated?

Mrs. Ross: Well, when we rented the places we got the advice of engineers and architects and if we were told these certainly weren't worthwhile saving we certainly wouldn't have done anything. When we were told that this building basically was in good shape, structurally, we went ahead. This is what can be done everywhere.

Senator Fergusson: I agree with you because I live in a house that's over 100 years old and I certainly don't think it has to be torn down and a new one built.

The Chairman: The New Brunswickers built houses better than they do now. Mrs. Ross what is your present budget?

Mrs. Ross: Our present budget is approximately $74,000.

The Chairman: How do you raise it?

Mrs. Ross: That is a very good question. Thank you. The United Way has been our mainstay for the past four years. Before then we really—before United Way came on the scene we were ready to close our doors and I don't mean maybe. Right now, United Way—we get a small grant from the Province of Manitoba and we get a grant from the City of Winnipeg which is renewable every year. In other words, we have to prove that we still need the money and we get private donations. Basically, these are our main sources of income.

The Chairman: Well, just roughly could you estimate the percentage of private donations to the total on a percentage basis?

Mrs. Ross: No, Senator Croll, one of my Achilles' Heel's is mathematics.

The Chairman: Well, approximately in dollars and cents?

Mrs. Ross: The United Way gave us up to now a little more than half of our budget. The Province of Manitoba gave us—I would say less than a quarter, a fifth maybe, and the City of Winnipeg gave us $10,000. We received a very small amount from the Municipality of Wildwood, and we also had some private grants.

The Chairman: You indicated that you had in mind that your budget would be larger in the immediate future?

Mrs. Ross: Yes. As a matter of fact talking about the budget we haven't a clue as to where we are going to get the $60,000 for next year. Our budget has risen definitely and from all indications we will have to really knock on doors to get this $60,000 to meet our 1970 budget.

Senator Everett: In Appendix "A", Mrs. Ross you said that the clinic handled 239,265—I gather services?

Mrs. Ross: Yes.

Senator Everett: That is the total of all the services listed on the accompanying...

Mrs. Ross: Those are services which means a service could be an x-ray, it could be a dressing, it could be a pass for a child, it could be sitting down with Simone here for half an hour and listening to their troubles, and well, it's anything at all. It could be the pulling of teeth and so on.

If you noticed we have in 1950 the services were 2,000. We estimate our services for 1969 to be 239,265. Now, it's been a clinic that has just kept going upward and we like to believe that one of the reasons that there is this increase is because of our comprehensive approach and our attitudes to the people. We like to think that we do treat our patients with concern, with dignity, with a compassion, and with sympathy. We think, that is one of the reasons perhaps I don't know all of the answers why our services have kept going up—our clientele has kept going up.

Senator Everett: You provide that service for $74,000 a year did you say?

Mrs. Ross: In 1969. As a matter of fact when we went to the United Way just recently for more funds. One of the members of the Committee in awe said my goodness, it only costs about 30 cents a service, and I thought, boy maybe we will get more money, but I don't know whether we will or not.

Senator Everett: How many patients do you handle or do you propose to handle this year after nine months experience?

Mrs. Ross: Well, we have over here the patients' visits per month.

Senator Everett: No, not patients' visits.

Mrs. Ross: Well, we can't divide patients from patients' visits. Every hospital, every clinic, counts patients' visits rather than patients because a patient can come in and you will never see him again. That's one visit. A patient can come and he will come back again to see the doctor for some other reason, the next week and the week after. He might be coming for x-rays and so on, and so these are visits.

Senator Everett: That's true for accounting reasons but I am wondering if it's the same way the Children's Aid Society talks I think of Day Care patients. I am still interested in the number of patients you would handle each year.

Mrs. Ross: Well, as a matter of fact we have an analyst and we have asked the Winnipeg Family Council to assist us in assessing which of these are patients—I mean how many patients actually because we have not got the staff to do this kind of thing. We do the best we can.

Senator McGrand: In all this work you do how much free medical and dental care do you get from the medical and dental professions?

Mrs. Ross: Up until—well, over the years the medical profession has given us all free services. There was absolutely no question of paying anybody. The dental facilities we have set up were set up in 1964 but it has given us a lot of heartache and frustration because the number of people who wish to have dental care has grown but the number of dentists who are able and willing to give their time voluntarily has decreased, so we have this difficulty. We are now in the process of—as a matter of fact this afternoon we are having meetings with the Dental School and all sorts of things are happening. We just have to have more dentists.

Senator McGrand: Well, do the dentists come to your clinic?

Mrs. Ross: Yes. You will see our dental setup later on today.

Senator Fergusson: I think that I must have misunderstood Mrs. Ross but I thought she said that you have no social worker?

Mrs. Ross: No. We have no social worker. What we do have is a school unit of social students. We have just been trying it for the last two or three years and the third year is up. This is it. Up until now the students have been there to serve them and the service is secondary.

Senator Fergusson: Well, I was wondering where you get professional advice?

Mrs. Ross: Well, I have some background somewhere along the line, however, I am not the only one. Plus the school unit there comes a professor who assists us in the group therapy. We also have a psychiatrist and we also have—we are very close to the doctors.

The Chairman: Would you enlarge on what Senator Everett asked you regarding the services rendered at the clinic. Is it a fact that the services rendered at the clinic by a doctor cannot be paid for under Medicare?

Mrs. Ross: Well, I was wondering how long it would take the Senator to ask that question. Yes, but you will have to remember that until April, Medicare was not in existence in the Province of Manitoba. Right now, yes, the doctors will be paid but not the clinic. The clinic cannot charge for preparation, however, the doctors are very generous and we have had a meeting with them recently and we have reason to believe that they will give us a portion of their earnings at the clinic but that will not cover too much.

Senator Hastings: Mr. Chairman, I would like to join other members of the Committee in congratulating these ladies for coming before us this morning, particularly Mrs. Melnyk and Mrs. Marand. This is the first time we have, or second, to actually just address questions to people most directly affected by poverty. Mrs. Melnyk, I was impressed with your presentation and I would like to give you a couple of questions. You said you were going to be unable to purchase shoes this winter. Now, I don't wish to invade your privacy but I am wondering if you would like to tell me, as I recall you have two daughters?

Mrs. Melnyk: A daughter and a son.

21356—21

Senator Hastings: What are their ages?

Mrs. Melnyk: My son is 17 and my daughter is 10.

Senator Hastings: Is your son still at school?

Mrs. Melnyk: Yes he is. He is in Grade 11.

Senator Hastings: Is he looking forward to staying in school?

Mrs. Melnyk: Yes he is. He is looking forward to going to University if he gets his grades etcetera.

Senator Hastings: Would you care to tell me—you said there was no incentive to earn an extra $25 so I would like to know first of all what is your total allowance, living allowance for you and your two children per month?

Mrs. Melnyk: Well, I can't give you an exact figure due to the fact that it will be changed because I have just moved on the 1st of November. I will give you the facts say in September. My rent was $90 a month and I had to pay my own Hydro. I also had to pay for my telephone which I was not supposed to have because it is a luxury item. The rest was for food and clothing and I received $212.

Senator Hastings: Well, you had $212 and you take off $90 for your rent and you would have $122 for food and clothing?

Mrs. Melnyk: No. I had $90 for the rent, $5 approximately for my electricity, $4 or something more for my telephone, so this is how it went. I also did not have a washing machine and I had to use the laundromat which cost me $15 to $20 a month. You, of course, know the price of milk...

Senator Hastings: I know the price of milk.

Mrs. Melnyk: How far is a $100 or so going to go with a 17 year old boy and a 10 year old girl and the boy doesn't eat a quarter of a pound of meat anymore...

Senator Hastings: I would say $40 per week per person.

Mrs. Melnyk: Very very easily.

Senator Hastings: Are you paid your welfare by voucher?

Mrs. Melnyk: No, I receive a cheque every month and I am responsible to pay everything that I have to pay for.

The Chairman: Well, there is a law in this country that has been passed by Parliament, by the Senate, and its on the Statute Books that says that every person in this country is entitled to have his or her needs met. In the Province of Manitoba there is an Appeal Board—a very good one that will allow a person who isn't getting it to go before the Appeal Board. Why isn't that being done?

Mrs. Melnyk: Mr. Chairman, I have never known about this.

The Chairman: Well, we passed the Canada Assistance Act sometime ago and the Province of Manitoba joined in with an agreement and we provide half these funds for what is needed by the person.

Mrs. Ross: I don't think it is that simple. I have had occasions when the girls have come to me and the answer is that we have to make special—we have to make special arrangements with the Minister and we have to get his permission first.

The Chairman: For what?

Mrs. Ross: For anything extra that they want.

The Chairman: For the appeal?

Mrs. Ross: Well, very few of the girls are prepared to go before an Appel Board but many of them frankly don't know about it. Maybe if we had a social worker we would know more about it.

The Chairman: Well, I read the report here of some of these students and I don't think you could really improve upon it if he was a social worker with many years of experience. As a matter of fact, I thought it was an excellent brief.

Mrs. Ross: Well, they only spend two days a week at Mount Carmel.

Senator Hastings: Well, you mentioned incentives. If you receive a welfare payment and you earn—is there no incentive to earn a little bit to supplement that?

Mrs. Melnyk: Well, if you are earning $22, you are docked $2.

Senators Hastings: You mean, it is taken off your check?

Mrs. Melnyk: Yes.

Senator Sparrow: Anything over $20?

Senator Hastings: $20 is the minimum?

Mrs. Melnyk: Yes. How can you do anything with $20 today?

The Chairman: This is $20 in one month? Under the Old Age Security you are entitled to half of what you earn above what you get and yet for the young people you cut them down to 20. Well, we are getting close to the time when we promised to go out and see this clinic, but in view of the fact that there are so many students here in the audience I think it would be worthwhile if we gave them an opportunity to do some questioning. This would be as a reward for the classes that they might have missed this morning, or something like that.

Is there anybody in the audience with a question? Is there any student who would like to have some questions answered?

Mr. Michael Owen: Mrs. Ross, I would like to know to what extent Mount Carmel Clinic is involved with other agencies both governmental and private agencies?

Mrs. Ross: I can assure you that we are involved with every agency in the City of Winnipeg. We are involved in one way or the other.

Mr. Owen: How do you feel that the Government agencies view the Mount Carmel Clinic?

Mrs. Ross: Well, I can't tell you about their views about Mount Carmel Clinic but I can only tell you that we have many referrals from the Provincial Welfare offices, the City Welfare Department and the Children's Aid. I have many students coming to me from Winnipeg and the University of Manitoba etcetera, asking for information regarding the clinic but as far as I know there is a good liaison between all of the agencies.

Mr. Owen: You seem to have difficulty in getting financial support?

Mrs. Ross: Well, naturally we sometimes are at loggerheads in that we would like to get certain things for our patients and perhaps certain members of agencies just don't see it the way we do but on the whole when we get going we can see eye to eye about certain things but they have their rules and we have ours.

The Chairman: Any more questions?

Mr. Julius Koteles: I am not a student but I would like to direct three questions to Mrs.

Ross. I am not one of those who are prepared to accept that the philosophy of the poor will always be with us. From your own lengthy experience a question that the Committee itself is here to investigate, what in your opinion, based on your experience, is the cause of poverty with the people that you have dealt with. Is it a lack of education, too many children too soon, or what? The second question is this. You have referred rather extensively to the beatings that women suffer but let me assure you as a lawyer I can cite many examples of battered husbands. However, I would like to ask you what the role of liquor and alcohol is in the problem of these people, and in fact, in the problem of the poor and the third question based upon what Mrs. Melnyk had to say on the shortcomings of welfare, that there is no incentive to go out and work and help yourself. It appears that the welfare system in the Province of Manitoba condemns you to remain on welfare but are there any other shortcomings you would care to comment on?

Now, those are the questions and I realize it's quite a big mouthful, but if you could precisely answer all three questions. These are the problems that trouble me.

Mrs. Ross: Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Board of the Mount Carmel Clinic, Mr. Koteles, I thought you were well schooled and perhaps you could answer these questions much better than I can.

Mr. Koteles: You are the Executive Director and I would like it to go on the record please.

Mrs. Ross: As far as the causes of poverty are concerned, I haven't made any profound studies on the causes of poverty, but I would say a great deal has to do with the lack of employment. I also find that 40 years old people who have reached the age of 40, or thereabouts, and who have no skills, haven't got a chance to get employment. There is also the fact that the youngsters who are born to the poor are not motivated to go to school, therefore they too are on the labour market and therefore, it is repeated.

It is a mouthful and I am getting the high sign here that the Senators here are supposed to be at Mount Carmel at 11 o'clock. As far as the beating of the women is concerned, I have yet to see a battered husband and this means 20 years of association with Mount Carmel Clinic, and may I also say that I have witnessed twice in the last three weeks an attempt by two husbands, within the clinic grounds, to batter their wives. We had quite a time just a little while ago and another one trying to choke her.

Certainly, alcoholism has a role to play and it's unfortunate, and I think this is an area which I think the Alcoholics Anonymous is doing a very good job—a very good job I would say, but a great deal more has to be done because it's a social problem.

Senator Hastings: Mrs. Ross, you say it has a role. How big a role?

Mrs. Ross: The Alcoholics Anonymous?

Senator Hastings: Yes.

Mrs. Ross: I think it plays a very good role but I think their attitude and their approach to the methods by which they are trying to rehabilitate people is a good one.

Senator Hastings: Well, you say that alcoholism has a role to play in poverty. How big a role?

Mrs. Ross: Well, I think it's that people that are poor get very frustrated. People who are poor and who have many children and have no jobs just give up and one of the ways that they feel they can sort of get away from it all is by drinking. The only thing I can say is that many people that drink but I think when the poor drink it is more in evidence.

Senator McGrand: Mr. Chairman, just a very short question. We have talked about battered men and battered women. Do you experience much of the battered child syndrome in Winnipeg?

Mrs. Ross: Well, I can't speak for Winnipeg but I understand that there are battered children which are brought in to the Children's Hospital but you see we are in a clinic, not a hospital. We don't get that kind of child.

The Chairman: Any other questions?

Miss Jean Altsmire: My name is Jean Altsmire, and I am also not a student. This session that the two women are in—are all of you on welfare?

Mrs. Ross: Yes.

Miss Altsmire: Has there ever been a meeting between you and representatives of the welfare office to try and deal with some of the problems that welfare causes you, and if an attempt has been made has it been productive?

Mrs. Marand: Well, as I said before, welfare has helped me. I think they have done their best for me and my children. My budget is very limited and I am allowed $319 a month for myself and seven children, which includes rent, hydro, telephone, food, clothing and what have you.

Miss Altsmire: I mean in terms of dehumanizing aspect—that welfare workers are investigators and are investigating these kinds of problems, not financial problems?

Mrs. Marand: Well, when you come on welfare they sometimes make you feel like it's coming right out of their pockets. This is what I call dehumanizing.

Miss Altsmire: So you have not had a meeting with people from welfare?

Mrs. Marand: I have met some nice people at the welfare and I have met some not so nice people.

The Chairman: Any other questions?

Miss Nora Winnick: You were mentioning about the renovating of these houses and one of your recommendations had this in mind. Have you anything to do with this new low rental housing? We heard there has been some difficulties?

Mrs. Ross: Well, we have been in touch with the various groups which have been active in Point Douglas—this is where we are situated—and we certainly are working with any and every group that is interested in promoting good housing and we are aware of what they are doing and we are ready to help.

Miss Winnick: Could you give me any idea of what the requirements are—what a person needs to get into one of these low rental developments?

Mrs. Ross: Well, you are talking about urban renewal and I think you put your name down and wait. You have to have a certain income and you have to have a certain number of children, and so on and so forth. If you want to speak to the urban renewal people they will tell you much more than I can tell you.

The Chairman: Are there any other questions?

Mr. George DeLong: Does the clinic itself have ways that they assess the charges?

Mrs. Ross: Basically we have no means test if that is what he means. Anyone who comes to the clinic, especially now with Medicare, if they can afford to pay for the Medicines we are certainly pleased to receive. We certainly welcome payment but if they can't we don't insist on it. If they can afford to pay for any part of the service we are most receptive but on the whole we do give a generally free service.

From The Floor: Do you have any way of knowing whether a person can pay or not?

Mrs. Ross: Well, when they come in they are registered and they are asked whether they are working and if they would like to tell us what their earnings are. Very often, they go into great detail and very often they will tell us about their debts without being asked too many questions.

Very often we get the complete story as to what their situation is without asking too many questions.

Senator Everett: If you don't get the answers you want what happens?

Mrs. Ross: I am not sure what you mean.

Senator Everett: You say that you have everybody register and you ask sometimes about their income.

Mrs. Ross: Well, when we are talking about registering, we are talking about making up a chart for the doctors. This is what I mean by registering. There is no such thing as turning anybody away. As an instance, there are many young people who are travelling throughout the country, as everybody knows, and we call them transients who are here and gone tomorrow and who come in sick. We certainly don't ask them any questions as to their ability to pay—none of them have car or anything. They are given whatever assistance they need.

The Chairman: Well, for the information of those of you who are interested and you must be interested to be here, at 1.30 we are going to hear from the "Neighbourhood Service Centre" and the "University of Manitoba School of Architecture." Tonight we will be hearing from the "Winnipeg Tenants Association." All this will take place in this room and then we have meetings for tomorrow starting at 9.30 till about 2.30. Those of you who are students particularly will be interested in that. At the present time, the Committee is going over to see the clinic.

May I say on behalf of the Committee to Mrs. Ross, Mrs. Melnyk, and Mrs. Marand—it's all right to sit in the audience and its all right to sit where I am sitting and where the Senators are sitting, but it takes a lot of courage to stand up and say what they have said this morning. They have given us their personal histories and for that we thank them very very much. It helps our knowledge of the situation because it becomes more personalized as they so much want it to be. So, on behalf of the Committee, we thank both of you, and thank Mrs. Ross for a very interesting brief and presentation. Thank you very much.

The meeting will now adjourn until 1.30 this afternoon.

Upon resuming at 1.30 p.m.)

The Chairman: Order, please. Some members of the committee have been appointed to a special subcommittee to hear other briefs, so they are not present now.

We are to hear now representations from the Neighbourhood Service Centre, whose spokesman is Mrs. Reva Waldman.

Mrs. Reva Waldman, Neighbourhood Service Centre: Our group today is made up of Mr. D. H. Lawrence, Executive Director, and Mr. J. G. Lyons, Mr. R. H. Houston, and myself, as staff workers.

The activities of the agency are to deal with community social concerns through family-strengthening services and development of local leadership. We operate group programs serving the general area of North and Central Winnipeg. It is a private agency, funded by the United Way.

Rather than summarize the brief I am going to read it to you now because it is very short.

Because we have been satisfied that these Senate hearings are giving a fair proportion of their time to groups of people living in the conditions of poverty, and because we know that local groups of these people are responding to the Senate's invitation to submit briefs, we are assuming that they will be speaking out the specific issues that touch on their lives, how the problems of poverty affect them and their families, and what solutions they may see or demand.

Since we are confident that the people with whom this study is concerned are very capable of speaking for themselves, we can turn our attention to some of the other aspects of our society that concern us. We cannot supply you with much of the information you requested in your outline, but suggest that much research and documentation already exists on the causes and incidences of poverty. We might also argue that a consensus that poverty and its effects must be eliminated is far more relevant and necessary today than a consensus on the causes of poverty.

We know that no single program or solution which deals with only one aspect of the causes or effects of poverty can hope to solve a problem which is baffling in its complexity, and which, as you suggest, can be viewed from an economic, cultural, social, psychological or political perspective, or any combinations or permutations of these perspectives.

The Canadian people must be made aware of the necessity of recognizing the complexity of the problem and must be helped to accept the fact that there cannot be simple answers to complex problems.

The causes of poverty are many, as are the effects, and these factors are all inter-related. All programs that are devised to deal with the problems of poverty must be based on the recognition of the interrelationship of all of these factors.

It will never be enough just to raise income level without raising the level of education in low income areas, for example, or to deal exclusively with the social and political alienation of the poor without considering adequate income maintenance. The only answer to the problem can come from a concerted attack on all fronts.

What we can focus on, however, is one particular aspect of the problem that we are concerned with—that aspect being one that we feel the Senate is particularly able to deal with. We speak here of the public attitude toward poverty, the enormous change that must take place in the minds and hearts of the people of this nation, and the effect that the Senate can have in influencing this change.

We feel that suitable, workable, effective programs must be found at the same time as the Canadian public is being educated toward the acceptance of a new, concerned and enlightened approach to the solution of poverty. Without general public understanding and support, we will continue with the piecemeal kinds of aid that cannot keep up with the growing problems, let alone solve the old ones.

We feel that the definition of poverty set forth by the Economic Council of Canada is an excellent starting point. No definition, however, and no statistical data can describe how it feels to be poor.

To experience from day to day the hopelessness and degradation of poverty and all that it implies is to understand the demoralizing effect it can have on the human spirit. Self-respect and dignity are difficult commodities to maintain and to instill in one's children when faced with poverty and the social attitudes which accompany it.

As the Economic Council stated: "To feel poverty is, among other things, to feel oneself an unwilling outsider—a virtual non-participant in the society in which one lives. ... Even the best statistics can only hint at this. They cannot capture the sour atmosphere of poor health and bad housing. The accumulated defeat, alienation and despair which often so tragically are inherited by the next and succeeding generations."

We believe that there is a growing number of Canadians committed to the ideal that the poor must have sufficient access to the benefit of society to allow for their growth and development as equal members. In spite of this movement, however, progress is much too slow to keep abreast of changing conditions.

We are saddled with an archaic welfare system which, in its present form, has no hope of solving the problems of poverty. This system is based on the philosophy espoused by the Old English Poor Laws, and is, to say the least, inappropriate for today's needs.

It is our contention that, at the root of much of the problem of poverty are social values and attitudes which work against an enlightened approach. To enumerate all of these in our brief would be impossible but we will attempt to outline some of the most obvious ones.

The old Protestant work ethic is still very much evident in our society. This value equates work and productivity with virtue and infers that the absence of prosperity denotes a basic flaw in the individual's make-up. From this value flows many of the negative attitudes we are concerned about.

The attitude that the poor are inferior in character or intelligence is partly a result of this value. Also the attitude that the poor are for the most part undeserving is a direct reflection of this value. One does not have to look too far to see these attitudes reflected in the welfare policies of many municipal and even some provincial governments.

Another value, which is certainly beyond reproach in its purest form, but which has many unfortunate side-effects is that of charity. To view social services and welfare measures purely as charity reinforces the attitude toward the so-called "undeserving poor." It encourages the condescending attitude which middle-class society has towards the poor and reinforces the attitude that welfare is a privilege that should only be accorded to those who pay tribute to the donor.

The disadvantage of the charity approach, then, is that it clouds many of the real issues of poverty and denies the individual many of his basic rights. It is an unfortunate reflection on our society that we must still depend upon private donations to provide many of our essential social services.

The public value is still one which views one part of society or a community doing something for another part. Expenditure directed at helping those who cannot pay their own way are seen to be in direct competition with expenditures of clearer direct benefit to the one who pays.

The danger inherent in this situation is the growing ability of the poor to become organized and to articulate their needs will be met by a backlash of resistance and diminishing sympathy by those who must legislate and pay for poverty programs. The legislators on the "comfortable Canadians" must be prepared for this situation—prepared to listen and respond in a responsible, sensitive manner.

The crucial issue here is the attitude toward poverty, because the particular strategies that are developed to deal with it can only be based on these attitudes. It is our responsibility, as it is ours, to work consciously toward changing these attitudes according to the values that must be the basis of a new approach.

While we recognize that attitudes cannot immediately be changed through legislation, we do believe that the long-term effect of good social legislation will be one of producing an acceptance of the concept that the country's government accepts responsibility for the well-being of all of its citizens.

Thank you.

Senator McGrand: On page 2 you say: "will never be enough just to raise income level without raising the level of education in low income areas," and then in the next line you say: "the social and political alienation of the poor," and then you reinforce your statement again in the next paragraph, and you say: "Without general public understanding and support, we will continue with the piecemeal kinds of aid that cannot keep up with the growing problems, let alone solve the old ones."

Now, I agree with you completely, but what I would like you to do is to tell us how do you propose to deal with this problem, especially the attitudes, to which you have referred several times.

Now, how are you going to approach this thing so that you can overcome the problem, especially the problem of attitude?

Mr. Lawrence, Executive Director, Neighbourhood Service Centre: If I may first, sir, I do not think we can give you an answer to this, but perhaps a start can be made.

I think, for example, the leaders of our country today are making some pretty enlightening speeches about the importance of people being involved in participation of the affairs of their country, growing concern or verbal concern about the poor, and I have no reason to doubt their sincerity, but this, coming from the leaders of our country, has very little effect on the actual operation of existing or continuing government programs.

I do feel that the elected representatives do have the power, the ability and the authority to begin to develop within these government departments programs that will help employees, senior members as well as all the way down the line to the junior members, to develop programs of training whereby the people who actually implement these programs can begin to study their own attitude, take a look at themselves, and to sort out some of their negative attitudes towards the poor; then I feel certain that as a result of this their approach to people in the sorting-out of programs will be a great deal better and I think a great example can be set here.

Now, you cannot legislate the general public to be accepting the poor but certainly the government can bring about some change in the attitudes of some of its employees, from the highest to the fellow who works across the desk. I believe this is one way they can set an example. It is possible to do it within existing government structures, I believe.

Senator Everett: Mrs. Waldman, on page 5 of your brief, item 10, you state: "It is an unfortunate reflection on our society that we must still depend upon private donations to provide many of our essential social services."

I wonder if you and your group can enlarge on that statement.

Mr. J. G. Lyons, Staff Worker, Neighbourhood Service Centre: I think the thing that we were referring to in that statement, if you will go back to the previous page you will see the discussion about the side effects of the charity approach. I think that is really what we are referring to here.

By taking the view that charity or that providing provision of adequate living for people who are less fortunate than ourselves is a right or at least is a privilege rather than a right, I think, is negating some of their basic rights. This is more or less what this sentence refers to.

Senator Everett: I think I understand but I would like you to enlarge on the ramifications of that statement because you say first of all this is a matter of right rather than privilege. Then you go on to say that it is reflected in the fact that we have to depend upon private donations for people to attain this right.

I am not arguing your premise. I am asking: what is the effect of that sort of thinking? What do you substantially suggest should be done?

Mr. Lyons: Well, what I am suggesting is that there should be a mechanism set up by the government for the provision of adequate resources for every individual. I do not know if I can take it further than this. Maybe somebody else can.

The Chairman: When you start talking about "adequate resources for every individual", what are you talking about? Let us have it in understandable language.

I understand what you are saying but I do not think you are getting it across here.

Mr. Lawrence: I think what we mean by that, sir, is the basic needs of a person's life in order to at least exist rather than a bare existence level.

I think what we are trying to say is this: that charity is a very meaningful thing and has been pretty well throughout the life of civilized society. We hope it will continue but in our opinion in this day and age, while charity should not be discouraged and while charitable donations to very well meaning and intended charitable organizations should not be discouraged, we feel that the charity organization should basically be an enhancing service, not providing the basic service of our society.

To take an example. I think it is pretty well accepted that today the good community includes a training programme of reaction, informal education and adult education and yet today we still see many communities where the municipal bodies have not taken care of this and churches and other charitable groups move in and do this.

I have made the statement publicly before that I do not think that churches and organizations, volunteer organizations generally, are trained or equipped to offer good recreational services. They are a stop gap and a piecemeal type of thing and I can speak from personal experience with our own agency, which, for many years, provided the only recreational informal educational services in the Logan area.

We were the poor man's YMCA. In effect by providing these services for many many years we were a blister on the heel of progress, if you will, inasmuch as the citizens of that area of the city never really came together to face the city to implement good recreation programmes and instead were prepared to accept our second-rate one.

We think very often these very well meaning and charitable services block the way to social progress.

For many many years municipal bodies, provincial governments, did not accept their responsibility as long as it is being handled through a charity group. We think they should be an enhancement of services but not the basic services.

Senator McGrand: Where do you start with this?

The Chairman: Can you justify discouraging in any way these volunteer agencies across the country that have been there for many years and doing it out of the generosity and motivation of their hearts?

Mr. Lawrence: I do not think you necessarily discourage them. Perhaps you should channel them into other areas.

The Chairman: Who would do the channelling?

Mr. Lawrence: That opens the whole question of who should. At this point it usually seems to fall into the laps of social agencies who perhaps are not really equipped to do this sort of work. They have not got the body of knowledge for it, or the people from the CYC and organizations like this or the Young Radical Group seems to be other ones who are doing more than anybody else today.

However, who it is, I don't know, but I think that more and more somebody has got to direct them towards placing their money and their efforts into other areas. I think this can be done. Certainly it was done by the United Way as far as our agency was concerned.

I think some of the central funding bodies could do this.

Senator Everett: Can you tell us about the United Way in your particular case?

Mr. Lawrence: Yes, sir. They made it fairly clear to us because of diminishing returns from the United Way Campaign and so forth, they felt our efforts should be put into helping people, take a look at the recreational problem in our area and to organize together and go before the municipal government to get them to accept the responsibility, which we did.

We helped them to organize themselves and submitted briefs and went before the municipal body and in turn they did then get the city government to take over the recreational role in that area.

Senator Sparrow: Mr. Lawrence seems in one sense to defend to a degree charitable organizations and in the next sentence says they are really not providing the proper function; that it is a fact if they were not there, governments would act faster.

I think our history of government action has been that government action is prompted in many instances by charitable organizations as such and you could refer to retardation or multiple sclerosis or this type of thing where individuals involved in the community started the movement and then the government reacted to it.

I am asking the question again, I suppose, but do you think in today's society that we now should be looking in the area of doing away with private charitable organizations, that the governments are at such a level now that they are prepared to accept the roles that our charitable organizations have been doing?

Mr. Lawrence: No sir. I do not think the government is that sensitive yet. I am not saying that private organizations still do not have a very important role to play and there are many areas, I do not think, will ever be direct government responsibility, but if we use your example of the retarded children. How many years did it take for the retarded people to get the government to take an interest; many many years.

I think that many organizations have come about to meet a social need and then perpetuate themselves on and on and on.

In addition to that what happens initially is a forge or movement to implement a programme for a particular group in the society and then it gets bigger, bigger and bigger and the private agency holds on to it longer, longer and longer, and forgets its main thrust which was to get public responsibility for this.

I think this is the danger I am talking about, not just to say private organizations should do their work better. I think they are a safety valve in our society. We have to have them, but there are still private agencies that are carrying out basic social services, providing welfare, if you will, maybe because the welfare departments in some cases do not work properly.

All the energy is going to meet everyday needs instead of organizing and bringing the agencies to task, if you will, and helping them to review how they may do their job properly.

The Chairman: I asked Mrs. Waldman when she sat down whether all three of you were qualified social workers and she said you were. Well, that leads me to a question then. I am assuming that all of you are knowledgeable about the Canada Assistance Act. I hope I gather that.

Do you know it is the law of the land today that every person has to have his needs met through the provincial government or the government of this country? Are you aware of that?

Mr. Lawrence: Yes, we are aware of that statement.

The Chairman: In the light of that statement why is not some cash being raised if that need is not being met by these social agencies who know these things better than the people who are unaware of them?

Mr. Lyons: Do you want me to take a stab at that?

The Chairman: Go ahead. You can all take a stab at it, if you like.

Mr. Lyons: Right. Maybe I will open up with something from right off the top of my head. I think possibly what the problem is, is in the definition of what are basic needs. I think if you are talking strictly about physical needs, the needs for clothing, food and shelter, etc., I think to some extent these are being met by provincial governments, but when we get into other needs, the more subtle ones, such as emotional needs, needs for security and these other things that do not come into the physical aspect, I think this is where the fringe areas are. This is where the needs are really not being met.

You can say a lot about the inadequacy of the physical needs, the way they are being met, but I think really there is a lot of fringe areas and when you start defining needs, you have to be pretty careful which criteria you are using. This is where the conflict is coming in.

The Chairman: If we are meeting the physical needs that you say...

Mr. Lyons: I'm sorry, sir, I do not say we are meeting it. I said we are making a stab at meeting it.

The Chairman: All right but you agree that the Act provides they be met. It may not be done but if we do that, are we not in some way softening the other matters of which you spoke, for example, environment?

If we meet that and you are not prepared to agree to that—I think you agree that the law provides for it, but you are not prepared to agree that that is being done. You can correct me if I am wrong.

Mr. Lyons: I am not sure if I understand you but just going back to the brief again. Now, take a look at the Act. You find we are providing welfare assistance to people. We give them a certain amount of money. We are providing a certain marginal level of living but at the same time we have attitudes in our society which are extremely negative towards the people who receive this welfare.

So, on the one hand we are giving them the physical amenities of life and yet on the other we are taking away any emotional support they might be getting from society. I do not know if this is clear but my point I am trying to make is that if we are going to really provide all the needs, we are going to have to start changing our basic attitudes towards the poor people and towards the recipients of welfare.

Senator Sparrow: This has come up in many of the briefs and particularly in discussions directly with poor people as such that the attitudes of the social worker and the government departments seems to be that of not what we can offer you, what we can give, but what we can chisel away from you, so to speak.

There is a basic standard to which they are entitled under law but the recipient never seems to know what they are in fact entitled to under the law.

We have asked this question and they say "We don't know what we are entitled to". The attitude is such—are you saying that the governments—I am not talking about the local governments, I am just saying 'government governments'—are unsympathetic themselves or the general public or both?

Are the governments generally, speaking to their social welfare, unsympathetic? Are you suggesting that their attitudes must be changed as well as the broad base of the Canadian people with regard to attitudes?

I have another question to ask you later.

Mrs. Waldman: I think one of the major points that we have missed here is not really how adequate the government programmes are. Some of them are more or less adequate than others but how these are translated into action at the field work level.

What happens to the individual person or family when they need help? Theoretically many of these programmes, many of the governments'—and this is government at three levels—programmes are good, reflecting basically good values and attitudes on the part of the legislators and the public. They are not, however, translated into action this way across the desk. There are all kinds of exceptions to this and, you know, of all people I think we social workers become rather sensitive with a lot of the current slams that are being thrown around about how inhuman social workers are and we are rather careful to point out it is the others and not us each time this happens.

But it is true in the programmes in their larger sense are these tremendous gaps. Our agency in particular is very aware of this because people come to us when they are not able to get service either in the way they would like to have it given, which is in a human, dignified way, or whether they fall through this network of somehow they just do not qualify or do not qualify today or they might next week or next month. When we see these people we are very well aware of these problems.

One in particular is of concern to me because I have known the particular people who have been caught in this particular trap which is, for example, the upgrading programmes that are planned and run through the Federal Department of Manpower.

Theoretically the programmes are great. They serve a purpose but we suspect that one of the major purposes being served, which has never been publicized, is to cut down the statistics of unemployment. It gets that many more people off the rolls as being unemployed because they are going to school, so we know very rarely or in very many cases the training for jobs do not relate to the jobs that are available.

The fact that people are counselled into taking courses and with a fair amount of frequency these people fail these courses, you know; whose fault is that—the failure of the counsellor who told them they ought to go into these courses and spend six months or a year on this course and then they are not able to complete it or if they do, there is no job.

These people finished their course, many of them, or failed their course and end up back on welfare exactly where they started, probably a few steps further back because they have at least had their hopes raised and they have been dashed again.

Now, I think those are the kind of things we are talking about as translation of programmes into reality at the grass roots level and the kind of things that Mr. Lawrence suggested that might be done to try and translate lip service into real service are the kinds of things that we would have to look at.

The Chairman: You are speaking of the Manpower service. We have heard across the country that these services are being widely used. In some instances they are a subject of criticism but in many parts of the country they are very helpful not so much perhaps for taking them off the relief rolls rather than unemployment but they do train people and people are placed.

Why would it be less of a success here? Why would you think they were less of a success in Winnipeg?

Mrs. Waldman: I speak only from my own experience with people that I know who have been through this mill and there are a number of case histories of which I am aware.

As I said before I think, some of the failures are due to the fact that the training is not realistically co-ordinated with the availability of jobs in the area. This is a basic thing.

The counselling in some cases does not seem to be related to the needs of people who are coming in for training or with the job situation in the area.

There seems to be no provisions made for the person who is counselled into taking a particular course and who is unable to make it. This becomes a failure on the part of the student rather than on the system or the course, that he is pushed into a particular field that he is not able to deal with. These are some of the particulars.

Senator Hastings: Mrs. Waldman, you said here were frequent failures. Are you speaking from knowledge?

Mrs. Waldman: Yes.

Senator Hastings: You say there are frequent failures?

Mrs. Waldman: I know of many.

Senator McGrand: I was going to address his question to Mr. Lawrence. As I listen to your remarks I tried to grasp what your basic thinking was on this problem. It is not so long ago I saw a young man carrying a placard which read "Smash Welfarism" and I asked him what he meant by "Smash Welfarism" and he explained that it was a great evil because it was a form of colonialism by which our organized society pays out a certain amount of money to an unfortunate individual and says "Now, here, take this. Put it in your pocket and run away and don't bother us for a while."

Now I do not know what your basic thought is as you were talking but I would like to get your opinion on welfarism and I do not think we should say it is a form of colonialism, but what is your thought on that, as you try to find your way out of the problem that we are now in?

Mr. Lawrence: Well, I'm afraid I haven't any real original ideas. I did read and listen with interest to the discussions that have gone on about guaranteed annual income and I must admit that despite the possibility of some negative aspects I am naive enough to believe that within the next few years this possibility has to come in this country.

What are my feelings about welfarism? I don't know. Having seen many of the tragedies that have occurred through this type of support and myself not being an economist, I have no immediate answers or alternatives to welfarism but I am prepared to accept the fact that welfarism is going to be with us for a number of years, so that it seems to me if welfarism is going to be with us for many years we must try to administer it in such a way that it is not going to strip away the dignity or the humanity of both the giver and the respondent because I am just as concerned about this fellow that is giving it too because it is doing some harm; but certainly I think we can improve the welfarism situation that we are in today and hopefully our economists and those who are far better equipped in social works rather than coming up with some sort of bleeding heart centres, that these people will address more of their talent to a more equitable system of looking after our less fortunate people; because let us face it, sir, within 'X' number of years there are going to be a great many more people who are not employed in the sense that we know it today and we are certainly not going to be able to handle them with the system we have now.

If automation comes or even if there is higher industrialization you are going to have to find a much better way to assist people who can no longer find employment in those situations.

The problem now is we start looking at the poor and what we are going to do about them in the future and we keep relating back to existing structures and older structures, and a tremendous amount of energy is going to be put into seeing how can we fit this idea into the existing programme or how can we modify the existing programme?

There seems to be a lack of creativity and imagination as to what new structures shall we develop to handle this.

The Chairman: Would you stop right there. If you had been here earlier in the day you would have heard me say we came here for creativity and imagination and new ideas.

Mr. Lawrence: Right.

The Chairman: Let us have them. What would you do? You tell us. You are a social worker. You have been around for some time. You have got some ideas. Try them out on the Senators here. We are very anxious to hear what you have to say. That is what we came here for.

Mr. Lawrence: Well, I would like to address myself to the point you said earlier, sir, where you said why aren't people out raising Cain. I may have some answers as to why people are not out raising Cain.

The Chairman: No. I wanted to know why you people were not out raising Cain. Other people are starting to raise Cain or the activists are.

Mr. Lawrence: Well, that is the particular point I would like to speak on.

The Chairman: All right.

Mr. Lawrence: I think there is a growing role in our society for the activator. It is not a respectable type at this stage of the game. There are many of us in social agencies who are beginning to be very concerned about taking a look at the traditional role of the social worker, the one who was there to put a bandaid on the wounds that have already been caused.

We feel there needs to be funds to provide for the employment of people that are detached from traditional institutions to go out and act as animators or resource workers in the lower social economic areas of our country.

Now, I think ideally these workers should be hired by and responsible to the residents but unfortunately the poor do not have the funds to engage such people and they have to depend on workers provided by private or government agencies. While this itself is not totally negative such workers are often in a state of conflict about where their first responsibility lies; to the citizens, to the poor people or to the employment agency.

Now, in working with the poor to improve communications, develop environment or to take social action, it is inevitable that the community worker is going to be involved in some action that could be potentially threatening to a department of government or to the bodies who provide funds for the operation of its agency.

Now, those of us who are involved in neighbourhood work and in community development are all too well aware of what has happened to some progressive and constructive citizen involvement when it has proved to be a threat to certain vested interests.

Senator Hastings: The funds—would you explain that statement?

Mr. Lawrence: Well, the funds have been cut back and workers fired.

The Chairman: Here?

Mr. Lawrence: And citizen leaders intimidated or co-opted.

The Chairman: Intimidation?

Mr. Lawrence: Intimidation, yes, verbal intimidation. As far as our agency is concerned no cutback as yet but we are not just speaking parochially here. Look across the country and see what is happening today and what has happened in a number of the parts of our country where activators and animators—I'm not talking about rabble-rousing—I am talking about responsible involvement of citizens because any idiot can go out and stir up a revolt. No problem at all!

I am talking about serious constructive development of people who have examined and looked at their problems and have taken some constructive steps to work with the establishment, whatever that is. It may be a number of things—but the work of these people is that they are trying to develop some programmes that are meaningful.

The Chairman: Who is doing that in Canada today?

Mr. Lawrence: Well, I don't know. I am not very much on legal things. I would suspect—you may not want to accept this because of current difficulties, but let us look at Montreal.

The Chairman: I asked you: who is doing this?

Mr. Lawrence: Who is doing this?

The Chairman: Yes, who is doing this action to which you are referring?

Mr. Lawrence: Well, we are attempting to do something in our area and the community development departments of some provincial governments are doing it in this province.

The Chairman: Here?

Mr. Lawrence: In this province, yes. Notwithstanding the fact I cannot speak for my colleagues in the Provincial Government, I would suspect they have far too few people doing that.

I know in talking to some of the workers directly face to face less than ten days ago, they are concerned about what would happen to them and their jobs if they got into situations that may be politically embarrassing.

Senator Hastings: Is this criticism of the Government of Canada in the withdrawal of funds from the CYC?

Mr. Lawrence: No, no. I think this is just one bit of it and I think this has happened over and over because there are cases to be cited of workers who were involved with agencies that got involved in community development and they are told to pull back, cut it out.

Senator Everett: Did you not earlier state that your agency had been involved in working with the disadvantaged in the municipality?

Mr. Lawrence: Yes.

Senator Everett: You have had some success.

Mr. Lawrence: Yes, but it is a very minimal success. It has been on very minor issues but the time has come when some major issues may develop and this is something very definitely we have to be concerned with.

I will give you an example, sir.

Senator Everett: Before you give the example, did you run into any of the problems you have just enunciated?

Mr. Lawrence: Yes.

Senator Everett: What was that?

Mr. Lawrence: The director of the agency has warned that what we were doing is communist and we better cut it out or we would be in trouble. This was from a responsible elected representative in this province.

The Chairman: There was one thing you said of which I was not aware. I think there was some inference that the Government had cut back the funds of the Company of Young Canadians—not to my knowledge.

Senator Hastings: They are closing them.

The Chairman: Well, yes.

Senator Hastings: I think there is an inference if they don't behave, then they will close them.

Senator Sparrow: Their budget was cut a year ago down to $1,900,000.

The Chairman: Everybody got cut a year ago.

Senator Sparrow: No, no.

The Chairman: That was a special case, as I understand it. For instance, in your own city, Senator Hastings, the CYC have done an outstanding job, I have heard it said.

Senator Hastings: That is fine. I was not criticizing the CYC. I was asking him if he regards the action of the Government of Canada in withdrawing funds from the CYC as one of those instances.

Mr. Lyons: Yes, I do.

Senator Hastings: That is what I thought.

The Chairman: Did they withdraw?

Senator Hastings: Yes, they are withdrawing.

Mr. Lawrence: They withdrew a certain amount of funds and they are telling themselves "Now, you behave yourselves".

Senator Hastings: Who is telling who?

Mr. Lawrence: The Government of Canada withdrew some of their funds and they are basically telling them to behave themselves. If one reads the papers, I think it was Friday night's where they are saying that one fellow has to go. Somebody is dictating one fellow has to go. I think this is not an isolated incident. I am not prepared to speak for other provinces but in two western provinces I have seen potentially two excellent organizations that were set up to deal with people at what we fondly call the 'grass roots' who, when things began to get a little awkward and politically uncomfortable, funds were cut back and people were let go. There is no question about this.

You will probably hear specifically from those people and that is who you should hear from, sir.

The Chairman: Mr. Lawrence, this is the first time I have heard it. And I must say I do get around a bit. I know a few things are happening but this is the first time I have ever heard it as applicable to the Government or to any government.

I have heard criticism of some of the activists and no organization is above criticism, but I have never heard of the withdrawal of funds, and as Senator Hastings says, funds were frozen until the investigation in connection with the CYC.

Senator Hastings: I think they were withdrawn.

Senator Sparrow: The budget was $2,700,000 and a year ago it was down to $1,900,000.

The Chairman: Yes, but I think they did that in the normal course of events, for no other reason than they were reducing all budgets; or was it specific?

Senator Sparrow: Well, I thought it was specific. I do not know.

The Chairman: You are now talking of specific instances and I have not heard of it.

Mr. Lawrence: Well, what has to be developed, in my opinion, is some imaginative and adventurous investment must be considered to provide money for the extension of this type of organizational work for the poor, the supply of which is not subject to the whims or fancies of a changing government or the degree of discomfort suffered by public and private agencies, bureaucrats as the engagement of the poor with the broader society causes winds of change to ground the vessel. That is a quote.

The import of the changings presents a great challenge to existing structures since people with the necessary attitudes, maturity and commitment will have to be identified and trained, and then trusted to go out into the socially and economically deprived areas and do a job.

Now, one of the problems is that their work cannot be measured in traditional terms because new methods of evaluation have to be evolved.

Currently, we know statistically how many poor people are getting houses today; how many people you help. You come out in the end it is a war of statistics in the social welfare field today. We are chasing around, grabbing other's statistics. You know, there is a guilt that goes around today. You know, if a person goes into the washroom you mark him down as another statistic. Now, these sort of games can be played. People who go out and work in the community cannot be expected to report in a statistical way in a given time period.

We have to develop new measuring techniques for this.

These people go out and serve as a catalyst in the areas and they will, by merely going out and being human beings, with background of experience and knowledge and so forth, cause things to happen, but it would be very difficult to identify what they did because what you will see happen are people beginning to get together and working to solve their own problems. The work of that community development man or what-have-you, would be almost unidentifiable to the uninitiated.

Now, what we have to do is to try and to get our provincial federal government, city governments and the public at large to accept the fact that this is a positive and constructive part of our society; that we put people out there to live and to work with the underprivileged in his country, helping them to find some solution to their problems, helping them to communicate with people such as yourselves.

I do not for one minute believe that these good people that appear before you at the Senate Hearing for the most part just come out of the woodwork. It is the result of a lot of work that is being done by people who are committed to working with the poor in their environment.

The poor do not know how to make briefs or how to write briefs. They are terrified of facing even a city alderman. They do not know anything about these structures. There has been no communication. Their alienation is not distance, it is communication and that is why it is so important that this government, this country, invest money in people who are going out and relate and live with the poor to help them to reach out and get some involvement in the everyday life of this country.

Now, whether that answers the question—

The Chairman: That is very good, Mr. Lawrence, except I want to remind you that the American Government spent millions and billions of dollars on the community effort that you described and if you read the statistics and history of that, it is the least successful part of the endeavours up to date and, as a matter of fact, they are phasing out on it.

because from their point of view they thought it was not the kind of thing that they were getting results from. That is their reaction.

Mr. Lawrence: The only question I could ask, sir, is by what are they measuring?

The Chairman: I do not know. I am merely telling you because we are keeping aware of what is going on there and they are spending thousands where we spend a dollar on almost similar problems. We are trying to find out what they are doing and this was their experience on the community aspect situation.

I am not going to describe it any further. Now, mind you, there are different problems here than there are here. And I need not go into that, but perhaps that is the reason for it, out to a great extent that was not successful at all.

Senator Hastings: I have a question, Mr. Chairman. With regard to the brief at page 12 you say: "While we recognize that attitudes cannot immediately be changed by legislation, we do believe that the long term effect of good social legislation will be one producing an acceptance" etc.

Do I take from that a rejection of present social legislation?

Mrs. Waldman: No. This wasn't meant as a negative statement, I don't believe, in any sense. We are talking about future legislation here in qualifying it as good. It is not to make a blanket statement that all social legislation now in existence is not good.

Senator Hastings: Of course, I disagree with you. We have failed. Have we not failed in our social legislation up to now?

Mrs. Waldman: Well, I think generalized statements are dangerous and in the long run do not mean too much. I think we can all point to enough failures and few enough gains to be able to make that kind of statement.

Senator Hastings: Well, when we have five as many people on welfare today as we had fifteen years ago we have failed, truly.

Mrs. Waldman: Yes.

Senator McGrand: May I ask: What has failed?

The Chairman: Senator Hastings says the social system has failed.

Senator Hastings: I say our social legislation has failed to do the job it was to do.

Senator McGrand: Our social system rather than our social legislation.

Senator Hastings: No, no. I say the legislation has failed to accomplish what it was set up to accomplish when our welfare rolls are doubled in ten years, we have failed somewhere.

Can you tell me where we have failed?

Mrs. Waldman: Well, I think there are probably other indices that mean more than one statistic which probably does not take in the fact the change in population or anything else.

I think it is evident without going into statistics—we all know this—that the system itself is not alleviating the problems, that the problems are being compounded yearly and, you know, we mentioned this before.

We are not beginning to deal with old problems, never mind starting to face the new ones. We are facing now the effects of the old things and I think, yes, you are right that the social legislation is a reflection of our social system and the attitudes of our society and they are inadequate. If you want to call this, you know, a failure; it certainly is not a success.

Senator Hastings: Let us face the future then. You say good social legislation will be one producing an acceptance. We have discussed the guaranteed annual income. Would you care to tell me what good social legislation you would like to see?

Mr. Lyons: Maybe I can comment on this, sir? One of the traditional approaches of welfare agencies and governments in providing welfare legislation has been one of meeting immediate needs such as providing the basic resources we were talking about before.

I think one area that we really have to start moving into is one of prevention rather than just alleviating the immediate problem.

Let us look at what is causing the problem and try to get legislation here correcting this.

I think this may be a very localized type of concern, but one area that concerns me is that of nurseries for children. There are a lot of working parents in the City of Winnipeg and in many cases they have no place to leave their children so they either have to hire a babysitter or stay at home. I think this is one area that offers opportunity, not only for mothers to get out once in a while and relieve some of the pressure they have at home, but it is a good opportunity to begin an educational programme at an earlier age for children in the deprived circumstances.

That is just one recommendation. I think there are many areas I would like to look at in terms of prevention. For every social problem there has to be a solution and if we start looking, rather than looking at alleviating the immediate concern by giving them a bit of money or by apprehending a child, why don't we start looking at what is causing the problem and legislate against this?

I think this goes back very closely to attitudes. I think the traditional attitude has been one of pampering the poor, saying "Oh well, there will always be poor".

I think we have to start looking beyond this now and to decide are we really wanting to correct these problems or are we going to keep perpetuating them.

I agree with you, Senator, that in this way we have failed.

The Chairman: Mr. Lyons, do you mind telling me why we have not done anything to deal with the prevention of poverty rather than alleviation?

Mr. Lyons: I am not sure.

The Chairman: You spoke of prevention.

Mr. Lyons: There has been quite a bit of material written on it, sir.

The Chairman: Well, you are talking about material. There is material in the States, all sorts of material, but where are the people who are interested in it here? That is a real problem. Why have we not got some persons coming forth and saying "We are interested in prevention legislation"?

Mr. Lyons: Well, too much of the degree I am referring to, of course, comes within my own profession. Probably this has not been shared enough with the general public but there has been considerable material written on this subject of prevention. I cannot quote you any journals on that but probably I could locate some.

Mr. Lawrence: I think the answer to that, sir, you know why I am appearing here today, the briefs are by invitation, but perhaps the parties that were most interested in prevention were not invited to submit briefs.

I think perhaps our own social welfare planning council which is one agency, is the most concerned with prevention and plans along this line.

I think it is fair enough to say prevention has the shortest dollar of the whole lot. The priorities have not been to prevention.

Senator Sparrow: In page 2 you refer to "adequate income maintenance". Has your group any figures that you would be prepared to tell us that you would consider as adequate income maintenance, so far as the City of Winnipeg is concerned?

Mr. Lyons: I do not know if we can come up with a more adequate figure than the Economic Council of Canada came up with in their report. I rather doubt it, but I would generally concur with their findings. I feel that they were quite intelligent when writing it and certainly I would not disagree with them.

Senator Everett: No.

Senator McGrand: I interrupted Senator Hastings a short while ago but I meant to say our system of social legislation has not failed because it was only enacted to offset the early effects of our social system at any particular period.

It is not responsible for the effects of automation and it is not responsible for the high cost of living so our social system has not failed.

Mrs. Waldman: May I suggest an answer to that...

Senator McGrand: I say it has not failed.

Mrs. Waldman: May I suggest in answer to that I think the Government has failed in its role as a social legislator in taking no part at all in looking at the projected view of the future and accepting its role as a social climate in leading rather than following the public in this sense.

Traditionally social welfare legislation has come about because of a problem that was too big to be ignored and something has been slapped on it in some way to try and alleviate the most obvious parts of that problem. The time, I think, is long past to look at social problems in this aspect. We are all concerned about the cause of poverty. I think we have been more concerned about the effects and alleviating the effects and somebody—had better be the social legislators—has got to start doing some real planning and looking to the future, looking to the projected figures of population, just as we are beginning to look now at the problems of pollution, for example; and projecting these things. Looking at causation and trying to come up with some real planning.

Other than that we are going to continue with the "same piece-meal kinds of things" and we feel that the Senate can have some effect in affecting the public's attitudes in this way and showing the necessity for some enlightening social planning and some leadership rather than the traditional kind of "follow the public opinion".

Senator Hastings: Which is exactly why we are here.

Mrs. Waldman: It is starting to happen already.

The Chairman: Of course, it is all very nice for you to say what you said and I am positive everyone around the table agrees with it except we have a few problems that we have to attend to. I am sure—and I think Mr. Lawrence said—the guaranteed annual income by all means and we share the view and we feel everyone who has come before us shares that view that this is the thing you need and we have got our minds on it.

Do you think the public is ready for it? When I am talking about the public I mean the middle class group that usually gets the business in any tax group at the moment. Do you think they are ready for it? Do you think they will vote for it?

Mrs. Waldman: I think the public can be influenced.

The Chairman: How long do you think it will take to influence the public? We have been working with it for a while. We have had the guaranteed income in Canada for three years as of now under a very fine arrangement.

How long do you think it will take us to get it across to the public? No matter what you say we will do it fast, but how long is it going to take?

Mr. Lawrence: The usual projected figure is 10 years.

The Chairman: I think we are wasting our time sitting around the table here, but on top of that we have got the cost. Do you realize the cost involved? Do you realize what you have got to sell to the Canadian public? You know you just can't say "The guaranteed annual income", there it is.

What do you eliminate from the welfare system? What do you keep in such a maintenance system? There are quite a number of real problems that are facing our Government and facing us. We just cannot say "give leadership". As Senator Hastings says, "That is what we are here for, to give some impetus to it." But you can only go as fast as the public will let you.

Mr. Lyons: Something like the guaranteed annual income can only come in a report of the people involved in the welfare system because the experiences will have to be readjusted.

The Chairman: What I am saying is that you cannot piggyback the guaranteed income on the welfare system. You have got to eliminate some aspects of it. You will probably keep categorical portions of it and eliminate the rest.

Mr. Lyons: Yes.

The Chairman: Well, I'm glad to know all you people agree with me. Now all we have got to do is to get Ottawa to agree and then we are all set but it is not that easy.

Senator Everett: Tell me, Mrs. Waldman. The sound legislation that you talk of in item 12 was passed by the Government and then, if as you suggest, Government take over forward planning, what area in your mind would be left to the private agencies who in the past—whether for better or for worse—have done the forward planning in this field?

What area would be left to them now?

Mrs. Waldman: Well, to begin with, I am not convinced they have done any particular kind of forward planning. I mean, that is something that has been lacking, you know, almost totally and the services that we have, both private and public, I think reflect this.

The fact that we are scrambling to keep up, and we are not keeping up, and we are certainly not getting ahead of the game. The problems are multiplying constantly.

I think if we are talking about private funds in the charity sense that a good deal of this—and this is just my own private feeling about this—exists more for the good kind of feeling it gives to the donor.

Senator Everett: I am not talking about private funds. I am talking about private agencies.

Mrs. Waldman: The work of private agencies?

Senator Everett: The work of private agencies.

Mrs. Waldman: Yes. I think one of the major things that we see from our own particular agency in the focus of our work is in the community organization field because it provides us with a certain freedom in working outside government structures that are hard to come by for an agency or staff worker who are funded by a government body.

This presumes those who are paying the shot for it are willing to put their heads on the block as a government agency would be, but so far we are still in business.

That is one particular field where I think there is a certain amount of freedom given to a private agency that a government agency does not have in some senses.

Senator Everett: You call that community—

Mrs. Waldman: Community organization.

Senator Everett: Is that the same thing that Mr. Lawrence was talking about, that is a special group?

Mr. Lawrence: I think we are all mixed up in the various tasks. We do the job and decide what category it comes under.

I think the community organization has perhaps some overtones of planning in the traditional way.

In answer to your question, sir, if I might, I think you may be talking about such organizations as City federations, community planning bodies, the Canadian Welfare Planning Council and so forth.

What happens to these agencies when the Government takes over the planning is that I think if the Government is truly concerned about citizen involvement, I think we have a unique opportunity here blending private and government together. I think on paper it has been there before and it has never worked too well, but as we are moving into this new era of citizen involvement, I would like to think there could be a blending of government and private in this way.

I see no reason why not. Again this is a new structure. I have no guidelines for it right off the top of my head. If you give me a week or two I might come up with some sort of pattern.

I am quite sure if you take a look at your own social law there are some recommendations along this line that show a blending of the public and government particularly in the planning field. I think it is quite possible we could come up with it.

I think we have to have a look at government agencies, and an entirely new look. I think we are still seeing them as a stereotype type of thing, that government departments have no imagination. I refuse to believe this. I think they can do and I think government departments are becoming far more adventurous and so forth, so I see no reason why the two parties cannot get together and negotiate some arrangement where they can share joint responsibilities here.

Senator Everett: I think the only area in which I disagree with you is that I would like to see social legislation which is available to the citizens as a matter of right.

Mr. Lawrence: I agree with you.

Senator Everett: And I think if that were more the case, you would get away from the tendency to look down upon those who are of welfare. That would be a right; but I really disagree with you when you say that forward planning and any future planning should be done by Government.

I would hope that future planning would be done by citizens and that the agencies who are in communication with the citizens would be the people sharing the forward ideas. It seems to me time and again we run across with people who are on welfare, the one thing they cannot stand is paternalism, and for you to come forward and suggest that the Government do the future planning—I am not finding fault with your whole concept. I think your concept is a good one, but I am just wondering whether you are seriously suggesting what in effect is a great deal more paternalism that the Government will end up doing what has to be done in future planning?

Mr. Lawrence: Well, I would certainly like to clear that up, sir. This is the farthest thing from our minds. Our whole philosophy of work is certainly concerned around involving people in the structures that affect our daily lives so it would certainly be beyond our comprehension to suggest for one minute that the Government should legislate.

We feel that the Government has to play a greater role in making it possible for forward planning, let's put it this way, not the Government necessarily doing it.

I think one of the ways it can be done is as I suggested, making it possible in this country for more community development to go on where people will be involved; first of all in their neighbourhoods and then in their broader community and then hopefully in the other parts of the country.

What I said was: I think there is a great deal of room for social legislation to be worked out co-operatively whereas it may not be done by private agencies or by government at this stage of the game, with no people involved. What I think is that new structures can be brought up where all parties can get together, at least for the views of these parties to be viewed and the view of the poor—any legislation which has to do with the poor should at least have some involvement with the poor people. This is the type of thing I think we are saying.

Senator Everett: Thank you.

Senator McGrand: I just have one question on the guaranteed annual income which has been recommended by certain people as the cure for our ills. You put these people on the guaranteed annual income and then all will be well.

Now, there are a great many people from other parts of the country who are not so sure that the guaranteed annual income is the answer.

Let us look back at the old age pension, family allowances, mothers' allowances, all these different things, which were at the time they were implemented regarded as something to close the gap at that time and now we are looking at them as patches.

Isn't it possible that the guaranteed annual income, if you are going to consider it maybe ten or fifteen years later, will be regarded as another patch and that people are looking down now at people who are taking welfare; they will be looking down at the people who are on a guaranteed annual income?

I do not think that any of these things are going to be the end of our problems. Do you agree with that?

Mr. Lyons: I think I certainly would not see the guaranteed annual income as the end but would see it as the beginning. It is a place to begin if we are going to start dealing with our social problems. As long as people are tied up with the day-to-day problems such as they do not have enough food to eat, how can you begin to look at the other social problems that we are having.

Senator McGrand: You see, the sociologists and economists look at these things differently.

The Chairman: We have got a few minutes now. Our next brief is at three o'clock. Is there anybody in the audience who would like to ask questions? If you do, would you please stand up and give us your name. Speak up loudly and ask a question and these four experts, among others, will help you.

Are there any social workers in the audience?

Mrs. Greenlace: I would like to ask Mr. Lawrence because I know he has particularly worked with children: what the effect of living on welfare is going to be on these thousands of Canadian children? What kind of children are they going to be in the next generation? Are they going to repeat the welfare pattern?

Mr. Lawrence: Well, my very sad experience, of course, is, Mrs. Greenlace, that many of them do repeat the pattern. The boys I worked with fifteen years ago are now repeating the welfare pattern that they were brought up in and even removing the children from the family for a couple of years and slap them into an institution—and presumably brainwash them or something or other—does not have lasting effects.

No, far too many of the children I have known and worked with very hard over the past few years are merely again repeating the pattern that their parents went through at some time, with some very delicious additions too.

Mrs. Greenlace: Do you think perhaps this is what we should concentrate on, eradicating poverty and the effect it has on our children, not with the adults or with agencies or the Government but what price we have to pay for our children.

Mr. Lawrence: Well, I think a lot of the emphasis has to go into the children. I am not prepared to say that the adults are just a lost generation, no.

You see, I am still naive enough to believe that most adults love their children very dearly and the social conditions sometimes bring them to the point of frustration and desperation. Where to the other segments of the community it may look as if they neglected their children and hate their children, I do not believe this.

I think we still have to put a tremendous amount of resources into the parents of these children.

Mrs. Greenlace: Perhaps if we tried to change the image of the people on welfare so it would be changed in the eyes of the rest of Canada? If they knew the fact that their children are going to be living alongside the children of welfare recipients in the next generation, they might have different views towards welfare children.

Mr. Lawrence: I think, Mrs. Greenlace, as we said earlier, it is a terrific job, attitude-changing and education.

The Chairman: Are there any more questions?

Mr. Seeharam: The Senators have told us this afternoon they have been receiving suggestions from the poor as well as the professionals at least on one problem of poverty and that is the income aspect of poverty.

You have also told us that one of the suggestions is that the guaranteed annual income may be a solution. I would like to know what is your feeling about this suggestion and if it is a favourable feeling on your part, then what amounts are you thinking of for a family of four, for instance, because if the amount is going to be as it is in the United States, I wonder if a family would be getting out of the circle of poverty or whether they will be getting a guaranteed ticket to poverty?

The Chairman: You were not listening to me this morning or you were not here.

Mr. Seeharam: No, I wasn't here this morning.

The Chairman: Well, you missed a good morning, then, I must tell you. In any event it is not the purpose of the Chairman or Members of the Committee to declare themselves one way or the other or to indicate some bias if they can possibly avoid it.

All I can tell you is that eight members of the present Committee of Sixteen were members of the Committee on Aging which brought in the recommendation for the guaranteed annual income.

You will have to do your own thinking beyond that.

Senator Fergusson: The guaranteed income supplement.

The Chairman: Guaranteeing the income supplement which the old age security are receiving. For all purposes I also indicated we were accepting the figures of the Economic Council for the time being. I think it has been generally accepted as a good figure. Thank you for a very thoughtful and interesting brief as well as a most enlightened presentation. Your contribution to help alleviate poverty will be appreciated by those who benefit from your services as well as guidance.

If there are no further questions we will adjourn for ten minutes. The University of Manitoba, School of Architecture will make the next presentation.

(Upon resuming)

The Chairman: Order, please. We have a group of students from the University of Manitoba, along with Professor Brian Woods, Faculty Adviser.

The students are of the University of Manitoba, School of Architecture, and the professor will introduce them to you. With the assistance of Professor Woods they have undertaken a study-action project concerning recreation space in the inner city. Through consultation with residents in a disadvantaged area of the city imaginative designs have emerged for the building of inexpensive play areas for inner city children. The proposals are under consideration by civil officials.

Professor Woods will speak to it and then we will have some slides at the end of the hearing.

Professor Brian Woods, Faculty Adviser School of Architecture, University of Manitoba: Honourable senators, our group include Miss Nancy Thompson, Miss Lyn Gemmell, Mr. Isreal Lyon, Mr. Steven Barber, Mr. Erro Hugh, and Miss Martha Banias.

We are all part of the Class of Design at the School of Architecture. Our main task at the school is to provide physical objects and structures with information gained through research.

Miss Nancy Thompson, School of Architecture, University of Manitoba: The subject of poverty requires a rigorous, multi-disciplinary study to adequately cover the topic. Our proect touched upon it only in a limited way. Our research and subsequent design and follow through were centred on play and children that became more and more concerned with poverty as work progressed. We found from resource personnel that adult behaviour is the development of early formative life between birth and four years of age. There the effects of physical environment on children may help to explain certain aspects of the poverty cycle.

If a child receives a limited experience within a narrow environment, he may never realize what possibilities exist beyond that environment; let alone ask for the addition of specific elements. As explained in our brief, play is of the utmost importance in both the physiological and psychological development of the child into a well-rounded adult.

Poverty is both physical and behavioural. More than a physical or material it extends to attitudes. A man may not fix a cracked window, not for lack of money, but because of lack of concern or because he is resigned to the fact that it will likely be broken again. Through our research we found some of the contributing factors of poverty to be:

- a lack of family money.
- a lack of real parental concern.
- a lack of time for family occasions.
- a lack of communication with outside community groups.
- a lack of concern for long term planning.
- a lack of public understanding of poverty.
- a lack of research and trained people.
- a lack of permanent majority population, and
- a lack of communication between residents and public or private agencies due to bureaucratic red tape.

The simplistic notions of total rebuilding of poverty areas shows a total lack of understanding of these contributing factors. Bulldozing an area physically also bulldozes it socially. What we feel is needed is a gradual rehabilitation or renewal of the area with community participation. We feel the building of the Interfaith lot with the help of the kids in the area was a small start in this direction.

This project had its beginnings last fall when a concerned group of students from the Faculty of Architecture tried to involve themselves with the outside community. After considering the problem we decided to design and help build recreational facilities with the co-operation of Neighbourhood Service Centre in the Logan Avenue area. After consulting members of faculty staff, the problem was incorporated in the design curriculum. A period of research followed in which 2 areas of the city were studied.

Miss Lyn Gemmell, School of Architecture, University of Manitoba: The students decided to research two contrasting areas—the Logan area and Wildwood Park to determine the nature of any need for play facilities.

In the Logan area there are several existing playgrounds—Dufferin Park, Lizzie Playground and two corner lots. Dufferin and Lizzie Playgrounds have standard equipment, such as slides, swings, sand boxes and wading pools. However both these parks are closed and locked during the winter. The corner lots are barren with little equipment though some of this equipment such as tree trunks and conduits is more imaginative than the usual swing and slide arrangement.

Children in the Logan area were also observed playing in such potentially dangerous but fascinating places as the railroad tracks, junk yards and abandoned cars. Therefore the intention of our survey was to determine precisely what the play activities of children are in the Logan area and the parents' opinions of existing facilities.

The results of this survey were rather distorted since the people interviewed were selected by the social workers at the N.S.C. The social workers were concerned that our very amateurish interviewing techniques would disrupt the good relationships being established between their staff and the residents. However, despite this bias we did come to a few useful conclusions.

1) There is a general lack of play equipment and recreational facilities for all children but particularly for younger children between four and six years of age.

2) The lack of facilities for children of this age group point out a need for corner lot playgrounds which could help solve the problem of crossing the streets with heavy traffic to reach existing playgrounds.

4) Also hopefully the corner lots could be a partial solution to the problem of all age groups being forced to play together regardless of the roughness of play of older children.

5) Several of the problems were indicated by the survey such as the lack of interior play space in winter which is a cause of child-parent conflicts.

6) There is also a lack of imaginative design in existing playgrounds which have only standard equipment such as swings and slides which are not only expensive but can only be used safely in limited ways.

7) There are also many dangerous exterior areas such as lots full of scrap metal and other trash which are used for play. The local government so far has reacted slowly to demands by concerned parents to clean up these dangerous areas.

From this survey of the Logan area came a general idea of the needs for play facilities and the direction in which we could proceed.

Mr. Lyon: After surveying these areas we came up with a few basic criteria for children's playgrounds. They have to have simplicity of construction so that inexperienced residents can build the playground themselves and they can be easily transported.

Use of inexpensive materials and or found objects.

Use of rugged, weather and vandal-proof materials.

Creation of different play zones for the different age groups so as not to have the younger children bullied by the older ones.

Safety from traffic.

Visually open from sidewalk to prevent muggings.

Safety of materials—no sharp projections.

Low maintenance.

Adaptability for summer and winter play.

Flexibility and imagination in layout, open spaces and paths for movement and action play.

High children-to-area ratio. Play equipment must accommodate more children than they do presently.

Must be visually attractive, not junky to children and residents.

Neighbouring houses must be shielded from noise and thrown objects from playground.

More detailed recommendations such as specific materials, structure groupings and specific structures for different age groups are being gotten from re-evaluations of the built play areas.

Miss Thompson: The designs derived from and successfully achieving these criteria were put on display at various meetings with those who had concerned themselves with our problem, residential groups and municipal recreation people. Constructive criticism was received from these groups although the prevailing attitude was polite but non-committal. Moving our display to Neighbourhood Services Centre we received our most important feedback from the children themselves. As a result of interest shown by the kids two designs were not without merit.

Interested groups, hearing about our work from others who had seen our display, accepted our choice of prototypes and offered us a chance to actually build them. It was arranged with representatives of the Y.M.C.A. day camp, Camp Manitou, and the Interfaith group that adaptations of the prototypes be built on their property. A later meeting with the Winnipeg Housing Authority only validated our belief for the need to build and test playground prototypes which could replace the barren strips of asphalt which now exist in some housing developments.

The actual construction of the playgrounds not only gave us a chance to test these prototypes but also an opportunity to prove that our intentions and design were of quality and that we were capable of following a project through to completion.

The first construction work took place at Camp Manitou where we built a sandbox-fort for the younger children. Built out of railway ties, spiked together, it developed on four levels into a tower-tunnel connection. The people from Interfaith saw the completed structure and asked that something similar be built on their lot but with provision for a stage and story-telling areas. Construction of Interfaith was perhaps our most rewarding and frustrating experience. With many of the little kids in the area helping and suggesting ideas work went at a slow and cautious rate, but when finished satisfied everyone. Swinging ropes and a tether ball were put up but the ropes had to be taken down as they were found to be too dangerous. The children were eager and able workers and we feel that because they helped build the playground they enjoy using it more than if it were built for them without their consultation. We also feel that this type of involvement should extend to older children and adults as well. Our final construction was a climbing structure for Camp Manitou consisting of tele phone poles and a hand-made polypropylene net. This structure was very successful and with the rest of our work resulted in further offers of land and money for materials; although these offers came only after we had proven our design and it was too late for us to construct anything.

Now that we have given you some idea of the extent of our work we would like to make some brief recommendations which concern our particular subject and the total topic of poverty as well. We recommend that more funds be made available for research in play equipment, for supervisors, programmes, and construction of equipment; that vacant lots be used for temporary playgrounds be granted some form of tax relief; that there be provisions of more sheltered or interior winter play areas; that funds be available for groups willing to implement projects of value to the community; that there be closer working ties between social agencies; that there be closer communication between agencies and residents on a long term scale; and that there be a consideration of the concept of total rebuilding and housing projects.

During our study we covered only a very limited aspect of poverty, although we spent a fair amount of time in the field. To have a valid study of poverty we feel that briefs alone are inadequate and that members of this Committee should visit the communities and talk to the residents themselves to gain certain information which we feel cannot come through in a written presentation.

—Slides shown.

The Chairman: Senator McGrand?

Senator McGrand: I have one question. I was watching that film and I saw a great many hands and a great many heads at work. I was wondering how much actual work these underprivileged children themselves did in preparation of those playgrounds? Did they lend their hands to help?

Miss Thompson: We were asked to come and do these playgrounds and we had a vague idea of what the people in Interfaith wanted and we had arranged for the railway ties and for equipment and we arrive one Saturday morning and we started clearing up the brush and started putting down the railway ties and out of nowhere about eight kids appeared and wanted to know what we were doing and we told them. They wanted to know—they started helping with the railway ties. A seven-year-old boy and myself could carry a railway tie and they helped and they pitched in, every single one of them.

Two little ten-year-olds carried a railway tie and built up a platform and for a seven-year-old, all you have to do is start the nail and they can drive a nine-inch spike in in no time flat. They had a lot of energy to work out.

Senator McGrand: I know I notice in some of the remarks you said when you got there first they were throwing stones and they were little toughs. And you won their confidence.

Miss Thompson: Well, it is just natural for them to throw things around. Even when you asked them later could you have stock please, they would take it and throw it at you but it wasn't done in a way to hurt you. It was just the way they did things.

The Chairman: The question I wanted to ask is: Why did you do it?

Miss Gemmell: It was fun.

Mr. Lyon: Over a year ago last October a group of students got together and thought that as future architects or designers in the design environment, we had some responsibility to the community. We were benefitting from a university education which the public is paying for and we have some obligation to the public. We tried to find some way we could help the public and we canvassed certain agencies and came up with the Neighbourhood Services and Recreational Facilities for Children.

The Chairman: That re-establishes my faith in universities.

Senator Inman: I want to congratulate the group for this excellent presentation. I would like to ask you: did you get much co-operation from the parents of these children and did you get any assistance from them in any way?

Professor Woods: We arrived in the area without too much notice. The girl that was looking after children's programmes wished that we had given more prior notice because she had some mothers lined up who were willing to help. We know this is quite feasible.

Senator Inman: You feel the parents appreciated your interest?

Professor Woods: I think so except for the parents of one child who had an accident.

Senator Fergusson: You referred to the girl who was looking after the children's programme. What sort of programme was she carrying on?

Miss Thompson: Interfaith is mostly concerned with the teenage group but they found the small children in the area had no place to go and were hanging about, so they asked Mrs. John Williams if she could initiate some type of programme just to keep them occupied.

She got a programme where she would perhaps tell them stories or have them play organized games, just to keep them occupied during some time of the day.

Professor Woods: If I may add something. They found that vandalism in the area is caused by the small kids and not the teenagers and this is not really a babysitting service but at least it is an occupation.

The Chairman: Vandalism in the area is caused by the small kids and not the teenagers. Tell me the age group about which you are speaking.

Miss Thompson: Anywhere from five to ten.

The Chairman: From five to ten are the vandals. Are the boys vandals? Does that go for the girls too?

Miss Thompson: Yes.

The Chairman: All right. They are the ones who break the windows in the school and do vandalism and these things about which you talk. You call it vandalism, is that right, and they are five to ten years old, up to ten years, and beyond that, you say, they don't.

Professor Woods: No. I am not saying that situation is confined to the younger kids because they like to get into things and to throw stones and so on.

The Chairman: They get into it and did this channel them away from throwing stones at the school and from throwing stones at you?

Miss Thompson: May I just say; some of the kids went back later and instead of throwing stones they were taking reinforcing rods and using them as spears in the railway ties and that is much better than throwing something at another kid.

The Chairman: You talk about a new kind of Interfaith construction was observed to build a detailed village—or is that a mistake? I didn't quite get that.

I had been looking at the previous page, throwing stones, knifed his brother but missed and gashed his own leg and ankle.

Professor Woods: I think that is a misplaced page. One child that was involved in an Interfaith construction was observed—

The Chairman: Yes. Tell me, when you speak about that, did anybody provide money for that or did anybody give you any help?

Professor Woods: Yes. The Y.M.C.A. was at the time re-developing Camp Manitou. They had some funds, some very small funds I think under $100, but it turned out to be about $160. Interfaith also had a limited budget they operated with.

The Chairman: When you speak of Interfaith, in Winnipeg?

Professor Woods: Yes.

The Chairman: You made no other approaches?

Professor Woods: We have a small amount of money that was given to us by the Winnipeg Foundation that was brought by the Interfaith group. The reason we have not used that is because we haven't been able to. When we proved ourselves on design we were not able to get the land in the city itself. Now we have that land but we do not have the time.

The Chairman: You mean you have land? Where is the land?

Professor Woods: The land is exactly opposite—I think it is the west side of Lord Selkirk Park.

The Chairman: Who owned the land previously?

Professor Woods: The land was first of all owned privately. The City took it over. The house was bulldozed and then we approached the Parks and Recreation Department. They transferred the land from the City of Winnipeg to the Urban Renewal Agency so that they could supervise it and maintain it and take over the liability insurance.

This was not done till quite recently.

The Chairman: Those are the city officials of whom you are speaking.

Professor Woods: Yes.

The Chairman: They are giving consideration to granting you further assistance.

Professor Woods: Yes.

The Chairman: I gather they are impressed by what you are doing?

Professor Woods: After they saw the stuff built, they were impressed.

Senator Everett: I would like to congratulate you on a very well presented brief. Could you tell me how long the interest of the children is maintained in the playground? Is it a short matter or is it a continuing interest?

Professor Woods: That kind of attitude—just because of a programme, a two-week programme, a revolving programme, new kids are coming in in the two weeks. The thing was always continuing. At Interfaith we started to find that with more dynamic equipment, i.e. swinging ropes and so on, that they are being used. The tether ball is used constantly. However, this type of equipment in the city is very prone to vandalism and so on. The tether ball is only put up when the work was done.

When there are no human parts the kids tend to go away.

Senator Everett: What you are talking about I gather, is temporary use of property by tax incentive or by tax rebates and demolition incentives. Assuming that such a recreational facility was developed and a year later construction took place so it had to be moved somewhere else—in your judgment would this lessen the worth of your project?

Professor Woods: No, this is one of the main criteria. We were told anything we did in the city would have to be of a temporary nature. Also, because it is such a low cost thing, if you don't want to use it, you can throw it out and start over again.

Camp Manitou, for instance, both the little fort and the sandbox had a total cost of $160. The one at Interfaith was around $45.

The existing playground equipment was a big set of swings that the City provides and costs $450.

Senator Everett: Yes.

Professor Woods: And that is for six children.

Senator Everett: Can you tell me this swinging rope—you said you had to discontinue it. I would like to know, first of all, why and secondly whether you found that the children were really more interested in the more dangerous facility, more interested in the danger than they were in using it?

Miss Thompson: It so happens we divided the play area by an existing path that cuts through the lot. Now, before that the children used the tree branch to swing down to the lot, which does not have quite the velocity that a rope has.

When the tower went up they were that much closer to the top of the branches and they would suddenly crack. We thought we could substitute ropes for it and what happened is that they would wait for someone to come along the path and take the rope and just swing down on them and so children were getting hurt and so that had to be taken down.

Danger is one of the most important parts of play. It creates a challenge for the children and if these ropes could have been located in another place in the area, which did not have that potential of knocking somebody else down, I am sure they would have loved to swing on them even though they didn't get to knock somebody else down.

Senator Everett: Is this desire for danger the same for boys and girls?

Miss Thompson: I think so.

Professor Woods: There were more boys on the structure than girls.

Senator Fergusson: Tell me: how many students took part in the preparing of the project; just the ones who are here?

Professor Woods: The actual construction, yes.

Senator Fergusson: I was rather surprised that you could accommodate so many children in one of these. There seem to be quite a lot of children in a small space.

Professor Woods: The area we worked with Interfaith was about the size of the space in here but we could accommodate about thirteen.

Miss Thompson: At Camp Manitou the structure could hold fifteen people at one time. One of the criteria for the models was that they should be high density.

Senator Inman: Did I understand you to say it was a nylon rope?

Miss Thompson: It is polypropylene.

Senator Everett: You mentioned a point at page 9, item 3. "Sitting areas for adults suggest supervision surveillance." Is it your experience that there should be no area for adults, that it should be characterized as the "children's area" and that adults are excluded from it?

Professor Woods: Children of this age do not want to be supervised. This is the age when they are always being told "no, don't do this" or "yes, you can do this". They want to get away from it. There has to be some area of supervision but children cannot be made to feel they are under surveillance at all times.

Miss Thompson: This was one of the reasons why we suggested a number of corner lots because mothers in the area said they would like to be able to send their children to the corner lot but that they could look out across the street and not be there and yet see what their children are doing, so you need a number of corner lots rather than a centralized lot that these children cannot reach because of traffic and because their parents are afraid they are going to get hurt, either in traffic or by other children.

The Chairman: What was your incidence of loss of equipment?

Professor Woods: Did you lose any equipment?

Miss Thompson: No.

The Chairman: No damage at all?

Miss Thompson: No.

The Chairman: Who supervised it when no one was there? Did anybody supervise it at night?

Miss Thompson: No.

The Chairman: Any trouble at all?

Miss Thompson: No. How much can you hurt a railway track tie that has been laying on the ground for forty years and has been re-used. It only costs five cents and we got the creosole out of it. I mean, they can hit it, they can knock it and it just sits there. It is pegged down.

Mr. Lyon: The thing is when people in the neighbourhood are involved in the construction they feel more responsibility towards it and consider it their own street. There is no desire to damage the property or anything. They want to maintain it.

The Chairman: I think that you told my colleagues that the parents showed some involvement or at least approval and some encouragement to you people. Am I right; or did that not arise?

Miss Thompson: I think that was when we had this meeting at the service centre. The mothers were having a tea that day and several of the mothers came to us and saw the display and were interested in it and wanted to know if they could build something like that in their area.

Senator McGrand: These were all under-privileged children, the parents of under-privileged children?

Miss Thompson: Well, yes, I guess that is so.

The Chairman: How far would it be from the park where there are similar or some facilities which are provided by the city or province?

Professor Woods: About two blocks. I am talking of the Lord Selkirk area now. In the housing project itself there are four playgrounds. Three of them are never used. The one directly opposite the corner from ours is used quite a bit. It is very well designed.

The Chairman: Why were the other three not used?

Miss Thompson: I think they are too abstract, not designed for the children and they are more or less asphalt surfaces, quite bare and I do not think even it was intended for children. I do not think it is the type of area children will play. They would not find it exciting. I do not think it would stimulate them.

Senator McGrand: What was there? You say "it is not stimulating". What would it be?

Miss Thompson: One playground is a group of jumping timbers. You cut them off and put them in the ground and the kids can strap them one to one or they can jump off them. This is fine if it is integrated in the play area where they have other things beside it but you would have one area that is just a bunch of stumps there. They can get tired of that pretty fast.

The Chairman: Did you, for instance, approach people in these areas who were in control of the playgrounds and indicate to them that they are not being used, "Let us do something about making them more attractive. We can do it for peanuts compared to what it will cost you. We would like to do this". Did you do this?

Professor Woods: We did this with Neighbourhood Services first. Afterwards we were approached of the manager of both housing projects in Winnipeg. This is a lack of such working facilities.

However, we were told we would have to go and see other people and so on and the red tape started so we went back to the people we could work with.

Mr. Lyon: I think one thing that has not come out as of now is the fact that we had to approach many groups. Groups seemed interested but they were not prepared to commit themselves in any way. We had to prove ourselves. We had to prove our designs and a lot of these groups lacked the imagination or desire to experiment. A lot of these groups lacked the finances to experiment in new designs and this was hampering many developments.

The Chairman: But the amount of the experiment, as I understand you people, you have told me these tremendous sums amounted to $200 or $300, $500.

Mr. Lyon: That is exactly the point. We had a playground that could be built for $50. They said "We don't have the money. Nothing like this has ever been built. I do not think we can give you any money at all for it." This is the whole point.

Miss Thompson: And it looks funny.

Professor Woods: You take all these man hours involved in research that our class did initially and if you transferred it into dollars and then if you ask a government agency to put out funds for this in the name of research, it is impossible.

The Chairman: But you did not ask them to do that? You did not ask them to pay you for research.

Miss Thompson: No.

The Chairman: Well then there was nothing there. For instance, it seems unreasonable to me that the C.H.M.C., looking at this, would not blow $100 just to see what would happen. I mean, it looks like they blow that much before they get started working in the morning. It does not seem reasonable.

Professor Woods: Well, these people we were working with, either Interfaith or Neighbourhood Services or even the Winnipeg City Department of Lands and Recreation didn't have the money either.

The Chairman: But you are really not talking about money in the sense of the amount of money that they usually deal with. You are talking about tiny sums that they do not have really to account for, except to get a receipt.

Professor Woods: The land director of Parks and Recreation for Winnipeg has to go to City Council for every sum of money he wants to spend. He felt he could not get this through City Council.

The Chairman: He told you that story. He does not tell me that story. You should have asked your father or your relatives. They would have told you you were being given the runaround.

Once you did the design and proved yourself, as you did, and they could see for themselves what you had done and the research costs being nothing, did you then have trouble getting money?

Professor Woods: No. However, we had the money and Winnipeg has also agreed to give us a little bit extra amount of money just to make this piece of land decent or we can't do it. We have not the time.

The Chairman: Yes, I realize that. What you are doing at school comes first, but at least you got some projects on the board and it is real and the possibilities are there. You have students coming along regularly, do you not, who might also be as interested as you are in this thing?

Professor Woods: I hope so.

The Chairman: Is there anything in your submission that should have been covered and we did not cover that occurs to you; or is there anything else you would like to tell us. You are an architect so you will know what you are talking about.

Senator Inman: I would like to ask you: how long are the children interested at that age? Twelve or thirteen?

Miss Thompson: The City puts a limit on the playground at age fourteen and then after that the kids are not allowed in the playground, which we felt was another mistake on the City's part, but that was only because the smaller children get pushed out of the area and the older children take over the football and things like that and the thing is the older children need a different kind of place.

The small children are in a small concentrated area where the other children can travel. They can get to the Central Y, but there wasn't anything there for the young children at the bottom of the street.

Mr. Erick Hugh, School of Architecture, University of Manitoba: At the same time if you can develop a total play area, you can perhaps interrelate other types of playing for various age groups.

Senator Everett: Later on having the project where you took the whole street between two lots, did you discuss this with the municipal authorities and can you tell us what the reaction was?

Mr. Hugh: We didn't really do much—

Professor Woods: We had this project shown at the school where the municipal authorities were present. The scheme was applauded by these people but when we asked—perhaps it was our presentation technique—but when we asked if these things could somehow be implemented, if the people thought they were good ideas, there was just a golden silence.

Mr. Lyon: Similar projects have been done in Outremont, a suburb of Montreal. The City blocks are blocked off for rest time and lunch hours so the kids can play on the streets because they do not have a school yard.

Senator Everett: You are talking about something more ambitious here. There are actual facilities in this area. Did you estimate any cost?

Mr. Hugh: No, not really, but this really was simply a matter of combining various spaces on the road. If you want to have a badminton court, you can just paint it on the street.

Senator Everett: I notice in your critique of the present park system you say the concrete and asphalt is a bad thing and that lack of shade is a bad thing. Did you take that into consideration in your project?

Mr. Hugh: Yes, to sort of change and manipulate the environment. The City could provide the bare shrubs and pots and plants which could be moved away quite quickly and there are various other ways that could be thought about to give change to the environment rather than just looking like a regular road. You could paint lots of stuff on the road. You could bring in rocks to form the seat. You could make a roller-skating area, put up flags and various other things. There are countless other things that could be done, probably at low cost.

Senator Everett: Thank you.

Senator Fergusson: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say I think it is really terrific that students of the University of Manitoba have been interested enough to take such a proposition as this as a contribution to the community, and I have to say—to my shame—that when I was a student I do not think I ever had any thoughts of doing things like this; so I think that the present students are going to contribute very much more to the life of the whole country. I do not think we need to feel so discouraged as we sometimes do, when we hear some of the briefs that have come before us, about what the future is going to be.

I would also like to say I am very much impressed with the imagination that made it possible for you to undertake such simple things as the old railway ties and empty spools and make them into something. That is very interesting and I would certainly congratulate you not only on the project but on the imagination that you have shown in doing this. You are a very fine group of students.

The Chairman: When I was at university all I ever did was walk around protesting in parades.

Professor Woods: The other point I think is that play in a designed environment for these children can be very important and affect various sections of the world but also we want to stimulate the kids or the adults to get involved in doing something like this; maybe not so much as what it is for as to get them working together and to care about what is happening.

Like the man with the cracked window, he may not have the money to fix it but it may not be that. Maybe he just doesn't care and that is what you want to try to change.

The Chairman: Is there anybody in the audience that would like to ask a question of these knowledgeable youngsters?

Mr. Forest: I would like to make a comment. I think in our society our governments are so structured and over-structured that when it comes to a simple demand for a dollar-fifty, it seems impossible to get help. Our municipal governments and our provincial governments, if you need thousands of dollars, fine, it is all right. They can plan it. You can get it. When you need a dollar-fifty for a simple research project it seems it is not possible to do it and I think it is a shame.

I would like this for the record.

The Chairman: Is there anything else from the audience? Do any of the senators have anything to say further?

Let me just say, on behalf of the Committee, that you are a delight. You gave us a lift here today because we are so happy to meet students who have an understanding and dedication and not only do they believe in things but they do something about it.

That is what is going to make our Canada great. That is what is going to help solve poverty, involvement in the community, involvement in many things that are so important. A great number of people come to us with problems. You are solving these problems and this has been a little different than what we normally have before us and for that reason, on behalf of the Committee, you, sir, as their professor, you young ladies and young men should know that this Committee is most grateful, most appreciative of your efforts.

Thank you very much.

There is just one announcement. We meet here tonight at seven-thirty. The Winnipeg Tenants Association will be appearing before us at that time.

The meeting is adjourned.

(Upon resuming at 7:30 p.m.)

The Chairman: I will call the meeting to order.

This morning the Senate appointed a subcommittee consisting of Senator Connolly and Senator Belisle to hear a brief presented from the Stony Mountain Native Brotherhood Manitoba Penitentiary. Senators Connolly and Belisle went out there this afternoon and they heard the brief. I will ask Senator Connolly to report to the committee now.

Senator Connolly: Mr. Chairman, as you will recall you devised a method of setting up subcommittees of this main Committee so that your Committee might give every possible attention to every representation from every source that anybody cared to make to the Committee. Accordingly, as you have suggested, my associate Senator Belisle and myself proceeded this afternoon to the penitentiary at Stony Mountain.

I should say to you at the very outset that it was a numbing experience. I knew not what to expect because the last quarter and I hoped to get assistance for this Committee was behind the grim walls of a penitentiary. I had thought on reading the brief that well informed and cultured minds had obviously prepared it and I should say in justice to the four men who presented themselves this afternoon that your feeling and mine and that of the other members of the Committee who read this brief previously were more than justified.

We were shown every courtesy by the warden and his deputy. We were taken to the board room of the institution and four prepossessing comely young men, the authors of this brief, were introduced to us without any unnecessary delays. One of the young men had advanced form of education. The other three had stunted educational backgrounds but quite obviously as it was revealed by our hour or more conversation with them, all of the quartet had the ability to think and that in my judgment, Mr. Chairman, is oftentimes more valuable than academic background.

Moreover I was impressed with the desire of these citizens paying a debt which society felt it owed to society. Impressed I say with their desire to help more fortunate citizens outside the walls of the penitentiary achieve the better things in life which are now being denied them.

One of them indeed for the rest of his days. There were no selfish motives involved. There was only one thought in their minds and that was to make a contribution to human welfare and when I say I was humbled I do not exaggerate the situation. I had not expected to find knowledgeability or compassion of the kind that I found this afternoon. I think tribute should be paid to these four men and to the men who head the institution and to enable them to prepare this brief for us.

As you said at the outset, this is dated November the 10th and it is addressed to you, Senator Croll from the Stony Mountain Native Brotherhood Manitoba Penitentiary. It's the result of a series of meetings held by those men. The brief pools all their ideas and the brief itself is the work of the one man whom I mentioned and I mentioned no names for obvious reasons.

They do not seek credit nor should their names be mentioned publicly or privately. It is good enough I think for all of us to realize that here were a quartet of good samaritans setting an example that thousands of other young Canadians and fellow Canadians of theirs ought to have set.

They defined poverty as many others in their briefs have defined poverty though they made a distinction and I shall deal with this at not too great length because, sir, you have already—as all members have—copies of this brief, and they will be available. They made a distinction not made by others in briefs already submitted to us. The difference between being poor and living in poverty. Now, I think we should keep in mind that while we have had and will have technical experts appearing before us giving qualified technical information, these views come from people who know poverty from having been part of it, having lived in it and having suffered from it. I, for one, and I hope you too will be impressed by their representations.

Here is how they define the difference between being poor and living in poverty. They said that being poor denotes that the persons in question earn just enough to provide them with the necessities of life but living in poverty they say hardly gives people enough to provide the bare necessities to keep body and soul together.

I doubt, Mr. Chairman, if there is an academic mind in the country who could more clearly illustrate the difference between being poor and being poverty-stricken than to these people in their brief of this afternoon because that is the essence of the fundamentals of being poor and being poverty-stricken.

Now, they don't pretend to have the answers. They agree that there are many ingredients mixed up with poverty, abject and otherwise and unlike others they don't pontificate. They submit proposals which they think will help alleviate poverty. They do not think that poverty can be cured for all time to come because they are reasonable men who have lived long enough to realize certain fundamental facts of life. They make some points that penetrate very deeply. Let me turn to their recommendations. You will find them on page 8 of their brief.

Senator Hastings: Do you have a copy of the brief, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: No, we only have three or four copies; copies are being made now.

Senator Connolly: They make this point amongst others. That while there is no wonder cure that men should be made to work. They should be coerced or compelled to work if they are going to receive the benefits of society. They make the point, of course, that if there are those people and there are some who are unable to work, then society has a moral obligation to look after these people. No reasonable man or woman, I think, can disagree with that. They make a further point that more social workers are required at ground level or grass roots level, let us say. Without being critical at all and acknowledging that academic background in becoming a social worker is helpful. They make the further point that the more advanced academic training given to most social workers the less likelihood of those social workers being able to understand the real poor and poverty-stricken people because they become more and more remote from those people and they suggest that if we could find, among the ranks of the people so afflicted, young people who could be educated sufficiently to take on work in the social agencies and become themselves skilled social workers that we could go a long way towards helping out this situation.

They, of course, believe that there should be a guaranteed annual minimum income for every Canadian. They are conscious that this means increased taxation of one kind or another. They qualify that by saying as has been said before, that God alone will not cure the impoverishment of so many Canadians. They recognize that there are other deprivations other than economic among the poor and they recognize that environment as they call it rather than culture—and I think it's a much more opportune word if I may say so—is a must that must be handled by those we send in to the field to cure these ills.

They suggest above all other that instead of handling these problems at the managerial level that we, the people of Canada, be concerned with the problems of the poor and should involve the poor in those problems to a much greater extent than is now the case. They feel that we should consult with them that we should ask them—if I may use the common phrase—how they got that way. How they can get out from under that condition; how can they help themselves to avoid that dreadful state and how they can be helped by their fellow Canadians.

Mr. Chairman, I am a little wound up on this and I would talk endlessly and perhaps spoil the evening if I were to go on, but I merely repeat these things to you because I was so vividly impressed this afternoon because my heart was touched with the compassion of these people and I earnestly commend their views to the attention of this Committee.

Thank you very much.

The Chairman: Thank you, Senator Connolly and I presume what you intend is that the brief be made part of the record?

Senator Connolly: I do so move, Mr. Chairman, that it be made part of the public record.

The Chairman: I second that. I am sorry about the brief, senators, but they didn't know just how to handle it and we tried to get copies made at the hotel but the facilities were not available tonight.

Next we are to hear from the Winnipeg Tenants Association. I want to assure you that you will have all the time that you require. I am sure you are all impressed, as we were, with Senator Connolly's report, and that this was a special treat for you. The spokesman for the Winnipeg Tenants Association is Mrs. Harvelyn McInnes, and she will introduce the other members of the delegation.

Mrs. Harvelyn McInnes, Winnipeg Tenants Association: Thank you, Senator Croll. I would like to introduce the President of the Winnipeg Tenants Association, Mr. Celestine Guiboche on my left here and Miss Gail Moss on my right. Behind me is Mr. Harry Boone and Mr. Victor Couchene. They are both on the sub-committee on unemployment and employment.

Now, I would like to turn this over to Mr. Guiboche who will read the prepared text.

Mr. Celestin Guiboche, President, Winnipeg Tenants Association: The purpose of this brief is to talk about poverty, its causes, and to offer some solutions to this problem. The Winnipeg Tenants Association feels that poverty in Canada is too wide to be ignored any further.

The Winnipeg Tenants Association considers the following conditions as major causes of poverty.

(a) Lack of decent housing.

(b) Lack of jobs.

(c) Lack of adequate educational and training opportunities for the untrained and unskilled citizens of this country.

(d) Lack of enforcement of laws and legislation that are supposed to correct wrongs in our society.

(e) Lack of legal services, especially for the poor to fight for their rights when their rights are violated.

(f) Lack of co-operation, communication and trust between Government and its citizens.

The Winnipeg Tenants Association, after studying and dealing with the housing problem in the Winnipeg area discovered a very definite lack of adequate living accommodation. Unlike the municipal, provincial and federal governments, we find there is a housing crisis in the City of Winnipeg and in Canada.

On looking at this broad problem more closely, we found it could be broken down into the following areas:

(a) We found a lack of adequate housing.

(b) Lack of emergency housing for people who are evicted and/or burnt out. For example, the City feels that their emergency housing is the local hotels, yet the people themselves who need emergency housing want homes and houses. They feel that hotels are not proper places to care for children because of no recreational facilities, far away from schools, drunks, eating in restaurants, etc.

A high cost of housing across the board, and an obvious lack of low rental housing for people on welfare and the low income. For example we have two public housing developments with a waiting list in the thousands. Landlords seem able to charge whatever rent they want, even for substandard housing.

The Welfare Department is prepared to pay these rents and low income people have no choice, as adequate accommodation is far beyond their budget. For example, Mr. G., married, three kids, struggling through school, could locate only substandard living accommodation. This man earned $280 a month to maintain his family. The only socially adequate accommodation he could find would cost him at least $120 plus per month. If he were to spend almost fifty per cent of his income on rent, his family could not eat and be properly clothed. He was therefore forced to accept inadequate accommodation (two and a half rooms in an attic with no toilet facilities—poorly heated and ventilated). This accommodation cost him $75 per month.

The Winnipeg Tenants Association has talked to countless numbers of people and their findings would support the Urban Renewal Studies in Winnipeg which state that there is a large surplus of inadequate housing. That is, there is a large surplus of housing with: poor wiring, overcrowding, poor plumbing, poor heat and ventilation, bugs, lousy landlords, and with poor toilet facilities. Although public housing has certain drawbacks and may be a second-best solution for some people, it is certainly better than living in a rat-infested hole. We have not found one person living in these conditions who would not take public housing over their previous living accommodation.

The Winnipeg Tenants Association has discovered a complete lack of recreational facilities for people in the core areas where people on welfare and low income live. Because there is limited recreational facilities at this point for the children, we experience a great deal of delinquency, glue-sniffing, drinking, etc.

Discrimination in terms of race, creed, financial status, marital status and size of family is a common everyday experience for people on welfare and marginal earners when searching for living accommodation.

Some landlords refuse to rent houses to people on welfare, while others will rent only to people on welfare, knowing they can charge more for their accommodation than it's worth. Some landlords will not rent to women alone with kids as they are afraid that such women are not able to maintain the premises.

People with children have a tough time finding accommodations. A close look at any daily newspaper will bear this out, where two or three-bedroom accommodations are put up for rent, specifying no children. Yet many times these places will allow pets. Also stated in the newspaper is "no welfare cases". The Winnipeg Tenants Association also uncovered discriminatory practices on the part of landlords when it comes to renting accommodations to people of Indian ancestry and other coloured people.

For example, we have heard grievances from many Indian people who have made arrangements to rent by phone. When these people show up to finalize the agreement, the landlord quickly backs down, usually saying that the place has been taken. Yet, several days after, it has been found that the same place is still up for rent.

The Winnipeg Tenants Association has found that tenants are unjustly and sometimes illegally treated by landlords. The landlords feel that they have a right to walk into a suite at any time. Some people are given illegal eviction notices without due cause. Due to arrears of rent for two or three days, some landlords have changed locks while the tenant is out.

Also, bailiffs have been called in by the landlord proceeding to violate tenants' rights with the tenants having no say. For example, we know of a case where a bailiff had claimed goods worth $350 from a tenant who was in arrears of rent for only a month which was $45. Even though this situation exists, few people can afford legal services to take action. Even if people do have some funds, the cost of a lawyer is too great.

The Winnipeg Tenants Association knows of several cases where landlords are not maintaining their suites and when a tenant complains he is evicted.

The Winnipeg Tenants Association knows that in housing projects the rents are increased as soon as a family earns a small increase in income. This is unfair. It prevents a person from getting ahead and bettering himself. Admission procedures to these public housing units are sometimes unfair and unjust. The rental rate itself is based only on gross income. This is also unfair. For example, a family consisting of ten with a gross income of $300 a month pays the same rate of rent as a family of four with the same gross income.

In short, in spite of this big housing problem, the government seems content to shelve the housing needs. Money is spent on private development but very little on housing and human development. And these problems ladies and gentlemen, that we have mentioned about housing are a major cause of poverty.

Let us now look at the employment situation. The existence of jobs for anyone is limited. For the poor there are almost no jobs. The few jobs that are available do not pay enough and are seasonal—they do not last long.

We have found that because of race, colour, a jail record or because a person is on welfare, employers are not too eager to hire. There is discrimination in the employment field.

Even when the poor find jobs they have to suffer under poor working conditions such as; lack of washroom and lunchroom facilities, and also safety equipment.

Because the poor are usually lacking in skills and education, it becomes doubly difficult for them to find jobs. It was hoped that Canada Manpower would help train and upgrade the unskilled and uneducated but they are themselves discriminating and selecting the best man for the job and placing emphasis on education. So people without education or skills are left out. Canada Manpower more and more is referring a person to upgrading, not on the basis of what a person thinks he is capable of doing, but instead on the person's work history and what Canada Manpower thinks is good for him.

The immigration to this country is so great that they take up the existing jobs and Canadians are left out. These immigrants seem to get better service than we do.

We find also that the person trying to apply for a job meets too much red tape.

Casual labour offices exploit the poor man. They make commissions on the earnings of people they refer for employment. They pay the provincial minimum wage even though the employer pays much higher.

As far as unemployment insurance is concerned, a person is usually unable to collect the money when he needs it. The waiting period is too long and if you make an error in filling out the form it is delayed further. Even when a person is short of one stamp he is not eligible to draw unemployment insurance.

Most people who are unable to find jobs have no choice but to go on welfare. Most welfare policies do not provide incentives to work because when you do work you are only allowed to earn $25 a month. Jobs and employment are important to us because it means money so that we can eat and obtain the necessities of life such as clothings, shelter, social life, self respect, dignity and self determination.

Society at large also expects us to work and we would also like to work if we can get the opportunity for decent work and decent pay. The lack of jobs and the problems we have mentioned are another major cause of poverty. Let us now look at the educational and training opportunities.

The Winnipeg Tenants Association knows that in order to get good jobs, one must have a certain degree of education or a skill. Most of the people in the poverty bracket lack both of these. To get out of the poverty cycle they must be trained. We feel that the institutions that are supposed to train and educate people are not doing so sufficiently. For example, the time limits for some courses are too short. Trainees come out of programmes with just the very basic skills of the trade and they are unable to move directly into employment. They are half-trained—most trainees do not follow up their trade upon completion of a course because of this.

A number of adults who try to go into academic training to better themselves find that they are unable to because of a lack of funds or bursaries or programmes to assist them.

Government training programmes also continue to train candidates for jobs with small demands. Because of all these problems, people are prevented from improving their situation and this adds to the problem of poverty. Let us now look at the question of enforcement of laws and legislation and the lack of legal services for the people on low income.

The Winnipeg Tenants Association knows that there are some adequate laws and legislation in this country. The problem is that they are seldom enforced.

When your rights are violated, the only democratic recourse is to take your case to court. But the people on low income are unable to pay for these services. Legal services for the poor are seldom available through Legal Aid to fight for rights. It seems that justice is not usually available for the poor.

Now we wish to examine Government communications and co-operation with its citizens. The Winnipeg Tenants Association finds that there is a definite lack of information and co-operation between Government and public officials and its citizens. When we invite officials to meetings to provide information and give answers, they send representatives. They bring greetings but no answers. They hold meetings behind closed doors and we are seldom informed or involved in decisions that affect our lives.

We feel that Government is not taking an aggressive stand on major problems of education, housing and employment. How many public meetings and task forces must we have before they recognize today's housing, education and employment problems. When we present the facts they give us sympathy. But it is not sympathy we want. We want action.

This kind of government behaviour results in citizens losing face and giving up hope. For example, at our recent municipal election we had a record low of the electorate voting at the polls. They are, in fact, saying there is no point.

Solutions: The Winnipeg Tenants Association realizes that there is no simple and cheap solution for poverty. But we think we have the brains in this country and the money to eliminate a large part of this if we try hard.

The Winnipeg Tenants Association has the following suggestions. In the area of housing: a) every step should be taken to see that every person in Canada has adequate accommodation; b) there should be a basic minimum Canadian standard set for housing and every Canadian should have accommodations that meets at least minimum standards; c) since recreation and housing have a lot to do with poverty, adequate recreational facilities should be provided in residential areas; d) since the large majority of Canadians are tenants, there should be one federal landlord and tenant act; e) all rental accommodations should be assessed by a government body and a reasonable percentage of profit set; f) sub-standard houses should all be repaired to meet standards. If landlords do not repair their rental premises, the Government should penalize with a tax charge; g) deteriorated houses should be demolished and replaced by adequate housing; h) regarding public housing, more emphasis should be placed on single-family dwellings, instead of high-rise apartments. Public housing should be scattered instead of concentrated in one area. Public housing should take the form of duplexes or townhouses and should be for rent, sale or rent with an option to buy.

There should also be one central body to deal with public housing instead of the three levels of government.

In the area of employment, we suggest the following:

a) Government and private industry have to create more jobs. b) The minimum wage has to be increased. c) A minimum standard of working conditions must be set for all places of employment. d) Stop immigration until we have solved our housing and employment problems. e) Ban all casual employment offices that are exploiting employees. Government should handle these offices if necessary—there should be no middle men. f) Eliminate the waiting period for unemployment insurance. Pay sufficient unemployment insurance for a family to live on decently. g) Provide incentives for people on welfare to work if they can. Raise their allowable earnings to $100 per month while on welfare. h) Welfare departments should work with a family for a reasonable period, after the family is earning its own way—its own income, in order to enable the families to get established.

In the field of education, training and upgrading, we suggest the following:

a) Make educational, training and upgrading opportunities available to every Canadian who desires to improve his lot in life. Help financially where he cannot afford this on his own. b) Eliminate educational qualifications as a condition for re-entry into upgrading. c) Government must train people for jobs that they know exist now and that will exist in the future. d) Government must train a person sufficiently and completely so that when he is finished training he can get a decent job and not need an apprenticeship period.

In the area of legislation and legal services we suggest the following:

a) Spend money on educating people about their rights. b) Enforce all laws and legislation, especially those that were enacted to prevent discrimination and unfair practices in housing and employment. c) The Government must assist financially, people on low income to obtain legal services for divorces, etc., and to fight for their rights when these rights are violated. For example, in eviction cases which are illegal.

In the area of communication between Government and its citizens, we suggest the following:

a) When government does not provide information or when they pass the buck, citizens should have a recourse to an ombudsman. b) There has to be better communication between government and its citizens for the public to have faith and hope.

c) Governments should be expected to meet deadlines like anyone else. They should take action and not delay forever.

The Chairman: Senator Sparrow?

Senator Sparrow: Is there discrimination in subsidized public housing in regard to people on social welfare now? There have been comments made from time to time in a public housing unit of so many units there would be permitted in that unit one person on welfare and the rest employed people. Is this in fact the case and do you find this in public housing in this area?

Mr. Guiboche: I will answer that this one and I would say yes. I would sooner not discuss anything on welfare because there is a subcommittee—our subcommittee is presenting their brief tomorrow and this is what they will be dealing with.

Senator Sparrow: Well, really I was asking in the broad sense if there was any discrimination in public housing? Could you answer in a broad sense?

Mr. Guiboche: I think there is. There is definite discrimination on housing and employment—in both fields.

The Chairman: In answer to Senator Sparrow, what do you mean by discrimination? Do you mean discrimination in income or on other grounds? What particular aspect are you raising?

Mr. Guiboche: It's not so much income but rather in nationality or size of family or low income which is—yes, I would have to say that it does affect earnings. It is being practised by the landlord with all these points I have just mentioned. A tenant has no alternative to respond to what a landlord may want him or her to do. He can't fight for himself or himself for the fact that although we have adequate laws and legislation and these are not helping the public in general. This is why we say there is a lack of communication on the part of the government. We never knew of acts existing until we got involved in this association. For example, when we approached governments, no matter which level of government, and regardless of what our presentations were, we were only to find that there are existing laws. Until that day, we didn't know that these laws existed.

Senator Inman: Mr. Chairman, regarding immigration, in this brief, I must say that here is a lot of serious thought but you speak of immigration as being so great that they take up existing jobs. Why is that? Do they work cheaper?

Mr. Guiboche: In many cases, yes. A lot of these people are qualified to do work whereas if manpower should train people in this country, immigrants come to this country fully prepared in this field and on completion of a course you go to an employer and he is going to hire a person that is more qualified in the field for years instead of a student that just came off a course or who usually comes all the way from an apprenticeship and apprenticeship licence.

Senator Inman: Well, then do you think that the Canadian Government doesn't look after people as well to enable them to get the education?

Mr. Guiboche: We know that it doesn't.

The Chairman: That it doesn't what?

Mr. Guiboche: That it doesn't respond to the needs of the citizens.

Senator Inman: Well, it's just a matter that the people don't take advantage of it.

Mr. Guiboche: Well, maybe if people do take advantage of it as we state in our brief that Canada Manpower more and more should direct candidates to what they feel this person—well, they go by the work history as we stated in our brief rather than what this person is capable of doing.

Senator Inman: You mean direct it to another field?

Mr. Guiboche: Yes.

The Chairman: Well, before Canada Manpower puts you into a training class, don't they try aptitude tests to try and find out what is likely to be the thing they can do best?

Mr. Guiboche: This is true. They do that but a lot of people, a lot of Canadians—(or maybe I shouldn't restrict myself to saying Canadians)—people in Canada, a lot of them don't have the minimum grades it requires for a person to take upgrading or any courses for that matter. Manpower requires that you have Grade VI to get into Level III. Now, these people, the people that are concerned to try to better themselves, to try and educate themselves, be educated, they are refused these rights. Perhaps if there was something like Level V, then maybe they would be accepted, but the way it stands and we have talked to some people who were turned down in these matters and they feel that they would be able to learn from that level on because unlike a child going in at five or something like that, the adults will naturally learn quite a bit through his life span. What we have been told is that they feel they can or have enough behind them to learn at a point from level 4.

Senator Fergusson: Well, Senator Inman asked this question but I intended to ask the question on immigration and training given by Manpower, I think it's been answered. I would like to ask you—on page 4 you say:

Some landlords refuse to rent houses to people on welfare, while others will rent only to people on welfare, knowing they can charge more for their accommodations than it's worth.

Now, that seems to be rather contradictory because you say first that some landlords refuse to rent houses to people on welfare and others will only rent to people on welfare?

Mr. Guiboche: Right. A lot of places where people have been turned down by the landlord due to the fact they are on welfare or if it's a woman with children or nationalities. All these people at one time or another have been refused these accommodations and yet where the premises are blighted—for instance if they are not worth $25 a month and yet the welfare agencies are prepared to pay $75 to $100 per month for these premises.

Senator McGrand: On page 10 you said the Government must train people for jobs sufficiently and completely so that when he is finished training he can get a decent job and not need an apprenticeship period. Now, it seems to me that technical training can provide a person with some certain skills, but in order to make use of those skills he needs to work on the job over some time. Isn't that true?

Mr. Guiboche: It's true, but the way we see it and we know and the way it's been approached to us is that when people on completion of these courses come out into the field with an apprenticeship or any kind of certificate and go into employment where the employer will pay next to the minimum wage or the minimum wage at that. Whereas, if a person working alongside of you with a Master licence would be getting three dollars or close to four dollars per hour and if this person is married they cannot live on this $1.25 to a dollar-forty which is what is offered to them. Single, yes, I would say that they can get by, but not married.

Senator McGrand: Well, you would agree that on-the-job training is an important thing, would you not? You would agree that training on the job is important, but how can the technical training given to a person in the trade school improve what he requires for on-the-job training? It's hard for him to get on-the-job training while he is taking a technical course. Isn't that right?

Mr. Guiboche: Yes.

Mrs. McInnes: I think perhaps Mr. Guiboche means that very often people take this course and that they are not really prepared to go and take a job, but if they had a period of possibly three months further training they would be much more capable and could take their place properly. They just have a very, very basic skill when they come from the upgrading, but if they could say stay in this upgrading two or three months longer, they would be a very great deal better.

Senator McGrand: You mean on-the-job training should be part of his training for a job?

Mrs. McInnes: Yes, I think perhaps that would be a very good idea.

Senator Everett: Mr. Guiboche, you said on the second page of your brief that there is a lack of legal services, especially for the poor to fight for their rights when their rights are violated. I wonder if you would be able to tell me or your association could tell me what free legal services are people provided in Manitoba and where those services are failing the people who are in poverty?

Mr. Guiboche: Where was that again?

Senator Everett: Page 2, subsection 1, subsection e.

Mr. Guiboche: Well, we had people approach legal services and they were refused for asking for assistance to fight for their rights, such as if they were being evicted or if they go there to ask for aid for a divorce, etc. These people were refused that—in one case I think it was only last week or something one person was told not to go back there because they were on welfare. The fact that this person was on welfare he was told not to go back there.

Senator Everett: Did the Association investigate any of these cases?

Mr. Guiboche: Yes, we have, but I am not prepared today to give you that kind of information because our subcommittee on welfare rights movement are the ones who were approached on these and I am sure at tomorrow's hearing they will be better prepared to answer these questions.

Senator Everett: Thank you.

Senator Sparrow: Well, you refer to the minimum wage and that it has to be increased. To what figure?

Mr. Guiboche: They had a hearing on this matter of wage increases not too long ago and at that time our subcommittee on employment made a presentation and taking the figures from the welfare audit—we took for example a family of four and basing the wages on this we came up with a figure of $2.65 an hour. The Labour Minister prepared to raise the minimum wage 10 cents.

Senator Sparrow: From what?

Mr. Guiboche: From $1.25 per hour.

Senator Sparrow: I see.

The Chairman: $1.25 to $1.35 for men—how about women?

Mr. Guiboche: This includes everyone. When this was announced after the hearing the cafes had raised their prices such as for coffee from ten cents to fifteen cents. They couldn't even wait until the minimum wage went up. The minimum wage won't go up for a month or so, but they have already started charging these higher prices. We have heard but we have never looked into this and whether it is true or not I can't say, but it was stated that the price went up as high as 25 cents for a cup of coffee. We know for a fact that in a lot of places it went up a nickel. The minimum wage hadn't gone up yet. It certainly is not enough. Ten cents is not enough—not by far. If the Government is prepared to do anything on poverty, then they should look at the people in the low income bracket.

I am sure that two dollars an hour would not hurt any employer because if they pay the wages, they still have to pay tax anyway. They would have to find the money in other sources, so why not give the employees the money? If they don't pay it there, the poor man will have to get it from the Government through welfare and this is why there is such a high number on the welfare rolls. It is steadily going up and it will continue to go up unless the Government makes a plea or says to industry that rather than make a freeze on wages make the freeze on the big fellows and let us try and build up our wages to the organized groups. It's the unorganized groups that are being paid the very very minimum wages and I am sure that a lot of these people can pay an awful lot more than what they are paying. Because of the fact that they are employees or unorganized—and when I say this I am talking about Hudson Bay Company and the T. Eaton Company of Canada—these are big companies and they pay the minimum wages and very little above that.

The Chairman: Tell me isn't it illegal for a man to advertise rental premises in which he says "no welfare cases"?

Mr. Guiboche: Yes, it is, but like I said, they don't know from lack of information from the Government. It says in these Acts and we have never studied these Acts yet because we just got a hold of them and we never had a chance to go over them, but it was told to us that these things do exist in these Acts.

The Chairman: But you will be studying them now?

Mr. Guiboche: Yes. We are prepared as is the purpose of the Winnipeg Tenants Association and we have stated this, that we are prepared to take whatever action is necessary to increase the housing stock and to work for better housing conditions in this province and we stand by that statement.

The Chairman: Assume, for a moment, that a man is receiving $200 a month from welfare and the landlord increased his rent $15 in the month of January. Would he get $215 a month from the welfare department?

Mr. Guiboche: No.

The Chairman: All right, what will he get?

Mr. Guiboche: Well, he will get the $200 and where the fifteen dollars comes from—it would have to be from the poor for clothing or whatever this person is allowed. This will have to come out of something, but it certainly wouldn't be an increase in their budget.

The Chairman: Well, that isn't the case in all provinces and I don't mind telling you.

That is why I asked the question very deliberately. Most of the provinces, where you have a deliberate eligible increase in rent they must pay because they can't get the welfare department—they will pick that up because they can't get any other premises and they can't leave people on the street. Why doesn't that happen here?

Mrs. McInnes: Well, I think there are many fine laws and legislation, but a great deal of it is not enforced. I think this is one of our major problems in our province at any rate, that health by-laws—people are living in homes that are infested with rats and bed-bugs and these things shouldn't be. No Canadian or person that lives in Canada should have to live under these conditions and I think certainly the Government realizes this and legislation over the years has been passed, but it has not been enforced. What I would like to see is some type of board or group of people within the government who would make a point of inspecting premises that are to be rented so that there can be some basic level of accommodation right across Canada.

The Chairman: Rent is part of the payment, isn't it?

Mrs. MacInnes: I believe so.

The Chairman: Well, isn't that correct?

Mrs. McInnes: Yes.

The Chairman: Well, do you know that under the law in Manitoba you have the right to appeal to a board that is in existence if you are dissatisfied with the welfare or with the rent payments or whatever you are required to pay? There is a board in existence in Manitoba here?

Mrs. McInnes: Well, I think many people that would like to appeal will not appeal because of fear. If people are evicted several times they are thrown out into the streets and this happens time and time again—landlords that are approached because of defects in their property become quite nasty sometimes and the people know that if they make complaints they are out.

Senator Hastings: I don't think the Senator was referring to a rent appeal board, he was referring to a welfare appeal board.

Mrs. McInnes: Well, I'm afraid I couldn't answer on questions of welfare.

Senator Hastings: You say admission procedures to public housing units are unfair sometimes—unfair and unjust. Could you give me some specific examples?

Mr. Guiboche: Yes. In the brief you will see that we say that the waiting list is in the thousands and even though this exists a person can walk into an office and ask to move into these premises and the manager or the person will ignore the request, the waiting list that is there, and tell this person to move in.

Senator Hastings: Are there any other things that are unfair and unjust?

Mr. Guiboche: Well, the rent itself. I have a scale here, and this is also stated in our brief, the scale for the rents. When the rent—just as an example here, a person has an income of $192, the rent is $32. Every four dollars of increased income, your rent goes up one dollar out of every four dollars. Yet, they call this low rental housing. They don't even give a guy a chance to try and better himself in these projects. I think, if they were going to live, they should have a different scale. Instead of every four dollars, make it every one hundred or every two hundred; then it would give a person a chance to better himself. When we do ask him these questions all they tell us is when you people come to a point when you feel you are paying too much rent in these housing developments, then you should move out and get somebody else to move in. How can they expect somebody to move out when they are steadily keeping them in the poverty line?

Senator Fergusson: I would just like to ask this one question. On page 6, paragraph 47 you say this:

Casual labour offices exploit the poor man. They make commissions on the earnings of people they refer for employment. They pay the provincial minimum wage even though the employer pays much higher.

Would you explain that to me. I don't seem to be familiar with that in my own province.

Mr. Guiboche: Well, these are casual labour offices, private agencies such as Office Overload and agencies like that. They advertise jobs such as construction labour and this casual department gets two-sixty-five an hour and then sends out a man for a dollar and a quarter an hour. They make over a dollar an hour on every man they send out.

Senator Hastings: Are you sure of your figures?

Mr. Guiboche: Yes I am pretty sure because I was one of them.

Senator Hastings: Are you sure they charged $2.65 an hour?

Mr. Guiboche: Yes.

Senator Hastings: And they were paying you a dollar and a quarter?

Mr. Guiboche: Yes.

The Chairman: That is in places like Office Overload and places like that. This is a different problem. They charge for some one who takes a job; this is a new one on me.

Senator Hastings: Is a one hundred per cent markup normal?

The Chairman: One hundred per cent, I have never heard of such a thing. This suggestion shakes me.

Mr. Guiboche: Where the Manpower or the unemployment people cannot supply people with work, with the jobs, yet these agencies are able to from day to day to give these people different kinds of work. He gave the figure of $2.65 an hour and we have different figures too. They are much higher than $2.65.

Senator Hastings: A bigger spread?

Mr. Guiboche: Yes. They will pay the man they refer to these jobs the minimum wage. The provincial minimum wage, and this is why we say in our brief that the Government takes action to eliminate these agencies and operate these agencies themselves if it need be. This will enable the employees to get the full benefits of their earnings.

Senator Everett: Mr. Guiboche on the same page just above that under 4.4, you say:

It was hoped that Canada Manpower would help train and upgrade the unskilled and uneducated but they are themselves discriminating and selecting the best man for the job and placing emphasis on education.

I am not just sure that I understand what you are trying to say there. I would assume that you are talking about re-educating and upgrading? You seem to be using the term "selecting the best man for the job". I wouldn't have thought that that would be a term that would be applicable to re-educating or upgrading.

Mr. Guiboche: Yes. I think I answered some of that question...

Senator Everett: You answered the last part of the question. You were referring to the cases of a person being upgraded on the basis of what Manpower thought he could do rather than what he thought he could do. I am referring more specifically to the first part of the question. I just don't understand the terminology. It says "they are selecting the best men for the job and placing the emphasis on education". Now, if the function of Canada Manpower is to list people in jobs and that is what I suspect what they do, surely they are not doing that if they are talking about upgrading or re-educating or retraining someone.

Mrs. McInnes: Well, I think as far as the best man for the job is naturally what most people do. They are selecting among several one particular person to do a job, but I think the problem is that they leave the other people without a chance, without a job and there are so many people that have no education or very little education and very little training that have a great deal of difficulty in getting jobs and possibly these people come time and time again to get a job and are unable to. Perhaps Mr. Couchene could answer this question and tell you some of the difficulties that he has encountered.

Mr. Victor Couchene (Winnipeg Tenants Association): I was up to the Manitoba Manpower trying to get myself an education to try and get myself a better position so I could get myself a job. I went up there and I found out that I have to have Grade VI education to get into upgrading courses. I have been having difficulty getting jobs. First of all I was on welfare assistance and in the welfare department they found me a job at a dollar-sixty per hour. I have a family of five including the wife which makes seven of us and I don't think I can make on that. I have been going from job to job and I can't seem to get anywhere. Everytime I go to a job they ask me what education I have. I haven't got no education.

Senator Everett: You say that Manpower won't return you?

Mr. Couchene: No. I was up there myself just about a week ago.

Senator Everett: And the reason they give you is that your basic education is too low?

Mr. Couchene: I haven't got no education.

Senator Everett: You have to have Grade VI?

Mr. Couchene: I have to go to level of Grade VI before I get any upgrading.

The Chairman: What sort of work have you done all your life?

Mr. Couchene: I was a truck driver and a taxi driver back home in Pine Falls.

The Chairman: You mean all they look at was your basic schooling and they wouldn't look at your experience, the education that you picked up in the course of your life?

Mr. Couchene: No, they didn't.

Senator Everett: You are not under any obligation to answer this, Mr. Couchene, but if you choose to I wonder what grade of education you do have?

Mr. Couchene: None, I have never been to school. I was just a matter of six months and then I came out and I started to work in the bush. This is where I learned English in amongst the white people.

Senator Everett: What trade then do you think you could learn?

Mr. Couchene: I would like to be a bricklayer. I have been working for bricklayers most of the time here in Winnipeg. I would like to get a bricklayer's course so I could get a better job.

Senator Everett: Can you lay bricks now?

Mr. Couchene: Yes.

Senator Everett: What do you lack?

Mr. Couchene: Well, I got to have Grade VI. I have got to have measurements and all that. You have to have mathematics and all that. I don't have any of that.

Senator Everett: And there are no agencies that can help you get the education?

Mr. Couchene: Well, I went up to Manpower.

Senator Everett: Well, I understand what happened to you, but I am amazed that if you know how to lay bricks and if you want just a formal education that's involved in making you a qualified bricklayer, I can't understand—if as the Chairman has said you have years of experience in doing various things, I can't understand it. I can't understand why Manpower would say just because you don't have Grade VI education we won't train you. This is something that you virtually know about already.

Mr. Couchene: Well, I have been working with these bricklayers since they learn me you know. They ask me to put blocks in, you know, and I could put the blocks in.

The Chairman: When you went to Manpower you said, "I want to learn to be a bricklayer"?

Mr. Couchene: I didn't tell them.

The Chairman: What did you ask them?

Mr. Couchene: I went there and asked them to take upgrading.

The Chairman: To upgrade in any course?

Mr. Couchene: Yes.

The Chairman: Why do you mention bricklayer?

Mr. Couchene: Well, that is a job that I would like to do.

The Chairman: You know that is the toughest union in the world to get into, do you not?

Mr. Couchene: Well, that is, I have been working as a bricklayer.

The Chairman: That is probably why they wouldn't retrain you, because it would be almost impossible with your education to get into it.

Mr. Couchene: Well, I believe if I can learn to do it, I can do it.

The Chairman: By the way, I think I must bring to the attention of the Committee that the gentleman's statement on the two-sixty-five and one-sixty-five is quite correct. As a matter of fact, we the Committee have to get help on short notice in Ottawa, we pay the Overload two-sixty-five and they pay the stenographers one-sixty-five. This apparently is the common practice and I am told that this is normally done.

Senator Hastings: Why do we not use the Manpower system in Ottawa?

The Chairman: Well, I am talking about what we have to do back East. The Manpower haven't got the facilities for that. They haven't got people available. They are just not available.

Senator Hastings: Is there not a section of Manpower available for temporary help? Is there not a section available where an employer could phone for temporary help?

Mrs. MacInnes: I think in regards to temporary help that maybe they do not want temporary jobs. They want full-time jobs.

Senator Hastings: No, but this situation is in regard to temporary help. You mentioned other cases; now, would you care to tell us some others, Mr. Guiboche?

Mr. Guiboche: Well, I would have to use welfare on this. When a person approaches Welfare for assistance, in a lot of cases the welfare department will direct these recipients to such jobs as these and yet they should be the people trying to keep such people away from employers because of the low wages, but this doesn't happen. We have heard from different sources of people that if they refuse, then they are threatened by Welfare that they are not going to get any more assistance, and so they have two choices—either take what the employer is offering which is the minimum wage, or go out and seek help from different agencies.

The Chairman: Or go out hungry?

Mr. Guiboche: Yes, and go out hungry. The Winnipeg Tenants Association—we have become more and more involved in these problems and having some recourse to go by, we are either assisting these people back and having more information than the individuals themselves—we are able to at least up to now, to maintain their rights.

Senator Hastings: I notice you say in your brief that your membership is approximately five hundred. What percentage are Metis?

Mr. Guiboche: I would say in the neighbourhood of maybe forty to forty-five per cent.

Senator Hastings: You also say:

Unlike municipal, provincial and federal governments, we find there is a housing crisis.

I think, sir, that the Federal Government would agree that there is a housing shortage. Not unlike you—like you.

Mr. Guiboche: What we can't understand is the fact that any level of government knows that there is a housing crisis and these major points are being the cause of poverty. I will just give you an example and I will quote from this general report. This is an urban renewal neighbourhood that is off the boundaries—the boundaries of this is on the east, is Main Street and on the west is Arlington Street, to the south is Notre Dame Avenue and to the north it's the C.P.R. tracks. In this area urban renewal area 2 comprises 157 city blocks and contains about 540 acres. There are over 2,000 buildings in that area. It goes on to say, of the 2,341 buildings in urban renewal area 2, 1,662 are residential structures. 567 are non-residential structures. A further 112 are structures in which residential uses are combined with some other type of use, such as commercial where the ground floor, for example, is occupied by a retail store and the second floor is occupied by a dweller. Among the purely residential structures over 75 per cent were found to be in only fair to poor or poor conditions. It gives the conditions of the residential buildings. Conditions. Good—18 buildings. Good to Fair—90 buildings. Fair—288 buildings. Fair to Poor—874 buildings. Poor—392 buildings. Fair to Poor—out of 1,662 buildings, residential buildings, there are from fair to poor 1,554, which leaves Good and Good to Fair—108 buildings. This report is a 1966 report. That is four years ago and there are probably a lot more buildings in further deterioration.

The Chairman: Has anything been done about it before?

Mr. Guiboche: No.

The Chairman: All there was was this report?

Mr. Guiboche: I have a letter here where our council—our city council—went to Ottawa to meet with Mr. Andras on the subject of housing when our Prime Minister put the freeze on funds and the cutback on housing and they came back with this report. There is nowhere in this report that I can see that there is going to be a development or a project going. All it states throughout the report is how they are going to try to get the Midland railways, how they are going to get the Midland railways—how much they are going to pay the Midland railways. Now, we have tried and the only answer that has been given was that they cannot through some kind of legislation—they cannot build a project unless that railway is taken away from there.

We gave suggestions to that—whether—where there are houses deteriorating to a state of demolishing these premises, that they be demolished and adequate accommodation be built in that area instead of, as we stated in our brief, concentrating in heavy concentrated areas. People don't seem to like the idea of this and they feel like they are in some sort of concentration camp and especially the way these developments of this type are built. You have walls there that are eight feet high and there again is another point. People would like to see a neat little fence instead of these big brick walls. Having no recreational facilities for these areas, and all those bricks that go to waste in making these walls—that some sort of building could have been built and that building would have taken almost a block in size for all the waste that went in there. We call it waste, but I am not sure what the architects call it.

Mrs. McInnes: I think also that people that live in low-income housing still like to be part of the community and often in these large developments they tend to put them either on the outskirts or within their own community. I think they feel that they would like to remain part of the community in which they grew up and as I say, two or three houses are in a state of repair where they have to be demolished, I think it might be a better idea to demolish the two or three houses of say 150-foot frontage and build say some sort of short block of row-houses, approximately three or four right in that area. People in these low-income houses can live in the districts they have grown up in.

The Chairman: Well, that has always been the argument, particularly on behalf of the aged, and it is an argument that goes on all over the country every time we start an urban renewal project and the bulldozers go in and move people out and demolish these buildings.

Mrs. McInnes: Well, it could be done in a smaller scale throughout many districts so that people who are either on welfare or in subsidized housing don't feel there is a stigma on them because of this.

Mr. Guiboche: Mr. Chairman, we have answered a lot of questions. Could perhaps the Senate Committee answer a few of our questions?

The Chairman: Well, the Senate Committee is here to listen to you and we have listened to other people and we answer our questions when we make our report which is some distance away. We are not here to institute decisions because we have to hear all there is to be heard all across Canada; so you will have to wait for our decision for some time yet.

Mr. Guiboche: Will this information—will you obtain this information for us and for the people that made the presentations?

The Chairman: What information?

Mr. Guiboche: What people achieve or what kind of a report you intend to submit.

The Chairman: Our investigations of poverty have just commenced. We have had a dozen or fifteen meetings and we will probably be meeting throughout the balance of the year and in 1970. We have to hear sixty or seventy large international groups and we have to hear from provincial governments and from municipal governments and we have to hear from all these people before we come to any conclusions or make any recommendations, so if you are looking for any immediate solution, it is not available to us. We will make a report and recommendations to the Government and the Government then deals with it.

Mr. Guiboche: Well, what I am getting at is after this report is finalized would some sort of committee or whatever it may be that would be dealing with these facts or information for the various groups or that the various groups have made in their representations—would you be able to let our association know how many of the points that we have mentioned or suggested are being put into effect?

The Chairman: All we can do is give you a copy of the report and you will see what was recognized and what was not. The points you make are being made in many parts of Canada, the same as your points are and they may think it's theirs that are being recognized and you may think that you are being recognized, but we will just have to deal with it on a total basis. You will have to read the report and we will be glad to send you a copy of it. We are certainly taking cognizance of what you are presenting to us and we agree with you that it is an important problem and we can assure you that we have heard parts of this before in many parts of Canada. We will also hear part of it in the next couple of days in Vancouver. We will hear the very same things you are telling us, so you will just have to wait. You not only have this type of problem in Winnipeg, it is in other parts of the country, as well, although it might be more acute in Winnipeg.

Mr. Guiboche: I would like to bring out another point. I see the Committee hasn't or couldn't get around to asking us about this problem which we feel is a major problem towards the tenants here in the city. This has to do with the Landlord and Tenants Act and we presented the Committee with copies of the Landlord and Tenants Act and nobody seems to be interested to have our points of view regarding the Landlord and Tenants Act.

The Chairman: Well, you heard evidence that there isn't a great deal that we can do. The Landlord and Tenants Act as an Act is a provincial Act. It is not a Federal Act. We can deal in housing and we can deal more generally with anything that has or is of a specific nature, but the Landlord and Tenants Act is purely within the realm of the Provinces.

Mr. Guiboche: We are stating in our brief that there should be one Federal Landlord and Tenants Act.

The Chairman: Well, I will tell you right now that you have a full-time job on your hands to sell that to the ten provinces.

Mr. Guiboche: Well, if they get the same reaction or protection from our present Act as we have, I don't think we will have no problems at all. I think they will be glad to accept our proposal.

The Chairman: Well, are you saying that you have a good Act or a bad Act?

Mr. Guiboche: Let me give you an example. On page 1050 of the Act where it states "exemptions". This is the only protection a tenant has and this is only when a bailiff has taken all of your goods as we have mentioned in our brief. This is what we are entitled to.

The Chairman: I think you will find that that section is similar to the sections in every Landlord and Tenants Act in Canada, if I recall it correctly. I haven't gone through all of the details and I can't remember each item, but I remember the Act very well and I am a lawyer and I practise it sometimes and I can tell you that the Act is essentially the same as it is in other provinces.

Mr. Guiboche: Yes, but this is about the only place where this Act refers to the people. We don't understand this Act the way that it's written and the language that it's written in and we are not lawyers, but we have asked lawyers to translate the Act for us in language we could understand. This has been done and nowhere in the act does it say "tenant", and it seems to me the way we understood it, I mean the present Act, it talks about livestock, it talks about grain and in this Act—this Act must have been enacted as one person put it to us, in the days of Henry the Eighth. We can see that very clearly with regard to the very minor changes that have been made. The minor changes were made in 1960 and 1962 and 1958. Now, you can see by even the colour of these pages and the colour of this that this is very aged and probably when Winnipeg was incorporated in 1873 possibly this was when the Act was enacted. Possibly this was done when there were a lot of farmers around. Today, we have tenants and this is what we formed our Association for, to aid these people and to aid ourselves and since we are not getting these laws enforced such as the Public Health Act, the by-laws, the eating by-laws, that we found that the only solution possibly for this was to revise—get the Landlord and Tenants Act revised. If not revised, then make a separate Act for the tenants of this day and age.

Senator Hastings: In other words, you say the Act was written for the benefit of the landlords and not the tenants?

Mr. Guiboche: Right.

Senator Hastings: Yes, I would agree with you.

Mrs. McInnes: I was going to say that I think due to the fact that so many people are leaving the country and moving into the city, many of these people are possibly not very well educated and they just don't know their rights as far as being tenants. This, to me, is a major problem and it is a problem of educating people to what their rights are and what they can expect from their landlords. Anyone who has a copy of the Landlord and Tenants Act—very few people can understand it. I think that this is one major difficulty today.

Senator Everett: You stated earlier that you intended tomorrow to deal with the question of legal services in Manitoba on the brief that is to be given tomorrow morning. I hope you do deal with that because we would like to have the facts on the legal services and also the facts on how an individual can get the information.

The Chairman: This will be another committee that will be here tomorrow, but certainly we will tell them of your request.

Mrs. McInnes: On behalf of our group I would like to thank you very much for letting us appear before the Senate Committee and we hope it's of some use to you and in the future perhaps that you can help us.

The Chairman: Thank you very much. On behalf of the Committee, we are appreciative of the difficulties under which you work. The poor people—this is a sacrifice for you trying to organize other people who need help more than you do and this is a great mark of citizenship and a mark of decent people and it's one way we can learn of your ideas here and I am quite proud of the fact that witnesses come here for us and are able to talk in such knowledgeable terms, technical terms and very difficult problems, and it should be a great comfort to your people and to your organization.

I must say this to you. I think you understand what's in these various Acts and you bring it pretty close to home where a loud shout can be heard in the parliament buildings. That is the place to start your movement and continue it. We will pay attention, you can rest assured, because we have a very large problem before us and this is one segment, as important as it is, and so on behalf of the Committee I thank you and I thank the rest of you for coming along.

Tomorrow morning, we have a brief from Mother's Allowance. I would like to ask Senator Inman, a former member of the Board, and was for many years, and Senator McGrand to sit on that committee tomorrow morning.

From the Floor: Mr. Chairman, this lady has a question and so have I. First of all, you said about the report. Now, I am not associated with the Winnipeg Tenants Association, but I am quite interested to find out how long it will take the Senate Committee to prepare this report?

The Chairman: We don't expect to have it ready until the end of 1970. We have to see and hear other parts of the country as well.

From the Floor: The other part of the question is this. If there is immediate recommendations, are you going to wait until the end of 1970 or are you going to take action as they come up?

The Chairman: Well, we really have to deal with the total question of poverty. It will be the end of 1970 before we can look at the whole problem.

From the Floor: Is there a way the people in Winnipeg can communicate these immediate questions, suggestions and ideas to someone who will get it done before the end of '70?

The Chairman: For immediate attention you will have to communicate to your member of parliament, with your own provincial member of parliament and your own civic officials.

From the Floor: This is the question I had before and it's sort of a suggestion and sort of a question. It was mentioned in the brief that if the rest is raised—the landlord will raise the rent because he knows the Welfare Department will pay it or some landlord will rent only to welfare recipients because they know the welfare will pay. Has anybody ever approached the Welfare Department, and as I understand it they are financed by public funds, to withhold rent moneys that will be paid to make inadequate standard housing?

The Chairman: I can't tell you. We will probably hear something about that tomorrow morning.

From the Floor: Miss Valerie Bingeman of the North Winnipeg Office of the Manitoba Health and Social Service Department. I would like to make a small criticism and protest to this Committee. I object, generally speaking, to the format of this hearing. I feel that I really question whether you're here to hear these people. When you make statements and say things such as "I don't feel we are prepared to discuss the Act because this is a provincial act." You have no right to come here and tell the people what they are going to say. Your role is to sit and listen and to encourage them to see and I am not sure whether you realize the kind of intimidation that you are projecting—and particularly you, Senator Croll. I know for a fact, from talking to other people, that they are non too eager to appear before you. I would suggest that you make the environment a little bit more encouraging and generally accepting, rather than your very critical—and I don't feel very facilitating, and going to see these people and having any kind of rapport with them. I feel you are a little insincere.

The Chairman: Well, young lady, you have said what you had to say. I thought we had listened very attentively to everything that was said. I think the young lady here appreciated the fact that we had listened to them. It may not be your view, but they are here and they both spoke their minds and we listened to them and after all, there is no use kidding them if they are off on the wrong track, they might as well know now some things that we can do and some things we cannot do. We are not here to fool anybody or be insincere with anybody and so we lay the cards on the table as we go along without trying to build up something in their own minds and their own hearts to feel that we are going to do things that we are unable to do. This is the place to say it rather than to disappoint them at a later stage.

Miss Valerie Bingeman: Yes, but I don't really feel in some cases that you are really prepared to listen to what they want to talk about.

The Chairman: You may not feel that way and of course that's quite your view, but we are here for that purpose and if you have no confidence in us, well, that is our fault—not yours.

Mr. Joe Beaver, Manitoba Metis Reservation: There have been two questions asked here regarding the operations of the present Senate Committee on Poverty. One was Mr. Tom Eagle who asked when the Senate Report would be complete and you said by the end of 1970. The young lady asked about what other means that might be available to people and I think you, Senator Croll, answered by saying that they should appeal to their members of parliament for some parallel action. Now, what I am wondering about and this is a very honest wonder on my part—I am not tending to be necessarily critical, but what exactly is the channel of legislation of a senate report on poverty? I recall that from 1957 to 1960 there was a joint Senate of the House and joint committee of the Senate of the House of Commons on Indian Affairs which sat from 1957 to 1960 and I am not aware up to this date whether any of the recommendations that were passed at that time have been implemented. They may have been. What will happen to this report after it is completed at the end of 1970? I am certain that all of the people who are giving briefs have come here with certain hopes in their heart that something will happen and I am just wondering what will happen?

The Chairman: The normal thing that happens is that the report is submitted to the Government and the Government then acts on the report in its wisdom and we hope, of course, we will be able to influence them that they ought to act on the report and that is all I can tell you. That is the usual normal channel and that is why we were appointed to make the investigation and recommendations and that is the way it's done.

Mr. Beaver: Well, sir, you make certain recommendations and that is all the power that you have?

The Chairman: That is all the power that any committee has whether it's a Royal Commission, whether it's a Committee of the Senate or any other group. That is the normal practice.

Senator Everett: May I add, Mr. Chairman, that many of the Senate Committee's recommendations have resulted in legislation and very promptly.

The Chairman: Well, my colleague's report indicates to me that I should call to your attention the fact that in the last five or six years any of the Senate Committees' investigations have brought about some fruitful results.

We investigated first the matter of Manpower and from that came forth the Department of Manpower. We investigated—we had a committee deal with land use and ARDA(?) was the product of that. We had a committee deal with the truth in lending that became the law of the land—which all the finance companies now tell you they invented. We dealt with the question of the aging and investigation took us three years to do and from that came the guaranteed income for the Old Age Security people. We started the investigation on the cost of food and from that came the Department of Consumer Affairs which is doing its job now.

Senator Hastings: And there is a Committee on Divorce.

The Chairman: Oh yes. We are all members of the Committee that brought in the recommendations of divorce and that changed the law after 100 years, so our record isn't a bad one.

Mr. Tom Beaver: Sir, I would suggest that part of your effectiveness also runs parallel to the strength of the people and the people who are in the organizations such as these poor people and these people would like action on the other recommendations. It is quite possible that many of the recommendations that go to the House of Commons will become the law of the land.

The Chairman: Well, the reason for us going about the country which we are doing at the present time, is first to hear what people have to say and second to work up a public opinion in favour of it so pressure is brought to bear. As a matter of fact, most of the matters that I mentioned came as a result of pressures from the communities and from their citizens and from members of parliament and from the Senate. Particularly, that goes back to truth in lending and particularly with respect of food costs and that is the way this will work. This will work in the very same way.

From The Floor: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask if this committee here will be going into the rural areas?

The Chairman: Yes, we plan to go into some rural areas.

From the Floor: How soon?

The Chairman: I can't tell you how soon. We have quite a timetable and we have a great deal of work ahead of us. I can't tell you at this time. Thank you very much.

The committee adjourned.

APPENDIX "A"

BRIEF PRESENTED TO SENATE ON POVERTY
By
MOUNT CARMEL CLINIC
On
NOVEMBER 18th, 1969

INTRODUCTION

1. Poverty is pervasive and all encompassing. It debilitates human dignity. It can destroy an individual's will to live as a human being.

No group suffers more than the poor. Medical authorities state that the poor have more heart disease, more rheumatoid arthritis, more unrehabilitated injury, more mental illness, more tuberculosis, more illness whether chronic or acute and higher death rates in all ages than do Canadians at large. Yet the more that is known about the treatment of any disorder, the greater the likelihood that this knowledge is not benefiting the poor.

Poor people are finding it increasingly difficult to provide essentials for themselves and their inevitably growing (often unwanted) families. Faced with problems of poor housing, inadequate clothing and empty refrigerators, this group is naturally susceptible to insurmountable problems that inevitably affect their health. Victims of their environment, these people must be helped both physically and socially—i.e. the whole family should be treated in the context of its environment. It is precisely this function that the Mount Carmel Clinic is performing in the community. With an integrated approach to the physical, emotional and social needs of these people, this Clinic offers a comprehensive total care family service. The Mount Carmel Clinic was founded in 1926.

Working in a unique team approach, doctors and nurses function together to provide this comprehensive care service. Once seen by the doctor, the patient's care is followed up by the nurse, who sooner or later becomes a confidante of the patient—a person who has the time to listen to their problems, be they financial or marital, etc.—a person who can represent them or refer them to the available agencies. Hence, an intimate atmosphere is prevalent in the Clinic which is fostered by his personalized and individualized attention. We see that in addition to immediate physical needs, the patient is cared for emotionally and socially.

As the Clinic exists today, it offers a wide scope of services. These include:

- (1) Medical Services (examinations, treatments, surgery)
- (2) Dental Services
- (3) X-Ray Services
- (4) Laboratory Services
- (5) Family Planning Clinic
- (6) Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat Clinics
- (7) Immunization Clinics
- (8) Acne Clinics
- (9) Pharmacy
- (10) Group Counselling Services
- (11) A Day Hospital for medically neglected children

We feel that to function as a more effective and comprehensive Clinic and to serve the total family needs in the context of its environment, we propose the following:

- A. That an "adequate housing" service be instituted
- B. That an "emergency welfare fund" be made available
- C. That a legal department be established to advise those requiring its services
- D. That there be the utilization and training indigenous workers as health advocates
- E. That a day care facility be instituted
- F. That a domestic Police force be established to assist the abused wife and/or children
- G. That a corporate babysitting and homemaker service be made available to those requiring it.

2. STATEMENT OF POLICY OF MOUNT CARMEL CLINIC

2.1 The Clinic's avowed policy, being a family-oriented medical centre, is to provide total care to families.

What, in essence, is meant by that statement? Simply this—the Clinic seeks to serve the whole family, medically and emotionally, and promote better living conditions as a prerequisite for good health. We consider both as being inextricably connected with each other.

People who come to Mount Carmel Clinic find the struggle to survive too much and simply give up and drift aimlessly, indifferently and with a deep sense of failure and worthlessness.

The wife, often burdened by unwanted pregnancies and ultimately by numerous children, and having no support from the husband, sinks into stuperous indifference or ends up in a psychiatric ward. Such people require special treatment.

We have developed a doctor-nurse partnership which is indigenous to Mount Carmel Clinic and, to our knowledge, does not exist elsewhere. In this partnership, the nurse complements the role of the doctor. Patients who initially are seen by a doctor, examined, etc., have a need to communicate further and verbalize their many symptoms, often apparently totally unrelated.

A highly trained nurse is a continuous link between doctor, patient and the many agencies. After the patient's confidence is gained, the patient is able to unburden himself. The nurse, through her frequent and more intimate contact with the children and the parents on an on-going basis learns, directly or indirectly, a great deal more about the family than the doctor is able to during the rather formal visit. Often, the patient feels constrained to talk to the doctor, or is too embarrassed, or does not wish to impose, or is afraid of rebuffs. Admittedly, this requires a highly trained perceptive nurse who can establish empathy with the patient effortlessly.

Can this be achieved in a small clinic such as ours? Only in a small, intimate, clinic, where the general practitioner or internist plus a pediatrician are the pivots, consultants are used judiciously and dynamic use is made of highly trained registered nurses, can this be partially achieved. However, to truly serve the family as outlined above, a psychiatrist and a medical social worker plus other ancillary staff must be an integral part of such service.

2.2. Staff Programme in General

As stated elsewhere, our avowed policy is to give comprehensive care to the whole family on a personalized basis. Now Medicare makes it possible for the doctors to obtain part of the money paid for the patient's care, the judicious use of professional staff, such as registered nurses, is of the utmost importance. This cannot be stressed too strongly. It is their role, not only as the ones to carry out treatment prescribed by the doctor, but as the link on a continuous basis between the doctor and the families served. They are involved in teaching, counselling, reassuring the anxious, allaying the fears of the apprehensive and generally assisting the patient to regain both mental and physical well being.

Group therapy for teenagers is a must, as we are increasingly confronted with disturbed, disillusioned, confused youngsters, whose achievement at school is a prelude to their role as a failure in adult life. Dropping out is inevitable. We must face the fact that families disintegrate, and more so in a situation where parents are beset by many problems. The most pressing is their inability to provide adequately for their growing children. These feel keenly their deprivations on all levels: economic, emotional (mostly lack of love) and an inability to find their niche in a socially acceptable way. This, of course, leads to deviant behaviour ending up in delinquency.

Prevention must be the keynote. Both medically and dentally and, in time, promotion of good mental health. If we can, in a small measure, bring serenity, understanding and a desire for self-help, we will have achieved a great triumph in preparing the not so "successful" individual and family in coping with this ever-increasing, demanding and confusing world of ours.

To do so, proper staff and, more important, an enlightened public opinion which can help finance such projects, is crucial in successful operation and achievement of the goals outlined.

The need for ancillary staff (social workers, family health workers, etc.) is more urgent than ever. More and more, we see families with multi-faceted problems. Alcoholism, desertion and delinquency have become common problems among our patients. They come with medical complaints, but are also burdened with numerous, almost unsolvable emotional and related problems, which poverty and deprivation produce.

The need for such staff is critical, if we are to carry out our program of giving total care to the entire family. A social worker, as part of the medical team, is of utmost importance and invaluable in assisting in the rehabilitation process of the total person.

2.3. Programme Information

The purpose of the Clinic is to provide people who are on low income and public welfare with a medical and dental facility where they can be treated with concern, consideration, dignity, and above all genuine warmth and understanding. At the Clinic an individual or a family can have his own doctor whom he is free to consult. If surgery or an expert opinion is required, the patient is referred to one of the Clinic specialists who either performs surgery or consults with medical specialists of every kind. After treatment by a specialist, the patient returns to the Clinic for follow-up care by a general practitioner, internist or pediatrician. Thus continuity is maintained.

The care is provided on a personalised basis, with one doctor attending the patient consistently. Often the entire family is cared for by the same doctor. The Clinic also provides a follow-up service, contacting patients who are remiss in returning for tests and treatment. Because the Clinic emphasizes preventive care, patients are encouraged to seek medical attention in the early stages of a disease.

The methods of examination and diagnosis are similar to any small clinic. Facilities are available for X-rays, laboratory tests, etc. They were provided up until April, 1969, with no cost to the patient. Drugs and other treatments are still free.

3. MAJOR SERVICES AND ACTIVITIES

3.1. Technical

A) Dental

The dental services have been extended to include restorative dental care. The Clinic had long been giving a partial service to people who required dental care (extractions only), but with the acquisition of dental equipment, thanks to the generosity of the Winnipeg Kiwanis Club, a comprehensive dental clinic was opened in 1965.

Our particular area of concern is families in low income groups, who are struggling to maintain a measure of independence and dignity, but are not able to pay their dental bills. The neglect of teeth is most prevalent among such families. Since we opened, many teenagers have required and obtained partial and full dentures, who otherwise would just let their teeth rot in their mouths.

About twenty dentists were prepared to come once every six weeks. However, as they got busier, they were able to donate time very two or three months only. Some have stopped coming altogether.

During this critical period, much energy was directed towards recruiting new dentists. We met with some success, but the dilemma has grown with the enormous increase in demand for dental services. We now have a patient waiting list in excess of one thousand, six hundred persons.

It is an unhappy situation to be compelled to advise these people that the Clinic is unable to offer any help.

Some weeks the Clinic has the services of dentists for three one-half days, which we greatly appreciate, other weeks none at all. At a recent meeting with officers of the Dental Association, they proposed informally that the Clinic would be able to obtain dentists if we could cover the cost of "out of office" expense.

Dr. Bernstein, who has been on our advisory staff as an orthodontist since the dental clinic's inception, is now directing our Orthodontic Clinic. He had assured our Dental Committee it would not be costly to the Clinic. The Kiwanis Club of Winnipeg have underwritten any expenses incurred for the children treated. Also many instruments were donated. It appears that the costly part of orthodontistry is the doctor's time which, of course, Dr. Bernstein is donating.

B) X-Ray

All X-rays required by the doctors, except barium work, are taken at the Clinic. Films are interpreted by doctors. Colon and gastric X-rays are done at Drs. Kiernan, Elliott, Boulton and Associates, since this type of examination requires the presence of a radiologist and special additional equipment. Hence, patients are sent to the radiologists' office for that purpose.

C) Laboratory

All tests which assist the doctor in arriving at proper diagnosis are done at the Clinic, all under the watchful eyes of a Haematologist.

Electrocardiograms are taken, when requested, by attending doctors. The tracings are interpreted by cardiologists who are on staff at the Clinic.

3.2. Doctor Assistance and Follow-Up

a) Physical examination by qualified doctors—a daily activity. Minor accidents are treated by the attending physician, or when he is unavailable, by the doctor "on call". Service in this category includes the treatment of burns, cuts requiring suturing and the application of casts.

b) Treatments include any and all services rendered to the patient after a diagnosis has been made, such as infra-red, ultraviolet-rays, dressings, fomentations, baths, shampoos (hair with lice and nits), scabbiol treatments, burns, application of casts, etc. Injections for anaemia and upper respiratory or viral infections and local ulcer treatments to adults are also given. (Venereal disease).

c) Major Surgery and Hospital Care

When a patient requires major surgery after diagnostic tests have been made, our surgeons perform these in a hospital. Often both surgeon and referring doctor visit the patient in the hospital.

After discharge, the patient is advised to return to the Clinic for further care. Continuity is thus established between patient and doctors; the patient truly feels that he or she has his or her own doctor. This is most important to all of us, but particularly to those in low incomes.

Similar practice is followed when a patient has to be admitted to a hospital for medical reasons, often both Internist and the Clinic doctor care for the patient jointly. The following specialists are involved:—

Internists, Surgeons, Gynecologists, Obstetricians, Ophthalmologists, Orthopedists, Ear, Nose & Throat Specialists, Dermatologists, Cardiologists, Pediatricians, Urologists, etc., etc.

d) Pre-Natal and Post-Natal Care

Patients receive pre-natal care at the Clinic and their babies are delivered in a hospital by the doctors who look after them during pregnancy. Special consideration is given to unmarried mothers.

Patients are encouraged to return for post-natal care and to bring their babies for frequent examination.

e) Eye Clinic

Once every two or three weeks. Attended by an ophthalmologist who examined eyes, does refraction and surgery when required.

f) Ear, Nose and Throat Clinic

Attended by a specialist once every two or three weeks. He examines and treats patients who have special problems with ear, nose and throat. Many such patients require surgical procedures, e.g. tonsillectomies, nasal operations, etc.

g) Immunization

Immunization is available daily to mothers who bring their children for that purpose.

h) Camp Examinations

Indigent children who require a medical certificate prior to going to summer camp can obtain medical examinations and certificates at the Clinic. Many organizations which run summer camps have utilized this service.

i) Pre-Marital Blood Tests

Young people requiring blood tests for marriage purposes can receive this service free of charge. Information regarding birth control is given on request.

j) Acne Clinic

Many youngsters, especially in the four schools surrounding the Clinic, have severe skin conditions on their faces known as acne. We have made a special effort to treat this, with singular success. Such children suffer miserably and are unable to cope when their faces suddenly become covered with pimples.

k) Interviews with Patients

As mentioned elsewhere, the type of patient who comes to the Clinic is not only seeking medical or dental aid, but is often beset by many problems, notably economic and emotional. These problems are often so acute that they bedevil the issue and make it difficult for the doctor to make a valid diagnosis. Many require psychiatric treatment.

However, others simply seek to unburden themselves and have habitually sought the attention of the Executive Director.

Wherever possible, contact is made with other agencies, such as the Children's Aid Society, the City Welfare Department, the Family Bureau, etc., if the patient is already involved with these agencies. In this regard the Clinic staff works co-operatively with these agencies to benefit the patient.

3.3. Family Planning and Pharmacy

a) Family Planning Clinic

Birth control advice and aids are given to women with whom we are in frequent contact to make sure that they are following instructions properly and a detailed record is kept of each woman's reactions to the "pill".

We are continuing to be involved in Research Project to ascertain what, if any side effects are to be found from different birth control pills.

Five gynecologists, as well as general practitioners, participate in this programme and attend the Clinic every Friday, in rotation. Every woman is thoroughly examined before being instructed regarding birth control, and a cancer smear is taken. As a result of such examinations, some women have been found to have cancer of the cervix. Surgery was performed and all are doing well. This Family Planning programme is a growing, dynamic, part of the Clinic work and promises to be of great service to people who need it most.

b) Consultation re Birth control

This is a distinct service which has arisen as a result of our Family Planning Clinic. Endless hours are spent by the nurse in charge, or the Executive Director, in explaining and re-explaining methods of birth control. This is to allay fears, encourage the timid and convince husbands to allow their wives to rest from burdensome pregnancies. In this area, a well-trained medical social worker could play a vital role as part of the medical team, or perhaps a special registered nurse with social work experience, or one with a Public Health Certificate would be useful.

c) Pharmacy

Drugs are provided at no cost, or where feasible, at a nominal fee. This service constitutes one of the most expensive single items.

3.4. General Information (Non-Departmental)

a) Group Counselling

A group, consisting mainly of women was set up two years ago. These patients have marital problems or are deserted wives. This discussion group is guided by a social worker from the School of Social Work of the University of Manitoba, and the Executive Director.

The aim of this group is to make it possible for the participants to face their problems realistically, and eventually to do something about them. It is easier for individual members of the group to carry through decisions, since they feel that the group as a whole is backing them.

This has been, to date, an exciting experiment which bodes well for the future. What has so far transpired that is so exciting is that members of the group not only have forgotten about their own problems in their desire to help each other, but have also become interested in applying for jobs as welfare workers.

The self-help has sometimes consisted of members offering their homes to other members of the group who are in great distress and need temporary sanctuary.

The approach is pragmatic, realistic and the hope is that eventually many of them will act responsibly, not only to help themselves, but others as well.

b) Our Aim

The Clinic is a dynamic, changing health resource. Our aim, among others, is to continue the high standard of service and raise these standards wherever possible within our frame of reference. To do so, we must be flexible to meet the changing needs of society. The changes, in turn, affect the human being who is constantly beset by new pressures, new demands, new anxieties. This is especially trying and sometimes disastrous for the economically and emotionally deprived in our community. Our task, above all else, is to assist in mending their broken health so that they can at least function within the limits of their environment.

4. CONCLUSION

To do the most effective job for a community, a medical clinic such as Mount Carmel should offer not only health care but sociological and economic services. Some of these services may be performed by volunteers, but many require professional and trained personnel.

Using Mount Carmel Clinic as an immediate example, we now provide medical, dental and a limited counselling service including group therapy. In addition to expanding these present services, we feel that the total family needs required by the underprivileged or economically depressed should literally be met under one roof.

We recommend the following services as those essential to a total need community health care clinic:—

RECOMMENDATIONS

1. Full medical care, including specialist services.

2. Drugs and medications available in accordance with the patient's ability to pay.

3. Complete dental care, including restorative work.

4. Ophthalmological services and prescriptions for glasses.

5. Day hospital care for children and adults who require supervision from a medical faculty in the application of medications and other forms of treatment and who are able to return home at night.

6. Family planning services, including examination, prescriptions, advice and counselling.

7. An adequately staffed counselling program for anyone with marital, premarital or other personal problems.

8. Group therapy programs for deserted wives, predelinquent and delinquent youngsters and persons with other problems who can be helped through supervised group interaction and collective support.

9. Emergency financial assistance service until such time as the family is able either to support itself or make other arrangements for support.

10. Legal aid program with legal services available, either on the Clinic's premises or in the lawyers' offices, as required. People living in poverty are constantly at loggerheads with the law. Be it delinquency by the young, alcoholism, or just a deserted wife requiring advice, a legal department should be there ready to assist in that area.

11. Housing registry and assistance in adequate home finding. Many of our patients live in high-priced inferior housing and very often they are forced to vacate and are unable to find new quarters. With our philosophy of health being indivisible, and that sending a family back to their draughty, rat-ridden home is not a good health practice, we submit that the Clinic inevitably has to be concerned with obtaining and assisting people to find decent housing.

12. Clinic trained health advocates who would promote, insure and protect the total health needs of families.

13. Examples of other required services which could be located in central community facilities outside of the Clinic:—

(a) Temporary babysitting service available on short notice when parent must be absent for a short period in an emergency situation.

(b) Homemaker service—to work in conjunction with the Clinic.

(c) Immediate liaison facility with police personnel who are specially trained for domestic situations that require police action. There is no protection for women, especially the poor, who have been brutally beaten and mistreated by their husbands. The police can only admonish, since legally the husband is in his own home. Often the husband, drunk and vicious, continues to pummel the wife after the police leave until tragedy ensues. We suggest that a Domestic Police force, trained in handling such situations, with an enlightened staff educated in psychology, sociology and governed by special laws be instituted to save such women from permanent harm.

14. Supervised Play Area

An area should be put aside for children waiting with their mothers to see the doctor. A similar area should be made available for mothers to leave their children for therapeutic reasons in order to give the mother a day away from her children. This should be in no way considered a day nursery.

In conclusion, the promotion of good health cannot be fully effective without the simultaneous promotion of total welfare requirements. Such services must not be cluttered with red tape and virtual barriers to those who require this help and because of that very need do not know, or care, about all the referrals and various agencies presently involved. This has been effectively illustrated in the recommendations of the Social Audit of Winnipeg which recommends that all such services be coordinated under one roof.

Mount Carmel Clinic, the pioneer of this comprehensive care scheme, is no longer alone in this concept. Within the last four years clinics with similar services and philosophy have been springing up in the United States. Of particular note are the clinics recently established in the Watts area of Los Angeles and the noted Montefiore Clinic in the Bronx, New York. Interest in this total care concept has also been displayed by the School of Medicine, University of Manitoba. Dr. E. G. Brownell, eminent Cardiologist, Professor of Medicine and Director of Ambulatory Care of the University Clinics, stated at a recent lecture:—

“Concepts regarding comprehensive and community health care are at the present time being evolved and defined largely at Neighbourhood Health Centres and we have one of the best Neighbourhood Health Centres on the continent here at the Mount Carmel Clinic”.

To reiterate, our concept of the ideal community service role for Mount Carmel Clinic ic—and similar facilities that may follow—is TOTAL FAMILY SERVICES FOR THE POOR UNDER ONE ROOF.

Respectfully submitted this 18th day of
November, 1969,

Anne G. Ross, R.N., R.T.,
Executive Director of Mount Carmel Clinic.

Bill Trebilcoe,
Broadcaster/Report, Member of Board of Directors, Mount Carmel Clinic.

Renee Israels,
Member of Board of Directors, Mount Carmel Clinic.

MOUNT CARMEL CLINIC
SERVICES RENDERED

	Jan.	Feb.	Mar.	Apr.	May	June	July	Aug.	Sept.	Oct.	Nov.	Dec.
1. MEDICAL AND NURSING CARE
Patient visits.....	1,091	1,078	1,091	112	1,138	1,131	1,174	1,091	1,360	1,323	1,288	1,096
Medical examinations*.....	896	870	837	90	321	832	650	551	485	604	586	599
Interviews with nurses.....	1,112	937	1,230	91	967	1,360	1,471	1,454	1,144	1,842	1,932	1,644
Treatments.....	291	218	960	720	1,640	2,009	2,701	155	437	377	548	300
Hospital admissions and Consultations with specialists....	116	221	196	196	234	189	202	236	138	129	163	78
Confinements, surgical cases,
etc.....	15	25	24	36	26	16	7	4	7	19	16	24
Home visits, nurses and social workers.....	89	82	111	81	42	24	17	19	46	54	30	32
TOTAL.....	2,714	3,615	3,615	3,020	4,047	4,729	5,572	2,959	3,132	3,744	3,967	3,174
2. FAMILY PLANNING AND PHARMACY
Prescriptions.....	1,034	860	1,087	1,237	1,228	1,339	1,013	1,490	980	1,923	1,888	1,903
Interviews re: Birth Control
information and aids.....	1,279	1,444	1,764	1,579	1,994	2,216	2,020	2,134	2,813	2,686	2,727	3,057
TOTAL.....	2,313	2,304	2,851	2,816	3,222	3,555	3,033	3,624	3,793	4,609	4,615	4,960
3. DENTAL
Patient Visits and Examinations	157	170	93	21	90	114	198	132	125	195	142	117
Fillings, Extractions, X-rays,	176	172	132	54	606	853	772	593	672	784	654	649
Orthodontia, etc.....
TOTAL.....	333	342	225	75	696	967	880	725	797	979	796	766
4. DAY HOSPITAL
No. of Patients.....	283	270	210	204	175	182	222	283	302	290	230	228
No. of Treatments.....	2,947	2,779	1,767	2,120	1,508	1,783	2,486	3,152	3,046	3,036	2,657	2,280
Diagnostic Procedures.....	566	457	303	303	290	352	393	552	572	490	406	446
Home Visits.....	30	37	27	12	81	122	112	47	56	91	144	189
TOTAL.....	3,826	3,543	2,307	2,639	2,054	2,439	3,213	4,034	3,976	3,907	3,437	3,143
5. TECHNICAL
A. X-Rays and E.K.G.'s, etc....	145	127	120	95	88	89	62	51	74	114	103	100
B. Laboratory, Blood Chemistry, etc.....	882	976	1,172	986	748	1,449	1,097	973	935	1,071	1,107	1,050
C. Diagnostic Aids.....	2,278	3,197	2,727	2,929	2,110	2,437	2,107	2,328	2,507	2,701	2,634	2,383
TOTAL.....	158	123	109	106	186	194	220	222	247	194	273	233
6. EVENING ACTIVITY
Group Therapy.....
Evening Family Planning.....
TOTAL.....	158	123	109	106	186	194	220	222	247	194	290	258

ANALYSIS OF SERVICES—1968 (Concluded)

	Jan.	Feb.	Mar.	Apr.	May	June	July	Aug.	Sept.	Oct.	Nov.	Dec.
7. GENERAL INFORMATION (NON-DEPARTMENTAL)
Phone Calls re medical problems, etc.....	2,101	1,987	2,695	2,985	3,224	3,960	4,265	4,155	4,105	4,050	3,450	3,750
New Patients.....	140	141	131	131	136	127	122	172	149	165	157	143
Wellfare Patients.....	130	493	492	508	452	273	302	306	214	348	430	502
TOTAL.....	2,101	1,987	2,695	2,985	3,224	3,960	4,365	4,155	4,105	4,050	3,450	3,750
TOTAL SERVICES PER MONTH.....	14,750	15,160	15,821	15,699	16,375	19,819	20,549	19,071	19,566	21,369	20,399	19,584
TOTAL PATIENT VISITS PER MONTH.....	1,812	1,905	1,743	1,687	1,816	1,813	1,882	1,616	2,074	2,141	1,892	1,814

TOTAL SERVICES FOR THE YEAR 218,162.

TOTAL PATIENT VISITS FOR THE YEAR 22,195.

* Included in total elsewhere

 Not included in total (Number 7)

	Jan.	Feb.	Mar.	Apr.	May	June	July	Aug.	Sept.	Oct.	Nov.	Dec.
1. MEDICAL AND NURSING CARE
Patient visits.....	1,350	1,292	1,431	1,318	1,436	1,151	1,305	1,296	1,338
Medical examinations*.....	710	797	840	729	694	618	725	653	782
Interviews with nurses.....	2,025	1,938	2,146	2,057	1,961	1,726	1,957	1,944	2,007
Treatments.....	296	300	304	270	248	207	153	327	200
Hospital admissions and consultations with specialists....	119	136	130	12	7	15	33	14	12
Confinements, surgical cases, etc.	22	20	6	38	37	28	31	25	26
Home visits—nurses and social workers.....	18	18	18	10	8	4	2	1	2
TOTAL.....	3,830	3,704	4,035	3,705	3,697	31,31	3,481	3,607	4,367
2. FAMILY PLANNING AND PHARMACY
Prescriptions.....	1,611	1,479	1,608	1,489	1,464	1,207	1,233	1,169	1,278
Interviews re: birth control information and aids.....	2,862	2,954	2,702	2,019	2,042	2,011	1,992	2,042	1,945
TOTAL.....	4,473	4,433	4,310	3,508	3,506	3,218	3,225	3,211	3,223
3. DENTAL
Patient visits and examinations	136	94	160	161	400	100	487	455	253
Fillings, extractions, x-rays, orthodontia, etc.....	661	485	746	525	450	703	161	166	708
TOTAL.....	797	579	906	686	850	803	648	621	961
4. DAY HOSPITAL
No. of patients.....	222	195	205	226	236	448	272	253	264
No. of treatments.....	2,289	1,996	2,449	2,229	2,185	2,671	2,830	2,086	2,890
Diagnostic procedures.....	432	366	402	397	414	576	531	401	494
Home visits.....	130	119	150	111	89	129	184	129	126
TOTAL.....	3,073	2,676	3,206	2,963	2,924	3,824	3,817	3,269	3,774
5. TECHNICAL
A. X-rays, and E.K.G.'s, etc...	24	144	177	157	132	78	93	89	49
B. Laboratory, blood chemistry, etc.....	987	1,054	1,215	824	820	622	889	811	1,075
C. Diagnostic aids.....	2,898	2,903	3,123	2,953	3,168	2,644	2,919	2,987	3,182
TOTAL.....	3,909	4,101	4,515	3,939	4,120	3,344	3,901	3,878	4,306

ANALYSIS OF SERVICES—1969 (Incomplete) (Concluded)

	Jan.	Feb.	Mar.	Apr.	May	June	July	Aug.	Sept.	Oct.	Nov.	Dec.
6. EVENING ACTIVITY
Group therapy.....	214	262	270	270	250	150	130	292	315
Evening family planning Clinic.	40	37	60	53	43	38	50	48	54
TOTAL.....	254	299	330	323	293	188	180	320	369
7. GENERAL INFORMATION (Non-DEPARTMENTAL)
Phone calls re medical problems, etc.....	3,525	3,575	3,353	2,989	2,550	3,065	3,165	3,240	3,343
New patients.....	169	171	154	128	124	92	148	147	145
Welfare patients.....	515	473	460	404	382	350	404	330	344
TOTAL.....	3,525	3,575	3,353	2,989	2,550	3,065	3,165	3,240	3,832
TOTAL SERVICES PER MONTH.....	19,861	19,367	20,655	18,113	17,940	17,573	18,417	18,146	20,050
TOTAL PATIENT VISITS PER MONTH.....	1,748	1,618	1,856	1,758	2,365	1,887	2,244	2,324	2,262

TOTAL SERVICES FOR THE YEAR

TOTAL PATIENT VISITS FOR THE YEAR

* Included in total elsewhere

 Not included in total number 7

APPENDIX "B"

To: The Chairman, Senate Committee on Poverty

From: The Stony Mountain Native Brotherhood, Manitoba Penitentiary November 10, 1969

Sirs:

In this brief we:

1. clarify the meaning of "poverty" as we define it,
2. review some of the manifestations of poverty in terms of the above definition,
3. reiterate some of the effects and consequences of poverty upon the lives of people living in such circumstances,
4. attempt to determine to our satisfaction "the reasons why" poverty is perpetuated, and
5. tender suggestions to be considered by the Senate Committee on Poverty, which suggestions may be incorporated into any reports and/or future government policy statements.

This brief was prepared in consultation with those members of the Stony Mountain Native Brotherhood who wished to contribute their ideas. The purpose of the brief was outlined, and a group discussion centering upon poverty was held at a general meeting (October 29, 1969) of the Native Brotherhood. The comments of the participants were tape-recorded and these were edited the following day. In addition, each participant was asked to write a reply to a brief questionnaire. Ideas from both sources have been incorporated into the present brief.

Consideration of the question of poverty entailed the use of the following broad areas of living as guidelines:

- Economics
- Education
- Social and Recreational Facilities
- Health and Dental Care
- Religion
- Politics

These guidelines were used in both the group discussion and the questionnaire, and were considered further under subheadings as shown in Appendix I.

We wish to remind the honorable committee that we have prepared this brief by approaching the question from the "Indian"

(and Metis) point of view; nevertheless, we are aware that poverty recognizes no cultural, ethnical, nor racial barriers, and that the native people have no monopoly on indigence.

We submit this brief with the realization too that other groups and individuals may be making similar observations and recommendations. However, we feel that repetition in this instance is not redundant, since such similarity may assist the Committee in identifying problems that are common to people living in poverty, regardless of their geographical location.

1. Definition of Poverty:

In addition to the dictionary definition of poverty, distinction is made between being poor and living in poverty. Within our frame of reference, both terms are defined as they pertain to the financial standing of the individual or family. Being poor denotes that the person(s) in question has or earns just enough money to provide him and his dependents with the necessities of life. A poor person can afford few if any luxuries.

Poverty on the other hand, denotes life at a level where the person(s) cannot afford even the bare necessities of life, and where he cannot subsist without financial or material aid from other individuals, groups, or organizations. Within our terms of reference, we conceive of poverty at all its various stages which include want, destitution, indigence, and penury.

Such definitions are made as they pertain to contemporary life: we do not deal with poverty as it existed during, for example, the Great Depression when the majority of people were poor, with a great many living in poverty. We deal with the topic as it exists today, where the majority of the population has adequate income, but where there is a minority of people living in a state of poverty.

2. Manifestation of Poverty:

Manifestations of poverty were recounted by the respondents as they have witnessed or experienced poverty. These were dealt with under the headings and subheadings as shown above.

ECONOMICS:

"Economics", in reference to financial status, occupies this first position and is dealt with at length because we feel it is an accepted fact of modern life that all other areas of living are affected, and more or less regulated by a person's financial standing.

Housing:

The homes of the poverty-stricken are usually found to be in a dilapidated condition, with broken windows, leaky roofs, unpainted interiors and exteriors, uncovered flooring, and so on. In rural areas in particular, such homes are usually draughty and difficult to heat in winter.

The heating systems, especially in rural areas, are obsolete and usually inadequate. Wood is burned in space heaters or outdated kitchen ranges.

Again in rural areas especially, there is a lack of modern sanitary facilities: no indoor toilet and bath, no modern laundry facilities. The problem is compounded by the lack of a safe, sanitary water supply. Water has to be hauled from a distance, or be obtained from nearby open bodies of water.

Generally there is no modern house-cleaning equipment, and no suitable modern food-storage equipment.

Homes of the poor are usually overcrowded. There is rarely a division of living, dining, and sleeping quarters, especially in rural areas. There is an utter lack of privacy, and no room for a school pupil or student to study properly.

In rural areas, many of the homes are not supplied with electricity.

Food:

Usually there is an insufficient amount of food to eat. The poverty-stricken subsist on a very imbalanced diet. There is a disproportionate amount of starchy foods in relation to protein and vitamin foods such as vegetables and fruit.

The lack of food often entails the substitution of one food for another; eg: the use of lard instead of butter or margarine.

A paradox exists too in that the cost of living is increased for the poverty-stricken in relation to the middle class because the very poor are unable to save money by buying food in large lots. Lack of suitable storage facilities prevents lot-purchases also. Lack of money on hand does not permit the poor to take advantage of any sales or specially-reduced prices as often as those who are better off. Moreover, even when money is available, the actual buying of food includes many ill-chosen purchases.

Clothing:

Usually there is a lack of suitable clothing; often the dress is unseasonable. Clothing is often patched or torn. There is a lack of modern equipment for repairs to clothing, or for dress-making. There is a similar lack of modern laundry facilities.

Handling of Money:

Poverty-stricken people of course rarely have a savings or other bank account. Investment, and the purchase of stocks and bonds is nil.

Household budgeting or planned spending is rare; most money that comes into the hands of the very poor is spent quickly, in order to satisfy the immediate goals of staying alive.

Employment or Work Situation:

Limitations on types of work a person is involved with and the lack of job opportunities generally, exist because of inadequate training or skill. The impoverished are usually limited to types of jobs that are considered to be inferior: laboring, farmwork, garbage-collecting, etc. Much of the work is seasonable.

Mechanization is diminishing the number of jobs available for unskilled and semi-skilled workers, and those who are displaced find that their skills are no longer in demand.

Much of the work mentioned above provides insufficient wages when considered in relation to the rising cost of living.

Very poor people are not so likely, on the average, to "stick to their jobs".

EDUCATION:

Many of the people living in poverty are poorly educated; few of them have succeeded in completing high-school; few have any technical training.

The lack of academic and technical training prevents a worker from finding another job if he is "replaced by a machine", or if his present skill is no longer required.

It is felt that young people who come from poverty-stricken families form a disproportionate number of school "dropouts", in comparison to other segments of the population especially in the lower grades. (This is born out in John Porter's Vertical Mosaic, Table XIX to XXII incl., pp. 180, 181, and 184) Rela tively few succeed in completing high school, and very few attain education at the university level.

SOCIAL and RECREATIONAL ACTIVITIES:

Family social and recreational activities are rare. There is little participation in individual or organized sports. There is a lack of suitable equipment for sports activities—especially for children. Attendance at social functions such as dances, or picnics, or even going to the movies, especially as a family group, is very irregular.

The very poor rarely if ever attend any shows, displays, exhibits, or exhibitions, which are considered "cultured", such as live stage shows, ballet, opera, and so on. Involvement with any of the creative arts, except for guitar and fiddle playing of music with a plaintive note, is practically nil. There is little or no participation in service groups or clubs.

"Cultural" or educational books are rarely read. Slick and pulp magazines and pocket books of inferior quality, format, and content forms the main body of reading material for the very poor. Newspapers are not generally subscribed to, but are bought on an irregular basis.

Drinking of alcoholic beverages is the main form of entertainment or social activity.

HEALTH and DENTAL CARE:

Due to imbalanced diet, irregular sleeping habits, and lack of sanitation, the younger people—infants and children—are susceptible to a variety of illnesses and diseases. The infant mortality rate among the uneducated poverty-stricken is greater than that among the other segments of the population. Medical attention is not sought so readily, and is not so accessible to the poverty-stricken.

With regard to dental care, because of poor personal hygiene, and because of a high percentage of starch and sugar (in the form of candy and other sweets) in the diet, teeth of this group tend to be in very poor condition. Early dental treatment is not generally sought.

The impoverished tend to have large families: there is little information provided with regard to birth-control, and afterward, with child care.

SOME EFFECTS and CONSEQUENCES of POVERTY:

The lack of material objects and sufficient food over long periods of time not only gives rise to physical discomforts but also affects psychological and sociological development. Besides actual hunger and the accompanying undernourishment, malnutrition, and generally poor health and dental problems, all of which may contribute to an untimely death, there are adverse psychological effects which influence the whole life and lifestyle of the individual.

There is often a breakdown of the family because of the undue tensions and unhappiness which results from living in poverty. The father for example may abandon the family out of sheer desperation and frustration. Poverty generates a feeling of inferiority through loss of self-respect and pride; a sense of shame in not having sufficient material things develops, especially in the young people.

These feelings, combined with boredom and aggressiveness unreleased through sports activities or other accepted channels, very often lead to juvenile delinquency and crime, and other socially unacceptable behaviour. Often, the norms and values of the larger segment of society are rejected, along with legally constituted authority, which the impoverished feel is being imposed upon them by people other than their "own kind". Moreover, a deep desire to have the "things other people have" may contribute to a person's entry into crime. This course may be taken because the person may not be aware of alternate ways of obtaining money to purchase these material possessions which other classes have.

Further, those who are not employed may be ignorant of ways to obtain job training. With lack of skill and training, many job opportunities are closed to them. For those who are employed, monotonous, tedious, ill-paying jobs do not inspire them to maintain long-term and steady employment.

The heads of the families living in poverty, as it has been pointed out, do not often have a great degree of education. With this lack of schooling, it is very difficult for the parents to see the value of education for their children. The children are not encouraged to go far in school, and often they quit at an early age in order to work (also at "unskilled" jobs) and contribute financially to the upkeep of their families in an effort to improve their level of living. These drop-outs in turn become part of the uneducated poor; part of the proverbial "vicious circle" from which there seems to be no escape.

Poor or poverty-stricken people have little political power. They feel helpless and frustrated in the face of the "system". They often give up hope of ever changing anything that affects their lives and a lack of unity and a lack of aggressiveness—of a will to "fight for their rights"—is especially obvious in this area.

"WHY" is POVERTY PERPETUATED?

No doubt there are other "causes" for the continuation of poverty than those pointed out in the following pages. There is no one cause that gives rise to such a complicated problem as we are discussing, and each of those outlined below is intertwined with all the others.

The first "cause" for poverty that comes to mind, of course, is the lack of sufficient money for the purchase of the basic necessities of life. The question that follows is: Why can enough money not be obtained over a period of time so that the family, or at least the children can move from this environment into a more affluent one? We feel that the answer to this question lies in the word "environment".

It is a sociologically accepted premise that the child must learn how to function as a person from those around him, through a process known as socialization. Through socialization, the child learns not only how to carry out the physical aspects of dressing, feeding, and otherwise caring for himself, but he learns as well the attitudes of those with whom he is in daily contact, and adopts these attitudes for himself. The primary socializing agent is the family, and it is from the family members, be they natural or foster parents or siblings, that he learns his work habits, how to express himself, how to act in given situations, how to act toward other people, indeed, it is from the family that he learns (adopts) his entire outlook on life.

Now, if the parent sets a poor example with regard to work habits, for instance, it is likely that the child will have similar poor work habits. If he is raised in a dirty, untidy, ill-kept household, he will not likely be inclined to go out of his way to learn how to keep his own things clean and well-cared for. Such examples could be recited at length, but we shall limit our discussion to a few more which bear out our point with regard to socially-unacceptable behaviour. The child learns to mistrust and be suspicious of other people, especially those from other classes. He learns to think of himself as inferior, as unworthy. He learns to display his resentment of others and his anger through physical aggression. And, if it has been the case that his family has subsisted on "welfare" payments, he learns to think that he can get something for nothing.

And if it is true that the poor child learns his attitudes from his family, it is equally true that the child from the "middle class" learns his attitudes in similar fashion. This child learns to shun those who are not so well-off as he; to be contemptuous of the poor; to scorn those who do not work, even if there is a cause for their not working. As these children grow up, the lines of class distinction and discrimination harden.

So it is that even when an impoverished person tries to better his lot, he is not accepted by those from the higher classes. He meets with discrimination in housing and in the field of employment. He meets with a condescending attitude in those who are supposed to be helping him, such as doctors who are working for clinics, secretaries who are working for government agencies, field social workers, and so on. If the poor man does come into some money, by whatever means, and tries to move up to a higher class, it is often the case that he does not know how to behave in the different environment. He experiences a great degree of discomfort in this different social circle, and longs to return to his "own kind".

To return to the question of financial standing, the poverty-stricken person must spend his meagre income to satisfy his immediate needs; he has no money left to start a saving or other bank account; he is not able to invest his "extra money" in stocks or bonds. He has no money to start a business of his own, and because of his background, no one will lend him money for such purpose (or for any other purpose!)

Even the matter of getting a high level of education is affected by both the lack of money and class distinction. (See Porter's Vertical Mosaic) It will be noted that the largest percentage of university students come from those families whose parent is in an occupation with high status and high income. The smallest percentage comes from the low income group. This paradox of the richer obtaining many more benefits than the poor extends into almost all aspects of life.

Also, the lack of money and class distinction prevents the impoverished from joining any of the service or social clubs and organizations to which the rich have access. Even the churches follow lines of class and status in the community.

Such discrimination simply adds to the feeling of inadequacy and frustration which the poverty-stricken already suffer. With the utter feeling of hopelessness, very often the heads of the family turn to the solace of excessive consumption of alcohol, which is, as he sees it, about the only form of recreation and social activity that is left to him. Drinking does serve this purpose of giving the person some measure of social life, and helps him to forget for a little while his status in life. But this only compounds the situation; when he does get a few cents which might possibly be saved for the future, he spends it to satisfy his immediate desires. And if the father and mother display poor drinking habits and poor control over finances, it is likely that the children will do likewise.

Without an adequate and steady income, the impoverished cannot plan for the future nor do much to improve his lot. He cannot for example buy a new house or move to better accommodation. So, because of lack of money, ignorance, class distinction, discrimination and so on, the impoverished family finds it almost impossible to move up to the next social class. But the simple doling out of money will not alleviate poverty in the long run. The dole merely hastens a person's loss of self-respect and adds to his feelings of inferiority.

RECOMMENDATIONS and SUGGESTIONS FOR THE ALLEVIATION OF POVERTY:

As pointed out in the last paragraph with regard to "why" poverty is perpetuated, we stated that simple handouts, or even the splashing around of large sums of money is of no long term advantage. The past record will show that the issuing of direct financial assistance provides a temporary solution only. In order to achieve long term benefits, we suggest the following, in addition and complementary to direct financial aid:

(These suggestions are not laid down in any order of priority, since they are all complementary and intertwined)

1. The Welfare Program (of direct financial aid):

—more trained social workers must be employed so that (a) the individual's case load can be reduced, and (b), so that a more intimate and personal degree of communication can develop between worker and client.

—more consultation with the poverty-stricken must take place. More work must be done at the "grass roots" level, rather than at the managerial level. Rather than the "experts" laying out a plan for social improvement and imposing it upon the "poor", the poor should take an active part in the formulation of such plans.

—more workers from the same social class as those with whom they are working, must become involved in the planning and administration of the welfare program. The people themselves must feel that they are doing the work; that they are doing something constructive to help themselves.

—there should be established guidelines for a "sliding scale" of payments for assistance so those most in need receive the most financial benefits.

—able-bodied men should be required to work for wages, no matter what the job, rather than be given handouts. A medical certificate of incapacity would exempt a person from such work.

—the government should proceed as quickly as possible with legislation to provide a guaranteed annual wage or income.

Any granting of direct welfare assistance should be done in conjunction with a program of education with regard to the handling of finances.

2. EDUCATION:

Education here is not limited merely to formal schooling but must extend into all areas of life: economic, social, political...

—modern school buildings and equipment must be constructed and installed in the poor districts, whether urban or rural, to provide a suitable learning environment and to reduce overcrowding —wages and salaries for teachers should be raised in order to obtain the services of highly qualified and experienced teachers and supervisors

—more well-trained, preferably experienced guidance and vocational counsellors must be employed by schools in "low-class" areas. An important goal of such counsellors would be to act as public relations people to increase the involvement and participation of the parents of children from poverty-stricken homes. The counsellors would establish a personal relationship with the student and the parent, and of course assist the student in choosing and planning an academic, vocational, or technical course, in conjunction with the parents.

—Adult Upgrading courses: these must be prepared specifically for the teaching of and the learning by adults. "Dick and Jane" must not be seen running.

—as a follow-up to or as an off-shoot from the above, a self-help program could be established. Under the guidance of the teacher, those people who have already done a course—for instance, in literacy classes—could teach others who are just starting. These "auxiliary teachers" would be reimbursed.

All of the above requires increased government grants and subsidies.

Instruction with regard to matters pertaining to Home Economics must necessarily be part of any welfare program involving financial or material assistance. Such instruction or training would involve such aspects as:

- Home Making
- Household Budgeting
- Food Purchasing
- Providing Balanced Diets

Impoverished people must be made aware of the services offered, in the field of welfare assistance, medical assistance, and so on, as in housing.

3. INDUSTRY and LABOUR UNIONS:

—both must agree to the expansion of their on-the-job-training programs, and become increasingly involved with any other training or retraining programs

—the impoverished must be given the opportunity to learn new skills and to work, regardless of education and "intelligence quotients". This point may specially emphasized with regard to operations in the north.

—in conjunction with the above, counselors must be hired to work closely with such people until they are "established". (The counselling would extend to areas over and above that which pertains strictly to the job, and would be coordinated with the overall educational programs involving social workers and the "welfare" program.)

—more industry must be established on reserves and in other areas of economic depression. Grants for such purpose should be large enough to ensure success; subsidies should be given if necessary. (Such industry should be owned and operated by the people who will be affected by and directly in-involved with the industry. Government departments or branches of services could be operated by people living in depressed areas. For example, a branch or department such as those involved with the preservation and control of fish and game could be operated, especially in the north, by Indian and Metis people, right from the top administrative position through to the bottom.)

4. HOUSING:

—the program of low-rental housing must be extended. (A move into a "new" house must be accompanied by the above-mentioned homemaking courses to prevent the deterioration of the building and equipment.) There must be FOLLOW-UP.

—the qualifications concerning the minimum and maximum amounts of income which presently serve as guidelines for obtaining low-rental housing should be open for annual review.

Minimum and maximum limitations with regard to annual income in order to secure a loan or a mortgage in order to purchase a home should be removed. If not removed, they should at least be reviewed and changed.

—Grants should be given to those now living in poverty who wish to erect or purchase their own homes.

—Grants or low-interest loans should be given to organizations or service groups who wish to purchase accommodation for rental to members of their group—as in the case of an Indian organization or a "Poor Peoples" group that wants to buy a small apartment block to be rented to and maintained by members of the group or organization.

—Low-interest loans or grants should be readily available for home repairs and renovations.

—Municipal and provincial laws and by-laws concerning proper maintenance of rented buildings and houses, and household equipment by the landlords, should be more strictly enforced

CHURCHES:

The churches must coordinate their activities with those of other service groups and agencies. The church should direct more of its attention to the secular needs of the people it serves. It should strive to eliminate class distinction within its sphere of influence.

UNIVERSITIES:

The centres of higher learning must take a more active part in helping to alleviate poverty.

—they should strive to instill the students they are training for social work with attitudes which make them more accepting of, and thus more accepted by, the impoverished.

—the universities are ideally suited to do research and collect data concerning the poor and impoverished. Such information is necessary to long-range planning by any service group or agency. (The paucity of sufficient information and data was noted by the Social Service Audit, Inc., which recently completed a three-year study of social services and requirements in and around metropolitan Winnipeg.

POLITICS:

Poverty-stricken people should be educated to the basics of politics, and be urged to form groups to gain a measure of power in order to influence their own destiny. Any government projects for the benefit of the impoverished and poor should be undertaken with a genuine concern for helping these people, rather than with the idea of simply appeasing a noisy minority. Spokesmen for the poor should be reimbursed and if necessary, should be given advances to meet their expenses.

NEWS MEDIA:

All media should publicize more the constructive steps that people are taking to help themselves and improve their communities, rather than concentrating on sensational and often adverse stories of poverty.

All should play a greater role in the education and formation of favorable opinions and attitudes of the public toward the poor and poverty-stricken.

HEALTH and DENTAL CARE:

Services should be extended, especially in the north, and should include more home visits and simple education about medical treatment. This latter points also apply with regard to health.

Home visits or group education sessions should be extended to include instruction on modern and reliable methods of birth-control, especially now that the law has been changed in these matters.

Sports and Recreation: This topic might be included here since such activities are tied in directly with health and welfare. Larger grants should be given to community and other centers which are genuinely attempting to set up a constructive program of education and training, and are encouraging participation in organized sports activities. Local people should be in charge of setting up and maintaining such programs, especially on reserves.

TAXE and REBATES ON SAME:

Taxes on income, property, and meagre assets should be forgone in cases of people who are very poor—who do not have an income of $5,000 or more depending upon the number of dependents in the family, and so on.

Recipients of old age assistance should not be required to pay taxes, except perhaps in the rare case where the income exceeds perhaps $10,000.

The level of income which is presently used to define the "poverty line" should be revised upward. This should be done considering the area in which a person lives. For example, the cost of living in some northern communities are much, much higher than it is in the cities, while the wages are much lower and the jobs are seasonal.

The question of foreign aid and immigration should be reviewed, taking into consideration the domestic employment situation and the degree of poverty in which so many of families are living.

These recommendations have been wide-ranging, and perhaps not as concise as they could be, but we trust that they will be relevant, considering the short period of time in which we had to prepare this brief, and the amount of resource material that was available. The whole of the Native Brotherhood feel that the answer to many of the problems that arise in connection with poverty can be alleviated or eradicated through education. This refers not only to formal education, to education for the poor people but to education for other members of the public. There must be a program of education to help the public rid itself of apathy and antipathy—of discrimination over class, language, religion, and so forth.

Spending of more public funds for educational programs, housing, industry for the poor, and so on, must be regarded as an investment in human resources, never as a waste of money. The benefits that will be reaped will contribute to the betterment of our country as a whole.

Respectfully,
President,
Stony Mountain Native Brotherhood,
Manitoba Penitentiary,
Box 101,
Stony Mountain, Manitoba.

APPENDIX I

The following is the format of the questionnaire that was used as guidelines for the tape-recorded discussion and for the written answers:

1. What do you think people mean when they say someone is living in poverty?
2. What do you think they mean when they say someone is poor?
3. Have you ever lived in poverty, or have you known someone who was living in poverty?
4. Do you think there are causes for poverty? Please explain.
5. Do you think "poor" people can do anything for themselves to improve their lot? If so, what could they do?
6. What do you think others (individuals, groups, organizations, government agencies, churches, etc.) could do to improve the lot of the poor people and improve their chances for the future? Please explain under the following headings and sub-headings:

ECONOMIC:—employment; job training and retraining; housing; food, clothing.

EDUCATION:—helping young people stay in school; academic schooling; vocational and technical training; retraining for people who have lost their jobs to "machines".

SOCIAL and RECREATIONAL:—organized and individual sports and activities; books and magazines; newspapers; radio and television.

HEALTH and DENTAL CARE:—are the present facilities and procedures adequate?

RELIGION:—are the organized churches doing as much as they can to alleviate poverty?

POLITICS:

APPENDIX "C"

KIDS' PLAY AND POVERTY

a brief prepared for the
SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE ON
POVERTY

by the students and staff of the
DEPARTMENT OF ENVIRONMENTAL STUDIES

FACULTY OF ARCHITECTURE
UNIVERSITY OF MANITOBA

November 1969

FOREWORD

There are many observations contained in the appendix: of these observations, only a few problems have been isolated; finally, in the following brief, only a few recommendations have been advanced.

The investigation and construction was carried out in a relatively short period of time, and did not follow any 'scientific' methods. Thus one cannot construe this brief to be comprehensive nor conclusive: to do so would destroy its very impression we have tried to convey.

Thus, our main recommendation would be that this report be viewed only as a basis for a later and much more comprehensive study involving many more related disciplines. Such a study, if recommendations are to be drawn from it, must be considered as a long-term investigation: some participating disciplines that must be brought 'on stream' during this study would pertain to child nutrition, muscle development, psychological development, family and community development, and a complete re-thinking of the manner in which these ideal new environmental qualities might be implemented physically.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS:

The author expresses his deep gratitude to the following Environmental Studies students, without whom the investigation, the summer constructions, and this report would not have been made possible:

Martha Baniyas, Errol Hugh, Steve Barber, Israel Lyon, Lyn Gemmel, Nancy Thompson, Lex George.

Our appreciation is also extended to the following persons who contributed their skills, time, and effort during the school investigation phase and the summer construction phase:

Adrian Bishop, Bernie Nelson, Lois Emery, Fran and Spencer Putnam, Dr. Hirsch, Joy Williams, Punch Jackson, Miss Rebchuk, Mr. O. Johanson, Prof. Poskanzer, Doug Lawrence, Hal Studholm, Cameron Mann, Gordon Throp.

and finally, to Professors Gordon Adaskin, Claude deForest, Winston Leathers, and Jim Lewis who carried much of the work load during school investigation and meetings.

TABLE OF CONTENTS:

Title Page
Foreword
Acknowledgements
Table of Contents
Brief: Introduction: Poverty and Play Recommendations
Appendix: Play Environment Photos
Statistical Comparison Chart
Wildwood Park Map
Central Logan Map
Phase One: Community Comparison Survey
Central Logan Area Survey Maps
Central Logan—Lord Selkirk Area Rec'n Programs
Phase Two: Resultant Student Design Prototypes
Photographs of Two Student Design Prototypes
Phase Three: Communication of Results
Phase Four: Summer Construction of Prototypes

INTRODUCTION: POVERTY AND PLAY

It is now generally agreed that one's character and attitudes are determined by his or her social and psychological environment: one's behaviour in later life is generally a development of certain basic character traits developed during his or her early 'formative' life.

Only relatively recently has it become generally agreed that the most important 'formative' years are those years between the ages of birth and four or five years of age; earlier development in the physiological, psychological and sociological sciences has now advanced to the point where fundamental relationships are now apparent between these sciences.

Only more recently have there been any rigorous methods of comprehensively analysing one's 'formative' environs.

We do not feel that it is thus presumptuous to advance this type of investigation as one which has possibly the greatest importance in understanding and dealing with the long-term causes of poverty.

Professor Poskanzer introduced PLAY as the important part that should be added to Freud's inter-relations of LOVE and WORK as the major components of one's life. He suggested that one cannot achieve sound mental health without meaningful working relationships between these.

PLAY, according to consensus, is not capable of being completely defined. It is a personal value which varies in its specifics with each specific individual, but which at different age 'groups' has certain general principles that hold true. Professor Poskanzer recalled Erickson, who classified the following age group characteristics:

0-1 year: narcissistic play with self, reliance on mother, development of sense of trust in others, exploration of immediate physical environment: sees self as 'center of universe'.

1-3 years: exploration of extended physical environment, extends self-occupation to others, has little interest in store-bought toys, little understanding of values, begins to learn limits of handling objects... "no" is a constant word; is asocial—has no respect for possessions of others, plays amongst others rather than with them, time orientation is short: fears and doubts can develop.

3-6 years: sense of initiative begins, locomotor activities, boisterous and adventurous, imagination and creativity potential very high; forms groups of between two and four children, discovers sex differences, meaning of life and death, vocations and professions: exploration of outdoor physical environment.

6-12 years: industrious accomplishments valued: forms larger groups of children of same sex, needs ability to succeed with people and activities, needs to clarify position of self with others; superiority and inferiority strongly felt.

Erickson's three other age groups, adolescence, adulthood, and old age are not included herein since they are concerned with developments of the above characteristics and also have not been dealt with during this investigation.

Dr. Hirsch and Professor Poskanzer both emphasized the value of play in educating children; it has a vital role in the physiological and psychological development. Physiologically; at the early ages, larger muscles are developed by crawling, walking, jumping and running, while later on, the fine muscles are coordinated by climbing, balancing, and so on. These thus become extremely important in providing success in play activities with children of the same age, and are closely related to providing a sound mental life. Psychologically, play is the main factor in the maturation process; it is a re-creative process depending on the recall of past experience. It thus not only relates past experiences into meaningful 'overviews', but stimulates curiosity to find new relating experiences. Play can also develop personality since recreation provides both ego-shattering or ego-building experiences. Play can be therapeutic in the sense that it can sort out difficult experimental relationships. Play, in the sense of expressing oneself, becomes a major form of communication.

Play must be stimulated or caused in some way: purely spontaneous play is almost nonexistent. We saw the lack of many stimuli to play in environments other than those referred to as 'poverty areas'. Through our work, which limited us to mostly physical media, we saw possible non-physical amelioration of these environments.

It become very important, then, when referring to the following discussion of POVERTY, that a deficiency in the opportunities for children to play, ultimately, in some form, restricts the development of a 'whole' human.

The Oxford Universal Dictionary (1955) defines poverty: the quality or condition of being poor. 1) the condition of having little or no material possessions; indigence, want, destitution. 2)a) deficiency, dearth, scarcity; smallness of amount. b) deficiency in the proper or desired quality. c) deficiency in some property, quality, or ingredient.

Determined by our investigation, we would, for the reasons outlined in the following report, define poverty: a deficiency in the desired amount and quality of opportunity for physical recreation of children between the ages of five and ten years of age.

This aspect of poverty is in direct relationship with other aspects, or definitions of poverty, such as:

(1) lack of family money: both parents must work, in some cases only the most important parent to young children, the mother, must work; children must be put to work earlier to assist the family.

(2) lack of real parental concern: how many children are unwanted due to poor family 'planning'? Can there be real love (mother or father) displayed by a baby sitter?

(3) lack of time for family occasions: too much time needed to earn money to make 'ends meet.'

(4) lack of communication with 'outside community groups: vague fears of authorities, relating to social workers, police, urban renewal plans, higher status individuals and groups ('the rich'), absentee landlords, 'do-gooders'.

(5) lack of permanent majority population: especially those younger adults who normally carry out 'community spirit,' there is a very high mobility rate in these areas.

(6) lack of concern for longer-term planning: most concerned with making short-term 'ends' meet; many who are highly mobile, making the community only a brief stop-over; fear to invest in any community improvement since it is under the cloud of Urban Renewal; non-improvement oriented absentee landlords.

(7) lack of 'well-oiled' public and/or private agency interfaces: territorial disputes, mistrusts; no real and total information exchange, bureaucratic red tape.

(8) lack of real public and/or private involvement (face-to-face communication): only social workers and some police and some community organization workers really have a chance to understand the values, mores, problems of the residents—most welfare work carried out in absentia.

(9) lack of research and training of people dealing with these phenomena: traditional case-work, monetary aid, and other accepted welfare programs destroy self-help initiative, pride; often complicate problems.

The above list of other aspects of poverty is by no means complete, not completely understood. At one time or other, though, these seemed to be felt and experienced during our work.

We feel that the first definition as put forth by the Oxford Universal Dictionary is very misleading: the fact that these people have little or no wealth or material possessions seems to be the universally accepted definition . people who wish to deal with poverty conditions almost always seem to gravitate to improving the physical environmental conditions. We feel that these actions have little or no consequence in fact.

Outwardly, these areas are in no worse physical shape than some other non-poverty areas of Winnipeg. Inwardly, however, we could quickly see many behavioral characteristics that only by the wildest stretch of the imagination cover the entire community with the blanket description of "behavioral sink", as most slums are described. Many of the residents we talked to were concerned as any 'outsider' of the conditions created by only a portion of the residents.

In summary, then, we saw many attitudes of the residents and service agencies that hindered the development of opportunities for younger children's play. Most of these attitudes are clearly summed up and displayed when one sees the manner in which Urban Renewal is inflicted on these areas. This term seems to imply that there is only one manner in which poverty areas can be handled—through complete re-building. These simplistic notions of poverty, poverty physical environments, and means to implement amelioration have been corrected to a large extent in the major cities of the United States, through many years of evaluating results of earlier Urban Renewal blanket-reconstruction programs. Later planning term such as Rehabilitation, Re-organization, and Advocacy Planning are now being put to fruitful use. It seems that this means that any planning for the future of these areas must:

- (1) be done in conjunction with community residents,

- (2) be done without just a single 'master plan' in mind,

- (3) use the more rigorous, but infinitely more flexible planning tools that are now being developed by disciplines that until now were considered peripheral to City Planning.

We believe that, with our crude methods and lack of time, we accomplished an approximation of these ideals, especially when building our play 'lot' for the Lord Selkirk Inter-faith Group, whereby a group from that community was directly involved in doing something, of value, for itself.

DESIGN FOR CHILDREN'S PLAY FACILITIES IN HOUSING PROJECTS:

Brief visits to Burroughs-Keewatin, and more thorough investigation of the Lord Selkirk Housing Projects confirmed the fact that all but one of the five or six play areas provided were not used at all. Reasons for this lack of interest in playing in these areas are:

- (1) designs are too abstract, association-al stimuli missing

- (2) designs are too 'rigid' and axial—no informality

- (3) sitting areas for adults suggest supervision surveillance

- (4) no shade, many surfaces absorb sun's heat

- (5) hard concrete and asphalt play surfaces to fall on

- (6) some areas are out of the way of main child traffic

- (7) too few moving parts

- (8) meticulous but irrelevant details soon lost with no maintenance

- (9) no division of play areas for smaller and larger children

- (10) extremely high construction costs

One play lot in Lord Selkirk Project does get a lot of use: its design suggests that a different designer who was sensitive to the play needs of children was employed.

The design of all of these areas suggests that small areas were set aside and termed 'play area,' rather than being designed as an integral part of the housing project.

RECOMMENDATIONS

- (1) Larger amounts of funds be allocated to Parks and Recreation Departments dealing with Urban poverty areas for the express purpose of research and experimental design of play equipment.

- (2) Larger amounts of funds be allocated to any agency involved in recreation programs for the express purpose of providing more physical equipment and supervision of recreation programs.

- (3) Incentive, in form of tax-relief or no raising of taxes for improved use of vacant land, or free demolition of condemned buildings with no tax increase for private owners of vacant land or land that could be used for recreation purposes: this seems feasible since land can be transferred from City of Winnipeg through the Urban Renewal Committee to Department of Parks and Recreation—it would not be that much more complex to involve private owners.

(4) Grants of funds to individuals or groups that wish to implement projects of value to the community as a whole, but who have no personal funds with which to carry out the project: the unfortunate mispending of some of the Manitoba Centennial Funds could have been used—will other such opportunities arise?

(5) Provision of government-owned (public) tools and equipment which can be used—under 'overtime' supervisors for such community projects: many residents have training in the use of such equipment.

(6) allocation of development funds to private manufacturers for competitive development of play equipment.

(7) development of closer working 'ties' between the various service agencies: this is not a centralisation of power, but a much more efficient communication network between these agencies. Also see (8) below.

(8) Stronger communication network between service agencies and the residents of poverty areas, so that residents can get a total view of the many services and community plans. This can also be thought of in terms of recent ideas in Community Organisation and Development, as being considered at University of Winnipeg.

(9) A complete re-consideration of the way 'housing projects' are designed, especially in relationship to their total environmental context. This needs revamping of local zoning codes, public education (who wants a 'project' in the neighborhood?), and use of up-to-date large and small scale planning and design methods.

(10) a complete re-consideration of large-scale total rebuilding: allowing the community to rehabilitate rather than being slowly frozen and scrapped.

(11) Stimulate more applied research into causes and results of poverty, to be carried on by both private and public firms and institutions.

PHASE ONE: COMMUNITY COMPARISON SURVEY

In the early spring of 1969, a small group of second year students asked their Basic Design instructors to incorporate the students' interests in building a playground into the program of studies of that year. Since the suggestion fitted well with the intent of the curriculum, an eight-week, two-part program of investigation and design was begun.

The first part included a survey of two apparently differing residential communities in Metropolitan Winnipeg, specifically focusing on the state of provision of opportunities and facilities for children's play. The second part included the drawing of criteria for design of physical accommodation for children's play, and the actual design of prototype structures.

The communities chosen were Wildwood Park in Fort Garry, a post-war 'total design' housing project; and the Central Logan Area in Winnipeg, now known as part of Urban Renewal Area Number Two.

(See maps and graphic statistic comparison chart.)

OBSERVATIONS

In the following observations, Wildwood Park will be implied as being 'the norm' for comparison: however, as pointed out in certain instances it falls well below what we would consider to be an 'ideal' play environment.

Attitudes: Questions directed to Wildwood parents brought out a concern for the safety of their children who spent a great deal of time playing in the service/access loop roads peculiar to the plan layout of Wildwood. Of lesser concern was the distance these children had to walk to community recreation facilities during the cold periods of winter. Concern for children crossing trafficked streets not mentioned—there are no main streets dividing these areas. No residents nor children seemed to mind being asked questions by the students, nor having photographs taken.

Before we could go to the residents of Logan Area, since we were working with Neighborhood Service Center, we had to select from their files, persons categorized as being interested in community recreation facilities, children, and so forth. These people were then screened for interview 'suitability' before the students were allowed to speak to them. It appeared to us that the social workers (not all of them) were being too protective of the families they were dealing with. However, we do realize that many of these families are visited many times each week by varying service representatives, and thus the concern by the social workers, to some extent is valid. Another valid concern of the social workers was that we follow through with our findings and designs: too many people, termed 'do-gooders' had raised the expectations of the residents and then had left them disappointed by not following through. Specific mention was made to the students by the social workers that the residents must be asked simple questions, and should not be 'grilled' by the method asking indiscrete questions in too rigid a manner.

Of the thirty five residents of the Logan Area that were questioned, the main concern seemed to be that the facilities for recreation were too few and too centralized, and that they were not able to spend their time accompanying the younger children these long distances to playgrounds. The residents seemed as concerned with the welfare of their children as the Wildwood parents. Fears of small children crossing heavily trafficked streets and encountering older bullies were expressed. Some residents were suspicious of students, but most seemed to enjoy talking once the intentions of the students were known. A few residents were never found to be home, although of these, some made appointments to talk after they had finished work. Some residents made passing unfavourable remarks of welfare agencies in general. We found, from talks with Neighborhood Service staff that few residents understood or cared for the Urban Renewal Plans that had been explained to them by this Service Agency, and that most residents had too many other more pressing worries than just concern for recreational facilities; such as food and clothing and furniture costs, finding adequately paying jobs, and generally being able to make ends meet.

Money: In Wildwood, each child had adequate provision of play equipment—balls, bats, skates, sleds, bicycles, wagons, and so on. The community as a whole has enough money to support a small community shelter and two rinks, and joined in other programs of the immediately surrounding schools. Each individual family has enough money to spend time on summer vacations.

In Logan Area, social workers told us that not many families could afford play equipment for their children. Some families had small store-bought swings and slides in their yards, but use of these was restricted to the children of the family and the immediate friends. There was no community shelter or facilities supported by the community themselves. Many children did not have any family vacations, although some attended the YMCA day camp at Manitou; some parents thought that the small amount of money asked by the YMCA was too much.

According to our survey, there was a lack of recreational facilities and lack of imagination in design of play lots and equipment. (see survey maps.) Upon talking with the staff of the Winnipeg Department of Parks and Recreation, we were told that their budget is set up annually, based on the costs of equipment previously provided, and the known plans of setting up new playgrounds. This means that there is no means for experimenting with new play lot plans nor play structures, although the staff expressed a wish to do so. Related to this is the fact that there are few manufacturers of play equipment. The structures used by the Parks and Recreation Department are made specially, and are rather high in price for the number of children that each piece can accommodate. Other play equipment that is made from the newer metals and plastic must be imported from the United States, and this cost becomes exorbitant.

Time: Of two aspects: firstly, as mentioned above, parents in Logan Area by necessity cannot spend as much time with their children as the parents of Wildwood. Secondly, and directly related to the former, is the fact that there are two different play seasons—summer, spring and fall, and winter: in the extreme cold, since there are no widely available sheltered areas, smaller (and noisy, exploring) children must play at home, usually in groups. Even with the recreation areas in the basements in Wildwood, mothers cannot be expected to be constantly worried by this play, and, in Logan Area, there are not enough basement areas for this group play—the upstairs thus becomes the playground, and this in turn serves as stimulus for many child-parent conflicts that would not occur if the play was outside or removed from the living activities of the parents.

Community physical layout: The 'total design' aspects of Wildwood show definite advantages since there is a continuous park strip connecting all houses, with no heavily-trafficked streets to be crossed. There is a zoning of land use that makes each use compatible: school areas, shopping service areas, recreation areas, and residential areas. This zoning for compatibility of use is completely missed in Logan Area; the area is also divided into four areas by heavily trafficked roads, with some areas having more recreation accommodation than others. In Wildwood, community supported maintenance services assure a clean safe play environment, whereas in Logan Area, there are many abandoned cars and other potentially dangerous debris. Since the levelling of residences for future Urban Renewal development, many vacant lots contain hidden broken glass, sharp construction rubble, and garbage. There are still many vacant and 'boarded-up' buildings which provide stimulating but dangerous play activity, along with other less acceptable activities. The news media has recently focussed on this problem, and perhaps something will be done, although, as with the abandoned cars, it took incensed mothers to pressure government to move to remedial action.

Play patterns: Because facilities for play were accessible to every child in Wildwood, because parents could afford more time in casually supervising from the houses, and because parents could afford more time actually being with their children, there was no need for much supervised play or for a large community recreation program, and all recreation programs that existed, both summer and winter were PRIVATELY sponsored by the residents themselves, with only a small Parks Department program for smaller children.

In Logan area, the exact opposite is true, with most of the recreation programs being sponsored by PUBLIC agencies. This involves the use of much more supervised play activities. Also, because their is less parental provision of play facilities, the public must assume this. Since there are limits to the Parks and Recreation Department budget, not enough facilities can be provided, especially for all age groups.

Especially neglected are the very children with whom we were most concerned about—those between the ages of five and ten years of age. These are mostly left to provide themselves with opportunities to play: since this age group is inventive, it has been assumed that they can 'fend for themselves.' Our observations of their activities have shown us that the environment they use to play in is both lacking in facilities that stimulate their imaginations, and presenting potential danger, such as roofs, streets, and so on.

Another important factor is that play patterns differ widely according to the age group; the case usually being that the play of the older children is much faster, and often utilises wheeled or hard equipment. Since there is a lack of grounds to play in in the Logan Area, these groups must use the same grounds, with the result that the younger children are often hurt, even with no malicious intent on the part of the older children.

Comparison Summary: The consensus of the class, after analysing all available data was that there was little need to design accommodation for play in Wildwood, other than providing a stronger focus for play in the central park strip.

In Logan Area, there was a two-fold concern of behalf of the students: firstly, a recognition of the need to provide many more 'pocket' play lots liberally placed throughout the entire area. Secondly, that low-maintenance winter playgrounds and sheltered areas be incorporated into the design of these 'pocket' play lots. The main criteria for designing play lots and structures in the Central Logan Area were:

- (1) simplicity of construction so that residents could build their own projects. Plans are now being considered for publishing a 'do-it-yourself' construction manual that sets forth both instructions for laying out a play lot and constructing various structures.
- (2) use of 'found' or inexpensive materials,
- (3) use of rugged, weather and vandal—proof materials.
- (4) multi-use components that stimulate imaginations.
- (5) different play zones for different age groups. This was not considered to be important until our summer experience.
- (6) safety from streets—sidewalks
- (7) safety from bullies and 'muggers'—no dead ends or dark areas.
- (8) safety of components and materials—no sharp projections, hard ground surfaces, hard-to-clean areas; good joints.
- (9) low maintenance—no worn grass scattered sand, rain pools.
- (10) summer and winter play areas
- (11) sitting areas for supervising parents should not present an atmosphere of 'surveillance'.
- (12) enough 'action space' around play structures and ample amount of traffic space between these structures.
- (13) flexibility of layout of play structures—lots of many differing shapes and sizes will be used.
- (14) play lots and structures must have high children: ground area ratio. The structures must accommodate more children than existing equipment.

(15) shielding of noise and projectiles from neighboring houses and buildings, streets and sidewalks.

(16) all designs must be visually attractive—no 'junk'.

Two student designs were selected that could, with little revision, meet all these criteria. (see photographs.)

(1) Climbing Structure: The estimated cost of the Three-module design was approximately $300.00; it has a capacity to entertain approximately 40 or 50 children in a ground area of roughly 20 feet by 20 feet, and can be constructed using 1 truck, 4 people, saw, hammer, axe, telephone poles, plastic rope, wire rope and large nuts and bolts. It can be constructed in approximately 2 weekends.

(2) Fort/sandbox Structure: The estimated cost of the design as seen in the photos is approximately $100.00; it can entertain approximately 80 children in a ground area of roughly 30 feet by 70 feet, and can be built with used railway ties (scrubbed clean) by 4 people and less tools in approximately 2 or 3 weekends.

Note: Normal 6 person playground swings cost $400.00 and occupy a ground space roughly equal to design 1) above.

PHASE THREE: COMMUNICATION OF RESULTS

An exhibition of survey maps of both areas and student design drawings and models was held at the Faculty of Architecture Building at the University of Manitoba.

At the first of a set of three meetings, students and staff presented their findings and designs to those persons who assisted during the first two phases, plus some other interested persons, landscape architects, Parks and Recreation Department officials, an alderman, and Wildwood parents. The intent of this meeting was to obtain constructive criticism of the survey and designs.

The second meeting was of the same format, and was presented to Wildwood residents interested in constructing play equipment in the Wildwood central Park.

The third meeting presented the survey and designs as information to officials of the Metro Winnipeg Area Municipal Recreation Directors, as a diversion from their conference.

Summary of meetings: attitudes: The students made these presentations with a real effort to not only obtain constructive criticism, but to present themselves as being ready to assist in actually building one or more of the (revised) designs. There were a few offers from communities in Portage la Prairie and several suburban areas, but all these did not offer any funding for complex pre-conceived plans nor any sense of enthusiasm that would make the students glad to help. In short, while some valid criticisms were made, 1) the residents or other citizens in a position to act could provide no real follow-through, and 2) rather than talking of the important planning ideas, were content to idle over small and relatively irrelevant design aspects. Some students felt that a few residents took note of these ideas to implement with pre-conceived designs of play grounds, but only as 'garnishes,' and 3) generally displayed enough polite disinterest to 'turn off' the students.

After the students were 'turned off' by what they considered to be confirmation of their suspicions of typical middle-class attitudes, a second set of meetings occurred after the exhibit was moved to the gym space of Neighborhood Service Center. Apparently this display was a complete success in that children who saw the models gave the most meaningful feedback as to the relative play potential of the designs. These were noted by a student who acted as a 'guide' for the exhibit. It was also noted that some residents expressed some range of desires to see these implemented in their area.

The fourth, and most important of both sets of meetings involved members of the Lord Selkirk Park Interfaith Group who had been contacted and informed of our project by a member of Neighborhood Service Center. This was the first of a series of observations of the close personal ties that do exist between members of various service groups in various locales. It seems to be a tie at the personal rather than official level, however. This was also the first time that a group offered a serious interest in our work, to the point that we thought that perhaps we might be able to build one of the designs yet.

The fifth meeting involved members of the YMCA Camp Manitou day camp. At this meeting, the students saw a complete reversal of the previously displayed attitudes. Ideas were enthusiastically and unpretentiously advanced, until a plan for the location of different designs for different age groups was decided upon for Camp Manitou. We decided that we would start building with this as first priority, with Interfaith having second priority, since plans were not finalized for that group.

The sixth meeting was held downtown with the advisory committee of the Interfaith group. It was decided that either of the two prototypes was inappropriate to being built at their location, but money was allocated for another design. Since the attitudes shown did not seem to form a consensus of enthusiasm as did the fifth meeting, second priority was held for this construction.

The seventh and final meeting was held at a working lunch session of the Winnipeg Housing Authority. This was perhaps the most depressing experience of the whole project. It had been arranged by the manager of Lord Selkirk Park and Burroughs-Keewatin Housing Projects. He was concerned over the lack of adequate provision for play in the Burroughs-Keewatin Project, and was especially enthusiastic over the potential of the prototype 1), previously described, to improve the conditions of the existing playgrounds there. The author was given a specific appointment and a set amount of time in which to make the presentation to the Authority. He was admitted late and had to wait while the Authority cleared up other business, and then, after a short talk, was told that the Authority would give approval if the author, on behalf of everyone, would ask CMHC in Ottawa for permission to provide this improved play facility. We then decided that we would not work any further at communicating our ideas to suburban or public service groups.

By this time, our efforts of communicating our ideas has occupied a time of approximately two months. Our rather naive hopes of quickly building the prototypes and confirming our faith in their ability to stimulate play and involve the community residents were drastically altered.

PHASE FOUR: SUMMER CONSTRUCTION OF PROTOTYPES

Camp Manitou 'sandbox'—prototype 2): The sandbox for small children was relocated from its planned location in a poorly drained and unshaded area to a few feet away, under some trees. It was constructed of used railway ties (5c each) brought to the site with the Camp truck. The 60 ties were used log-cabin style to form low-walled interlocking eight-foot squares. These squares were given different floor heights by laying down ties, and the walls of one square were built up to a level of four feet, and then partially roofed to form an observation tower. A window was made in one of these walls by omitting one tie. All ties were spiked together and critical corners were further strengthened by steel reinforcing rod dowels. The whole structure was then soaped and scrubbed, and clean sand laid on each floor. It cost approximately $40.00, can maintain over 20 children at one time, and occupies an area of roughly 20 feet square. It was built by 6 people over a period of 2 weekends. Ordinary hand tools plus a power handsaw were used. Water and power were supplied by the Camp.

Evaluation: This structure forces children to use their imagination. It cannot be stereotyped. When in use, at various times it became a fort, 'Jupiter,' a climbing structure, a sandbox, a resting place, and a story-telling place. One child that was involved in the Interfaith construction was observed to build a detailed village, then swiftly destroy it and then run away... could this be considered therapy of play? It appears that older children use more challenging higher parts to climb upon, whereas the younger children use the parts farthest away from this part as a sandbox. All persons using the swimming pool nearby use the entire structure as a sitting area. The sand must be replaced next spring, since it has seeped into the cracks in the floor; relatively little sand has been scattered around outside the structure.

It also appears that this would be readily built in the city by any group of resident handicraftsmen with a minimum of planning and supervision and funds.

Lord Selkirk Park Interfaith Center 'pocket' playlot: After some staff involved in the childrens' play program at the Center viewed the potentials of the Manitou structure, alterations of the same prototype were made. The structure was to be built beside the Center on the same lot, in an area roughly equal to that at Manitou. Design features were a raised platform for impromptu plays, several story-telling books, an observation tower, and a small sandbox. It was imperative that the person telling the stories be placed in such a way that her back be protected from flying objects.

This was the most interesting, if not the most frustrating experience of the whole project: soon after four of us arrived, we were greeted by two Métis brothers, five and six years of age. An hour later there were a least a dozen children of about the same age, from varied ethnic and racial backgrounds running around and trying to use the equipment. We soon learned to keep all the tools in a locked car and use only one tool at a time. On Sunday, the same children appeared. Several of the staff also came to help, regretting that there had not been sufficient notice so that neighborhood parents could also join the construction. In the end, all were engaged in hammering nine-inch spikes, soaping and hosing the ties, and painting a seat for the story-teller. The hammering and sawing provided great 'therapy' for some children, one of whom had been observed slamming his fist into the side of the house on the previous day. Also constructed was a successful go-cart.

Observations: At various times over the weekend we observed, in random order: the favourite game of throwing stones at discarded glass bottle targets; ranges of vocabulary that only an adult would know being used by five-year-olds; various extremely annoying actions meant to attract personal attention rather than be purely malicious; a child that had apparently taken a knife to his brother, but missed, and gashed his own leg and ankle;

A child commenting that another child would not understand a student's comment because the child was 'dumb' in school—this was as information, and was not meant to hurt the other child; comments by Interfaith staff of how many children in the area were taking prescribed sedation or tranquilizers; that the children's program at Interfaith Center was not designed so much as a baby-sitting program so much as something that would keep the children from causing a nuisance in the neighborhood (it is interesting to note that the majority of damage to buildings, etcetera, is done by the pre-teens who have little to do); the extreme patience of the Interfaith staff, especially when dealing with naughty children.

Evaluation: On later weekends, three swinging ropes and a 'tether ball' were installed. Again the children appeared and offered verbal and physical assistance. Our main idea of having people in the community work on their own projects seemed to be confirmed by this construction, even though we had to provide the initial stimulus. Many passing teenagers were curious, but could not risk working with children and inviting comments from other teenagers: however, they were observed to be climbing all over the structure later on. We should have given ample prior notice so that neighborhood parents could have been involved; then the initiative and understanding would have been 'planted.' We did not want this to appear to be another isolated 'do-gooder' project. Several children were hurt on the swinging ropes, and they were removed. They had been placed too close together, and too close to the main structure of ties. These ropes had attracted several older children never seen in the area before, and when the ropes vanished, so did the children. When the ropes were used, the smaller children were forced to play in another corner of the lot, but after they returned to their original play on the main structure: the same observation was made with the addition of sand. This attracted older children who soon dispersed it over a wide area and the side of the house. When it disappeared, so did the older children, and the younger children returned. The tether ball is kept in the Center, and used only when there is supervision, for fear of theft or vandalism. It is used by all sizes of children in a game called 'murder ball,' the object of which is to hit the ball as hard as possible in the direction of the child on the other side of the pole, in hopes of hitting him. (the ball is soft.) In summary, except for the swinging ropes and sand and short notice, this was a complete success. Interfaith now has plans to acquire the adjoining vacant lot (levelled through Urban Renewal) and use it as an extension of the play lot originally constructed. The House has also been painted, and all the weeds have been removed. A maintenance program has been started whereby teenagers are paid for work.

Camp Manitou 'climbing structure'—prototype 1); Since we had proven the success of prototype 2), we wanted to build the other. Also, since Interfaith had obtained a grant from the Winnipeg Foundation for the construction of a structure similar to prototype 1) on some lot that would be provided in that area by the Department of Parks and Recreation, we decided to build a structure at Manitou that, if necessary, be dismantled and moved to the city lot. This structure was placed beside the original 'sandbox.' It was made of a telephone pole frame bolted together and painted, with a plastic rope net constructed by the students fastened to the poles, forming a tent-like climbing net.

Evaluation: The construction was more complex because of the bolted joints, and more expensive (approximately $130.00) because of the rope net and paint and truck used to transport the poles. More initial maintenance is required to ensure that the bolts do not loosen with the slight movement of the structure when playing occurs, and the net had to be tightened against the poles after being in use for a short time. If used in the city, the plastic rope may be prone to vandalism.

However, this design has confirmed our faith in its ability to provide a stimulus to play; it is either a ship's rigging or a space vehicle, and can support over 15 older children (actual count) swarming over it. The bright colors seem to attract the children. Apparently the YMCA wants to use the rope net indoors during the winter.

Observations: One child commented that both sides were not painted with the same color; one group of cubs had to be forced into playing the organized baseball game in the other corner of the field instead of climbing on this structure.

Lord Selkirk Area playground; current project: After officials and staff from the Department of Parks and Recreation saw both completed structures at Manitou, they informed us that they could arrange transfer of a vacant lot at the other end of the block from Interfaith Center, across from Lord Selkirk Project. Arrangements are apparently now complete. Although we stated that we would not be available once school started, this does not seem to pose any problems—at least to these people. Suggestions were made that involved the use of teenagers from Interfaith as construction workers, but this has not proven itself in the form of any concrete proposal. Parks and Recreation Department have, beside providing the transfer and liability insurance, arranged for the levelling and grading of the site to the amount of $100.00. We have asked that extra fill be brought in so that an earth mound be formed at the same time that the heavy equipment does the levelling, in order to provide a winter snowslide. Apparently fill is hard to find until we submit sketches of our design. However, we are now back at school and have little time to devote to this. We had decided at the beginning of construction that we would not submit detailed 'sketches' to this Department because of the lack of time (we all had other jobs).

It seems that once again we are back at the stage where the red tape and attitudes are fighting any worth that this project once had: the Winnipeg Foundation money must be spent in a meaningful manner immediately so they will be satisfied, and will not be at cross purposes with Interfaith, who obtained the funds initially. We seem to be the people under pressure to compete, or follow through, even though we explicitly stated earlier a desire for the same kind of land in the same area, and had to build to prove that our intentions and designs were of quality; once again there will be no action and little trust of the students' ability to follow through because of some infathomable attitudes on the part of others.

This project will be constructed next spring if the land is still available, and if there are students willing to work on it. It is hoped that it can provide the beginning of a series of similar projects in the community, as well as a more rigorous research period investigating the development of young children and the design of play facilities in housing project designs.

APR 17 1970

VERIFIED 220180

Second Session—Twenty-eighth Parliament

1969

THE SENATE OF CANADA

PROCEEDINGS

OF THE

SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE

ON

POVERTY

The Honourable DAVID A. CROLL, Chairman

No. 7

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 18th, 1969

WITNESSES:

Indian and Metis Friendship Center: Mr. George Munroe, Executive Director, Mrs. Barbara Duggan, Mrs. Dorothy Betz.

Winnipeg Welfare Rights Movement: Mrs. Hilda Towers, Chairman, Mrs. Yvonne Putman, Secretary, Mrs. Betty Carson.

MEMBERS OF THE
SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE ON POVERTY

The honourable David A. Croll, Chairman

The Honourable Senators:

Bélisle	Hastings
Carter	Inman
Connolly (Halifax North)	Lefrançois
Cook	MacDonald (Queens)
Croll	McGrand
Eudes	Pearson
Everett	Quart
Fergusson	Roebuck
Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche , Deputy Chairman)	Sparrow

(18 Members)

(Quorum 6)

ORDERS OF REFERENCE

Extract of the Minutes of Proceedings of the Senate of Tuesday, October 28, 1969.

"The Honourable Senator Croll moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Roebuck:

That a Special Committee of the Senate be appointed to investigate and report upon all aspects of poverty in Canada, whether urban; rural, regional or otherwise, to define and elucidate the problem of poverty in Canada, and to recommend appropriate action to ensure the establishment of a more effective structure of remedial measures;

That the Committee have power to engage the services of such counsel, staff and technical advisors as may be necessary for the purpose of the inquiry;

That the Committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, and to report from time to time;

That the Committee be authorized to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the Committee, to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate, and to adjourn from place to place;

That the evidence taken on the subject during the preceding session be referred to the Committee; and

That the Committee be composed of the Honourable Senators Bélisle, Carter, Cook, Croll, Eudes, Everett, Fergusson, Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche), Hastings, Inman, Lefrançois, McGrand, Pearson, Quart, Roebuck and Sparrow.

After debate,

In amendment, the Honourable Senator McDonald moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Burchill, that the motion be not now adopted, but that it be amended by striking out paragraph 4 thereof and substituting therefor the following:—

"That the Committee be authorized to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the Committee, to adjourn from place to place, and notwithstanding Rule 76 (4), to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate."

After debate, and—

The question being put on the motion in amendment, it was—
Resolved in the affirmative.

The question being put on the motion of the Honourable Senator Croll, seconded by the Honourable Senator Roebuck, as amended, it was—

Resolved in the affirmative.

Extract of the Minutes of Proceedings of the Senate of Wednesday, October 29, 1969.

"With leave of the Senate,

The Honourable Senator McDonald moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Smith:

That the names of the Honourable Senators Connolly (Halifax North) and MacDonald (Queens) be added to the list of Senators serving on the Special Committee of the Senate appointed to investigate and report all aspects of poverty in Canada; and

That the name of the Honourable Senator Nichol be removed from the list of Senators serving on the said Special Committee.

The question being put on the motion it was—
Resolved in the affirmative.

ROBERT FORTIER,
Clerk of the Senate.

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS

Winnipeg, Manitoba.

TUESDAY, November 18th, 1969.

Pursuant to adjournment and notice the Special Senate Committee on Poverty met this day at 9.30 a.m.

Present: The Honourable Senators Belisle, Connolly (Halifax North), Croll (Chairman), Eudes, Everett, Fergusson, Hastings, Inman, McGrand and Sparrow—(10).

In attendance: Frederick J. Joyce, Director.

The following witnesses were introduced and heard:

INDIAN AND METIS FRIENDSHIP CENTRE:

Mr. George Munroe, Executive Director

Mrs. Barbara Duggan

Mrs. Dorothy Betz

In attendance:

Mrs. Bertha McCorrister

Mrs. Burton

The Chairman thanked the delegation from the Indian and Metis Friendship Centre of Winnipeg for their valuable testimony to the Committee.

The following witnesses were then introduced and heard:

WINNIPEG WELFARE RIGHTS MOVEMENT:

Mrs. Hilda Towers, Chairman

Mrs. Yvonne Putman, Secretary

Mrs. Betty Carson

In attendance:

Mrs. Vivian Hales

At the conclusion of the questioning, the Chairman thanked the Winnipeg Welfare Rights Movement for their fine presentation.

The Chairman informed the members that a sub-committee consisting of Senators Inman and Sparrow had been formed to hear a brief from the Senior Citizens of Winnipeg and the Mothers' Allowance Committee. Senator Inman made a verbal report of these deliberations. The briefs from these two organizations have been retained in the Committee's records.

Briefs received from the Winnipeg and District Labour Council and William Buchanan of Winnipeg, were presented to the Committee and duly acknowledged by the Chairman.

At 12.12 p.m. the Committee adjourned to the call of the Chairman.

ATTEST:

Patrick J. Savoie,
Clerk of the Committee.

THE SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE ON POVERTY

EVIDENCE

November 18, 1969,
Winnipeg, Manitoba.

The Special Senate Committee on Poverty met this day at 9.30 a.m.

Senator David A. Croll (Chairman) in the Chair.

The Chairman: We will call the meeting to order. Senator Inman and Senator Sparrow are hearing briefs next door from the Mother's Allowance Committee as well as the Senior Citizens Committee.

We have here now the Indian and Metis Friendship Centre. Mr. George Munroe is the executive director. The activities of the group include counselling, referral and legal assistance, and assistance in finding housing and employment is provided. As well, social and educational programs are operated. Funding is through contributions and the United Way.

I will call upon Mr. Munroe who will then introduce his delegation.

Mr. George Munroe, Executive Director, Indian and Metis Friendship Centre: Thank you. Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen, senators: on behalf of the Indian and Metis Friendship Centre I would like to introduce our witnesses. Our spokesman is Mrs. Barbara Duggan. The others are Mrs. Bertha McCorrister and Mrs. Burton of the Ladies Aid of the Friendship Centre, and Mrs. Dorothy Betz, our court worker.

This particular brief was prepared exclusively by the Indian women who come from the Friendship Centre.

Mrs. Barbara Duggan, Indian and Metis Friendship Centre: Honourable senators, this brief is presented on behalf of the Indian and Metis Friendship Centre Women's Group. Many Indian people have been visited and have discussed their feelings and needs.

It is estimated there were about 18,000 people of Indian origin in Greater Winnipeg and that this population is increasing rapidly. Most of these people live in tenements and houses unfit for human habitation and are therefore fully knowledgeable of existing conditions, and wish to have the following changes considered. Indian people in many areas are enduring and coping with problems common to decaying urban areas.

The women unanimously agree that there is a need for information and service centres within walking distance of their homes. We particularly speak of the areas adjoining Logan, Ellen, Pioneer, Austin and Andrews Streets. Having centres located in these areas would increase opportunities for community participation and involvement in the responsibility of implementing change.

The following recommendations have been made for inclusion in the proposed Centres:

1. Adult Training in the area of child care, sex and adult education, budgeting, day nurseries, as well as interpersonal relationships development to encourage people to share ideas for their mutual benefit.

2. Individual & Group Counselling and Therapy—which would give guidance to young people with regard to the following areas of concern;

- a) Counselling and assistance in establishing good work habits to lessen the discrimination that exists in the area of employment.

- b) Counselling in hygiene and household management through homemaker services.

3. Home visitors for improved communication between teachers and parents.

4. Employment and Income

- a) Each Centre should have a Manpower representative to furnish information regarding services for employment counselling, upgrading, job finding and work training programs.

- b) Financial assistance should be made available for those who are in need of financial assistance for other reasons or between jobs.

- c) Financial assistance should be given to those starting work to help them until they receive their first pay cheque.

- d) Since the minimum wage is insufficient or the needs of most families it is recommended that a supplement be given to assist the family according to their needs.

5. Law—Many women suggest that the law be adequately enforced with regard to admitting juveniles to pool halls.

6. Housing

a) There is need for more public housing and more adequate furnishings of those dwellings.

b) There is also need for a system of establishing rental rates according to the condition of the premises.

c) There is need for a stricter enforcement of housing by-laws and safety regulations as well as health regulations.

d) It is recommended that each Centre have a list of houses or living accommodations available to anyone needing this information.

7. Recreation—Programs for people of all age groups are needed. Social Centre activities are seen as an alternative to the Main Street activities and is of concern to many people. The women are in general agreement that even if all of these conditions are improved nothing will really change until the attitudes of society are changed at the same time that physical improvements are being made in the community.

Thank you.

Senator Fergusson: I wonder if Mrs. Duggan would tell us what the Friendship Centre Women's Group did and how many there are in that group.

Mrs. Duggan: Well, we did have a Ladies Aid Group and we had quite a number of—I would say about 30 regular members and I have been trying to get more women belonging to the group so we haven't as many members—we do not count them as members because we do not have memberships.

Senator Fergusson: Do you have meetings?

Mrs. Duggan: We do. We visit homes and have a women's handicraft afternoon and a social afternoon on Thursday every week. We visit homes and ask women to come and visit us at the Centre to find out what we can do for them or what they would like for activities.

Senator Fergusson: You are sort of a ladies auxiliary to the Friendship Centre?

Mrs. Duggan: Yes.

Senator Fergusson: You say there are about 18,000 people of Indian origin in Greater Winnipeg. What percentage makes use of your Centre? Do many of them come to the Friendship Centre?

Mrs. Duggan: Yes. I would say possibly we have sometimes seen them all making use of the Centre.

Senator Fergusson: They look at it as something of their own where they can come?

Mrs. Duggan: Yes.

Senator Hastings: Mr. Chairman, you state in your second paragraph there are 18,000 people of Indian origin and the population is increasing rapidly. Would you care to explain how rapidly it is increasing and why it is increasing.

Mrs. Dorothy Betz, Indian and Metis Friendship Centre: I am the advisory counselor and court worker for the Indian and Metis Friendship Centre. I would say it is increasing now in so many numbers that we are having difficulty in finding accommodations for these people.

Now, just Monday alone we had 14 fellows come in from out of town looking for employment. Now, some of these fellows are married men with families in their own area and because there is no employment in their own area they come to the city. We have to find accommodation for the family man who is expecting to bring his family in.

It is just increasing so badly that I am at a loss sometimes to find employment for these people. Referrals through the Canada Manpower doesn't seem to get anywhere. They go there and maybe one in 10 may get a job so it is almost getting so serious I think that we at the Centre are at a loss to find employment for these men because we still have employers who are discriminating against an Indian person.

Senator Hastings: I will get to that next. First of all you say Indian and Metis?

Mrs. Betz: Yes.

Senator Hastings: What do you mean, leaving the reservations to come to Winnipeg.

Mrs. Betz: Well, a treaty Indian is one that lives on the reservation. The Metis is possibly half of Indian descent. He is actually...

Senator Hastings: But you say the Indian is coming to Winnipeg. Is he leaving the reservation?

Mrs. Betz: The person living on the reservation, yes. They have to leave the reservation just to provide for their families.

Senator Hastings: In other words it is an economic condition of unemployment and so forth that is bringing them to the Greater Winnipeg area?

Mrs. Betz: Yes.

Senator Hastings: This area that you describe, adjoining Logan, Ellen, Pioneer, Austin and Andrews Streets, is this essentially the same area that was described to us last night by other witnesses?

Mrs. Betz: I am sorry. We were not here last night.

Senator Hastings: Now, I want to get to your discrimination clause. "To lessen discrimination that exists in the area of employment". Does this discrimination exist because you are Metis or Indian or does it exist because of lack of education or because you are in poverty?

Mrs. Betz: Well, I would say it is the employer. We have tried to get society to accept us as individuals rather than class us as one. They employ one person and this person may not be the right person for that job but they use this against the others and they will say "No, I have had one before. I wouldn't take another one", that is another Indian, you know.

Senator Hastings: Is this because you are Indian?

Mrs. Betz: Yes.

Senator Hastings: Not because you are uneducated?

Mrs. Betz: Not Indian or Metis, just plain Indian. There is no difference when it comes to employment or accommodation for people. When you get to a landlord and try to find a house.— I have had an Indian woman, a widow with two children, a 17 year old son and a 12 year old girl.—They had never lived in the city before and she was a widow. She had lived with her children up North. She came into the city. Rather than have her move into the court area I tried to get her settled in a new area so that when she is working her children will be able to attend school, but no. The minute she walked into that house they said "No" and yet she had already made the deposit the day before.

She was there ready to be moved in and because she was Indian "No".

Senator Hastings: And this discrimination exists in employment too?

Mrs. Betz: In employment and accommodation.

Senator Hastings: Public eating places?

Mrs. Betz: I would say no, although it has happened the odd time someone else is there. That is neither here nor there. I do not accept this.

Senator Hastings: At Section 5 you say you would like the boys kept out of the pool halls.

Mrs. Betz: My concern has been with young people in the Main Street area—not just there. It is in all the pool establishments and this is not only our Indian youngsters. It is also the whites but because they are in the court area and all the Indian kids are going into the court area and mingling in and these kids are beginning to pick up an awful lot of information that they should not even be aware of at eight, nine or ten years old and they are admitted into those halls.

Senator Hastings: Where would they be if they were not in the pool halls?

Mrs. Betz: I do not know. They should be in the Community Centre that we are asking for.

Senator Hastings: I learned a great deal in a pool hall.

Mrs. Betz: Oh, you can get an awful lot of information there and you can grow up awful fast too.

Senator Hastings: Thank you.

Senator McGrand: Just to go back to where you left off about this woman. She paid her deposit. Now, we have a Civil Rights Legislation with a great deal of emphasis placed on civil rights, the Civil Rights Charter, I think it is called.

Is there no way that you can take action against these people under our Charter of Civil Rights?

Mrs. Betz: Well, I have given all the information to the Civil Rights Committee and left it up to them then to take on the responsibility. I gave them all the information on this person plus the landlord and—I guess he was the caretaker in the establishment—and was an agent who was looking after the house.

Senator McGrand: Now, you come back to this thing, the population is rising rapidly. I take it that this is due to the influx of these people who are coming in from other places. I presume these places are largely in the North. Is that right?

Mrs. Betz: No, I would say they are from all over. We get them from Saskatchewan, Ontario, Southern Manitoba and all over.

Senator McGrand: Well now, how do you compare the life they have? I presume that these people who come here are unhappy with what they have in the places where they have lived and they have moved in. In your experience with them are they better off after they are here or do their conditions worsen after they come here?

Of course, I do not suppose you know much about what their position was before they left where they were.

Mrs. Betz: I have had a chance to see this. I have lived in the area myself before I moved to the city. I have an understanding of the kind of conditions they had to live in.

Senator McGrand: What resources do they have in these communities?

Mrs. Betz: Well, this is it. They do not have any and yet they would be happy if they could have it in the home areas because they would see their children going to school and not having to compete with the rat race of the city. They would just love to stay there if they had a job in their own home areas and their children could go to school and I think the most important thing is that they want their children to have an education today.

Senator McGrand: If you move into this Northern area and take a look at it, what resources are there up there to make a livelihood or whatever they have been living on up there? What do they work at in the North?

I have never been up there. I am completely ignorant of Northern Manitoba in what they call the inner lake district and so on but I do realize that conditions are bad.

What are they surviving on up there, mostly trapping?

Mrs. Betz: I would say no. There is trapping but most of them leave their families to go and work somewhere else. During the sugar beet season they move south to work on the sugar beet farms and they move back home and in the potato season they move back. Some of these people are working for farmers each and every year for the same farmer and they move in and back out again.

Senator McGrand: When you move up North...

Mrs. Betz: You mean farther North?

Senator McGrand: Yes. Did you not work for farmers up there?

Mrs. Betz: No, they don't. Most of them are on the lake.

Senator McGrand: When you say on the lakes, what do you mean; fishing?

Mrs. Betz: Fishing and hunting and trapping for survival. A lot of the young ones are attending school now in the cities and towns south and they are not going back.

Senator McGrand: I have had two reports of the future of trapping. One is that trapping is on its way out. It is no longer a means of livelihood and perhaps the sooner it was finished and closed out the better for everybody.

On the other hand I have been told by people in the Wild Life Branch of the Northern Affairs that the crop of furs in Northern Canada and I presume this takes in Northern Manitoba, is as good as ever before, so have these conflicting reports.

In your experience with these people from the North who are dependent on trapping would you say that trapping is out due to a scarcity of fur or just to the fact that price of the pelt does not buy as much as it used to? Which is it?

Mr. Munroe: Yes. I would say that trapping—you mentioned something which involves more than just people. You forget these people in the North have lived there for many, many years. They have managed to survive.

We have a tendency today to think in terms of dollars and cents but you must remember these people.

One of the reasons trapping is going out is the fact that pressures from the technological societies have raised and these people must necessarily come to the city and try to adjust to the technology that is going on.

Also in the Northern areas in Manitoba, give you a concrete example at Thompson

They have a mining area there and there are many industries that will in the future be developed in the Northern part of our province and the Northern part of Canada. The mid-continental corridors is a new development which is beginning and there will be a lot of industries and there will be a lot of future in the North, as many people see it.

There are many types of jobs being started.

I think it is wrong for our society to put pressure on many of these residents in the northern areas to come to the city, just to see what it is like. That is why we have so many people in the area. They are getting pressure from the social workers and the agents that are working there at the moment.

Senator McGrand: Do you mean the social workers in the north are promoting the idea of people leaving the north to come to Winnipeg?

Mr. Munroe: Definitely, a lot of them are. Very much so.

Senator McGrand: That is something that I cannot understand, why the social workers of the north knowing the condition that exists here in Metropolitan Winnipeg, which is the only large centre in Manitoba, would say to them "Well, you would be better off in Winnipeg".

Mr. Munroe: They do not say it in so many words. "You would be better off" just like that. They always do it under the lure of better jobs, better housing and so on and so forth.

If you ever want any reports on some of the conditions in the northern areas, you will see why, I suppose some of these social workers have a tendency to do this. There are, for instance, some families with 14 children that are living in a two-room house and the immediate reaction of a person who is used to living in a three or four-room house with only five children is "Well, this is really terrible".

Senator McGrand: This is the social worker's point of view, you mean?

Mr. Munroe: Right, most social workers and Indian agents and what have you. This has been the trend over the past years. They have people in the cities with their facilities and their individual society...

Senator McGrand: They do it largely, I suppose, because of the opportunity of better education.

Mr. Munroe: Yes.

Senator Belisle: Mr. Munroe, my question will be directed to you. Regarding your brief here you say in Section 4 under employment and income (a) "Each Centre should have a Manpower representative to furnish information regarding services for employment counselling, up-grading, job finding and work training programs."

Do you not take advantage of the present training facilities available to all Canadians by the Canada Manpower Assistance Act or is it not available to Indians and Metis?

My second question would be: have you applied directly to the Federal Government for the establishment of a Training Centre for your own two groups? You say there are 18,000. That is enough for the establishment, in my thinking, of a centre right amongst your group.

Mr. Munroe: To answer your first question I think the Indian people have been taken advantage of the opportunities provided by Manpower and the different employment opportunities that they do have in the city.

However, as you know a lot of these people have an education deficiency and in order to cope or to meet the standards even in a construction job in the city, you have to have certain standards and a lot of these do not have the education so they do not qualify for many of the jobs they would like to have when they go to Manpower and consequently Manpower, I suppose, cannot provide them with the jobs and they come to us in many instances.

The second part of the question I didn't get.

Senator Belisle: Have you applied directly to the Federal Government for the establishment of a centre in your own group?

Mr. Munroe: Not to my knowledge, no.

Senator Belisle: I gather from this you are not too pleased—like most of us Canadians—regarding education. Would you prefer to have your education switched from the provincial to the federal or vice-versa? Which one do you prefer? Would you prefer to be under the federal? My understanding is that most of the education of Indians and Metis and other people are a direct federal responsibility while they are on the reservations.

Senator Fergusson: Not Metis.

The Chairman: It is a provincial service delivered by the provinces. The Federal Government pays.

Senator Belisle: It is contracted by the province?

The Chairman: Yes, they are contacted from the province.

Senator Belisle: What can we do to better the educational system?

Mr. Munroe: Well, one of the things you can do is to bring education to the people, not the people to education because this is what has been happening over the past 100 years. They have always transported the Indian people from God knows where to somewhere 500 or 600 miles away from their own home communities and this hasn't worked for the simple reason that the type of education these people get is completely unsuited for their special needs.

I would say that there has to be a complete education program that has to be geared to the individual community. It has to be developed for that particular community and this type of education—I am not only speaking for the Indian people but I think for all of the rural people that come into this educational system.

Senator Belisle: What can we do or what can people do to keep their children in school longer so that they would be able to take advantage of the training program when they leave their community?

Mr. Munroe: Well, as I said right now what is happening at the present time and what has been happening over the past 100 years is the fact these people have been taken away from their homes for a period of 10 months and from their families and when they get old enough and they went into the home to carry on the responsibility of raising a family, they have to leave school.

What I am saying is that if the education is brought to the people in the community level and on the local level where they can have an opportunity to expand their education all the way up to grade 12—and especially if there was a grade 12—and to have some sort of up-grading courses in the community where it is requested; and there are people requesting this now to the organization; I think that you could solve a lot of the problems that are confronting this committee here.

Senator Belisle: Am I right in assuming that you would prefer to have the children educated in their own locality and not transported?

Mr. Munroe: Very definitely.

Senator Belisle: You are referring to elementary or secondary school?

Mr. Munroe: Elementary, secondary, vocational, business and what have you, business college. If you want. These things should be done right in the community.

Senator Belisle: Is it practical to have small community schools, for example, to have its own vocational, technical training centre? Do you have enough? We in Ontario try to centralize in order that we take advantage of facilities that are available to the large centres.

Senator McGrand: What is the population of one of the communities to which you refer? How many would it be, 1,000, 2,000? What would it be? What is the population of these communities?

Mr. Munroe: The population of the communities I am referring to would be between one and three thousand people and the small communities that the senator mentioned there, of course, would have to centralize somewhere but there would be an Indian agent and they would have hopefully, Indian instructors.

Senator McGrand: Now, what would be the skills that you think would be more suitable to the Indian? That seems to be the question—that the Indian should be permitted to carry on his old Indian culture and his old skills. What skills are there that you think would be suitable? Do you think the old skills of the Indian of 100 years ago would be suitable for the environment of today?

Mr. Munroe: Well, I do not know what you mean by "old skills". I have not seen any of these old skills you are talking about.

Senator McGrand: I have not either, but as I read this material that I ran across it seems that the Indian does not want to be incorporated in the Canadian way of life. He doesn't feel he is a Canadian. He feels he is a Indian living in Canada and that he has certain traditional cultures and that carry from certain traditional skills and he wants to preserve his way of life.

What skills would you teach him in this modern technology that will permit him to carry on his traditional way of life? I think that is very important.

Mr. Munroe: Well, one of the first skills I would teach him actually is the ability to get a better understanding of himself and to get a self-image. Once that has been achieved, all these other things, housing and all these other things will...

Senator McGrand: Come naturally.

Mr. Munroe: Come naturally.

Senator Everett: Mr. Munroe, I wonder if you could look at item d on the top of page 2. You talk about a supplement to the minimum wage. I wonder if you could expand how that might work?

Mrs. Betz: For instance, I have one fellow that is earning $50 a week. He is paying $80 a month rent and he has seven children. Now, how do you suppose this man is surviving and his family? Certainly they would have to have a supplemental income.

Senator Everett: I am very sympathetic to the situation and the fact that the minimum wage is insufficient especially when the family is large. All I am asking you is: by what method are you proposing to pay this supplement? You see the danger you run into. If you have a minimum wage that was dependent say on the number of children in the family or on the cost that the man has suffered, then an employer would select a man to whom the supplement would not be payable.

I recognize the supplement is necessary but I am asking you as to how the supplement should be paid?

Mrs. Betz: This would have to be paid by the province, possibly the welfare or something.

I know that this fellow I am talking about is very proud. He does not want to go on any type of assistance. I know he is not going to be able to manage. I can see it. I have six myself and I am having a heck of a time and both of us are working. He is the only bread earner in his family.

Senator Everett: So what you are suggesting is that if anybody were on the minimal wage for each child they had they could apply to the welfare or provincial government or some provincial government agency for an addition to the minimum wage in much the same way as the baby bonus is paid.

Mrs. Betz: Yes, I would because there are an awful lot here to consider now. These children are small yet but most children grow up. They are going to want the same things their neighbours want and that is where the breakdown occurs. It is because they have not enough to provide for the family. This is where the breakdown occurs.

This is the preventive part I am considering rather than X number of dollars per child. It is the breakdown the family has to go through by the time that all of the children reach the age of say 12 or 13. It costs you more money to keep the family going once you have them in the junior high level because they want things at that age and any family will try and give this.

This is what I mean, it is a breakdown in between and they are in a poverty-stricken area. There is going to be a breakdown in the family and here you are going to have a juvenile delinquent and, you know, who have the skill to get something, to have something, you know. This is where the breakdown occurs.

This is why we are living in a poverty-stricken area and there is an awful lot of this petty stuff, you know, of trying to get a little bit of excitement through a lot of nail polish remover and all these little things, hanging around in the pool halls. These kids are bumming off people on the street just for survival. This is the type of thing. That is what I mean.

Senator Everett: Can you tell me what, in your view, the minimum wage should be? I think it is $1.25 and this will be raised in November to $1.35. I would be interested to know what you think a fair minimum wage should be. Have you thought of that?

Mrs. Betz: I would say $1.65 or $1.85 would be sufficient.

Senator Everett: Is there a general agreement on that, $1.65 or $1.85?

One of the areas you mention here, you talk about the need for information and service centres. We are very very interested in that because time and again we seem to find that people who are by the law do not understand the law, do not even know it exists, do not know how to prosecute it, do not know how to get legal help.

I would be interested in knowing what specific ideas you have if any, and how these information service centres should work.

Mrs. Betz: Well, it would have to be someone possibly from the province, some real humanitarian that would be hired in these areas because a lot of these people living in these areas do not know how to do so many things and yet they want—. They give up after a certain point. This is what I am working with a lot, these people—. They just to get away from everything, will go out and get drunk. They don't care what happens to them because nobody cares. They have been kicked out of their place and they are moving from one place to the other.

These information centres could be useful to someone like this, you know, just gives them a lift.

It could be in regards to employment, recreation, exactly all the items we have recommended here. There are so many things that should be done in these areas that is lacking.

Senator Everett: Has your colleague something to say?

Mrs. Duggan: I was thinking about the young girls who come in from the reserves. They are uneducated. Of course, they do not know anything about the cities. They often wind up on Main Street or on the drag. Of course, they get into every sort of trouble you can imagine and these centres would certainly help these girls, you know, for information and education they need.

Senator Everett: How many do you think you would need in Winnipeg to do a proper job?

Mrs. Betz: Well, I would say four or five in the areas that I cover, in the slum areas where most of the Indians live. It takes in a big part of the downtown area, what we call the downtown area.

Senator Everett: How large a staff do you think each centre should have?

Mrs. Duggan: Well, I hadn't really thought about that but as you can see in the brief all the things we want to do.

Senator Everett: Should it include a lawyer?

Mrs. Betz: I beg your pardon?

Senator Everett: Should the staff include a lawyer?

Mrs. Betz: I think it would be a good idea to have a lawyer giving advice to it.

Mrs. Duggan: Yes.

Senator Everett: Thank you.

Senator Belisle: May I be permitted to ask another question?

The Chairman: Of course.

Senator Belisle: In Halifax and Charlottetown we had different views regarding education. We were told that in Halifax the environment of the child developed from three to five to six and his environment is made probably for part or all of his life. We were told that it would be good to have a kindergarten starting at four like the kindergartens in Ontario, Quebec and other provinces.

But we heard something from a social worker and especially a man who had a PhD in sociology who said there should not be any school before the age of seven or eight. Do you believe that or would you rather have kindergartens?

Mrs. Duggan: Yes, definitely. I believe children do need this education at this age but they also need a good environment. That has to go with the education with the day nurseries and the environment is what we want in the areas that they live in.

Senator Belisle: But your experience has been it is an asset to have a half day of school starting from four or five.

Mrs. Duggan: Well, we are starting to get day nurseries now. We do have one at the Centre that we have but it is not enough. There are hundreds of children that cannot be accommodated.

Senator Belisle: My final question is: if the environment of the home is not what it should be (and we are told that this is due to lack of proper education) where have we failed in our primary education to create an environment for them after they are out of school or to create the proper environment for their children.

Mrs. Duggan: Well, I guess it goes back to poverty, that somewhere along the way when people are forced to live in these areas—don't know—it leads there to delinquency in a lot of parents and drop-outs and broken homes and alcoholism goes with it on the parents' part. Just a lack of education, guess, in a lot of ways.

Senator Belisle: Thank you. I introduce the question and it was a delicate and difficult question and you did very well. Thank you.

Senator McGrand: This kindergarten to which you refer, do you have a kindergarten here?

Mrs. Duggan: No. It is a day nursery.

Senator McGrand: Do you have integration among Indian and White people in this kindergarten or are they exclusively for your Indian and Metis children?

Mrs. Duggan: Well, at our Centre we have here in Winnipeg it is just Indian and Metis. We could not possibly accommodate others.

Senator Connolly: Mr. Chairman, if I may ask a question?

The Chairman: Yes.

Senator Connolly: Am I correct and did I hear properly that Mr. Munroe said he preferred to have the children educated at home sites rather than be absorbed in the general education system elsewhere?

Mr. Munroe: Very definitely.

Senator Connolly: That is correct?

Mr. Munroe: That is what I said.

Senator Connolly: How then do you expect a child or children to realize that there is a world outside the world he has always known or an environment other than the one in which he was brought up.

Mr. Munroe: Because the type of education I had foreseen in the community I have described would not only include that particular small community but it would move out into the rest of the world. I never said for one minute it would be closed to that particular community. When you talk of education, education is a world, from what I understand.

Senator Connolly: I must say to you in all kindness I find myself in complete disagreement with you and I will tell you why.

Mr. Munroe: That is your privilege.

Senator Connolly: I think in the back of your mind it is a thought that the child might be subject to some humiliation by moving outside his own sphere into another sphere—and that may be true—but in the attainment of greater objectives, larger education, more general knowledge of the world and its people and its affairs, which he in turn could translate to his own people, isn't a little bit of humiliation worthwhile?

What about the poor people from all of the groups in this country who get by on scholarships for university, who wear poor clothes, who have to absorb the same sort of thing?

Mr. Munroe: Do you know what it is like to be humiliated?

Senator Connolly: Pardon?

Mr. Munroe: Do you know what it is like to be humiliated?

Senator Connolly: Oh yes. I have good reason to know.

Mr. Munroe: Okay.

Senator Connolly: I have personal reasons to know.

Mr. Munroe: My personal reaction to that particular statement would be to begin with I never said for one minute that a particular individual would be completely confined to that community for the rest of his life.

He would be in the community from which he could get a foundation from which he could move into greater society. I believe a lot of these people who come to the city do not have that foundation. They do not have any solid ground they can stand on and that is why they have a problem. That is why we get all these problems.

That is why we are here today with a brief on poverty, because people haven't got a leg to stand on.

If you can give them this leg to stand on when they are young and when they are small, no man or nobody in the world is ever going to stop them from taking their rightful place in society no matter where they are, and that is my concern.

That is the reason why I said take education to the people and you will see in 30 years a new Indian and a new Metis people.

Senator Connolly: I hope you are right but we are having so many diversifications with our people in this country that I become more fearful every day of the ultimate consequences. We forget we are all Canadians and we ought not to subdivide ourselves into cultures and isolate ourselves from our fellow Canadians no matter what our ethnic origins are.

It is a great mistake and this country will suffer if we continue to do this sort of thing. It doesn't matter whether we are English, Scotch, Irish, Catholic, Protestant, Jewish, Metis or Indian or whatnot, we will all suffer the same consequences.

Mr. Munroe: May I ask you this, sir? Who started all this? Who started all this subdividing?

Senator Connolly: That is not for the moment of importance. The fact is we should recognize it.

Mr. Munroe: That is where it starts. It started when somebody said "This is where I am. I am here" and "This person is over here". That is where it all began and as much as I hate it it is here. It is a reality. Now, what the hell are we going to do about it?

Senator Connolly: There is no use perpetuating it. What we have to do is to try and correct the law and not labour under real or imaginary injustices.

Senator Everett: Mr. Munroe, when you are talking about taking education to the Indian, you are not talking about making that education exclusively in their area?

Mr. Munroe: Definitely.

Senator Everett: You are contrasting now that the Indian children are taken from the reservation?

Mr. Munroe: Right.

Senator Everett: And brought to an Indian school many miles from their home community and then taken back again.

Mr. Munroe: Yes.

Senator Everett: You are talking about educational centres in the community or near the community?

Mr. Munroe: Right.

Senator Everett: But not exclusively for Indians?

Mr. Munroe: Oh definitely not.

Senator Hastings: That is not the curriculum for Indians.

Mr. Munroe: Well, sir, in communities where the majority of people would be Indian, I would suggest that you would have the curriculum to suit them that would be Indian; that would teach them something about their background that when some joe comes along and says "Well, you have nothing to be proud of" they can turn around and say "Like hell I have because I know" and that is the trouble with a lot of people. My own teacher was a priest. I was 15 years old. He says "Indians got nothing to be proud of. You have never done anything". I did not know at that time but I know better now.

Senator Fergusson: I have one question I would like to ask in a quite different area. I would like to say first that I am always delighted when we have senior witnesses who can appear before this committee and present very clear and informative briefs in which they show a great deal of knowledge and give interesting answers when they are questioned and I say to this group they have both given us an excellent brief and these people have answered the questions in a most intelligible way.

I do congratulate you for your presentation.

I think your suggestion regarding the Centre is very excellent. Whether we can do anything to help bring this about or not, I do not know. What my question was has nothing to do with what I have said but I am particularly interested in the fact that Mrs. Betz is a court worker for the Friendship Centre.

I would like to know if you are the only court worker, Mrs. Betz, and do you appear in court with people who are charged or are you just a social worker with these people?

I would like to go beyond that because I would like to ask if you feel there is any discrimination against Indian girls and Indian women? That is when an Indian girl or woman is arrested and charged, and perhaps convicted for an offence that if it were done by a White woman it might not result in a serious charge or the serious results for her?

Mrs. Betz: Well, you have so many questions here.

Senator Fergusson: I mostly want the last one.

Mrs. Betz: Yes. I am the only worker of Indian descent and because I speak the language as well, I am able to assist the court magistrates and the town prosecutors and lawyers.

These women we are talking about possibly are arrested and charged, you would have to consider them as the individual person which I always do. They are all individuals. Because they have committed some offence of possibly drunk on the street or intoxication, they are individuals, and this is how I work with them.

They at one time may have been repeaters but I still phone them up and work along with them and they know I become concerned with them so that even if they fall down again and get picked up again, then I will pick them up again.

Now, since I have worked there the police department has called before laying a charge in some instances. They have called me and I have talked to the person and I felt they had no grounds for it and they accepted this.

Senator Fergusson: Good.

Mrs. Betz: And I communicated with the legal aid. I used the legal aid so much. They don't like me when I call, what I am calling about. They say "Who is it" and "What is the charge".

I get an awful lot of free legal advice as well because there are people who are appearing in court that do not come under the legal aid so I still consult a lawyer and ask him "What is the right thing to do here?"

In fact I think possibly one of the lawyers—if a person can afford it, they will pay so much for the lawyer. If they cannot afford it then I will explain to the lawyer "This person is making $50 a week and he has seven children. We know he cannot possibly pay $250 to a lawyer to defend him", so I sort of feel around and see what I can find and then consult with this lawyer and see what can be done here; so that I am available every day.

I am there at all times. I have to go to the Law Courts Building occasionally to interpret as well, or sometimes a lawyer will say "You know, I have this client. I cannot make him understand me. We cannot defend him properly" so I go down and interview this person because I speak the language. I can get more information from the person and then give this advice to the lawyer so that...

Senator McGrand: May I ask you just what language do you speak, Cree?

Mrs. Betz: Sioux.

Senator McGrand: What is the language in the home of most Metis people?

Mrs. Betz: Sioux or Cree. Whichever they speak, it doesn't matter. It depends on the area where they come from. Maybe they come from an area where they speak a lot of Cree. Then invariably the family will pick it up but you are going to find an awful lot of the Indian children just speak English now, especially in the cities; although I came across one family that has lived in the city for three generations now and they still do not speak English.

Now, that is really surprising.

Senator Everett: Can you tell me how Legal Aid works in this province?

Mrs. Betz: Well, it depends on what the charge is. I think it has been a summary address or some conviction. This comes under the Legal Aid, free Legal Aid and Legal Aid have different counsels, different lawyers assigned to each day and each day they have two counsel on duty in the courts, in the Magistrate's Court and in the Law Courts Building it is a provincial court and they work for five days, I think two different lawyers who do five days a week. There are 10 lawyers assigned. They work for five days and then they turn around and we have another duty counsel on duty all the time.

They come in around noon, 12.30 to one o'clock or a quarter to two and the court starts at two o'clock so if a person is in custody, I think this is primarily the purpose of the Legal Aid. So many people have been held in custody, have lost their jobs, have lost their places, their establishments, their suites or houses by being held in custody three or four days at a time.

Now, there was one fellow that was held in custody for five months and then they found out, they stayed proceedings. Now, this is ridiculous for a party nine months in confinement, waiting for a trial and then a stay of proceedings.

He was just released and that is all.

The Chairman: Because he couldn't put up the bail?

Mrs. Betz: Because he couldn't put up $8,000 bail money.

Senator McGrand: You are in social work. What is your training in social work?

Mrs. Betz: That is one question I always avoid answering.

Senator McGrand: That is fine. I understand. What I mean is the work is mostly voluntary?

Mrs. Betz: No. I did voluntary work for seven years and then I got into this work.

Senator McGrand: Who pays you?

Mrs. Betz: Indian and Metis Friendship Centre.

Senator Everett: Are you pleased with the Legal Aid service you have just described?

Mrs. Betz: Yes, I am.

The Chairman: We have got a few minutes more. Does anyone have any questions they would like to ask?

Mr. Glassco: Mr. Chairman, I am a social worker. One of the senators raised a question of Human Rights Legislation. I think he said "Surely this exists in this province" and I just wanted to point out that unlike Nova Scotia, Ontario and possibly New Brunswick there is no Human Rights Commission in this province.

We do have legislation related to fair accommodation practices, fair employment practices but most of the social workers and most of the poor do not know this legislation exists and even though social workers who know it exists and try to get people to launch complaints in the courts as discriminatory practice, are unsuccessful because the onus is on the person who is the victim of discrimination to go into the courts to establish his case.

I just wanted to clarify this particular point. I think too that our practice has not given too much attention to instances related to discrimination. It is a condition that exists; that legislation will not improve attitudes of the public towards minority groups. I do not particularly agree with this.

There is another matter I would like to bring to the Committee's attention and I think this has some bearing in the federal field and that has to do with the practice of applying quotas to residents in housing projects. The thing is that everyone is interested in the success of public housing programs and so to have a quota for so many welfare recipients and perhaps you have a quota for so many persons of Indian or Metis background.

I think perhaps the Committee might make a real contribution here if they examine the quota practice in housing projects.

The Chairman: Mr. Glassco, you are knowledgeable on this. What do you suggest instead of the quota? As it is now they try to give everyone a fair shake in the best way they can. What do you suggest as an alternative?

Mr. Glassco: I do not think the quota was really set up—although it may have been originally set up as a fair shake. Mr. Chairman, I think it has come to be used as a way of having a successful quiet housing project.

I do not think that they should have a quota. I think that what should be done is that the people who apply and get on the list and get in for a vacancy, irrespective of whether they are on welfare or from ethnic backgrounds, should be allowed to go in and they should leave it to the people there and presumably the social workers to help them resolve these conflicts that may exist in the project.

Senator Belisle: May I ask a question of Mr. Glassco?

The Chairman: Yes.

Senator Belisle: Mr. Glassco, yesterday I had the opportunity of visiting the penitentiary. I mention this because you said you are a social worker. We were told that we were placing too much emphasis on education, educational degrees and not enough on the human approach of social problems by social workers. Do you agree with that thinking?

If a man does not qualify with a B.A. or a PhD we question him. Do you feel that we should place more emphasis on the ability to communicate?

Mr. Glassco: I believe that there is a role for many people in our society to play in the area of the social worker. I do not believe that all of the helping tasks that are required in welfare have to be carried out by highly qualified social trained personnel but I do believe that there are degrees of training in orientation here—even if you are talking about a person with a grade four education who could assume certain helping tasks.

I happen to work in an agency in which there are 24 local people employed, doing an excellent job, working as a team with highly trained professional social workers.

I think that the efforts here of both the experienced people working with knowledge of their own community and local conditions working as a team with the professional people, has proved to be very effective.

The Chairman: Senator Belisle, I thought Mrs. Betz, who is a graduate of a school of hard knocks, was a pretty good example of one who has not got a lot of diplomas but has an awful lot of common sense.

Senator Belisle: I agree, Mr. Chairman, with what she said.

The Chairman: This other school is very useful. Are there any other questions?

Mrs. Cree: I am a student of social welfare. I am interested in knowing if there are any programs right now on the reserves or in Winnipeg for people of Indian and Metis descent, because in my opinion, the present programs of service now available for the people are not sufficient. They are just little patchy efforts in proportion to the size of the Indian problem and the result is that industrial society is producing social mutations in these Indian people.

Now, the real problem is that these people have not integrated into their personalities more of the white population as far as the values of education and achievement are concerned.

Mr. Munroe: That is not our fault. At the present moment the Friendship Centres are trying to move away as much as possible from being a welfare agency, which is what we are, and becoming concentrated on more on programs of service to the community.

Some of the things we are working towards at the Friendship Centre is development and cultivation of leaders. We would like to take some social action on certain issues which we have not done (and none of the Centres in Canada has done) and very few agencies have taken it upon themselves to take a stand in these matters.

We are also working to get citizens in the community involved in what we are doing. Now, I can agree with you there are very few programs on the reserves in Indian communities that have any reality to the situation at hand and this is one of the tragedies of social workers when they find there is really nothing there for the people and I think maybe this is one of the reasons why they move them out very rapidly and direct them into the city.

But the Indian Brotherhood and I think maybe the Federation are working on this at the moment and trying to develop programs and courses that will have relevance to the communities and to the people that are in these communities at this time.

The Chairman: Thank you. Well, Mr. Munroe and ladies, we thank you for coming here and making this presentation and answering the questions that were put to you so well and so intelligently. You gave us a great deal of information of which we were not too well aware. This is all helpful and I hope that something of considerable value will result from this presentation that you made here this morning.

Thank you very much.

We will now hear from the Winnipeg Welfare Rights Movement. This is an organization of citizens receiving relief assistance. Members participating in meetings dealing with welfare problems, prepare briefs for governments and share information on welfare information and services. They do their own funding through their own memberships.

Mrs. Betty Carson, sitting on my right will introduce the delegation and tell us all about their activities.

Mrs. Betty Carson, Member, Winnipeg Welfare Rights Movement: Good morning, Mr. Chairman and senators. Ladies and gentlemen, it gives me great pleasure this morning to introduce to you on my extreme right Mrs. Hilda Towers, Chairman of the Welfare Rights Movement and on City Welfare. Mrs. Yvonne Putman to my extreme right who will give a case history of examples and receiving supplementary help from the Provincial Government. Mrs. Vivian Hales on low income and myself, Mrs. Betty Carson on Provincial Mother's Allowance.

Mrs. Hilda Towers, Chairman, Winnipeg Welfare Rights Movement: Thank you, Mrs. Carson. On behalf of the Welfare Rights Movement in Winnipeg I would like to present this brief to the Special Senate Committee on Poverty, taking into consideration concerns of the citizens of Winnipeg.

The purpose of this brief is to show the inconsistency in health and welfare programs sponsored by Municipal, Provincial and Federal Governments as they affect all people, who are existing on a poverty or below poverty level.

We would also like to make the public aware, that we, on welfare and in the low income bracket, are human and do not have to accept the status of a "Second-hand Rose".

We feel that the inconsistencies we will mention later on in this brief, and the bad image are unnecessary, unjust and undemocratic and want to make it clear to all that we no longer are prepared to take this lying down. We the "silent minority" are standing up—ready to take action.

Inconsistency:

Below you will find a list of inconsistent areas with which we are most concerned:

1. Municipal Welfare is one of the main concerns of the people. We find that some people applying for Municipal Welfare are pushed around by staff and Social Workers and get a raw deal. The rates of assistance seem to vary from person to person and Municipality to Municipality, unless by chance you are aware of your civil and legal rights you may find yourself eating grass and without a roof over your head. There is a definite lack of information for the people in this particular program, such as what you are entitled to and we would like to know WHY.

This situation has been discussed with many past, present and future recipients. For example, Mrs. B. Carson, Mrs. G. Stubbs, and Mrs. H. Towers have all been on City Public Welfare for three years or more, yet according to the Social Allowance Act all were and/or are eligible for a Provincial Mothers Allowance. The Social Allowance Act of Manitoba states that—"Social Allowance shall be paid only to—a person who—would be likely to lack the basic necessities and—has been deserted by her husband for a period of more than one year". These women should have been, after one year with the City Welfare Department.

2. Provincial Welfare has been discussed by the Welfare Rights Movement with many of the clients and staff of Provincial Department of Health and Social Services. We have found similar inconsistencies in rate, rights and treatment in spite of the fact that the Social Allowance Act, 1963/Manitoba, Section 3 states, "—the Government of Manitoba and each of the several municipalities in the Province may take such measures as are necessary for the purpose of ensuring that no resident of Manitoba, including an Indian as defined in the Indian Act (Canada), lacks

(a) such things, goods and services as are essential to his health and well-being, including food, clothing, shelter, and essential surgical, medical, optical, dental, and other remedial treatment, care and attention; and

(b) an adequate funeral upon his death."

We feel that the same service should be offered to all clients by the Provincial Welfare—equal rights to all. For example:

(1) Madam X and family are allowed to earn $40.00 per month with no deduction from her allowance. Madam Z at the same time, in the same regional office is only allowed $20.00 while her family is larger.

INCONSISTENCY.

(ii) The ladies on Provincial Welfare both served by the same office; one lady with 5 children is allowed $75.00 per month for rent whereas the other with only 2 children is allowed $100.00 THIS IS INCONSISTENT.

(iii) Mrs. A. on Provincial Welfare with 2 children requests information regarding the Social Assistance Act and Regulations. She was told that such information was not for the public consumption and anyone making available regulations governing amounts of assistance could possibly lose his job. Yet other staff and Regions make this information readily available as a democratic right.

MORE INCONSISTENCY.

(iv) We have had contact with several families who have had marital and other problems and these people have not received counselling or other help. As a result these families have no choice but to break up and at this point the Provincial Government was prepared to spend hundreds of dollars a month to keep the kids in foster homes—away from their natural parents. This money should have been invested in the natural family situation to keep the family together and prevent this criminal situation from happening. We as mothers deplore it.

The Federal Government is paying at least 50% of the total cost of all Welfare programs—yet do not seem concerned about how the public monies are spent or misspent. In paying 50% of the cost, the Federal Government is also inconsistent because they are supporting the inconsistencies previously mentioned.

Legal Aid Services have been reviewed by the Welfare Rights Movement and we find some inconsistencies in them. For example:

(i) Legal Aid (free) is denied many people on welfare and in the low income brackets while it is available to others if they can pull strings.

(ii) Legal services (paid). Many lawyers will not accept a legal case unless the client has a substantial income. Also, for the same type of case, a lawyer will charge one family as much as $500 more than another family. It is also inconsistent that while the Federal Government has relaxed the laws on divorce, yet it has not made it any easier for the people on assistance or in the low income bracket to bring their case to court.

The public should be made aware of inconsistent treatment towards people on Welfare.

and low income bracket. We the Welfare Rights Movement feel that if we don't have an adequate budget, we don't belong to society. The public, at times, looks down at us, our children and our families and this has serious implications on our pride, dignity and well being. The public seldom judges persons on welfare as an individual. The majority are made to suffer due to unfortunate problems of the few.

We question whether any group of individuals have the right to judge another's social behaviour anyway.

"Judge not lest ye be judged", but people on welfare and low income brackets always seem to be lumped together as cattle and many times are treated as such. WHY? For example:

(i) Mrs. G on Provincial Welfare, going to University, working part-time for a local curling club for the past 3 years and trying to raise 5 children, was introduced to a new manager. At his club Mr. Manager demanded that Mrs. G. address him as Mr. M. after he found out Mrs. G was a welfare recipient. Mrs. G gave no argument, providing he return the same courtesy and refer to her as Mrs. The manager refused to do this and fired Mrs. G. Was Mrs. G not entitled to the same respect? In the past, we have been forced to accept the status of a second class citizen and made to feel we are "charity cases". Are we to be denied the basic respect due to all Canadians? We don't think so.

Public Officials can make it or break it for people on welfare and low income bracket, by simply stating a biased or prejudice remark about the above people. A politician or a senior public servant has in his power to sway public opinion either constructively or in a destructive manner. These people can, by a simple rule or policy change, make life more comfortable or unbearable for a large number of people. For example:

(i) Why are these public officials not giving us the help we need? When we attend public meetings and raise grievances, the public official can rectify the situation the next day, for the individual raising the grievance. Why not all who have similar complaints? Should one man rule the lives of so many?

Public Servants, including hospitals and police, after being reviewed by the Welfare Rights Movement are inconsistent in their treatment of their poverty-poor citizens. They sometimes don't consider it necessary to act with the same speed or efficiency as they do the upper income? Do these people not require health services and protection, etc., on a consistent basis? Because they are on welfare or have limited income, they have to sit and wait until the police and hospitals are good and ready to serve. For example:

(i) Mrs. S on welfare with 5 children was recently incarcerated for the following reason. The husband of one of her neighbours was involved in a shoplifting offence. Because this woman had a brief superficial contact with this man, she had her house ransacked by the police (without a warrant). She was interrogated, put in a police line-up, only to find they were mistaken. There had been a mistake in identity.

We understand a policeman's job is difficult, but that it is meant to be difficult, to protect the rights of individuals. A policeman's job is only easy in a police state. It shouldn't make any difference what side of the track your home is on. All people deserve the same treatment by the law enforcers hired by them to protect them. On the other hand, we talked to other people on welfare who cannot have a policeman interfere with their fights even if one adult person in the family makes this request directly.

We understand that the police don't make the laws, and that health services are short of funds, but how many children and mothers have to suffer and in some cases die, before some real changes are made.

News media, which includes press, T.V., radio, are inconsistent in their dealings with low income people and people on welfare. Only the negative facts are publicized. These are the "facts" printed in bold ink. The average hard working soul seems to reach the press in three lines, "in the Obituary column". WHY?

Social Workers: All of the people under the Welfare system deal with Social Workers in one way or another. Here is another area that the Welfare Rights Movement finds a great inconsistency. A large majority of these workers don't care about their clients. They are programmed to avoid conflict and do not take any stand nor will they defend their client openly. Although intimately aware of the problems of the poor, they seem to be afraid to lash out and rock the boat of the establishment. Many social workers seem to have sold out on professional values to the status quo, and by their silence, are in effect saying that we live in the best possible world. We only (welfare and low income people) know that this is not the best possible world and invite Social Workers to join us in the war on poverty in a realistic and consistent basis.

Image (Second-Hand Rose): Why must people on welfare and low income be stuck with the image of a second-hand rose?

One reason the Welfare Rights Movement is involved in writing this brief is to assist people on welfare and low income bracket to rise above the negative image that has been unjustly created around them. In spite of the fact that a person is on welfare, they still maintain a certain amount of pride and dignity. Under this present system the pride and dignity of the individual is being crushed. People on welfare and low income bracket have been denied equality, individuality, choice and the right of choice. They are discriminated against in terms of color, race and creed, and financial and marital status of mothers alone. There is prejudice and discrimination simply because the word "welfare" is tacked on every aspect of daily living. People are not allowed to live individual private lives. We have been forced to accept this situation but cannot condone it. We believe that all men are entitled to equal human, civil, legal and welfare rights. I quote from the Canadian Bill of Human Rights, Statutes of Canada 1960, Chapter 44,

"It is hereby recognized and declared that in Canada there have existed and shall continue to exist without discrimination by reason of race, national origin, colour, religion or sex, the following human rights and fundamental freedoms, namely,

- (a) the right of the individual to life, liberty, security of the person and enjoyment of property, and the right not to be deprived thereof except by due process of law;
- (b) the right of the individual to equality before the law and the protection of the law;
- (c) freedom of religion;
- (d) freedom of speech;
- (e) freedom of assembly and association; and
- (f) freedom of the press."

Because there is a contradiction between reality and the Bill of Human Rights—that all people are supposedly equal but yet are not treated justly—is of prime importance to the Welfare Rights Movement.

People on Welfare and low income bracket are the same as men anywhere, have the same needs and command the same respect and individuality regardless. Society and the Welfare Rights Movement cannot tolerate injustice.

Solutions: The Welfare Rights Movement is involved in what we feel to be immediate and tentative solutions to the problem we have described. We also have some suggestions as to a long term and permanent solution.

We intend to obtain information and provide a pamphlet on Welfare Rights, this is, rules and regulations concerning the specific welfare programs, their eligibility requirements, their rates, etc., and have this readily available and accessible to people on welfare and low income bracket. Thereby eliminating the fear and oppression of the unknown.

The Welfare Rights Movement also listen to people's grievances as they pertain to welfare rights and will stand behind these people as they deal with agencies, institutions, etc.

We intend to establish two-way communication with policy-makers at all Government levels, so that the consumer of welfare services gets a fair deal.

We are prepared to take whatever action is necessary to enforce the "Bill of Human Rights" and more specifically the welfare legislation of the Province.

We intend to assist people on welfare and low income bracket to obtain the rights to negotiate their annual wage—on a regular consistent basis. Money is an important factor and people have a right to voice their opinion as to how much they need. For people on welfare there is no regular compensation for a yearly cost of living increase and for other necessities of life. For example, winter clothing and appliances. If people have the right to negotiate their annual wage and allowance this would be the first step in eliminating the poverty situation as it is. We shall be approaching people about the following long term solutions;

An insured credit rating: People on welfare and low income bracket are capable of handling credit as anyone if protected from exploitation. Government should be involved in the controlling of this.

The exploiters of human misery: Some landlords, some lousy businessmen, should be black listed. We will be approaching people about dealing with this undemocratic situation.

We shall be approaching the educational system to insure better educational opportunities.

ties and want to be involved in the development of a realistic program for people on welfare and low income bracket and their children. Our children representing our future Canada, should be our prime investment.

We want, in the very near future, a guaranteed annual income on a sliding scale and geared to the size of family for all Canadians. This would insure positive human rights to all and would avoid the very purpose of this brief, that is, to eliminate the inconsistency of the present-day welfare system.

We also feel that this is a democratic country and people should be assisted and encourage to use their democratic rights so they may realistically be involved in the events that shape their future.

A quote from Tom Eagle's presentation to the Premier and Cabinet of the Province of Manitoba on August 14, 1968, is very descriptive of our feelings: "(People) without hope, resigned to despair and oppression, do not make revolutions. It is when expectations replace submissions, when despair is touched with the awareness of possibility, that the forces of human desire and the passion for justice are unloosed." Thank you.

Mrs. Yvonne Putman, Secretary, Winnipeg Welfare Rights Movement: This is my own representation to the Special Senate Committee on Poverty, attention of Mr. Michael Lague.

I would like to express my own family's experience on some of the major problems that have confronted us as a family. The first being against my children being called legitimate. Of this I feel very strongly, for these children are truly wanted, so how can we call or label them in society as legitimate.

The second problem is that of abuse in being shifted through city and provincial welfare offices from one place to another. Do you now what it feels like to walk in, sign a paper and you are put on the road and then they assume no more responsibility to you or our children? I have had this happen, gentlemen. I have even been threatened in a Provincial Welfare office. And thirdly there is this Canada Man-power Relocation Grants. You see I have experienced depression, loss of belonging in one province or the other and no place to turn in a time of desperate need. I came to Winnipeg August 31, 1967 to 1005

Burrows Avenue looking for two things for our family; one security and the second a chance to settle down and belong first as a Canadian citizen and second as a mother with two small children.

We ran into difficulty at the worst time of the year in the early part of February. My husband was out of work after only five months. We did not have residence. Where do you turn at times like these?

We were told that we didn't belong in Winnipeg and why should they help us. We called on one Stanley Knowles N.D.P., Winnipeg North. We had one letter. How can you wait for months on end.

Manpower only looked after you until your Grant was complete, after that no help morally.

My husband was told in a welfare office to go looking for work so he left to go to Prince Rupert, British Columbia. Columbia Cellulose. How did he get back? Well, the Manpower wouldn't help him. You see he had 21 years in a paper mill. I felt that this is his potential to bring his income to a point where he could make a decent living. Well the Salvation Army sent him to Edmonton and again the Salvation Army paid his way home to his family in Winnipeg.

If there are not social injustices and a good example that we need special focus on these problems, then I do not know why I am writing this down on paper. I have faced small problems since I was 17 but after twenty years I feel I must speak out and what better place than here.

Violence will not achieve what people are after. It will have to be the people speaking out against all injustices whether they are big or small.

General Outline on Poverty

In preparing this brief and the guidelines on poverty I have reached these conclusions:

1. It definitely depends on where you live. In living in Winnipeg I have found that most poor people live in Ghettos with very little help to do something about it. They have no hope except to wait for changes.

2. Secondly I find that some Provinces are better off than others either through power or finances.

3. Thirdly there are two kinds of poor people; (a) there are people who live on the border of poverty either because of a low income or debts or both (b) then there are the really poor people such as some of our citizens in our fair city who look to lanes with garbage cans to find a soup bone to take home and have something to eat.

People who are on welfare are definitely looked down upon in their community. As soon as they find out you are on welfare they don't even know you. I would say origin has nothing to do with it. If you are poor it doesn't matter because something is definitely wrong in Canada.

I think a good long look at the different provinces and how each Province treats its poor would be needed before we could clarify this situation.

I would like to see incentive given to the provinces most needing it and more backing by the Federal level so that the Province would work much closer with the poor and help to give these human beings the chance to really live in this Canada that we all call home. I have seen children in Winnipeg with barely enough clothing to get through the winter and it's cold here which means it costs more for winter clothing.

I have given my dinner to someone who had less than I have in a restaurant and, gentlemen, I am poor. It is my reasoning that as long as people lack the essentials of life there will be ignorance and poverty growing to such an extent that there will be no controlling it and God help us all then.

We must do something now while there is time to change this ugly state of poverty.

Senator Hastings: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the witness would turn to page 11. I am quite sympathetic with this section on education personally. You say

We shall be approaching the education system to insure better educational opportunities and want to be involved in the development of a realistic program for people on welfare and low income bracket and their children.

I do not think there is a more glaring example where we must attack poverty than in education. I think personally it is the greatest contributor to poverty and I am in complete sympathy with this.

I would like to ask you when you say "you are going to develop a realistic program", what do you envisage in a realistic program?

Mrs. Towers: I would like to ensure our children are eligible and that they have a knowledge, that they will be able to attend university and get a good education. I do not want to see my children go on welfare when they get older.

Senator Hastings: You are not criticizing the curriculum. You want the opportunity?

Mrs. Towers: Right. We feel we have the same rights to the same opportunities as you or anybody else in this room and just because we are on welfare, we are not entitled to this.

Senator Hastings: After the last war the Government of Canada invested a great deal of money in the veterans to complete their education and I think it has been proven beyond a doubt that this money was returned to the people of Canada by increased earning power of these veterans.

Now personally I would like to see an incentive to a student on welfare or from a poor area to stay in school. I am not thinking of $10 a month. I am thinking of a weekly allowance of say $18 a week provided he stays in school and obtains his mark and that would be enough money so he could clothe himself and have a little spending money to maintain his standard with other student and give him a sense of participation.

What would be your thoughts on that?

Mrs. Towers: Senator, we would like to see it too, because I know for one I would like to see my children as well dressed as the next and not have to feel humiliated because happen to be on welfare because we are there because we have no other choice. It would either go to welfare or starve.

Senator Hastings: Would that incentive of meaningful weekly allowance be enough?

Mrs. Towers: Well, in terms of clothing they are quite expensive. That would have to be based on the yearly rise.

Senator Hastings: I am not thinking of the amount. I am thinking of the principle.

Mrs. Towers: It would be a start. It would be a start, I feel. How do you girls feel about it?

Mrs. Carson: I think I feel most children leave school because they are embarrassed at the clothing they have to wear and also they feel they are a burden to their parents so they want to get away from the home and go out and work and by getting work and by getting money they are going to help the parents. This would be keeping them in school.

Senator Hastings: Do they leave school to help their parents or do they leave school because of the rejection of society?

Mrs. Carson: I think it is a little bit of both.

Senator Fergusson: There was one question I was interested in on page 11 under paragraph 6.9. "We want, in the very near future, a guaranteed annual income on a sliding scale and geared to the size of family for all Canadians."

This assumption I found a little puzzling because I thought we really accepted it in Canada that people should be paid at the rate for their job. You know, women have been requesting equal pay. It is based on that. They should be paid according to the job they do.

In this case you are recommending that the guaranteed income is on a sliding scale.

Mrs. Carson: I think the sliding scale here meant, Senator, due to the fact of the increase of food, the cost of living. That is what we mean by the sliding scale, I think.

Senator Fergusson: It says here "Geared to the size of the family".

Mrs. Towers: Yes, geared to the size of the family.

Senator Fergusson: I see. I see. I guess I misunderstood it.

Mrs. Towers: You see, every year food goes up, clothing goes up and our cheques stay where they are. In fact we are due for a raise now.

Senator Fergusson: On page 4 you mention that three women, Mrs. Carson, Mrs. Stubbs and Mrs. Towers have all been on City Public Welfare for three years, yet—"if you wanted to say, that they apparently would have been entitled to get the Provincial Allowance. Would that have been a higher rate if they had gotten the Provincial Allowance?"

Mrs. Towers: Yes, ma'am and it's not apparent. They are entitled.

Senator Fergusson: They are entitled?

Mrs. Towers: Right.

Senator Fergusson: Well, I see. If they were getting it, they would be getting more than they were getting under the social allowance?

Mrs. Carson: Yes.

The Chairman: Were they given a choice?

Mrs. Towers: No, sir. I was never given a choice. I am on City Welfare and have been there for three years and I should have been on Provincial Welfare two and a half years ago.

The Chairman: Did they say to you: "Take one or the other"?

Mrs. Towers: I never heard a word. I asked the question. I never heard. Nobody offered to even stick me on there.

Mrs. Carson: Senator, I was on City Welfare and in order to get on the Provincial Welfare program I have to go down and apply for it myself. I think we should be automatically taken over by the Provincial Government without us having to go down to apply for it ourselves.

Senator Belisle: Mr. Chairman, I got by-passed but I have a few questions.

The Chairman: Yes. Mrs. Towers, in connection with this welfare, are you aware that there is such a thing as an appeal procedure?

Mrs. Towers: Yes, we are.

The Chairman: Tell us how it works.

Mrs. Towers: I wish I knew.

The Chairman: If you are aware—

Mrs. Towers: We are aware that it exists but to my knowledge there is only one case that has gone before the Provincial Welfare and that was—before any welfare I should say—and that was some time last week when one of our group members made an appeal to the Board in the St. Boniface Welfare Department and that is the first known case I have ever heard of, that somebody has appealed.

Mrs. Carson: The point is, Senator, while we are appealing, where do you get your money from while a case is going through? It takes two or three months. Who is going to pay you in the meantime?

The Chairman: They do not come off their assistance?

Mrs. Carson: Yes, they do. In some cases they do.

The Chairman: You mean if you appeal they take you off your allowance on welfare?

Mrs. Towers: It depends on the circumstances. This woman here—the welfare worker accused her of living with her husband—which she wasn't doing and they cut her off of welfare. For three months this woman received no welfare so she decided she was going to fight this thing rather than sit in a corner and be a mouse and so she did. She appealed. She has won her case. She is now back on welfare.

The Chairman: It is all right to leave your husband?

Mrs. Towers: No, no. What I am saying is she won her case. Regardless of that she was put back on welfare and these facts that were mentioned and stated against her were not so at all. She was not living with him.

The Chairman: And now that the door has been opened in that the only appeal that has been taken has been won by you (and you are very knowledgeable on what is going on from the brief you have put in and so are your girls who are here) does that not leave an avenue for you to correct some of the immediate evils?

Mrs. Towers: We hope so, Senator, but a lot of people are not aware of their rights and people are not aware that there is such a thing as an appeal board or a Welfare Rights Movement.

Mrs. Carson: I think you must realize too that people on welfare have a fear of being cut off their allowance immediately so therefore they just sit back and take whatever is given to them without mentioning anything.

The Chairman: We have heard that too.

Senator Everett: I wonder if I could ask a question from a member of the audience? I would like to ask a question of a member of the audience.

The Chairman: Certainly.

Senator Everett: I would like to address my question to Mr. Glassco.

I understand, sir, that from your introduction on the previous brief that you are a social worker. I notice that in this brief and in so many briefs we have received, the people who are on welfare complained that they cannot get proper information. They do not know what is going on. They do not know what to do about it.

Certainly that is a terrible indictment of the professional social worker and the way in which social agencies are doing their job.

Mr. Glassco: I do not know why you called me down here to answer this question. I think the answer is obvious. Yes, I think it is a terrible indictment in terms of the commitment we have made in our profession.

I think that—I cannot answer that question. I think the answer is obvious. Of course, it is a terrible indictment.

Senator Everett: What do you believe should be done about it?

Mr. Glassco: I believe that we should be doing some of the things that we are doing about it now. I think that we do bring people together, that we do try to inform them of the regulations and rules under Social Allowance Act. I think there are more answers but I think also you have to recognize that the professional and social worker does work in the system. He works in a system that limits his knowledge and his techniques and his skills and somehow there has to be a way in which a social worker can practise which allows him greater latitude to apply his knowledge and skills for which he has been trained.

In other words by working within the social allowance system or the child welfare system then my knowledge and my skills are prescribed by that particular legislation and so in order for me to really get into the whole system or to have a broader scope for my professional practice, I have to have the kind of conditions that will allow me to do this.

Senator Everett: What sort of conditions do you think are necessary?

Mr. Glassco: I think the whole idea we earlier suggested of the information centre where, if you had lawyers and social worker working there, and somehow the financial arrangements were more flexible where the social worker could say "All right, I will help this person with counselling," but in order to help them achieve a certain goal I also need funds and somehow funds have to be available and the accountability has to be there too.

To some extent it has to be divorced from the present kind of welfare system we have.

Senator Everett: In other words there has got to be more judgment exercised at the firing line, so to speak—

Mr. Glassco: That is right.

Senator Everett: And less at the legislative level?

Mr. Glassco: Yes.

Senator Everett: And the bureaucratic level.

Mr. Glassco: Exactly. If you want to bring the people and the professional practitioners together, this is what should happen.

Senator Everett: Thank you, Mr. Glassco.

Mr. Glassco: You are welcome.

Senator Belisle: May I be permitted to say this is a very good brief and there is a lot of meat in it but I am inclined to think there is some political connotation in it as well.

My question will be: on page 6, which is referring to divorce, you say,

It is also inconsistent that while the Federal Government has relaxed the laws on divorce, yet it has not made it any easier for the people on assistance or in the low income bracket to bring their case to court.

I was a member of the Senate Special Committee on Divorce that studied and brought this legislation about which I call a very liberal piece of legislation.

My question is this: I am informed that in Ontario you can get a divorce for approximately $100. I am not a lawyer but I would like to have a licence to practice. But, is that too much?

Mrs. Towers: Approximately for how much?

Senator Belisle: $100.

Mrs. Towers: $90?

Senator Hastings: $100.

Senator Belisle: Less than $100.

Mrs. Towers: Where?

Senator Belisle: In Ontario?

Mrs. Towers: In Ontario?

Mrs. Carson: May I interject here?

Senator Belisle: The reason I am asking this is that you want everybody to raise the rates to assist the poor so the poor can have a raise. We must assist also in thinking that others should have some too. I think that lawyers who charge less than $100.

Mrs. Putman: May I please interject here. I have just received a divorce decree from Ontario in April of this year and I was sent by the Welfare Department in London, Ontario to apply for legal aid, free legal aid.

Now, all I had to do was fill out a paper with my income for the month. I was passed through to the free legal aid society. I was given a choice of lawyers to go to so I could obtain my divorce.

I was sent from the Welfare. They do not do that in Manitoba. Why is it not statutory across the country? Why from province to province?

Mrs. Towers: This is our biggest beef, Senator, is the fact that you go down to what is called free legal aid and they tell you in so many words "Get lost. You are on welfare. We do not want nothing to do with you." Welfare will not pay for your divorce. What are you supposed to do?

Senator Belisle: Evidently you do not agree with me because she got one through legal aid.

Mrs. Towers: Yes, but that was through Ontario. This is Manitoba.

Mrs. Putman: This is what my point is. Why is it good for Ontario and it is not good for Manitoba. Why should it not be the same across the country?

Senator Belisle: I only live in Quebec.

Mrs. Putman: My divorce never cost me one red cent.

Mrs. Towers: There is no such thing as free legal aid here in Manitoba for people on Welfare.

Senator Everett: I am most interested in that because I think from each brief that has been presented we have been given a different view of legal aid. As a matter of fact I have been asking questions on the subject. I would like to know what you understand the legal aid system in Manitoba to be.

Mrs. Towers: Well, as far as I understand about free legal aid it is for people that have a limited income or are on welfare can come down and get legal advice or get a separation through a given lawyer because this has happened to me to get a separation. This is all it has covered.

Now why should I after three and a half years of separation have to live alone or else live common law, which is very distasteful to me. Why cannot I go to free legal aid and say "Look I have got reasons. My husband deserted me. I would like to have a divorce so that maybe—just maybe—I might be able to find somebody else rather than go out and live common law".

Senator Everett: Have you gone and asked them those questions?

Mrs. Towers: Well, certainly, but they don't give divorces.

Mrs. Carson: I have also applied for a divorce there. They said they just will not accept a divorce through free legal aid because the first time the divorce laws came there they found there was about fifty million people down there the first day trying to apply for a divorce through legal aid.

Senator Belisle: May I make a comment on this? It is my information and Senator Croll is also so informed, that you do not need a lawyer in Ontario to have a divorce. You can go through the District Court, the County Court or the District Court clerk and get a divorce.

Senator Everett: You do not have to have a lawyer in any court.

The Chairman: Let us get this thing settled here now. Senator Everett and I have been making some inquiries about this very business of divorce because we have heard evidence here yesterday and today about it. We are informed by a very intelligent and a very capable woman who gave evidence here this morning—and we questioned her—that they do provide divorces for people on Welfare here through the legal department or do give them legal aid free of charge. I do not know for whom or for why. She told us that is what they did.

Mrs. Towers: More inconsistency.

Senator Everett: I would suggest this, Mr. Chairman, that the legal aid in this province should make a clear public statement as to what they will and will not do and that statement should be carried by all the news media and by the various social agencies so that at least people do understand what they have in mind because if nothing else is clear, nobody in this province appears to understand what their rights are under the legal aid system.

I think until we understand that, it is very difficult to rectify the wrongs. I would strongly suggest that that be done.

The Chairman: It seems to me, Senator Everett, from the evidence we have had before us,—despite the fact we saw that lady ourselves—the evidence appears to be it is not available in the ordinary course of application.

That is the evidence and if the Law Society are prepared to accept that and the lawyers are prepared to accept that, it is then up to them but that is all we can do for the moment.

I am sure that somebody will hear about it very quickly and it will probably be you because you live in Winnipeg and you will convey it to us.

Senator Everett: I will indeed. I suspect they may make a statement.

Senator Belisle: I would like to ask another question.

The Chairman: Yes.

Senator Belisle: And it is a pleasure for me to ask this one. On page 3.8 "News media which includes press, T.V. and radio are being inconsistent—". In other words, not only the Government but they are also inconsistent. "—in their dealings with low income people and people on Welfare. Only the negative facts are publicized. These are the 'facts' printed in bold ink. The average hard working soul seems to reach the press in three lines, 'in the Obituary Column'. WHY?"

Well, could you elaborate on that? That is quite a crude statement.

Mrs. Towers: I beg your pardon?

Senator Belisle: Could you elaborate on that?

Mrs. Towers: Well, Senator, we have held meetings and we have invited a lot of people in government and we have invited the press and T.V. You want to know who gets the coverage; the big shots! They get columns and columns. We get about three or four lines.

You know what I mean like. You know, we feel this is not right. We are entitled to a column, you know, the same as you.

The Chairman: You have got company Vice-President Agnew is complaining too.

Mrs. Towers: Yes, but this is not only the point too. I mean, when it comes down to the bare facts people on low income—. If you are, you know, a bit shot walking down the street and he has had it up to here already and the man in the low income bracket, he is not doing any too bad either—it is always the people in the low income bracket that are slandered for being a little tipsy, you know and this is where they come down. They say three-quarters of the per cent of alcoholism is in the low income bracket. What about the boys up in the higher one? Don't tell me they are all teetotalers.

The Chairman: If you are in the low income bracket you are drunk. If you are in the high income bracket you are inebriated.

Mrs. Towers: Right.

Senator Belisle: In other words the well-to-do man if he is locked up here he is an alcoholic and the other man is a drunk.

Senator Hastings: Can I ask you, Mrs. Putman, one question. You say, Mrs. Putman, that "Thirdly there is this Canada Manpower Relocation Grant".

I gather you have had some experience. Can you tell me what that is?

Mrs. Putman: Well, I was buying a little house in Fort William, Ontario and unfortunately there is not much industry there any more, except two paper mills and Canada Car so my husband couldn't find steady work there. Welfare told him to take his unemployment cheque and look for a job. So he came to Winnipeg which I didn't want to do in the first place. He found a job two hours after he got off the bus and three weeks later the children and I came out.

We signed off our property because we couldn't keep it then. We were here exactly five months and he was laid off. This was a bad winter, you know, the place he was working, so we had to go and apply for Welfare.

We were told by a certain alderman we did not qualify in the City of Winnipeg. We were not residents. Now, where do you go at a time like this? You do not have money to go back to where you came from and you must fall back on these people.

Senator Hastings: You say "Thirdly is this Canada Manpower Relocation Grant." From the way I am reading it...

Mrs. Putman: I am not against the grant itself provided there was a stipulation there that a job is permanent, at least for a year, to give you a chance to settle down in one place.

Senator Hastings: You did get a Relocation Grant?

Mrs. Putman: Yes.

Senator Hastings: And you moved to Winnipeg?

Mrs. Putman: Yes. As soon as that was finished the trouble started. You know, it was fine till the grant was finished and then we had absolutely nothing to fall back on except his pay that was coming in because we had bought furniture to help us get started here and this is the only time—

I think there should be a stipulation in these grants that unless there is a guarantee of a year's work that you leave people where they are. I do not think it is fair to the family.

Senator Hastings: I would think one of the regulations would be permanent employment.

Mrs. Putman: This is what we thought at the time.

Senator Hastings: I would not think they would move a family for a temporary employment. I would think that would be one of the basic requirements. A man must have permanent employment when you relocate him.

The Chairman: They were helped to move but it just happened to be bad luck all around.

Mrs. Putman: Yes.

The Chairman: What sort of job was it?

Mrs. Putman: Well, it was supposed to be permanent employment.

The Chairman: Yes, but what kind of job was it?

Mrs. Putman: It was at Sheermac Industries.

The Chairman: Did something happen to the industry?

Mrs. Putman: No, it was just a slack winter.

The Chairman: They were trying to help.

Well, we have got about five or seven minutes left.

Senator Everett: On page 11 of your brief, Item 6, you talk about an insured credit rating. Can you tell me what you have in mind more specifically.

Mrs. Towers: Well, sir, I figure I am just as good as anybody else, but when I go to Eaton's and ask for credit, they say, "Fine, what is your name? Where do you work?" "I am on Welfare". Forget it.

Why can I not get credit because I am on Welfare. I ask you. I pay my bills. Why can't I get it.

Senator Everett: I do not know why you cannot get it.

Mrs. Towers: I do not know either.

Senator Everett: What I am interested in knowing is what you are specifically suggesting to overcome this problem.

Mrs. Towers: Anybody any suggestions?

Mrs. Carson: Did you ask why?

Senator Everett: No, I did not ask why. I can understand why. Especially if you pay your bills I can understand why. What I want to know is if you have any ideas on how you can achieve an insured credit rating.

You say you should have an insured credit rating. People on Welfare should have an insured credit rating and the Government should be involved in the controlling of this. All I am asking you is: have you any suggestions?

Mrs. Carson: Yes. I would suggest maybe our Provincial Welfare Department back us up because I think we have got a better credit rating than anybody because they know it is going to come off our cheque if we do not pay our bills.

Senator Hastings: You are saying the Welfare Department should give a guarantee...

Mrs. Carson: Right.

Senator Everett: ...to credit granting agencies?

Mrs. Carson: Yes. This was also, you know, help us to buy our clothing when it goes on sale because we do not always have money when the sale is on.

Senator Everett: I am sure that would be very important.

Mrs. Towers: Yes.

The Chairman: Actually there are two stores in New York, large stores, that do provide some credit rating for people on Welfare and have an arrangement with the Welfare Department in order, as Mrs. Carson suggests, these ladies will be able to buy on sale and at other times. I do not know the exact details of what is involved.

Senator Everett: Presumably that is the sort of arrangement you are talking about between the Welfare Department and the major departmental stores?

Mrs. Towers: That is right.

The Chairman: I would just hate to be the Welfare Department that had to take something from one of their cheques because that is part of their pay.

Mrs. Carson: May I ask you something?

I can appreciate the research you people do. I can appreciate the hearings that you have allowed us to attend. I would like to know why you have not taken some of the government officials and given them one of our substandard houses, and given them the income (we have had to live on) and since this will not be finished until 1970, how about starting the people in 1970 and let them live in our circumstances for one year.

The Chairman: Well, of course, we are trying to change your circumstances as quickly as we can.

Now, we have got a few minutes. We have got a very tight schedule. Are there any questions from the audience?

Mrs. Altemeyer: Yes, senator. I have been at the hearing this morning and last night and for part of the time yesterday afternoon. I have also had some contact with your people beforehand. We are faced with this contradiction. We had a meeting with your liaison officers and we suggested to them that many people that will be appearing before you can give you individual instances of poverty and individual reasons for their particular case but that you yourself are already in a good position. You have indicated in your speech in the Senate you have a fair idea of the nature of the problem and on a much broader scale.

A quote that is almost directly what you said early last year in the Debates on the creation of this Committee was that "We have had 20 years of continuous economic upsurge and yet we still have this poverty".

We suggest the reasons for poverty are not really the sums of individual reasons why this particular person is poor but there are structural reasons. We suggested that there should be some sort of dialogue between you and the poor people.

You are trying to explain to us why we have this 20 years of continuous economic upsurge and why we are continuing to have all these sort of problems and why we have resources, human resources, industrial resources, all sorts of resources going idle; why our economic priorities are decided the way they are; why this economic structure creates these problems and your liaison officer suggested: "Yes, indeed, perhaps there could be some sort of exchange".

We know full well that you have a broad idea of poverty in this country. We know full well there are structural reasons. Perhaps your studies of it would give you some idea just exactly what these are. I think we have hit upon the reason for this Committee from your earlier speeches on the Senate Committee.

You said "A great struggle is beginning and that those people who have been using power for their economic benefits had better watch it".

You even admitted the people who have a rising—or combining together the poor and minority groups and you included students that they would have a good cause. I assure you they will and I do not think that going around letting people think that they are engaged in participatory democracy when you are not willing to engage in any kind of dialogue, a two-way thing, and you are going around trying to explain why you have these 20 years of continuous economic upsurge and yet we have these immense problems.

I do not think you are going to succeed in fooling the people for too long.

The Chairman: Well, I would just like to say that certainly we can see the poor people here yesterday and today and we are carrying on a dialogue with them. We are trying to find out some of the reasons for poverty, what suggestions they make as to how it can be alleviated or how it can be eradicated.

Mr. Altmeyster: May I ask you a supplementary question. Why C is on poverty?

Do you think those reasons all combined are the reasons or do you believe the reasons are that we have to avoid inflation and that means we have got to have our unemployment rate at 5% or 6%? Which are the reasons? Because individual people are poor together or because we have an economic system that has to have unemployment?

The Chairman: Well, poverty has many causes, many climes. We are not at all too sure what those causes are and that is one of the reasons that we are a fact finding committee and we are trying to find out.

The people that tell us that you ought to know all about poverty, why do you come and ask us are mistaken. We do not know all there is to know about poverty so we are bringing in people who come here on their own volition.

They say "We are part of the system that is not benefiting from the wealth of this country", and we have carried on a dialogue with them.

Now, it is rather difficult, you know, for even senators to try and carry on a dialogue with a million people who are, at the present in one way or the other, within the welfare system. There are approximately that number. We have not the exact figures so we try and what we have done is to go out in the country and try to see if we cannot find a formula for approaching these people.

Actually in Vancouver, we are trying out a different formula than we have tried here and when we have tried them all out we will sit down and decide which is the best way for us to make an approach to the poor people particularly. We know how to meet these other people.

Mr. Altmeyster: You can begin by telling us why there is so much unemployment.

The Chairman: I cannot hear you.

Mr. Altmeyster: You can begin by telling us why our economic system requires an awful lot of unemployment.

The Chairman: If I knew that I wouldn't be here. I can assure you of that. If I could tell you that—and I can't get the answer from anybody else so do not ask me—it is not that easy, but, of course, if anybody has the answer I will be glad to listen.

Mr. Altmeyster: It is a capitalistic system.

The Chairman: Are there any more questions from the audience?

From the Floor: I would like to address my question to Mrs. Towers. I wonder if she would have any suggestions according to her brief—I do not know it word by word—but it is something about the government is ready to spend hundreds and hundreds of dollars after the children have scattered from their natural homes.

Mrs. Towers: Yes.

From the Floor: Do you have any suggestions to keep the family together and persuade the government to spend money on that family?

Mrs. Towers: We would suggest a guaranteed annual income for the natural family. This would keep children out of foster homes. A lot of these children are placed in foster homes for the simple reason there just is not enough money; which causes conflict and drinking and a lot of other things; but if they had enough money these things could possibly if not all be eliminated—a good portion of them could be and the family would be helped and kept together.

We feel the family kept together is more important.

From the Floor: I agree with you and I wish further to encourage you to write perhaps a letter to Prime Minister Trudeau and state your brief to him.

Mrs. Towers: Do you think he would understand? He hasn't got any kids.

Mrs. Greenlace: Senator Croll, I am a mother living on the Mothers Allowance. There is one point I wish these women had brought out more clearly. Once our children are all in school and we are able to work part-time, we are discouraged from doing it. We are encouraged to remain at home on welfare instead of helping ourselves.

Why cannot we be urged to help ourselves or allowed to help ourselves.

Mrs. Carson: We are only allowed a guaranteed income of $20.

Mrs. Towers: We are only allowed to make $20 a month.

Mrs. Greenlace: Why cannot we make $100.

Mrs. Towers: Right. Anything over that comes off our cheque.

The Chairman: Mrs. Greenlace you were not before the Committee in the other room were you?

Mrs. Greenlace: No, I was not.

The Chairman: Well, of course, that question has been raised on many occasions particularly from the welfare group, that they are not permitted to go out and earn money up to a certain amount, a very small amount. I think they said $20 is free and then there are deductions.

Mrs. Greenlace: Yes.

The Chairman: Some more inconsistencies. Under other laws they do permit 50-50 up to a point. That point has been made and we think it is quite unfair.

Mrs. Greenlace: I think this would reflect on the children. Any extra money that a mother earned would keep these children in school.

The Chairman: I will tell you what is likely to help a woman with children. There are a great number of them in this country. If you have noticed the possibility of the White Paper makes a possible allowance for a woman of up to four children of $500 each for day care or some other sort of care so she can get out to work. Well that may be helpful and come in quite handy.

Mrs. Greenlace: It might for the ones who wanted to go to work initially. For those who want to work and who are on welfare we are discouraged all the time.

The Chairman: You have a point on that matter, madam. We will take note of it.

From the Floor: As a follow-up to the lady's suggestion about putting some of the Senators on the welfare allowance, I would be interested in knowing where you have stayed while you have been in Winnipeg and was it ever contemplated that maybe you should be lodged—I understand there are two hotels here in Winnipeg that are being used to house people who are on welfare and have been unable to find other housing in the city.

It seems to me as though it would have been an invaluable experience for the Senators to also live in these hotels with these people and it may be a suggestion that you can use in your travels across the country rather than staying—I do not know where you have been staying but it might be valuable to stay with people who are on low income.

Senator Belisle: Knowing that the C.N.R. is costing the government and the tax payer considerable amount of money each year w felt we should encourage our own enterprise, the C.N.R.

Mrs. Putman: May I ask you something, Senator Croll?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mrs. Putman: You said the welfare system is 42 years old and it was not a complete failure, just a failure. What did you mean by that?

The Chairman: That is exactly what I said.

Mrs. Putman: Do you not think we have too many welfare officers?

The Chairman: What I said was it was not a complete failure. I had in mind some parts of it that are really worthwhile and can be saved.

For instance, family allowances; if they are brought within meaningful amounts is a very valuable measure that can go on. What has happened is that we brought it in originally and we have hardly changed it at all and it is not kept up with the economy or the cost of living and to that extent it has fallen behind. But it is an excellent measure, in my opinion.

Now, the Old Age Security is one of the real jewels in our crown and it may be that it could be made very meaningful.

These are the types of things that I had in mind that are worth saving. However, that is another matter, and that is about it.

Now, ladies you have presented a good brief, well drawn and you were in good voice, Mrs. Towers, and you made an impression upon the Committee, all of the ladies have not only visually but otherwise and we thank you for coming here.

We thank you for another reason. We do not like to ask people to come here and submit themselves for examination in this way publicly. Your privacy is as important as my privacy but you came here on your own and you gave us your views and it is very helpful to us and for that we are most thankful.

Before we finish, Senator Inman and Senator Sparrow heard two briefs this morning. I would like to have their report to the Committee.

Senator Inman: It is only short.

Senator Sparrow and I have heard two very interesting and nice briefs this morning; one of them on behalf of the Mothers Allowance Committee and one on behalf of the Senior Citizens.

Welfare has many problems. We learned that. We know that but it would appear from both briefs that the greatest need is for better and for more housing and some control over rents. The actual money allowance is about one-third lower than is necessary for actual needs. Now, this applies to both the Mothers Allowance and the Senior Citizens.

From the Mothers Allowance Committee we heard that more social workers are needed and also more social workers that are interested in counselling, regarding up-grading and family problems. Social workers now have not time enough to spend with those who need help and there is too much red tape in dealing with welfare problems.

We heard from one lady who gave us a breakdown of the amounts of money that a mother gets with children. The mother gets $28.60. Each person from 15 to 19 gets $33 per month, from 12 to 14, $29.70 a month, from 7 to 11, $24.20 and from 4 to 6, $19.80 a month and from birth to 3 years, $17.60, a month.

Now, for one or more she certainly would need at least $190.40, she tells us and I would repeat again that housing is the biggest problem they have and it is discrimination. Those are the things they would like to see rectified.

Now, perhaps Senator Sparrow has something to add to that.

Senator Sparrow: Thank you, Senator. You made a very good report and they were good hearings and I have nothing to add.

The Chairman: Thank you very much.

Mr. Alfred Walker of the Labour Council approached us yesterday. He had a brief ready and I told him that I did not think we could possibly deal with it because of our very tight schedule. He understands that. He is in the audience. We will have the brief passed around and we will acknowledge it and see that it is part of the record. But in view of the fact that the Canadian Labour Congress will be coming before us, he will be able to get his views to them so they will be recorded in their brief. I am sure he understands our present situation.

Thank you very much. This meeting is adjourned.

Mrs. Carson: Senator Croll, on behalf of our committee I would like to thank you very much for the hearing.

The hearing adjourned.

Second Session—Twenty-eighth Parliament

1969

THE SENATE OF CANADA

PROCEEDINGS

OF THE

SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE

ON

POVERTY

The Honourable DAVID A. CROLL, Chairman

No. 8

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 19, 1969

WITNESSES:

Group of Community Workers: Mrs. Margaret Mitchell, Director; Mrs. Darlene Marzari; Mr. Herb Barbolet; Vancouver Inner-City Services Project: Mr. Max Beck, Director; Mr. Michael Harcourt; The Association to Tackle Adverse Conditions: Mr. J. Minicaieloe, Chairman; Miss Kie Yagi, Secretary; Mr. Joe Farrera; The Vancouver Housing Inter-Project Council: Mrs. Dorothy Thomas, President; Mr. William Johnston, Chairman of the Brief Committee.

APPENDICES:

- A.—Brief submitted by the Group of Community Workers.
- B.—Brief submitted by the Vancouver Inter-City Services Project.
- C.—Brief submitted by the Association to Tackle Adverse Conditions.
- D.—Supplementary information from the Brief submitted by the Vancouver Housing Inter-Project Council.

MEMBERS OF THE
SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE ON POVERTY

The Honourable David A. Croll, Chairman

The Honourable Senators

Bélisle	Everett	Lefrançois
Carter	Fergusson	MacDonald (Queens)
Connolly (Halifax North)	Fournier (Madawaska- Restigouche, Deputy Chairman)	McGrand
Cook		Pearson
Croll	Hastings	Quart
Eudes	Inman	Roebuck
		Sparrow

(18 Members)

(Quorum 6)

ORDERS OF REFERENCE

Extract of the Minutes of Proceedings of the Senate of Tuesday, October 28, 1969.

"The Honourable Senator Croll moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Roebuck:

That a Special Committee of the Senate be appointed to investigate and report upon all aspects of poverty in Canada, whether urban; rural, regional or otherwise, to define and elucidate the problem of poverty in Canada, and to recommend appropriate action to ensure the establishment of a more effective structure of remedial measures;

That the Committee have power to engage the services of such counsel, staff and technical advisors as may be necessary for the purpose of the inquiry;

That the Committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, and to report from time to time;

That the Committee be authorized to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the Committee, to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate, and to adjourn from place to place;

That the evidence taken on the subject during the preceding session be referred to the Committee; and

That the Committee be composed of the Honourable Senators Bélisle, Carter, Cook, Croll, Eudes, Everett, Fergusson, Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche), Hastings, Inman, Lefrançois, McGrand Pearson, Quart, Roebuck and Sparrow.

After debate,

In amendment, the Honourable Senator McDonald moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Burchill, that the motion be not now adopted, but that it be amended by striking out paragraph 4 thereof and substituting therefor the following:—

"That the Committee be authorized to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the Committee, to adjourn from place to place, and notwithstanding Rule 76 (4), to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate."

After debate, and—

The question being put on the motion in amendment, it was—
Resolved in the affirmative.

The question being put on the motion of the Honourable Senator Croll, seconded by the Honourable Senator Roebuck, as amended, it was—
Resolved in the affirmative."

Extract of the Minutes of Proceedings of the Senate of Wednesday, October 29, 1969.

"With leave of the Senate,

The Honourable Senator McDonald moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Smith:

That the names of the Honourable Senators Connolly (Halifax North) and MacDonald (Queens) be added to the list of Senators serving on the Special Committee of the Senate appointed to investigate and report all aspects of poverty in Canada; and

The the name of the Honourable Senator Nichol be removed from the list of Senators serving on the said Special Committee.

The question being put on the motion, it was—
Resolved in the affirmative."

ROBERT FORTIER,
Clerk of the Senate.

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS

Vancouver, British Columbia,
WEDNESDAY, November 19, 1969.

Pursuant to adjournment and notice the Special Senate Committee on Poverty met this day at 9.30 a.m.

Present: The Honourable Senators Belisle, Connolly (Halifax North), Croll (Chairman), Eudes, Everett, Fergusson, Hastings, Inman, McGrand and Sparrow. (10)

In attendance: Frederick J. Joyce, Director.

The following witnesses were introduced and heard:

GROUP OF COMMUNITY WORKERS:

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell, Director

Mrs. Darlene Marzari

Mr. Herb Barbolet

The Chairman thanked the above witnesses for their interesting brief and valuable presentation.

At 12.00 noon the Committee adjourned until 2.00 p.m.

At 2.00 p.m. the Committee resumed its hearings.

The following witnesses were introduced and heard:

VANCOUVER INNER-CITY SERVICES PROJECT:

Mr. Max Beck, Director

Mr. Michael Harcourt

Mr. Beck and his associates were thanked by the Chairman.

At 4.05 p.m. the Committee then adjourned until 7.30 p.m.

At 7.55 p.m. the Committee resumed its hearings.

The following witnesses were introduced and heard:

THE ASSOCIATION TO TACKLE ADVERSE CONDITIONS:

Mr. J. Minicaieloe, Chairman.

Miss Kie Yagi, Secretary

Mr. Joe Farrera

THE VANCOUVER HOUSING INTER-PROJECT COUNCIL:

Mrs. Dorothy Thomas, President

Mr. William Johnston, Chairman of the Brief Committee

In attendance: Mrs. Shirley Cord, Secretary.

Briefs submitted by the Group of Community Workers, the Vancouver Inner-City Services Project, the Association to Tackle Adverse Conditions, and supplementary information from the brief submitted by the Vancouver Housing Inter-Project Council, are printed as Appendices "A", "B", "C" and "D", respectively, to these proceedings.

At 9.05 p.m. the Committee adjourned until Thursday, November 19th, at 9.30 a.m.

ATTEST:

*Patrick J. Savoie,
Clerk of the Committee.*

THE SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE ON POVERTY

EVIDENCE

Vancouver, British Columbia,

November 19, 1969.

The Special Senate Committee on Poverty met this day at 9.30 a.m.

Senator David A. Croll (Chairman) in the Chair.

The Chairman: I will call the meeting to order. I will ask the Reverend Glen Baker to appropriately open the proceedings with a prayer.

—Reverend Baker recites prayer.

The Chairman: In opening these proceedings I think I should say that the program we have ahead of us for the next two days just didn't happen; it took a great deal of work and much effort and much putting together.

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell, the Director of Community Development and the Neighbourhood Services Association, is sitting alongside of me and is very much responsible for a great deal of the work in putting this program together. The Committee wishes to express its appreciation.

We have some very good briefs and we will be hearing them as we go along. I should indicate to you that the reference made to this Committee was to examine, report, and recommend on the state of poverty in Canada, and we are a fact-finding board.

We accepted the definition of poverty as it appears in the report of the Economic Council for the time-being, and we also accepted the statistics of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, which in its last report indicated that there are 840,000 families, involving three-and-a-half-million people who are in or below the poverty line.

Now, poverty takes many faces. We have the extreme poverty, the destitution reservation poverty; we have poverty as defined by the Economic Council, which is economic and humanitarian, very widespread, and we have rural poverty, which is a softer kind of poverty—as poverty can be soft—and we have the large city and small city, which is a harsh kind of poverty. And we have the suburban poverty, which is a new kind of poverty. All have a different face, and we can only pinpoint part of them, and this is the purpose of this project.

Of course, the purpose is to try and do just that. You can appreciate almost a million people receiving assistance of one kind or another and we can't possibly reach them. Now one of the things we can do—well, I think I should tell you that we made a statement of policy and it appears in Senate Hansard, and I quote:

In order to contact the poor in every province, two members of our community liaison staff have been across the country twice to meet and visit with them. We think their involvement is essential because the poor have a role to play and must have a voice in their own destiny. A place must be carved out for them around the decision table. Once and for all, if we are going to succeed, they must enter the 'in' group.

In the short while we've been on the road I think it's a fair assumption that the poor are ahead of us. We find them uneasy and unsatisfied but they are organizing and they are being activated. One of the good things that is appearing on the scene is that we now have activists within the community, and there are two kinds. The activists who point out the rights and obligations, and they are for you, the poor.

Then there's the agitator, who points out the rights and forgets the obligations. He is not for the poor. It's for the poor to distinguish between the two because it's difficult for us to lay down any particular definition, but it's well that they should.

When we see the poor doing something for themselves to help themselves in many ways we are heartened. We feel that they are emerging from a long sleep to rightfully take their place in society.

I don't think it's unfair to say that poorness is more circumstance than failure. Two things we set out to do were, first identify the poor and then to contact the poor. I have indicated to you that we have attempted to contact the poor, and we have been able to identify them. And during the course of the hearings you will see how we do this.

In contacting the poor we try to do it through public and private agencies, social workers, and where they have organizations, but too many of the poor aren't organized. They don't write briefs because they don't have the time, and being poor seems like a full-time job for everybody, but there are some things that are very important to the poor, and in our endeavour to contact them we must not lose sight of the fact that the most prized possession of private citizens is their right to privacy.

We must not invade, in our course of sittings and hearings, upon the poor. One way to bring them back to the fold is to treat them as citizens like any other citizen and restore dignity to them.

What I am saying to you is that we are trying to open the lines of communication and begin a meaningful dialogue with the poor and the people who are concerned for the poor.

After we finish the trip in Vancouver we will assess our situation as to how successful we have been in the light of the hearings we have already had.

Now, don't misunderstand us. We carry no patent medicines; we have no magic formula. We come in goodwill and high hopes, with a sense of dedication, depending upon experience. For us it's the work we want to do. The members wanted to be on this Committee. It's not going to be an exercise in futility, but on the other hand we can't solve these problems unless we face up to it.

One of our tasks is to have the Canadian people face up to this problem, to examine and change things, and how they should be changed, and so we are trying to start a dialogue, a debate, and we are ready for an argument as to how things can be improved.

One thing is certain, when our hearings are finished, and long before every Canadian has a great deal more knowledge about the forgotten Canadians than he ever has before, one of the things that has come out clear, the more we hear, the more hearings we have, is that they are not poor because they are lazy or lack initiative or that they prefer to live on welfare. It's not true and it's being said by all people at all levels, including the Economic Council.

They are poor because our social structure guarantees poverty for many, intentionally or unintentionally; low minimum wages, unfair taxation at lower levels; inadequate delivery of the services that we have available, and good services they are. And the general consensus is that with all the goodwill that the country has, that our welfare system overall has failed.

It's a little too late now to scotch-tape it or band-aid it. It was built in another day for different people. We have to meet other conditions, other times, and other circumstances. How we are to do it and what will replace it is something that we have to recommend, and we come to you people for help.

You see, what emerges is this: our social conscience has made considerable progress. The basic right of food, clothing, and shelter was recognized in the middle thirties. It wasn't easy, but it came about. The basic right for essential needs got recognition under the Canada Assistance Act in 1966 when we did away with the means test.

The right, narrowly applied, of minimum income first came into recognition in 1966. We have asked ourselves now, are we ready—are the Canadian people ready for a new beginning?

If we ever reach the state where our social development is such that we can extend this more widely, if it is thought wise by the Committee to recognize as a right the maintenance income, or what people call a guaranteed income with supplements, or if we don't do that what do we do?

We have to present it to the Canadian people as a challenge. We have had in all our hearings massive support for a guaranteed annual income. The experts have been cautious and a bit careful about it. It is complicated. It's not just as easy as people say. Let me say, because there are social workers in the group, that if you think that this problem can be solved with money alone you are mistaken. I will give you the best examples of that.

The Americans have shovelled the money in and their problems are there and they are well-meaning people, knowledgeable people as clever as we are and as desirous of finding a solution. There is more to it than that but that is a beginning. It is a necessary beginning.

ning for anyone. We will try and pull out from it.

Sometimes the people in the country say, "Why the Senate Committee?" Well, the Senate Committee has background, experience, and a little more time on their hands than the House of Commons has, and we are not without our achievements, and I am not the kind who is going to try and hide it under the table.

If you don't know what we are doing I am going to tell you. The idea for the guaranteed income originated in the Senate on a report of the aging, and those people who haven't read that report ought to.

We recommended that anyone 65 years or over should receive a guaranteed income, and the government approved it by putting supplements on. It's the only one of its kind in the democratic world today. Those of you who are in touch with the aged realize it. It may be spartan but it's something. It's better than anyone else has under similar circumstances, and it will be improved from time to time.

So we have some credentials for coming but we just haven't got all the answers that are required, so we come to you for ideas; imaginative and realistic ideas, a new concept and new approaches which are so needed today. We are listening and we are hoping that we will be able to reach some conclusions that are beneficial to our country and such that the country can put into effect.

Now, the formula to be used is that those who present briefs will be asked to come up here and speak for ten or fifteen minutes and give us the highlights of the brief and then there will be questions from the senators, and if we have time we will give the audience a chance to ask questions. That's the way it will go for the next two days.

The first brief we have is from the Community Workers, and Mrs. Margaret Mitchell, who is sitting beside me, and Mrs. Darlene Marzari and Mr. Herb Barbolet are here, and I will ask Mrs. Mitchell to introduce them.

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell, Director, Community Workers: Thank you very much, Senator Croll. I know that the senators have had a very strenuous week and arrived in Vancouver only last night, and I am sure you haven't had much time or inclination, probably, to pore through—what I would call a background paper; therefore, Senator Croll asked if we would comment a little bit more on this brief.

I should say that the group who prepared this—it's really not a group, as it were, but sort of an ad hoc combination of people who came together because we had been dealing with Michael Clague, the Community Liaison Officer for the Committee, and he felt, in addition to the system whom we feel we would certainly not be willing to speak for, it would be useful to have some of us who perhaps are more activists, or be it agitators, Senator Croll, but certainly our front-line workers are very anxious to see changes in our whole social system, particularly in the welfare system, and certainly are very concerned that so many of our Canadian citizens are trapped in what we commonly call the cycle of poverty.

I will just briefly try and skim some of the basic points in the brief and then I have asked Mrs. Marzari, who is with the Department of Social Planning in our city, to give you some idea of the Vancouver scene, and we thought perhaps this was something we should have included in our brief, and Mr. Herb Barbolet, who has also been very active in helping with the brief.

We have a group down in front who are other community workers who have been working along with us, and we felt that they may have other comments to make. Really, our group of community workers, most of whom are working directly with people in front-line jobs, have no great solutions to poverty, and I am sure that the Senate Committee themselves have no simple solutions to poverty.

We do feel, as Senator Croll has said, most strongly that the general public looked at poverty in the 1960's and 1970's and 1980's in quite a different way than they have in the past. I was delighted to hear Senator Croll reiterate again that poverty is no longer based on individual inadequacies. For long it's been the general attitude of the general public that it has been based on individual inadequacies. Most of our points will be limited to our own area of competence and experience. We see ourselves as advocates. We are not experts. We expect to have much greater background of experts from sociology and research fields.

We do urge, however, that the Senate Committee would give major priority to the broad social scene. Our comments will probably be to things that we have direct contact with, and we therefore would like you to begin by stressing very forcefully the principles which we believe are very basic in the Canadian war on poverty.

These are not in the brief, but we felt that we would be doing a disservice if we looked at them only from a narrow point of view.

The five major principles which we have stated are, first of all, economic development of the community and the extension of a great variety of employment opportunities—these must be the major emphasis in programs to eliminate poverty; to develop our human resources and to extend opportunity in Canada.

We feel that, as social workers, we are really dealing with the aftermath of what is really a social and economic problem. Secondly, every citizen has the right to family security and a decent standard of living. Where this is not possible through inadequate income from employment, the government must ensure that there is through an adequate guaranteed income or guaranteed jobs.

Business firms, we feel, should be required to work with government to provide some of these jobs. It's not only the role of government. Three, business, industry and unions have a major responsibility to co-operate with the government to develop jobs and retraining programs, and must be required by the government to do so. We feel that Canada's manpower should be re-organized to this end to create new job opportunities, which is its main function.

Four, major reform of social policy, and particularly of social institutions and agencies, and also our educational system. This is needed to provide much greater opportunity for the education of our young children, for support of young families, for community development and citizen involvement for what we would call a new approach to education for the living in a very broad and creative sense.

To achieve more opportunity for personal fulfilment and for creative pursuits.

Five, we feel that citizens have a right to opportunities and that all citizens must have a greater say in the decisions that affect their lives. Our cities are becoming so complex and our social systems are so centralized, not only metropolitan but provincially and federally, and you just can't find out where decisions are made, and you will find throughout our whole proposal a plea, really, to decentralize and to consider the fourth level of government in local communities where people must have a much greater say in the decisions that are going to affect their lives.

We would agree with Senator Croll also that in this we must constantly be enforcing a principle that the rights of citizens, and particularly the right of low-income citizens, and the people affected by society the way it is, should have a basic right to express their concern, to dissent and to organize and to demonstrate and press for change.

If we don't do this, and we don't really recognize and open up channels for this, then I think we are going to have some of the sort of negative attitude if ways of doing this is not found, as Senator Croll was referring to.

We have a section on some of the policies that we felt, in talking together, might help to alleviate some of the situations that exist for people who are on social assistance, for the so-called working poor people who are working and don't earn much, but I would like to suggest, though, that we leave these till later because we think that this is a little more specific, and we have some case examples which might help to bring them to light.

The need for change in the social welfare system: we feel that for too long social services have been remedial and have been very limited in their capacity to do more than just provide maintenance. We are tired ourselves of a kind of band-aid service. None of us as social workers I think ever wanted to do this, and we are also tired of being the scapegoat, as the poor are also tired of being the scapegoat for some of the things that are much bigger in our social system than our economic situation in Canada today.

We want to have much greater emphasis on citizen involvement and citizen self-help projects, and I feel badly that we are presenting first. We would have preferred to present last and have heard the citizen groups first, so I hope you realize we are not presuming at any time to talk on behalf of the citizens. They are going to be quite capable of talking to you themselves.

We favour participation in support of service deliveries, support of neighbourhood services, other than the old idea of centralized institutionalized, agency services. We feel there is a great need for a change in restrictive practices and policies, and particularly we feel that the big public services, the welfare department, the manpower department, the housing authority, several of these are federal departments and there must be a real attempt to decentralize and to make these more available to people in local communities. We favour creative, innovative programs and we also plead that there be more emphasis on enrichment services in low-income communities. Four things that will help children in low-income families to have a normal chance for growth and development, and for young parents, so people would call this prevention. I think we have to be more specific about what we call means prevention, but we do feel that there should be a much greater weight in local communities towards opportunity for children and young families to develop in a healthy way.

These are some of the things, and I think Mrs. Marzari will be a little more specific about our Vancouver scene. We also have developed a section in our report specifically on citizen participation in community development, and a number of us are community development workers.

In Vancouver there have been increasing emphases in the last couple of years to experiment with community development services in local areas. You may wish to question us more about this.

Many of the citizen groups that will be presenting to you are groups that we have had some contact with, and in several cases we have been involved in helping to organize such groups. We have been specific there, but I think I will give the specifics and perhaps just jump along to our recommendations. These are recommendations that are related probably to the community development side of our presentation.

First, we recommend that public and private funds should be much more available, or if necessary be re-assigned from agencies' services to provide a local development fund in local communities where citizens themselves will be in control of this and will have a much greater opportunity to say what kind of services they want.

We feel such a development fund in those areas will give them a chance to employ their own people. We have a great example in Vancouver now of the tremendous contribution local people can make and people on social welfare or low-income groups can make providing their own programs and their own services. We feel along with this they need the funds to allow them to do these things in an autonomous way.

We feel that the group that is probably the most non-public now, certainly in Vancouver, are the low-income people who are not on social assistance and we now have a considerable allowance for people who are on welfare for community service training, but we have no way of offering this to people who are not on welfare but have a great contribution to make, and who need to be paid for their community services.

Fourth, we feel there should be financial support for government for community development services and that community development workers again should be trained from the community. We feel also that the history across Canada would indicate that community development services should be funded by government and by other groups—should be detached some way from government. There is a history of failure right across Canada in the community development services, and somehow they have to be set up in a way that will protect the need for advocacy and social reform so that community development people can speak freely in constructive ways about change without feeling that their department is going to go out of existence.

Five, financial encouragement should be given to the formation of consumer co-operatives for low-income people. Perhaps through credit unions with special subsidies.

Six, we feel that Central Mortgage and Housing, again a federal organization—we are a little tired about hearing about the partnership every time we ask where the decision is made, the partnership involving the three levels of government, but there is really no way that the decision responsibility is in any way from any one level.

We feel—again, the tenants themselves will be speaking about this—that there must be more decentralization of Central Mortgage and Housing and these kind of things, and there must be an integration at provincial level and there must be a decentralization so that tenants themselves in public housing projects would have a much bigger say in running their own projects, even in purchasing public housing.

They should also certainly have a say in the management of these projects.

Seven, there is a need for major change in Canada Manpower—and we are actually getting this right across Canada...

The Chairman: And we got the ones you just finished on, too.

Mrs. Mitchell: Now, perhaps you will want me to come back to this, so I will just leave that. We debated a lot about the educational system, and we can't—the educational system is a big thing, and it is our area of competence. It is the area of competence of every citizen in Canada, but we feel most strongly that education must be viewed in a much larger picture. It must be education for living, and if we are ever going to have full employment for every citizen in Canada, it's even more important that there should be education for creative thinking in the community for self-fulfilment and for parenthood, and particularly for young people.

We have to look in a much different way for education for young people.

I am sure that you will hear again of how inadequate the system is, really, for low-income families, and for young people who are growing up in communities where they don't have money to pay for most things that other children have.

Nine, we could not mention the fact that the Senate Committee, I believe, chose not to hear from Cool-Aid and middle-class young people. These people have chosen to drop out and to choose poverty. This is probably even more significant as a trend in Canada than the people who have no choice.

If we look towards the 1970's we wonder just what this new type of poverty is. We wonder what kind of values in our system are that are changing when young people deliberately choose poverty rather than affluence, and when they deliberately choose independence and moving away from home rather than accepting their parent's values.

We think it is most important to get the young to cop in. We think it's very important to hear from these young people because we think that they have important things to say and we think it's important to hear from them.

The Chairman: One or two senators on Thursday afternoon will be going to visit Cool Aid to see exactly what they are doing. It is new to them and it is new to me, too.

Mrs. Mitchell: Well, we are delighted to hear that.

Our final point, then, is (we mention this again because it is a federal program), but most of us would feel that the Canada Assistance Plan is of relatively little use in local communities. This is a federal plan which for a while was good, and probably in principle was good, but it came only in a narrow concept from the welfare department and it requires the approval of two levels of government for it to get into the federal level, and there is such a great need for the Canada Assistance Plan monies—welfare department themselves or community innovative programs—to assist these groups themselves. This really has not been available and we feel there should be a major review of the Canada Assistance Plan and bring out some new kind of plan, a welfare plan, welfare grants are probably a little bit more creative, if only in a demonstration kind of way, but we do feel that this is needed. Otherwise, we might never get beyond the traditional approach.

Would you like to hear some questions from the floor?

The Chairman: No, we will do that later.

Mrs. Marzari: Senator Croll, senators and audience, I thought perhaps I would try to bridge the gap between what ought to be and what actually is. I think I will start and I will try and tell you some of the trends in Vancouver, and I hope the trends are trends, and not just aberrations. This will depend largely on our own commitment and a number of other representatives to see that there are trends for change.

I think that there are—working as I do with administration and social workers and educators and recreational personnel, and rather indirectly with citizens who are faced with two major problems. The first being the multiplicity of services now offered under the name of helping services to people in the community and the lack of sufficient business technique overlapping administration.

Very often services operate in separate frameworks of goals and roles, often ignorant of what each other is doing; often acting in contradiction with each other, as they just go on in an ad hoc manner to meet specific need for specific periods of time.

The other main problem is the effectiveness, of course, and it's a natural one. We can't expect services to really be effective and reach people if entrapped, because they have no common denominator.

The other thing for us is the big fear that we'll be putting new wine into old bottles when we do change the system. This seems to be what happened in England in 1948 when the National Assistance Act came into being. Three things are happening in Vancouver.

now, and I will take a few minutes to explain them very briefly.

At the first level, or I should say the third level, we have the Welfare Congress at the present time. It is composed of fifteen to sixteen lay members of the community, including two people who have been and are poor. They will be looking over the next little while at about sixty service organizations providing about a hundred services, including welfare, recreation, and we hope that they will expand to include education, which certainly should be included.

They will be operating at the administration level, they will be making recommendations about how administration should be cleaned up, about how services can clean up the mess in their own back yards. This is very much needed, and it would be very much appreciated for people to link to instead of piddling around at the bottom.

At the middle level we have coordination of local area services. The Social Planning and Community Development Department at the city level has broken the city down in the community services into 21 local areas. The senators have copies of these. In three of these areas there are now co-ordinators working with teams of direct service representatives from the field of health, education and welfare and recreation.

These people are coming together on an inter-disciplinarian and inter-agency level to discuss programs that they feel should be more efficient, more effective, and more relative to the local communities. We are attempting to produce changes by chipping away at some of the existing institutions, and they are attempting to get more residual services—in other words, they are attempting to do more than simply add more to the existing services patterns.

We are trying to abolish irrelevant services and bring in good ones. They are also trying to determine how to absorb these by the public sector where necessary.

At the third level, and this is the one which I consider the first level, where the nitty-gritty is, this is the core, the centre of the circle, of course, are citizens' groups, because without this kind of influence from people, the guy on the street, all the plans that are drawn, all the institutions that are pulled together, and all the meetings that are held, will be held in a vacuum.

The citizens' groups in the city are developing quickly over the past three years since I have been here. There is a new breed of social worker I think going out and a new breed of educator and new breed of health personnel that are going out and encouraging people to become involved in matters that affect them. You will be hearing from these people and hearing what they have to say.

We have these three things happening, and these three trends, and I think that the implications of these are pretty clear to all of us. The professionals themselves I think have twofold responsibilities. The first, to try and clean up the mess in their own service backyard, and, second, to do everything they can to knock down some of these brick walls or barbed wire that seem to surround the poor in the central core.

If they can do this they can reach the people who are hired to respond to them.

The Chairman: Thank you very much.

Mr. Barbolet: My name is Herb Barbolet, and I am a community development worker working in high-density areas of the City of Vancouver. I would like to present an alternative to the existing welfare program. Any suggestions that have been made and are going to be made—and this in no way dictates from what has been said in the brief—but if we decide that we want to take the totally new approach to poverty, to cities, to our social problems, then I think this proposal may be something we should consider.

The proposal is a multi-million-dollar fund to develop the northern part of Canada. This proposal would be to go into the north with all its wealth—and I understand Canada is essentially one of the wealthiest countries in the world—and this wealth is untouched presently. This plan would envisage going into the north on a large scale to set up primary and secondary industries using the natural resources that are there.

To build new towns across Canada. I think most of you have heard suggestions regarding the northern corridor, and these towns could be set up using modern technology with prefabricated buildings which could be done quite within modern technology. The relevance of this poverty is that all of the developments, including the roads for the development of the north, could be done by people who are now seemingly not relevant to the modern urban technology. It could be done with incentive programs to bring in the technocrats who will be necessary to guide the program and a profit-sharing for anybody that goes into these programs. The job-training programs to be tied into the entire overall scheme and industries be built with the profits of these industries going to the workers and also back into the coffers of the Canadian Government.

The funds—obviously, this is the most touchy part of it—the funds could be developed through monies that the Canada Pension Plan is now using. It seems to me of course this needs more research, this cannot be a money-losing proposition. Monies going into research generally throughout Canada would go into this project because the project would encompass everything from pure science all the way to the social sciences to our areas, social planning and community development.

There could be bond issues. People would be sold on the idea of buying a future in Canada.

The underlying factor to all of this is that Canada's problems are not necessarily similar to that in the United States and their solutions are not similar. The United States closed their frontier more than 50 years ago and Canada still has open frontiers. The whole mentality of the frontier is that people who cannot adjust to urban society were the ones who did open up the frontiers in the United States and in Canada. They can be the ones who will develop this part of the north.

The results, as we see it, would be firstly probably the greatest economic boom that the world has ever seen.

Secondly, the development of billions of dollars of untouched resources, and, thirdly, there is much talk about what can be done about the cities, and many sociologists have said that cities like New York are quite literally dying and near death. One of the solutions just in the latest issue of Saturday Review suggests a much more massive program of new town development and we could build cities with our modern technology which wouldn't have the problems of air pollution and water pollution and the problems of over-crowding.

We can make the cities that we now have more viable because we would be reducing the tax burden on the people who are now there and bring new cities that exist. The cities that are built could be built in counter-ing such things as domes, and I believe that one of the Alaskan cities is considering building a city with a dome over the entire city.

There are new transportation schemes that could then be brought back to the southern part of the country and implemented there and tried and tested. Mostly this would be creating a new frontier for the people now who don't have any option in the society, and don't see any future for themselves and no alternative.

The plan sounds Utopian and would take a tremendous amount of creative work and technique, and an enormous amount of commitment on the part of the government and the people in Canada, but it appears this could be successful. Thank you.

The Chairman: Any questions?

Senator Connolly: Mrs. Mitchell, several points among your recommendations, and I am wondering how you define community.

Mrs. Mitchell: Well, I think we would agree that the old concept of community is no more because it's sort of a natural community. In Vancouver we are really trying to almost create community. You will see the boundaries that are on the map as one method of doing it, and there's been service delivery kind of boundaries as one of the factors that is taken into that, but we feel that community is much more than geography. It's also primary communications between people.

I think most of us in neighbourhood work, we feel that community in today's cities around elementary schools; to a larger extent around high schools.

Senator Connolly: Then communities would be neighbourhoods?

Mrs. Mitchell: We should use the term "neighbourhood" for that.

Senator Connolly: These monies that you would have government give to them, they would of course have a check available to them and they would have to report to somebody for the use of these public funds?

Mrs. Mitchell: Yes. In Vancouver, in each of the local areas, or in quite a number of the local areas—we use the terms "area"; it would probably encompass several neighbourhoods. There are a number of citizens' councils being formed, area councils, which are bodies which are attempting to represent the communities, and involve a cross-section of people, and we would see that these groups might eventually have some power and sanctions for development funds.

Senator Connolly: I am interested in your consumer co-operatives because I have seen what became known as the Antigonish movement. There was a tremendous joint effort in Nova Scotia and elsewhere; as you know, it's a self-help organization operating in communities where people lack administration, and nobody cares very much whether they had an opportunity or are able to cash in on such opportunities as were available to them because of intelligent leadership and because of material aid; in many cases they were able to lift themselves up with a great many rungs of the ladder, and revolutionize their communities.

These were not neighbourhoods but actual villages, sections of the shore and farming communities and so on. If I may presume to say so I think your organization would be well to further that thought because it's one of the better ones that I find among your recommendations.

In respect to housing, I am one of the people who take a dim view of high-rise housing, especially for the poor, because to me they are the beginning of the creation of new types of tenements.

Now, I recognize that costs of individual homes may be considered by some to be prohibitive but on the other hand it also seems to me that if you can install the average person in his own little castle which is his home, even though it costs more money for the taxpayers of this country, it would establish for that man an independence which he or the most part will cherish and which he will work hard to preserve.

Now, what are your views on that subject? On the subject of housing you only generalize here. What are your specific views?

Mrs. Mitchell: Well, I would invite the senator to field that question to someone who is living in public housing, because I think they should be the ones that should answer it.

I know many of us have worked in and around public housing and projects here in Vancouver, and we don't like the ghetto-ism and the location that is chosen often for the building of these projects. We certainly do not like the stigma that is attached to them, and I think people feel, even though the rent is much lower, they feel that there are many negative aspects to project living. Certainly I think the people in row houses are happier than the people in the high-rises, but on the other hand for single people and senior citizens there is some justification for this type of building.

Mr. Barbolet, who works in the west end of Vancouver, where it appears to be a very affluent kind of community, but it is a high-density, high-rise community, and I wonder if he would like to comment on this.

Mr. Barbolet: My comments would be mostly personal. The one thing in the high-rises—a lot of people are put into high-rises or find themselves in high-rises and don't particularly want to but because of their needs they have to. We find in the west end of Vancouver a particular development where half the families there are single families and very often there is a mother with one or two children, and the apartments become quite crowded and noise becomes a problem, and the children have to be quieted, and we find that the children really don't have problems and they don't know how to play, so they get into very large groups. It is very frightening.

Right now the level of violence is a little above what might be expected in an area of that density. Part of it may be due to the poverty people taking it out on themselves and some day it is going to blow up.

The Chairman: Did you say above or below?

Mr. Barbolet: Below.

The Chairman: What do you mean?

Mr. Barbolet: For an area of density like the west end the amount of crime and delinquency is below that of other communities in other cities of America of that density.

The Chairman: Well, what is wrong with that?

Mr. Barbolet: Nothing is wrong with that except that it's an anomaly. The only way it seems to be mental—just because people are taking it out on themselves rather than taking the violence out on other people, and one day they will stop taking it out on themselves.

The Chairman: Well, it just strikes me odd where something goes bad we analyze it as something good.

Senator Inman: Mr. Chairman, I would like the witness to enlarge a bit on Section 5:

Citizens have a right to opportunities and all citizens must have a much greater say in decisions that affect their lives. This includes rights of citizens to express concerns, to dissent, and to press for change.

Well, I am thinking of election campaigns to start with. People who don't have a very good idea of what they are going to vote for in voting for a government, and government affects their lives. How do you go about educating them to teach them how to express themselves and how to think of what they do want?

Mrs. Mitchell: Our experience would indicate that you have to start right in the front doorstep of people. They have to start by becoming involved with something that is going to affect their families themselves. From there, as they gain experience from contact with other people in their communities, they might see things to the point of view of a community and from there we have found in Vancouver the different communities come together to different kinds of councils, and so on. After that it is possible to look at city-wide problems, but my own personal feeling is, so often we accuse the general public of being apathetic because there is something way up here which really doesn't have very much meaning, and they feel the they can't affect it anyway. If they start in their own communities—there are very definitely civic schemes they can get involved in.

Senator Inman: Would you suggest it is a method of counselling?

Mrs. Mitchell: No, I wouldn't. I have been a social worker for 20 years or more. I have been a counsellor and I have been a group worker, and I have been a community worker, and I think the least of these methods that have worked—and my colleagues will probably challenge me on this; counselling is needed but I think it's an opportunity for people to do things for themselves, and if they have the opportunity to do things for themselves they know, they feel and express the potential that is there.

One thing that we have seen in community development is that the people who go over in welfare line-ups—the way they feel about themselves—and I have gone in the line-ups with them—is so different. The whole system makes them feel that they are committing a crime. It's so different—you know, the same people feel when they get out in their own communities and are given leadership and running their own show and are showing their kids that they have something good to look forward to, and I haven't probably answered your question but...

The Chairman: No, you are right on the nose.

Senator Belisle: Before asking a question of Mrs. Mitchell may I be permitted to express our sincere appreciation to the officials of this church for the grand hospitality they are offering to us by using their facilities. Knowing that the church has made some tremendous contributions to the poor in the past, may I say this: where would the poor be without the church? I hope that this discussion makes us more aware of their needs and teaches us to be more humane in meeting their requests.

My question to you, Mrs. Mitchell, is, on page 2 you say:

Those with economic and political power have not taken responsibility to plan for and deal with the negative effects brought about by our computer age. Can you tell us where we have failed? Can you tell us what can be done to be more effective with the poor bearing in mind all the time that you cannot overlook the municipal or provincial rights?

Mrs. Mitchell: I am sorry; I don't quite understand.

Senator Belisle: Well, I notice on page 2 you say:

CAP must be revised; meanwhile, federal welfare grants for special community programs and services in low-income areas should be greatly increased and made more accessible to citizen group and private agencies.

In other words, if we were to change our system and direct more money to private agencies instead of the municipal or provincial agencies do you feel that we could get more use for our money? Could we be more communicative with the poor?

Mrs. Mitchell: Straight answer: I would say no. It's not that I don't agree; I work for a private agency, and I think private agencies in many ways should be more flexible and creative in their approach. When I said no—I think if we are going to talk about money for the local communities I think it should go for projects and programs that are designed to have some impact on the social problems. You have to pay for them in some way so you could contact these private agencies perhaps and have the people available to do these things, but the old idea of giving money to an agency or an institution to support the institution, even though they are all well-meaning institutions, it hasn't completely worked in my way of thinking.

It's the programs that are going to combat the problems that I think we should be thinking about. However, I think the point that we were trying to make there was much, much larger than this. I don't think there is any simple answer.

What we are trying to say is that we feel that this is the effect of poverty; that people are the victims of poverty. But the solutions mustn't be seen from this point of view. The solutions in our group are big and they are economic and our society has changed so much in what we might call the post-industrial age that the old solutions just aren't relative any more.

Now, I don't know; if you take a lot of sociologists, politicians, and so on, to get at these, but we don't presume to be experts in this field at all. All we are doing is making a strong plea to get the effort at the Senate because it might be more fruitful at that level instead of at the kind of "band-aid" level.

Senator Belisle: Knowing that you are a social worker, can I ask you this question? We have heard this all across the country, that it is possible that we may have placed too much emphasis on the educational status or standard or degree of social worker. Would they be more communicative, if I can use the word, with the poor in their communities if they were one of them, and probably did not have a university degree?

Mrs. Mitchell: Yes. Again, I am going to ask you to repeat that question to the group that is presenting a brief from the Opportunity Committee, because there is a very exciting development just started in Vancouver whereby local people, and particularly people on welfare are getting into community service and doing the front-line things. We haven't as yet convinced our closed profession that this is important but we feel very strongly as community workers that community people is the front-line people—I think often they would need some support behind the scenes or more serious kinds of problems but we do feel that the front-line people should be community people for the greatest degree possible and should be perhaps assisted with training courses as well.

I know the people who are presenting their brief on Thursday morning will want to tell you more about that.

Senator Belisle: Mr. Chairman, this lady is so interesting and intelligent, could I ask another question?

The Chairman: Go right ahead.

Senator Belisle: I notice on page 4 it says:

Financing of divorce and continuation of child support for separated mothers on low income who wish to re-marry.

I was a member of the Committee on Divorce and we brought what I think was very little legislation into being—it's merely my thinking—would you say money to assist them to get divorces or money to assist them after they have a divorce?

Mrs. Mitchell: I think again you are going to have some mothers here on Thursday and tonight as well that can answer that from personal experience. Our experience has been that middle-class people can pay for their own divorce if that is what they decide they need, they want, and they also have fathers—the middle-class families—and they continue to support their children of their first family and new families can be formed and the woman, if she wants to, she can re-marry so that the family unit can be re-established.

In a low-income family everything seems to defeat the people and break up families. First of all, the fathers—the reason the fathers are not around... I wish we could hear from more of the fathers, but I would certainly guess that most of the fathers have left not just because there has been a family disagreement—that's probably just a symptom—but because the husband has been defeated since the first day he was married. He has had no employment, very little education, lacks employment skills, can't keep a job, and as he gets older he is completely defeated and his wife starts to complain, his children start to complain; why wouldn't he leave home? It's an intolerable situation, but I think again it's our society that is probably defeating him.

Now, if the mother has left them, the children don't have any father, most of the children are living in communities with very few men in them and are growing up with no identification with the men, but every time she tries to re-establish a family unit she can't go on welfare; she marries. But the man is expected to support the family. The new prospective husband can't support the family because he is probably a truck-driver, and all he could possibly do would be support the man and wife.

Some families are living in common-law relationships, which is fine, but on the other hand they might like to marry but they can't get divorces, they can't afford a divorce.

Now, I am rambling along, but there are so many things, and the thing I feel personally, and my colleagues may like to dispute some of these points, is that a mother who has been on welfare, who wants to re-marry, and where there is a chance for the children to have a father and a home, should be given every encouragement to do this, and if necessary support should be continued for the children, so that she could re-marry.

Also, in the same way, so the mother could go out and work as single people in low-paying jobs do. Mothers can't always go out to work because they have to stay home and support five, six children.

Senator Belisle: In other words, counselling service should be a must right after divorce?

Mrs. Mitchell: I didn't say that. You will be hearing about Legal Aid this afternoon.

Senator McGrand: Now, British Columbia is the most rapidly growing province in Canada in wealth and population and they are crowded here. Vancouver is bulging with industry and new population. Are the numbers of those below the poverty line growing faster than the growth of population and industry, and just what is the poverty line in Vancouver?

Mrs. Mitchell: Well, I would like to say that you didn't mention that Vancouver, I believe—perhaps someone will correct me on this—has the highest incidence of almost every social problem that you would not wish to have: addiction, alcoholism, delinquency.

Senator McGrand: I am aware of that. Those people are not here because they came looking for jobs or they came because of the climate and the atmosphere, but what I mean is in the work force, in the people who are working, is the number of those below the poverty line increasing in proportion to the total investment of capital, jobs, and industry?

Mrs. Mitchell: Well, I am not competent to answer that in a general way, but I could give you one or two examples of individuals that are certainly working, but are much worse off than people on welfare.

As you know, people who are working on low incomes have to work so they don't have the luxury of coming to senate hearings, but we did try to contact two or three that might be contrasting examples, and I would like to mention one.

This is a man of 58 years of age who is a skilled technician. He is self-educated, came from China 17 years ago, and is extremely intelligent. He is very, very proud and refuses to take expensive help from the Canadian Government. He supports his mother and his yearly salary varies from $3,000 in 1965 to about $5,000 in 1955.

His monthly income varies from $100 in July—no money at all in August, up to five hundred in January, which is the TV season. This person eats on a food budget of a dollar-fifty a day, and his meals are usually just a potato, onion, and a chunk of meat, and sometimes he has a can of beans. He keeps a carton of beans at work and most of his money has to go into his car expenses in order to work.

He has had one suit since he came to Canada 17 years ago, and you know what rents are. I don't want to go into a lot of individual cases, but very few of these people could be here to hear this brief this morning.

Senator McGrand: Well, for example, have been told that people earn $6,000 in certain cities and are below the poverty line. Have been told that $4,000 in certain other places in Canada is also below the poverty line. What is the poverty line in Vancouver? Is it six thousand, seven thousand, eight thousand?

Mrs. Mitchell: Well, again, I am afraid I don't feel competent to answer that. We tend to say three thousand, but you have to look at individual cases. Three thousand for a person who is working—most of it is deducted at the source.

The Chairman: When you say three thousand you have to say how big a family that represents. You just can't say $3,000.

Mrs. Mitchell: That's right.

The Chairman: I think the question Senator McGrand asked you was in regard to the war on poverty.

In the war on poverty in Vancouver are you winning or losing?

Mrs. Mitchell: Well, I would say we are losing.

The Chairman: Are you losing badly?

Mrs. Mitchell: Yes. How many of the new industries—I think we need to talk about unions to some degree, too. How many of the industrial resources are available to low-income people with minimal skills?

Senator McGrand: My next question deals with that. On page 3 you say:

Business, industry and unions have a major responsibility to co-operate.

Now, usually most of the speeches we hear are critical of industry. I have never heard anyone criticize the activities of unions. What responsibilities do unions have in the revamping of our problems?

Mrs. Mitchell: Well, I am very, very much a layman in this, so I can only comment very briefly. I think if a person has been on social assistance for a while—a man has been on social assistance for a while and a union job comes up, how can he possibly be eligible for it? He is not a member of the union, he can't support the union fees, he doesn't have seniority if he gets into the union. You should again be speaking to some of the men who are looking for jobs in this respect.

We do feel very strongly about this, and we know the unions do have a history of feeling pretty strong about this, and we would certainly like to see them have the same concern for the non-working man.

The Chairman: The non-union working man?

Mrs. Mitchell: Well, no, I mean the man who can't find an opportunity to work and the woman who is working on very minimal wages. I know they are concerned about it but it seems to me that there has to be a team approach. I am certainly not criticizing the unions because they probably have more than any other group to fight for.

We do feel that they need to be opening up more opportunities as well.

Senator Everett: Mrs. Mitchell, on page 2 of your presentation dealing with the basic principles, just dealing with this point for a moment, you say that business firms should be required to provide some of these jobs.

Now, the Americans have the alliances for obs. Will you enlarge on that? Can you tell us what you have in mind, more specifically?

Mr. Barbolet: Well, in our discussions our feelings were that there were many corporations in Canada who were earning enormous profits; they were earning these profits as part of our social and economic system. As part of their right to do business in Canada they ought to be providing on-the-job training for workers, and this is again where the unions would come in. You would have to bring up their procedures to encourage this alliance.

Senator Everett: Excuse me, Mr. Barbolet, I think the idea is a good one. What I would like to know is, what ideas you have? What specific ideas do you have?

Mr. Barbolet: Well, we think the government should require that industries set up on-the-job training programs and help people who are on the outside.

Mrs. Mitchell: In Vancouver there is an alliance for businessmen. This was started by our present Minister of Welfare, and I think this is an individual kind of thing where some businessmen might try and make a special effort to try and open up a special job for a certain person who is unemployed. I think we feel there must be a much broader approach to it than that.

There must be really planned arrangements for employment possibilities and on-the-job training opportunities. Some of the Newstart things—(again, this is a Canadian program)—might be a beginning. I am not too familiar with the details of that but my impression was that it was a stop-gap measure, and if it could go from training into job development it would be a good idea.

Another thing, maybe we should have mentioned there, is the importance of the many more kind of sheltered workshop type of communities. There may be some subsidized co-ops which is another form of half-way programs, where people working part-time and could be on call for jobs but still be assured of an adequate income for their families.

Senator Everett: In Item 5 of your basic principles you talk about the right of citizens to express concerns, to dissent, and to press for change. This of course is political action and probably the essence of what the argument on poverty is all about.

Are there any parameters to that political action? How far should it go? To make it effective probably it's going to involve opposition to elected officials. Opposition to the ideas of elected officials. So is there any limit to this? Is there anything that should be imposed on it?

Mrs. Mitchell: The only imposition is legality, in my view. I would call it social action rather than political action, and I think—it is my understanding that elected officials are elected to represent people and to represent ourselves as citizens, particularly low-income citizens who don't have the same opportunities, who don't have the same voice as the more sophisticated established groups in our communities, and it is particularly important that they organize, that they gain confidence and skills, and maybe sometimes that they are doing it in their way, and if they are rude and pressured, too, in order to say what they mean, now they should be prepared for the back-lash according to how they do it, but it seems to me in Vancouver today it's exciting that we have so many citizen action groups, and you need many different kinds.

You need these different kinds to bring about changes, and many of us for years have tried to bring about changes in our system and they just don't come. Let's face it, you can be quietly working along within the established organizations, and I don't know how many changes we have achieved. When clients can storm over to a welfare department and create a fuss and demand what is the right of a welfare client there they are getting some response.

I think the whole system should be changed so that they don't have to demand but the reality of it is that they are not a group with the same kind of rights that the rest of us have; nor do they usually have the same kind of voice or spokesman to ask for and demand their rights, and nor do they have the feeling of accomplishment to demand their rights.

Senator Everett: Well, as far as the community development work is concerned then you feel there is no limits other than those imposed by the law itself?

Mrs. Mitchell: Well, community development work, there are different schools of thought on it. My personal feeling would be that our job is to help citizens to become active and concerned. All citizens; not only low-income citizens. And to help them focus on what their needs are, their desires, and to work in a variety of different ways in developing programs for their communities: planning for their communities, taking action on certain problems. And sometimes really being advocates for change, in pressuring for change.

Our role as community development workers is not to speak for them but to help them to speak for themselves, and to be consulted people about how to do it.

I think you could use the word "activators," too, and I think citizens should be activated. We are activators on their behalf.

Senator Everett: Well, the idea surely is to activate, and there is bound to come a time which you have to cause them to take partisan political action.

Mrs. Mitchell: Well, they make the choice. If they want a new political panel that is their choice. I personally would not recommend any political action.

Senator Everett: Why not?

Mrs. Mitchell: Well, I think it's government we are talking about, elected representatives; not political parties. There is some change to be made, and I would think they would go to their elected representatives. If they as private citizens are to do it by political parties well, then, that is their choice.

Senator Everett: Well, often for more effective change we have to throw the rascals out of office. We have to take that sort of political action.

Mrs. Mitchell: Yes.

Senator Everett: Now, you are talking about a political action that goes so far and then when it gets to a certain point you take a hands-off attitude. You may be right. Maybe that's the right thing to do.

All I am wondering is, if you stop at the point does the reaction become ineffective and if the action becomes ineffective do the groups that you have been trying to activate say, "Well, this is all a game"? When we came down to the real crux of the matter the community development worker backed out.

Mrs. Mitchell: Yes. Well, this is a new point and I think we have to—the community development worker might have to be a professional person who know their way of work with tradition perhaps, and they have to be subject to use their own judgment. They have to be subject to use their own judgment of the essential framework but—this is becoming quite an abstract discussion—but the basic essential is that you have to organize, give them the technical support that they need, and they should make the decision as to what they want to do.

If they should decide to go through a particular political channel, rather than through government, my own view would be that they might do this as citizens, or you might decide to go with them. You have to have a specific reference.

As community development workers I don't think any of us would support something that was illegal.

Mr. Barbolet: I personally agree with political action. I believe it is necessary. And I think, as far as political action is concerned, I think under the present circumstances the possibility is to stop at violence, but there are certain circumstances—after all, the laws are made by the middle class and upper middle class and imposed upon everyone.

Quite often the laws are inappropriate for some of the people and we have just gone through a case here where the city's Social Service Department—where one of the groups will be holding a free coffee program, and the only thing they are challenged on when they set this up in the hallway of the Social Service Department was that they didn't have facilities to wash the coffee urn, and therefore they couldn't have the program.

We were breaking the by-laws by continuing the program, but I would never encourage them to stop the program, because the health by-law was being broken.

Senator Fergusson: Well, the thing that I wanted to enquire about is rather down to earth I am afraid. Mrs. Mitchell, in your references to day-care centres—I am really impressed with their value, and I think we would all like to know how many day-care centres you have in this area and by whom they operated, and who has been eligible to make use of them?

Mrs. Mitchell: There are some people in the audience I would like to call on to answer this question. I think we have seven or eight day-care centres in Vancouver.

From the Floor: Mr. Elmer Helms, Executive Director, Neighbourhood Services Association of Greater Vancouver. We for instance are one association that provides day-care centres in the city. We have three full day-care operations and half-day-care programs for special needs. Children with special needs, culturally and socially deprived children, and to them this is very important. There are the family service centres, which is the day-care operation, and also an enrichment program.

We also handle the foster day-care homes in the city. There are also a number that are operated through the churches, and we have helped churches to develop their day-care programs. There are private operations.

There is a government subsidy now which is helping toward the day-care costs and maintenance in the city and has been a relatively new development over the past few years.

Senator Fergusson: Do the churches get this subsidy, too?

Mr. Helms: Yes. It is a non-profit organization coming within the standards set down by the provincial government.

Senator Fergusson: Who is eligible to make use of them?

Mr. Helms: The provincial government provides a subsidy and, interestingly enough, Senator Croll said the means test was thrown out. The means tests still apply in regards to day-care centres coming under the Canada Assistance Act, and I think this is the reason why it is applied in order to share it with the federal government.

The federal government also shares in the cost of this. Of those families who are unable to pay, the low-income families, there is a subsidy that is provided by the provincial government that is shared fifty per cent by the federal government. This pretty well makes it eligible now for any child to attend day-care services in the city, and if you have a day-care operation this is provided.

One of the big problems at this point in time is that there is no monies for developing new centres. There are fairly stringent requirements in regards to facilities, and in regards to health regulations and building regulations.

In regards to funding for low-income parts of the city it is possible to develop day-care centres.

Senator Fergusson: Thank you very much.

Mr. Chairman, another thing I was interested in is on page 3. Under Item 10 of the revised brief, where it says:

Extension of allowances for children in any low-income family sufficient to enable parents who can find work only in lower paying jobs, to be self-supporting while their children are still dependent.

I wonder how this could be worked out. I would say that the family allowance goes to everyone, but of course there is no means test.

To implement this, I would think you would have to have a means test. I think you would have to have a means test of some kind.

Mrs. Mitchell: Yes. Certainly you would have to have one on the income group that you are talking about, but in that point we were really thinking of mothers working, and someone brought up the point that fathers need just as much.

Certainly there are some mothers now on social assistance who married young, and who haven't had job experience, and maybe they would be lucky if they had Grade 10, that can find work who would be much happier if they could be out of the home. They would be much happier if they could be out of the home working, if they had good day-care centres for their children, but the thing that has happened is that mothers can't afford to take these jobs. They can't afford to go out and be a waitress, or a hairdresser, or even a kindergarten teacher. The jobs usually don't pay enough, and by the time deductions are taken and the cost is considered going to and from the job, they would be much better off on social assistance.

If the children could have support, then that mother could work as a single person, keeping her salary, and this would do two things: it would keep the family going and allow the mother to be employable so that she wouldn't be inclined to go on welfare—and if she doesn't work during these younger years there is no use of her working when she is older.

We would like to see much more done—not to make mothers feel that they are forced to work, but if at any time they would like to work it would be their choice.

Senator Fergusson: Well, can you tell me why mothers wouldn't be eligible for that through a means test?

Mrs. Mitchell: Well, many of them are on social assistance right now. I don't know just how this would be done, but maybe an extension on children's allowances would be a way of doing it.

Senator Fergusson: Well, No. 7, of your interim recommendations says:

Full equality should be guaranteed to women, including equal pay for equal work.

You have an Act which provides for equal pay, equal work, have you not?

Mr. Barbolet: It doesn't guarantee it because they changed job categories. For instance, a nurse's aid does the same work in the hospital as an orderly and is paid one dollar an hour less, so they get less according to the job category.

Senator Fergusson: Well, how do you guarantee it?

Mr. Barbolet: Well, in this instance it's quite clear that they are doing the same job.

Mrs. Mitchell: Female hairdressers make a lot less than men; bank clerks, women in banks, make a lot less than men; and they have fewer job opportunities than men.

Senator Fergusson: Well, don't they try to invoke the law?

Mrs. Mitchell: Well, I think there is a basic law, but the employment situation and the kinds of jobs would certainly make it more difficult for women than men. I have known many semi-skilled women who have a chance for more jobs in the city, more service-type jobs, and—than men.

Senator Fergusson: Well, in Canada we have these laws for equal pay but they just don't work very well. I was just trying to find out why you feel that women aren't getting this—well, it's guaranteed under the Act, but if not, why, in British Columbia?

Mrs. Mitchell: Well, I don't really feel competent to answer that question because it's not my field really to know the legal side of it, but I do know we come across many women that could work and want to work and that simply cannot afford to.

Senator Fergusson: You do feel there are many women who are doing practically the same work as men and are paid lower?

Mrs. Mitchell: I wouldn't like to answer that in a general way.

The Chairman: Mr. Helms, you are the Executive Director, so you know the Canada Assistance Act pretty well.

Mr. Helms: Yes, I know it a bit.

The Chairman: Well, you know it as well as I do, so let's discuss it for a moment. Understood you to say that the provincial government imposed a means test on day-care services; is that correct?

Mr. Helms: That's right.

The Chairman: Under what authority?

Mr. Helms: The Canada Assistance Act states that welfare services or community development services be geared to those people who are on welfare or who may become dependent on welfare; therefore, there has to be some means of determining the economic circumstances of the family.

Because of this, a means test was applied and this has been revised. It's not quite as cruel and degrading sort of an imposition on people as it was in the beginning, as this has been revised now.

I think what happened in this was, when the federal auditor comes around and looks at all the applications and must verify that this family falls into a certain category—for instance, there is a Plan C when they work it out on the basis of a budget. If there is a residual income of $10 or less for that family for child care, then this family is fully subsidized under the Canada Assistance Plan and 50 per cent of the cost of this is picked up federally.

This is the way it is applied: through a means test in terms of an application.

Now, I think a better method perhaps would be through an income tax—everyone fills out an income tax form; something of his nature would be better than a means test.

The Chairman: That is another matter.

Mr. Helms: Yes.

The Chairman: The main principle in the Canada Assistance Act is need as against means. That was the purpose of the Act. This is not essential in the Act. Goodness knows, we fought for months and months and months to get it in the Act.

Mr. Helms: This is not the way it is applied.

The Chairman: Well, it's applied with respect to other welfare measures on the basis of need.

Mr. Helms: No.

The Chairman: Not at all?

Mr. Helms: No.

Mrs. Mitchell: I might just interject there; that when we say "need" also this depends on somebody having the time and being available to a person to establish a need and recommending a certain kind of service, and the kind of contact they have with people on welfare, but working, it's kind of hard to make these things available. It really amounts to the same thing.

The Chairman: It doesn't amount to the same thing. If somebody has the time to devote himself to poor John Smith, who is sick and ill and needs help, we can give it to him, but he just hasn't had the time to go round and do these sort of things.

Mrs. Mitchell: To some extent; but that is over-simplifying it.

The Chairman: All right. We are over-simplifying it. Put it on any basis you like. When a country changes its thinking from a means test to a needs test we think we are doing a great deal.

The thing is thoroughly discussed, then we make a change. Then you come along—and you are not the only one—and we find that they're applying the means test mentality to a real needs test. When I find some lady sitting alongside of me who is a welfare mother I can't get very cross with her. I can't even get upset with her. She has enough problems just looking after the children and what not. Mrs. Mitchell, Mr. Helms is out there seeing the very same thing. I ask myself why aren't they doing something about it? Who else knows the situation better than you two?

You have been a social worker with 20 years' standing, and who else knows the problem better than you two?

Mrs. Mitchell: I think there has been action.

Mr. Helms: There has been action taken through our organization.

Mrs. Mitchell: It's not easy.

The Chairman: You know, I asked a question of the Senate Committee—under similar circumstances they will give an agency X number of dollars. Do you do that here? Do they do that here for carrying on; do they give you X number of dollars?

Mr. Helms: Yes; for particular services.

The Chairman: And the man was doing the very best he could—he was a social worker; he was also cutting down here and cutting down over there, and we got after him after a while and we said, "How much was charged back to you for some over-payments that you made?"

He kind of hesitated for a while, and finally his assistant, Sister Joan, I asked her, and she was as honest as could be, and that is when I got the real answer.

She told me that about eight or ten dollars over a period of years was the only charge-back. You see, there is nothing at all to it if you boldly take the step, and we have to do that to help people like you.

Senator Belisle: On page 3, recommendation 4, you say:

Major reform of social policy, social institutions and educational systems is needed to provide greater opportunities for development of children, and support for young families.

Well, it seems to me, Mrs. Mitchell—how can we overcome the inability of the poor to take full advantage of our present educational system? What can we do to create a better environment? Can we get better counsellors?

Mrs. Mitchell: What about making the system adapt to the people rather than making the people adapt to the system?

Senator Belisle: Yes, how can you transplant this idea to the professional institutions that educate the people?

Mrs. Mitchell: Well, again, I am a complete layman here but one of the things that we felt is that in local schools, certainly in schools in low income areas, there should be quite a number of opportunities for teachers from other communities to be assisting so that the cultural gap is not so great.

I recall one of the youngsters in the Head Start nursery school where I was connected reading stories one day all about fireplaces. This may have had something to do about Christmas, I don't know, but this youngster couldn't grasp at all what we were talking about because they lived in public housing and had never seen a fireplace.

The method of teaching and our odd books all come from a different social environment completely from the low income people who are using them.

Senator Belisle: In other words at the elementary level should we change some aspect of the curriculum to spend more time on household administration instead of having geography or history or geometry?

Mrs. Mitchell: I am sure that maybe people in the audience would be much closer to this, but it is pretty obvious, and I think most of us would agree that one thing is starting early and I think from experience with Head Start nursing schools and working with parents at the same time would be helpful.

Another thing—much smaller classrooms; much higher ratio of adults to children, to types of teaching, where a curriculum is not imposed in the same way and I should think there should be some of our educators and parents really speaking to this point.

Senator Belisle: In your job do you attend what we call educational seminars?

I have attended many and we are told by our best brains that we are doing the best thing but we come across the conditions at this level.

Mrs. Mitchell: Could we have this question answered from the audience? I know Mrs. Drache is in the audience.

From the floor: Mrs. Victor Drache. Senator Drache of Simon Fraser University. I wear many hats.

I recall working with Mrs. Mitchell in the first Head Start programme in Vancouver for a public housing authority. At that time it was quite obvious that the training the teachers received does not prepare them for dealing with the non-status community of deprived and less economic disadvantaged than myself.

So that when a child moves into a nursery school and gets some exposure to things that he does not have at home this does not follow as he moves into the elementary grades.

You may have a teacher in kindergarten who understands, has some knowledge of pre-school training through a child institute of study which we have at U.B.C. for example, but it seems to me one very important need is to examine very closely the training of teachers and the recruitment of teachers; the recruitment of teachers from the economically deprived community which Mrs. Mitchell was referring to.

So that we begin to examine what the needs are as Senator Croll has pointed out. We should do this rather than continually point only at the economic deprivation. There is a great deal involved here besides economics.

I think too that examining the source of problems, it is possible to detect problem areas through a public health nursing visiting staff contact in the larger community.

When the public health clinic clientele for example are visited by public health nurses, the diagnosis starts there. We find the children who have emotional problems.

We discover when you want to follow this through rationally the service is not adequate to fulfil the need. It seems to me, as you are mentioning sir, we take a look not only at the elementary area, but at the pre-school area, at the pre-natal area that the adult is involved in with community services which there is direct contact, there is a very rich area here of exploration. In this area both economics and services are relevant.

The Chairman: For the audience, Mrs. Drache is of the Senate of Simon Fraser University and she was speaking to a question put by Senator Belisle, the President of Sudbury University of Ontario. There was a very interesting dialogue between the two of them.

Senator Belisle: Would you agree that the main aim of our high schools is to put people through university? Is this the right aim or is this the wrong philosophy? Should we train them to be full-fledged citizens even if they don't go to university?

Mrs. Drache: It seems to me that the aim of any educational system is to produce adults—mature adults. This would be my criteria for developing education.

Senator Belisle: But what about those nine million that are mentioned in this brief?

Mrs. Drache: They don't get a chance at all to get off the ground because by grades 1 or 2 they are already defeated. We have not met the needs of children.

Right from infancy, we do not explore and examine largely how to meet the needs. We have not examined the needs of the growing children or the family and I would rather look at that need than worry about the high school students.

I think by the time the high school student as arrived in grade 12 he has either been damaged or creative or denied or given no opportunities for himself as a whole individual.

Senator Belisle: Do you believe that if there was a very good incentive every week—I believe Senator Hastings the other day was asking this question—that if there was the incentive of say $18 or $20 a week do you believe that many more would take advantage and would go through university or complete high school?

Mrs. Drache: I have no way of guessing at a question like that sir, I am sorry. I think it is one aspect of a much larger problem. I certainly think that an economic floor is imperative if we want people to develop.

Senator Sparrow: In reference made by Senator Belisle as well as in the brief to the nine million Canadians, this is a figure that we certainly are not aware of and we were already frightened at the thought of three and a half million people, and when we arrive in Vancouver it is now nine million people.

The Chairman: It is just a mistake.

Senator Sparrow: Is it a mistake?

The Chairman: Yes. That is the old brief.

Senator Sparrow: It seems to me that wherever we go we find very little understanding of the problem of poverty as such. We notice that in every area we go and particularly in the middle class society there seems to be little sympathy or concern or knowledge by this group of people and it seems to me that even the press as such does not seem to be sympathetic or understanding of the problems of the poor.

Politicians as such don't seem to understand the problem so how can the message of the problem be brought across to the people who are eventually going to pay in an attempt to solve this problem?

Mrs. Mitchell: I really couldn't answer just how. I would agree completely with the point that our group has dwelt so long on and that is that there has to be almost a re-education programme going on to look at poverty in the 1970's in a very different way than we have in the past.

One of the big things is that it can no longer—I don't know whether it ever should have been—but the common view that it was the person who is on welfare that is at fault rather than our economic system.

The first step is to talk very much about things as they are and what is causing them. The bigger causes, the social change that is going on and the economic change.

I think the press and all the media are a major challenge because our little naive group hasn't been able to change anything very much and even the politicians in government, unless there is mass public pressure on them, and a public demand and a voters demand, I would doubt very much whether they could do anything.

I would hope and agree that a very mass education programme of some kind is needed.

Senator Sparrow: With no particular recommendations as to how that mass education programme be formed?

Mrs. Mitchell: It may be forums, it may be much more the kind of thing that you people are doing by going out and talking across the country. People talking for themselves on their own behalf—you know, low income people. That is one aspect. But we have to get at the more broader social aspect changes that are needed and we need some very good speakers from the social and economic field perhaps.

Senator Everett: In item 7 of your recommendations you say "There is need for major change in Canada Manpower" etc. etc.

We have had this suggestion in almost every brief and we would be interested to know what you suggest and what you find wrong with the Canada Manpower. Perhaps you might enlarge on the recommendation itself?

Mrs. Mitchell: I must again say that I am speaking just as a layman and I don't really know the answers.

Senator Everett: Well, is there anyone in this audience who might be able to answer it?

Mrs. Mitchell: Well, perhaps I might mention one or two points that we all agree on from the facts that we get from people and from the other people who are going to present the other brief on Thursday morning.

We find that the people who needed the most, particularly people on welfare, are constantly turned away from Manpower offices. Some of them have gone down there and listed that they are on welfare or that they have children and it is almost inevitable—at least in the past anyway—that they won't have an opportunity to go through the Manpower offices.

Now the Manpower offices have reasons for this I know, but the other thing is—I think you should ask the Manpower Department because I don't think I should speak on their behalf. There is a lack of jobs, and this could be one of the reasons, and very realistically a mother who has several children and has no working experience—I suppose it is unrealistic to retain her for a job if there are no jobs for her or if the job is going to be too much for her. That is one aspect but that is not going quite far enough.

What we feel is, rather than counselling people—having so many counsellors that are counselling people out of opportunities the effort should go into putting the staff of the Manpower centres into developing job opportunities in some way. They are doing a little bit of this but my impression is that it is only within the present inadequate job opportunities in business as it is today.

If they could have a whole department which would develop consumer co-ops for example, and get the people involved to work with this new businessmen's alliance and to work with industry to open up new opportunities and develop new programmes, it seems to me that this would be a better use of Manpower monies.

Now, the other thing that we feel very definite about is that we have beurocracy involved in three levels of government. Whenever there is a meeting in a local community about some of these things it is very difficult to get policies straight between provincial, local and federal bodies.

The Welfare Department will have one policy, the Housing Department will have another policy and the Manpower Department will have another. We feel there should be some way of de-centralizing and making a more flexible kind of opportunity and how policies are implemented on local levels so that they—the groups can work together and some of us who are social workers along with our clients are shifted from one department to another in an endless complex of bureaucracy. This is just the product of today's society.

I know the Manpower people themselves would have things to say in their own defence because they are in an impossible situation too.

Perhaps someone from the audience would comment more specifically on the policies.

The Chairman: Suppose we just finish the questions and then we will get back to the audience.

From the Floor: I am Effie Keays. I have worked in public welfare and worked in co-operation with Manpower in a good many instances and from my experiences some of the difficulties that we come up against are related very closely to the rigidity of certain policies.

Manpower for example does not have provision for training anyone until they have been out of school and in the labour force for one year. At the end of that first year they can make provision for payment of training fees but not for a living allowance. A person is not eligible for a training grant and fee until they have been in the labour force for three years after they leave school.

Now, this applies, as I understand it, to any kind of a training programme. We have a second resource that we can use for people in receipt of social assistance who need training, the Provincial Department of Social Welfare will, under certain circumstances, provide for upgrading training.

It is a tedious and involved process to try and get this in effect and many of the workers working with the people don't have the time to follow through on all the steps that are necessary to get the permission for this.

The resources that we have available for training are not always well integrated.

One programme that has been of particular interest to many of the people that I have worked with is the Welfare Aid programme. I don't think it is difficult to understand why any of the people who have been through social assistance would feel that they have a valid contribution here.

The person with grade 9 education and who wants to take the welfare aid programme has to get upgrading to grade 12 in order to have entry. To get this upgrading they have two possibilities: Manpower will give them vocational upgrading at the Vocational Institute in some cases. If they can get a place, Manpower pays for a certain number of people in training programmes, and every Manpower counsellor as I understand it has the option of referring people for one of these available seats.

The Welfare Aid course has 30 positions in a year. Manpower has 12 of the available seats. Last year the session that is now under way at the Vancouver City College, there were 43 people referred from Manpower of the 12 seats that were available. Each one of them understood from the Manpower counsellor in good faith that they were going to get the Welfare Aid training.

This is the kind of thing where there is inadequate provision, inadequate inter-relationship of programmes and services.

Senator McGrand: Education has always been training people to live and to make use of book knowledge that has been stored up by former generations and they are to use that knowledge to solve their problems in the day in which they live. There is nothing new under the sun; new problems appear to come up.

Now, algebra has been a mental exercise but it doesn't help people to solve their problems and live with other problems. It seems to me in education people should be trained as to how man developed his emotions in the first place. If we do more of that sort of thing people would know more as to how to live with each other in the environment in which they find themselves.

I wonder if anybody agrees with me because I have never found anybody who did.

Mrs. Marzari: Mr. Chairman, if I could just comment. I don't think you can teach that. I think people must experience it and I feel very strongly about the pre-school level and elementary school level particularly, there must be opportunities for people to learn to live together and to learn how to have government together and having enriching experiences that will help them develop as human beings otherwise they are never going to be able to be adaptable to our changing society.

One of the most encouraging things is that there is quite a move in Vancouver now towards more kinds of human relation sort of workshop experiences. You will have one group speaking connected with this opportunities programme where 15 mothers are having a course; not just an ordinary course but a course in helping them to develop as human beings. I think you will get at this there. That should be applied all along the line with young people.

Senator McGrand: A new set of values?

Mrs. Marzari: A new set of experiences, not values. A new set of experiences will help people to learn and to live with other people.

Senator Sparrow: I would agree with your recommendations and many others we have heard of self-improvement project areas, self-help projects. You refer, not in writing but in speaking, of a fourth level of government as such. You used that expression. Have you thought about that fourth level of government, how it could be organized and such, or have you been just talking about the individual self-help project and how it would come into play?

The reason I ask about this fourth level is that already we are critical of three levels of government and now we are talking about a fourth. Is there some level of government we could replace as it exists? We have three taxing bodies as such, but do you have comment on that fourth level of government?

Mrs. Mitchell: Well, I think it is developing in some ways through local involvement as citizen group come into contact with local government bodies in unofficial ways. I think tonight when you hear from the young people in the attack group, they are asking this weekend for a fourth level of government in the Strathcona and Grandview areas.

This group is going to be meeting with Mr. Andras and members from the other two levels of government to talk about how they can get federal grants for the elementary schools. They have already gotten the City and Provincial grants. This is going to be a community school project.

We have also been working with the Strathcona Grandview Tenants Association who are not represented in your hearing, but this is primarily affecting the Chinese homeowners in downtown Vancouver and they have had a number of meetings with other levels of government. They have had numerous meetings about urban renewal and they want to have a say in the development of their community. They want to rehabilitate their homes—they don't want to move, come out of their communities completely.

They have had considerable success now, I think, in really achieving a very strong voice, and federally we are very pleased to hear that the Federal minister will not hear any proposal now unless the fourth level of government is involved in it.

Senator Inman: You speak in your recommendation—number 5—about credit unions, and in some areas of Canada they are quite strong.

Mrs. Mitchell: There are credit unions here—I don't think they have moved into the co-operative field to the same degree and I think we have a lot to learn from the Maritimes and I would think the whole co-operative movement needs to be adapted in a different way to city living.

It would seem to me that this is another way where there should be funds set up through a co-operative sort of group to explore this situation. I know co-operative housing hasn't been too successful here but surely there must be some way this could be worked out more satisfactory than it has been in the past.

Mr. Barbolet: As far as co-operatives are concerned, we have tried to find out whose responsibility it was. First of all co-operatives are European class oriented, and by that I mean they can't help the low income groups because of the structure, but we tried to set up a co-operative for low income groups and one thing that we wanted to do was to get grain directly from the Prairie provinces and stock it for our own industries such as milling of grain, baking of bread, and selling it in a co-operative manner.

And I spoke to Mr. Basford about whose responsibility it is when it crosses provincial lines—when a group in British Columbia want to get some produce from other provinces and the federal government takes no responsibility for this.

I phoned to the provincial M.L.A.'s and they take no responsibility for it. There is no way that the government will encourage this type of co-operative structure.

Senator Inman: Mr. Chairman, I think perhaps Senator Sparrow could answer that.

Senator Sparrow: Yes, what is your question?

The Chairman: He wants to buy wheat as I understand it.

Senator Sparrow: Well, there is no problem about that. There is no problem concerning the free movement of wheat across the Canadian border and you should apply to the Wheat Board which is a farmers' organization set up to sell wheat, so that is no problem.

Mr. Barbolet: Well, there are no marketing boards in British Columbia and they do limit the amount that can be brought in.

Mrs. Mitchell: I wonder if one of the things that is needed is really some funding for citizen training for jobs in co-operatives. Inasmuch as it is an educational thing and the low income people and most of us who are working with agencies that are strapped for funds, we have no way of doing this type of thing.

There should be a federal grant of some kind to encourage citizen training workshops and this is one of them that might be encouraged.

Senator Sparrow: Senator Inman, are you asking how co-operatives work as such?

Senator Inman: No, I know how they work but this gentleman was asking about the wheat.

Senator Sparrow: They are very successful in Western Canada and very good. They have had government assistance in the past, taxation-wise. The Province of Saskatchewan has a Department of Co-operatives as such in the government service and I think this would be a very useful thing in areas that may not be covered because co-operatives are beneficial to the people who operate them.

Senator Fergusson: Referring to the development of neighbourhood action centres, you refer to store fronts. What are store fronts?

Mrs. Mitchell: Well in Vancouver over the last two or three years, there has been a number of sort of little kind of off-beat centres have started.

One was the Red Door—the people in the community call it the Red Door and actually it is an old suite behind a corner grocery store near the housing project and it became kind of a stopover and communication place where the people in the community could drop in. It was also a place where the workers could drop in but there is not an agency in the real sense.

This has spread throughout Vancouver and takes different forms. I think you will be visiting some of them probably. These action centres are very important because they are a place where a person can go for information, and go about a problem; can go there with an idea, and where they can meet with other people and where they can meet on equal terms with other community workers. The trend that we are trying to encourage is that they are run by citizens by themselves and by people on welfare as well.

Senator Fergusson: Well, are there all ages that patronize this action centre?

Mrs. Mitchell: Yes. There is a place in the community where people can drop in—have a cup of coffee, there is a coin box there and the mothers come in with their kids—it is free, and it is warm and friendly and a place that people trust, and they don't see it as an agency in the same way. It is their place and what comes out of it is what they want. It is a new innovation in Vancouver.

Senator Fergusson: Well, it is a wonderful idea.

Mrs. Mitchell: They are very economical as they cost only from $50 to $100 a month to run.

Senator Everett: You make a statement in your brief—

Major institutional changes are needed to disband some or combine most social agencies into one integrated comprehensive social delivery system that can de-centralize service and workers into local areas.

In the next brief you will be hearing the Vancouver Inter-City Service project. They make the point that social and public services may be virtues out of practices relating to business because they are unjust to the consumer.

Avoid duplication of service is one way of saying that you are establishing a monopoly. In the absence of competition and challenge our social and public organizations have become sluggish and resistant to change.

The same organizations might find new vigour if they had to face some competition or loss of funds for poor performances.

I would just like to have your comments on that.

Mrs. Mitchell: Well, we had quite a discussion on this point and maybe I could comment on it from a family point of view. This is in the public sector.

The area development project in Vancouver was attempting to form—to provide more effective continuing integrated programmes for families on welfare for a long time. They found to do this that a family worker for a given family had to really bring in the functions of seven different family agencies.

My point was that if—to serve one family effectively you have to use the combined efforts of seven different agencies—why do you need seven different agencies?

If there was some way these could be combined into one agency and making it available to people I think this would be a much better way of working it. I know this is over-simplifying it but the other thing is that on a voluntary sector—we campaign every year for about 50 Red Feather services—some are for the poor; some are for boys; some are for girls; some are for families; some for one problem and some for another problem. And none of them are really making any attack on poverty.

How can we justify this kind of financial support for administrative staff, supervisors, head offices, and consultants and so on? Surely there must be some way to do this more efficiently and to combine the services into a more efficiently run organization.

This could be made into a delivery system that could be de-centralized from which local communities can contract for local services. It will be quite as costly as the operation we have now and it will put the need right into the front line services.

Senator Everett: Well, it goes on to say that in order to give effect to the contracting of services and to bring the person in poverty into a great degree of control it would be more effective if they could choose.

If only one agency arrived on the scene and operated for six months or a year and didn't do its job it would be fired and a new agency would be put in to replace it.

Presumably the people—the government and private organizations who are funding these agencies would then say because this agency was fired maybe we better not give them any more funds. If it an interesting concept.

Mrs. Marzari: First of all, I don't think you can use social services as they are presently run with clients and workers as you would in a free marketing economy.

Shopping around for service is not the same as shopping around for a chicken. It is not the same as shopping around for a chicken in the supermarket because there are some places where you can get service and there are some places you are turned away from. Shopping for service isn't necessarily one of the delightful acts under the welfare system.

It is a shame that seven agencies have to serve one family and I will give you ten to one that that family isn't effectively served. That is an argument for some change in the system. It is an argument for a major change.

It is not necessarily an argument for a grand march toward the public sector throwing all these services into one beaurocratic mess. This has been suggested and a lot of people have been talking about it.

We sort of investigated our means and our ends and our ends are to make sure that all services both public and private ought to be planned with, contracted by and accountable to local citizen groups which is to say that the poor have the control of services and they lie with the people. This is where it belongs.

If putting services in the public sector is going to do any good, do it. But I don't think it will do very good. I think it is a problem that a lot of people are still thrashing around in their own minds, but we have to get our means and our ends clear.

The means are to make services accountable to the people and to the community and the ends—and the means of doing this are still not clear. It is sure that there should be some administrative changes to bring about some kind of economic regularity in the existing system.

How to do this, we haven't figured out, but this is what I am hoping will come about.

Mrs. Mitchell: I think we do need creative, innovative services. We have a large example in this Cool-Aid project. We need kind of new things bringing up, but at the same time I would hate to see us waste so much energy in competition with each other—in competition for the funds which is taking too much energy now, that we haven't got time to do the job.

It seems to me that if we always keep in mind that we should be responsive to the local community—that they should have a say in what they want—then contract the services. I really don't see any justification for having so many people in administrative jobs and so few people in our agencies out in the communities working with people in the front lines.

The Chairman: Are there any questions from the audience?

Miss Marjorie Martin: I am a Woodland Family Worker. I think it would be a real shame if we ended the morning on just the note of services.

Poverty is not a problem of some other culture or a problem of having to motivate people trying to change their style of life or having to educate them to use resources. It is a problem of lack of money in the home.

As a family counsellor, when I am with a family with a low income probably 90 pe cent of my time is spent in getting more money into the home.

I think if we concentrated some effort on raising welfare rates and raising minimum wages—if we got more money into the home we could reduce the amount of service.

The area that I work in, the people that I work with, would be far better off with more money in the home. They would be far better off with more money in the home and far less of me.

I can't help a woman who has $90 a month and who has to spend $55 of it on her rent, and the rest on trying to get food, and trying to get out of the house and get a little companionship. She can't afford to repair a T.V. which is broken which is the only companionship she has. She can't afford to buy a decent coat that she could wear down to a church or do anything of the kind of things she wants to do.

She can't afford to have a beer—I suppose when she has her beer—at least she has the guts to do that. The fact is, I can't do anything with this woman. The only thing I can do is try to get her more money and my immediate role as a family worker with poor people is to scrounge around and to try to extract from people who have the money, which they are not using or don't need, and F.V.'s that are—people that have two of them at home—to scrounge around and get extra money and material things for the home.

I am sure that Mrs. Mitchell who also works in this area would support me.

For example—you must excuse me but I have been working up to this. I fully agree that schools need to be changed and there are many schools that are changing and many good programmes are being introduced and teachers are trying to understand poor children.

On the other hand, you can change the schools all you damn well like but you are not going to really give the children a chance to take opportunities in the schools if they don't have a decent coat and 50 cents to wear when the school arranges for a tour visit somewhere.

That is the hang-up when you get to about grade 6 and the school starts arranging enrichment tours or special programmes and very other day the kids come home and say Mom, can I have 50 cents to go to a show, and I have a dollar to buy some material because we are doing this at school."

The schools do try to provide for these children but nobody wants to bend all of the time.

Nobody wants their children to have the opportunity to go to the opera, which they cannot take even though the ticket is reduced by a hundred per cent if you haven't got a decent coat, you feel like a real slob, and you go in with everybody else looking nice.

Now, I think if we don't concentrate on giving more money into the hands of the people, you are not going to solve their problems. This is the basic thing, to get more money into the home and not to get more services into the home.

Mrs. Drache: Yes, I would like to know if there has been any discussion in your trips across Canada regarding the guaranteed annual wage?

The Chairman: Madam, there has been nothing else.

Mrs. Drache: It seems to me that this is one of our problems.

The Chairman: Mrs. Drache, I opened the meeting by telling them about it.

Mrs. Drache: Well great, I hope you do something about it.

Alex Ryan: I am a student of social welfare. There is just one comment I will make in passing. One of the senators over here asked quite specifically how or what we would recommend to be done.

It is always quite difficult to follow anyone presenting a brief or an idea to come out with all the implications and suggestions, and this is one of the problems we have had this morning.

There has not been an expert in every area but it struck me that while we are talking about education, that the question of education goes beyond the formal presentation in the schools.

There is an underlying current in our society that needs eradicating. This comes from practically every level of endeavour including our educators. This business that a man is of a worth when he helps himself and goes out and digs his own garden and produces his own food or pulls himself up by his boot straps—I have observed since I have been in this part of the world that industry and commerce have a way of creating a need and the public's idea of the situation changes.

They do this by assaulting, if I may use that word, the public through the media by telling us this thing is worthwhile or even say that they have made a mistake in the past and now they are going to change it.

For example, the cars in industry. They make a mistake; they say they make a mistake and they say they are going to make a new need and tell you this is desirable.

One of the things in education which perhaps the government needs to do is to assault the public and tell them that their idea of the poor is a wrong one. People are not poor because they are lazy or because they want to be or because they want to stay down there—it is because we have created this in the past and now we are going to change it.

The media—television and newspapers and whatever else—will have to share in this advertising cost and certainly governments can afford some way to advertise and say the poor are not poor because they want to be poor but rather we have done this, we have made a mistake and now help the public to change their opinion. This is one way perhaps you can help.

The Chairman: On behalf of the committee may I say that you have been the source of great information this morning and certainly you have stood up well under some of our questioning. We have spent a very fruitful morning and on behalf of the committee I wish to thank all of you very much.

(Upon resuming at 2 p.m.)

The Chairman: Order, please.

Senator Hastings: Mr. Chairman, I wonder before you proceed this afternoon if it will be possible while we are here for the Senators from Saskatchewan and Alberta to view the grain moving facilities through the Port of Vancouver which has a very direct bearing on poverty in the Prairie Provinces.

I think probably Senator Sparrow and I would like to see this opportunity if you could arrange it through the Port Authority.

The Chairman: Yes, certainly.

Senator Belisle: Mr. Chairman, I am not convinced there is much poverty in Saskatchewan and Alberta but I would like to participate in such a visit with regard to any plans for Thursday afternoon. I will talk to you later when Thursday afternoon is decided about visiting certain places.

Senator Hastings: Probably Friday morning.

Senator Belisle: Well, Friday morning—

The Chairman: All right.

Senator Hastings: I can assure you there is poverty on the Prairies, senator.

The Chairman: I will make the arrangements and find out the times for you.

We have a brief from the Vancouver Inner-City Service Project. Sitting on my right is a director, Mr. Max Beck. He will describe the philosophy and methods of the Project, which is summarized in the brief. Then he has with him some other people who will be heard. He has arranged, just for your information, a tour for us on Thursday afternoon about which I will advise you later. Go ahead, Mr. Beck.

Mr. Max Beck, Director, Vancouver Inner-City Service Project: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Vancouver Inner-City Service Project seeks to promote a unique and innovated method of providing community service—particular to those sectors of the urban community out of the mainstream of life in this “affluent?” and “just?” society.

We note this involves a whole series of programs to create some innovations effecting some changes and what happens in the community in which we live.

We note that the word “just” has two meanings: the first—meaning equitable and fair; the second—meaning nothing more or less as in “There is just enough money for one more meal.” To many Canadians our just society is the latter—a nothing more or less society—not an equitable and fair society. We want to work with the people who are struggling to find justice in the just society. We want to help balance the scales of justice.

We note in reference to poverty that the wealthier sectors of the community have a great deal of choice in buying and choosing the types of service they have available to them; whereas with the poor group in the community, services are simply provided for them. They really do not have a tremendous amount of choice in buying social, environmental, and institutional programs that control so much of their lives.

We are trying to put more choice into the services they have now and hope they will improve them.

We also do not intend to advocate an about face for public services. This has been spoken of many times before. We should encourage the public to move out into the community and this is more than the people concerned. We feel it is just quite natural that these groups tend to be more concerned about their own situation and not as much about people who are suffering on the streets so we advocate, that the groups in Canadian society look for more ways of strengthening the channels of power in society and strengthening the voice of the disadvantaged groups, those groups out of the mainstream.

In comparison to other societies, Canadian society has a well-developed sense of tolerance and fair play in the roles of the crusading journalist, the prodding public affairs program, the ombudsman—all have gained acceptance, even an aura of romance in Canada, and sometimes even government support.

International experience shows that other governments are not always quite as willing to tolerate dissent as we are. This has led to great problems in the Old Country. We should develop more means of strengthening and preserving the tolerance that we have here.

The specific proposals we would like to make to the Committee today are

(1) that we should develop more consumer influence into the services that we have, which are we should set up more things like risk funds, developmental funds, as a means of giving funds directly to disadvantaged or alienated groups and those organizations that work closely with them.

We should experiment with various methods of maximizing "grass roots" control of these funds.

Groups receiving such funds should always be accountable for how much money they have spent but in retrospect, rather than have to justify before they were spent that these funds would be required from the funding group. We feel this might help equalize the scales of justice.

The specific programs that could be encouraged with public grants would consist of the organizations that we are hearing from here in the next few days and in particular let them fund and hire their own staff.

We feel programs like advocates and ombudsmen, neighbourhood legal services, neighbourhood information, advice and social publicity centres similar to the Citizens' Advice Bureaus of Britain, youth organized and operated programs, self-help programs of all types should be encouraged.

